

FANSiA

성황의 아이들

카페인나무s
판타지 장편소설

00

English Title: Children Of The Holy Emperor

Author(s):

카페인나무s

Artist(s):

Bebseo

뱍세오

Year:

2022

Status in COO:

474 Chapters (ongoing)

Description:

Lee Seongjin, the strongest hunter who defeated the demon king.

He possessed the body of the pig tr*sh Third Prince, the Holy Imperial Family's shame.

But the members of this family... there's something strange about them?

'Overpowered' Holy Emperor.

'Regressor' First Princess.

'Player' First Prince.

Lots of trouble and lots of words

The story of the Holy Emperor and his children.

Associated Names:

성황의 아이들

[Chapter 169 until 199 are machine translates and unedited.]

1

The 17th Holy Emperor of Delcross, Nathaniel Klein, Nate.

Apart from the founding Holy Emperor, he was a ruler with an unprecedented level of power.

With a tremendous divine power befitting of a representative of the gods, he was the unofficial youngest Sword Master and the strongest swordsman on the continent.

Under his rule, Delcross was enjoying the pinnacle of stability and prosperity, and the relationship with the neighboring vassal states had never been more friendly. He was fit to be evaluated as a once-in-a-century emperor.

However, he was more famous by another epithet: the [Unprecedented Playboy Holy Emperor].

At the young age of 21 when he ascended the throne, he already had three wives, one lover, and five children.

Now, after ruling for over 12 years, he has over seven children that are officially known. The number of his hidden illegitimate children is unknown to all.

For generations, the Holy Emperors of Delcross, thanks to their image as [God's Representative], they did not have many children.

The only exception was the founding Holy Emperor, who was known to have over 15 children, but considering that he, referred to as the demigod, ruled for over 300 years, the number is not unbelievable.

Such were the circumstances, and thus this young and competent emperor couldn't stop the playboy image from sticking to him.

All of this was the result of the immaturity of his younger days. Humbly accepting this responsibility, Holy Emperor Nate decided to properly take care of his children as far as his power reached.

Therefore, he ordered his chief chamberlain to keep a close eye on the children's conditions, and he worked hard to spend one-on-one time with his children, putting off his busy office hours.

However, despite his efforts, parenting was never an easy task, as growing children rarely obey their parents' wishes.

Children occasionally engaged in behaviors that their parents simply couldn't understand.

Let's take his eldest child, the 1st Prince Owen, as an example.

He was a boy who was discovered when he was already grown, and initially, he seemed very pleased to meet his father after so much hardship.

However, one day he suddenly started speaking nonsense, claiming that he could see some strange documents in thin air.

"Father, I aim to become stronger with the power of this status window."

Then he set off for the southern front line.

He was a son who was brought into the fold late, and there were many things he wanted to do for him, but alas, he was an unfathomable son who did not care for his father's feelings at all.

The second, 1st Princess Amelia, was not much different.

She was a pitiful daughter who lost her birth mother, who was an illegitimate child of a commoner, and later discovered that she was a princess and sought her father.

Despite hiding her sorrow beneath a bright smile, she was a lovable girl who rattled on about her interests to her still awkward father.

This daughter of his, who was once like a rosebud, also started behaving oddly at some point.

One day, she woke up crying as if she had a nightmare, her appetite decreased, and she became noticeably depressed.

When he asked the reason for her sudden change during a snack time, she suddenly burst into tears and blurted out something shocking.

"Your Majesty, Father, I... have returned from death to the past!"

Nate was taken aback by her sudden story.

Her subsequent outpouring of grievances, when summarized, went like this:

Leonard, the rosy-cheeked second prince of Rohan, had lured her into a marriage. However, this was not out of love, but a plot to solidify his own kingship by borrowing the power of the Holy Emperor. After forcibly proceeding with the marriage, he openly took many concubines and habitually abused Amelia, the queen. And not much later, he ultimately abandoned her alone in a tower.

"He wished to see me die in front of you, Father, after cruelly killing me..."

"..."

"Oh! Despite your initial opposition, Father, your foolish daughter ruined everything!"

As she broke down into tears, he simply stared blankly at her.

He married you, abandoned you, and killed you?

But, my daughter, aren't you alive and well right in front of me?

"So, I will have my revenge. I will pursue him to the end of hell. I will shatter all of his hopes and completely ruin him. I won't forgive anything that stands in my way!"

"..."

Sensing the hint of madness flickering in his daughter's tear-filled eyes, Nate involuntarily drew a breath.

His beloved daughter, who he had always cherished and believed to be a delicate bud, had suddenly turned into a rose bristling with thorns.

At this point, Nate had no choice but to admit that he had been underestimating the task of parenting.

Do all parents on the continent raise their children amidst such torment, or is it only his own children who are peculiarly strange? The young Holy Emperor held his throbbing head in his hands.

'Is every parent on this continent raising their child in such agony, or are his own children exceptionally strange?' The young emperor clutched his throbbing head.

But this was just the tip of the iceberg.

Among Nate's odd children, the one who ate away at his heart the most was his fourth child and third prince, Morres.

Prince Morres, the offspring of the extremely hysterical Queen Elizabeth, was an ordinary child apart from his uncontrollable mischievousness in his younger days.

Regrettably, he had no standout traits compared to his siblings, and he was a child who could not meet his mother's expectations.

As a result, Morres had to suffer a rather harsh early education under the Queen who was struggling to make her son the Crown Prince.

In his childhood, he seemed to be following his mother's wishes decently enough.

But at some point, he began to commit mischief on the palace servants, and when he reached puberty, he turned into an uncontrollable hooligan.

Neither the Queen's hysterical scoldings nor tearful pleas had any effect.

Nate, too, had no solution, and he could only quietly wait for his son to come to his senses, but disregarding his parents' worries, the prince's hooliganism only intensified with each passing day.

Thus, it seemed that the child would forever remain an unprecedented disgrace to the imperial family.

The change came unexpectedly. He suddenly caught a high fever, almost died, and then woke up as a completely different person.

He stopped his mischief and focused solely on basic training in the training ground every day, losing weight to the point of being unrecognizable and his swordsmanship, which had always been stagnant, began to improve rapidly.

His formerly ordinary disposition had now become fairly sharp.

While his son's changes were undoubtedly desirable, Nate felt an eerie sensation in his heart.

Perhaps it would have been better to have an honest conversation with Morres long ago. However, since the child seemed a little unstable, Nate could only continue to tread lightly as he always had.

And the result of his hesitant approach was an irretrievable storm.

Boom!

Suddenly, with a sound like a mountain collapsing from outside, the palace shook as if an earthquake had occurred.

The cardinals and ministers who had just finished their morning meeting and were moving about were in a state of chaos and rushed out into the imperial palace courtyard.

What they saw was a huge black lump carelessly thrown on one side of the courtyard.

A large wing with hardly any skin left, a majestic body with rotting flesh hanging off, and the black magic energy emanating from the entire body.

"A real dragon....."

"What... what in the world....."

Why would the demon race, known to be wreaking havoc in the eastern region, suddenly fall into the middle of the imperial palace?

While the stunned cardinals were stammering at the unexpected event, the imperial guards and the order of Knights rushed in and surrounded the dragon.

The beast, was still twitching intermittently as if it had not completely expired due to the shock of the crash.

However, they couldn't approach carelessly because of the fierce magical energy emanating from it. Just then,

"Ah, I didn't mean to cause a commotion... please, carry on with your tasks."

A boy dressed in light armor appeared next to the dragon's head, speaking these absurd words. Light golden hair with a gray tint, ferocious eyes, and a cheeky expression.

"Prince Morres?"

"Your Highness, what exactly has happened here?"

Despite Knight Commander Baltazar's trembling question, the voice of the boy known as Mores was absolutely cheerful.

"The exorcists from the punitive force said that, unlike other demon species, this one doesn't get fully resummoned even if it's slain. Its body is left behind. So to purify it, it apparently needs to be transported to the imperial road where Father is, right?"

"....."

"But if we were to capture it all the way in the east and transport it, it seemed like our soldiers and the villages would get contaminated with magical energy all along the way, so..."

In short, he was saying that to minimize the secondary damage that could occur while moving the demon species' corpse, he drove the demon here and dropped it right in the imperial palace, where the emperor resides.

"What an insane...."

A high priest unwittingly blurted out a blasphemous phrase, but no one objected to it.

Everyone had the same thought running through their heads at that moment.

That worthless, pig-like prince had evolved into an unpredictable lunatic!

—Kieeeeeek!

The dragon, using its last bit of strength, roared in an attempt to shake off the prince.

As a response, dark magical energy surged stronger and spread out, making the knights who had surrounded the demon flinch and step back.

However, Morres, who was right in the middle of that dreadful magical energy, drew the sword from his waist with a nonchalant expression.

Soon, a dark aura began to emanate thickly from his sword, Nutcracker.

A noticeable energy was accumulating on the sword blade.

Considering the young age of the prince, it was an impressive level, but the nature of that blood-red aura was overwhelmingly ominous.

Definitely not the aura a prince of the Holy Empire should have.

"I'm going to take down this creature now. Be careful of the magic."

With his calm voice,

Pshhh.

The prince's sword pierced the dragon's heart, which had turned black with magic.

Soon, cracks formed in the dragon's heart along with a cracking noise, and from there, dark magic began to explode and pour out.

Hwaaak!

In an instant, both the dragon and the prince disappeared, wrapped in a cloud of black smoke.

"Ahhaaak!"

"Your Highness Morres!"

"Your Highness!"

The magic, seemingly about to cover the entire palace courtyard, was blocked by a transparent, silver barrier before reaching the knights who were surrounding it.

The Holy Emperor had set up a massive holy barrier around the dragon in that short period of time.

Sshhh.

The barrier, filled with magic, looked like a black dome. But the magic was purified where it met the emperor's holy barrier and began to blur, and over time, it started to become transparent.

Soon, only clear air and a whitened skeletal frame of a giant creature were left inside the barrier.

"Wha- where's the prince?"

Ordinary people would rot away from just touching the magic of the undead demon species.

A young prince without a hint of holy power should not have been able to withstand it, especially being at the epicenter of a magical explosion.

Despite everyone's concerns, fortunately, Prince Morres was safe. After the barrier disappeared, the boy, who had been cloaked in his own aura, slowly walked toward the emperor.

His nonchalant demeanor made it seem like the magic wasn't a threat at all. The twisted and blood-red aura was emanating from the prince.

If a stranger saw this, they might have been confused as to who between the prince and the dragon was the spawn of the demon.

"...Your Majesty, I might be out of place, but are you saying that that power of the prince is truly not from a demon?"

Archbishop Benitus, who was standing next to the emperor, asked in a trembling voice.

How dare he suggest that the prince of the Holy Empire was a demon? Normally, he could be charged with blasphemy or treason. The frail old man must have been half shocked, unable to comprehend this.

Nate, who had been quietly watching this incredible series of events, eventually raised a hand to cover his face and let out a soft sigh.

Yes, Morres.

The child who was merely a reckless fool had now become the eye of a new storm, bringing a massive wind of karma to Delcross.

2

Morres Klein, the third prince of the Holy Empire Delcross.

The laughingstock under the heavens.

The unparalleled disgrace of the Imperial Family.

This idiotic prince, in stark contrast to his father, who was recognized as the most powerful emperor in history, was a worthless son who inherited neither his sword skills nor a speck of his holy power.

Most of all, his fiery temperament and vulgar speech, which were nothing like the calm demeanor of the emperor, were too excessive to simply be dismissed as youthful impetuosity.

It wasn't unreasonable for some bishops and high priests to whisper that perhaps Prince Morres might not be the Holy Emperor's biological son.

However, an opportunity for change came to Prince Morres, who seemed forever doomed to idiocy.

One day, he suddenly fell ill with a severe fever. He suffered through three days and nights of near-death experiences, but when he regained consciousness, he had become an entirely different person.

"People really can change after a near-death experience," everyone thought, dismissing it lightly. But the truth was, the prince had a deep secret he couldn't easily reveal to others about his sudden transformation.

That's because the one who opened his eyes in the dying body of Morres was a man named Lee Seongjin, a human from Earth.

* * *

From an early age, Lee Seongjin was a boy with a peculiar persistence.

From infancy, he was stubborn about seeing things through to the end, causing his parents, despite him being their only child, to experience an exceptionally challenging upbringing.

"Who on earth did he inherit that stubbornness from?"

His mother would tear up looking at her son who was still stubbornly suckling on his pacifier past the age of four, worried about potential dental issues.

Fortunately, his baby teeth grew out evenly and nicely.

Just when they thought his interest in pacifiers had decreased now that he was in kindergarten, he started insisting on not going home after school.

No amount of persuasion, whether it was promising snacks at home or watching Pororo¹, worked.

The kindergarten teachers, suspecting child abuse at home due to his refusal to return, could only return the mother's awkward smile.

In the end, the routine continued with either the mom or dad carrying the child, touring the playground until he fell asleep, and then returning home late at night.

With Seongjin entering elementary school and maturing a bit, his parents were finally able to breathe a sigh of relief. They thought that at least now he was at an age where he could communicate.

That was until one day he returned home with a classmate's crayons, resulting in a call from his homeroom teacher the next day.

It was a brief period of peace.

"He broke my crayons. So, I took his instead."

"Seongjin-ah². Hyung-cheol already apologized. It's wrong to forcibly take your friend's things."

The child's eyes sharpened.

"So, you're saying if I say sorry, that's it? What about my crayons?"

"We can buy more crayons."

"Why should you buy me crayons when it was Hyung-cheol's fault? The person who caused the accident should take responsibility."

Stunned by her son's retort, the mother lost her words. From the child's perspective, he wasn't wrong.

After some hesitation, the mother finally said, "Seongjin-ah, friendship with friends is priceless compared to the cost of crayons. When a friend apologizes, accept it first. If you still feel wronged, let's discuss what to do next, okay?"

The child seemed dissatisfied but reluctantly nodded.

"But, the broken crayons were a 24-pack. Why did you take Hyung-cheol's 56-pack crayons?"

"That's for my mental distress. Of course, I should get something better, right?"

She couldn't tell if her son was shrewd or just intelligent.

After a unique childhood, Seongjin became quiet as a middle schooler, as if he was a different person.

His parents were cautiously watching to see if their somewhat different son was adjusting to school life.

But his uniform and textbooks were always neat, and there was no sign of bullying.

He's finally grown up.

Seongjin's parents were overjoyed.

In reality, while it seemed peaceful on the surface, Seongjin's school life was a mess, but his parents were none the wiser.

While the son failed to acquire the easygoing sociability his parents wished for, he did gain the cunning to conceal incidents and accidents from his homeroom teacher and parents.

For instance, he was unlucky enough to be targeted by a school bully, but after persistently attacking one of them for three months, the bullies ended up trembling and declared a truce.

Or, he stalked a student council member who picked a fight with him for a week, causing the member to develop social anxiety and paranoid delusions, leading to long-term absence from school.

His school life was a colorful journey that straddled somewhere between justice and crime.

Although not an outstanding student, he was somewhat diligent and, at the end of his school life, Seongjin entered a reasonable four-year university in Seoul.

He dated moderately, served in the military after becoming a sophomore, and found employment at a decent small-to-medium-sized business after graduation.

– That Mr. Lee, there's something cheap about him.

– Really? Isn't he diligent and good at his work?

He did receive suspicious glances from some older superiors, but externally, Seongjin performed the role of a diligent company worker flawlessly.

Job proposals started trickling in, and he began flirting with a female coworker.

If nothing unusual had happened, he probably would have led a normal life, getting married and living uneventfully.

August 2035.

The Gehenna Gate Incident.

As the Stargates, which connected to the demon world of Gehenna, suddenly appeared all over the world without warning, armies of thousands, tens of thousands of monsters began to rush out.

Cities and facilities were destroyed in the blink of an eye, and the world fell into a temporary state of anarchy in just a few days.

After a hard struggle, humanity, focusing on a few militaries that managed to establish defensive lines, began to counterattack, but the scale of human casualties in just a few days reached astronomical numbers.

With most of its major cities destroyed, human civilization greatly regressed as well.

Seongjin, who was on a business trip and was lucky enough to take refuge in a bomb shelter within the defensive line, survived. However, he lost everything, including his family and his life's base.

In front of this massive tragedy of humanity, Seongjin did not cry. He just calmly contemplated who he should repay this debt to, while watching the endless stream of monsters pouring out of the gates.

Monsters kept coming no matter how many were killed, but this stubborn man never gave up once he targeted something.

Seongjin became a Hunter. He became a professional monster hunter.

After killing a monster, if one touched its corpse, a strange energy-like thing was sucked into one's body, which the hunters called the monster's aura.

People who absorbed this became capable of exhibiting abilities beyond human limits. As if absorbing part of the monster's power.

Sometimes it was simple physical strength, sometimes it was a reinforcement-type ability to create a tough outer skin, and sometimes it manifested as superpowers like telekinesis.

The more monster aura the hunters absorbed, the stronger they became, and soon, superhumans began to emerge who could single-handedly kill thousands of monsters.

Humanity, which had been pushed to the brink, began to slowly push back the front line, and a lengthy war of attrition continued for decades.

The demon world, which ambitiously invaded Earth, ironically faced destruction along with Earth several decades later.

As hunters became stronger, the monsters killing humans also became stronger. The front line, maintaining a steady balance of power, forced both sides to exhaust an unbearable amount of life force.

When the final superhuman squad of humanity stood before the Demon King, who had been hiding deep within the heart of the demon world, the Demon King greeted them with a grim face and sighed.

"So it has come to this. What have we been doing for decades? I feel ashamed."

Of course, they didn't care about the Demon King's disappointment. There was virtually nothing left on both sides to catch their breath and stop this war of attrition.

Total annihilation of one side.

That was the only thing left between the demon world and humanity.

Regardless of his resigned attitude, the Demon King's resistance was tenacious to the end.

The superhuman squad and the Demon King fought tirelessly for three days and nights, and by the time the third night fell, only the upper part of the Demon King's head was barely intact, and there was only one human being left alive among the superhuman squad members.

That was the unyielding man, Seongjin, who never gives up until the end.

He strained to lift his now barely moving fist towards the demon king's head. The demon king, with only his head remaining, spoke in a bored tone.

"This stubborn one. I thought you were the least interesting of all, but I never thought I would die at your hands."

So, what's your point?

Seongjin sneered as he threw a punch.

Crash!

A crack appeared on the only remaining horn of the demon king, which was dark as obsidian.

"...Huh?"

Crash!

The next punch sent the demon king's nose crashing down, but it still lacked the strength to crush his head in a single blow.

Seongjin caught his breath and clenched his trembling fist again.

"Hey! Wait! Just a moment!"

The demon king, whose double nose was bleeding, was startled, but Seongjin just clenched his mouth shut and threw another punch.

Crash!

"Argh! Hey, this is a bit....."

Crash!

"...Wait a moment, you brat!"

No more fists were thrown.

Of course, it wasn't because he heeded the Demon King's words, but rather he took a moment to recover his strength, which was no longer being exerted in his fists.

Surprisingly, in the meantime, the flattened nose of the demon king began to gradually rise again. Although the speed was significantly slower than before, a demon king of this otherworld has the ability to regenerate his body, even with only a head left.

An ominous feeling swept over both the demon king and Seongjin that the final blow was going to take longer than they thought.

"Stop with your pitiful punching. You're not putting any strength into it! Look, human, you can't kill me like this. How about we have a temporary truce, get ourselves together, and fight again?"

That was nonsense.

If two fully recovered opponents fight, it's blatantly clear who will be at a disadvantage.

As Seongjin tremblingly lifted his arm again, the demon king spoke in a desperate voice.

"No, let's just stop fighting altogether! I'll leave Earth and Gehenna forever. I won't show up again, okay?"

"....."

"I get to save my life, and you get to keep both Earth and the demon world. Think about the potential of the two merged worlds! You might be able to match the power of a demon king!"

"....."

"If you kill me as I am, the masterless Gehenna will perish, and Earth, having lost its pillar, will gradually be sucked into the gate. Both worlds will end! What does that mean to you?"

Seongjin finally responded to the demon king.

"What's important to me isn't this world. Whether you're done for or not, that's all that matters."

Since the result will not change anyway, he didn't need any silly persuasion.

The demon king watched with a pale face as Seongjin slowly clenched his fist.

Just how many more punches will it take to be done with him?

"Hey, hey! Can't you at least let me die by myself? I'm losing strength because of the auto-regeneration. Just give me a moment, and I can burn my soul with Gehenna's flame. I'll disappear all by myself so you won't have to bother!"

"....."

"And... I'll also close the gate. Even if the demon world vanishes, Earth won't be affected!"

That proposal seemed rather attractive. Lee Seongjin nodded.

"Alright. I'll think about it after killing you first."

"How can we converse if I'm dead... More than that, you won't be able to kill me like that! No, why am I even trying to reason with someone like you!"

The Demon King screamed.

How long had the neverending punches gone on for? As Seongjin was taking a breather, he started to hear sobbing sounds.

"This... This damn brat... I truly didn't want to resort to this....."

Suddenly, a crimson flame ignited from thin air, engulfing the Demon King's head. Even amid the persistent regeneration, the Demon King's skin started to warp in the burning red flames.

"This is....."

Gehenna's flame.

The deep corrosion of the demon world that obliterates the very existence of objects.

The constant regeneration of the Demon King's flesh and even his soul could indeed be extinguished. It appeared the rumors were true.

And that means...

"So you couldn't kill yourself because you lacked power, all of it was your trickery."

As Lee Seongjin smirked and lifted his fist again, the Demon King flinched and shouted out loud, "...What! Why! What! What's the difference! I was trying to disappear into another dimension as if I were dead, so what!"

Despite his teary eyes, there was a strange pride in his demeanor. Even Lee Seongjin was momentarily lost for words at this attitude.

"But now everything is wrong. Sob! Yes. I'm dying as you wish. But I won't go alone."

The flame that was burning the Demon King slowly grew and transferred to Seongjin's body. With a surge of intense heat, his body was also swallowed by the crimson flames in an instant.

"Burn along with the noble soul of this Demon King as fuel! I will definitely annihilate you! I'll burn your soul to ashes!"

In the flames, his flesh warped and his bones were exposed, yet the Demon King smiled, seemingly delighted. It appeared he was deeply resentful for being hit for so long.

"What, this....."

"Hahahaha! How does it feel! The pain of your soul burning! Uhuhahahahaha!"

Even as his own soul was burning.

Listening to the Demon King's laughter, which sounded more like sobbing, Lee Seongjin examined his burning body.

Indeed, his body, which had become strong by absorbing demonic energy for decades and was not harmed by ordinary physical forces, was now melting away futilely.

Despite the body becoming insensitive to pain due to multiple enhancements, the process of dermis burning and muscle fibers getting exposed was extremely painful.

He had fought countless battles on the brink of death, but this time, Lee Seongjin could feel that he was surely dying.

However, one way or another.

The instigator of the demon world invasion, the target of his lifelong enmity, was finally defeated.

"Uhahaha! Hahahaha....."

The Demon King, who was laughing insanely, abruptly closed his mouth as he saw Lee Seongjin, covered in flames, die. An involuntary chill ran down his spine.

"So, I guess this is the end for me too."

With his muscles, now nothing more than skeletal remnants, slowly moving, he lifts his fist engulfed in flames.

"So let's take one last hit."

"What!? You bastard... even at this point....."

"Consider it compensation for psychological damage."

Kwaaaang!

"Aaaaaaargh!"

The piercing scream soon faded.

After confirming that the Demon King's face had crumbled and turned to ash, Seongjin closed his eyes.

In the darkening consciousness, it seemed like he heard a sound of something shattering in his mind.

That was the last memory of Hunter Lee Seongjin.

3

It was supposed to be the end.

* * *

'What the hell is happening...'

Why would I, who was certain I had burnt even my soul, be lying on a bed, chewing on porridge someone else is feeding me?

[Ha ha ha! This is hilarious! Are you a baby? What are you going to do with this bib?]

'...It's a napkin, you idiot.'

Why is this damn demon king, who had solemnly sworn to burn his own soul, making a racket in my head?

The clock winded back a day. As a wet towel caressed his forehead, he opened his eyes to see a mature woman in extravagant clothes, tears welling up as she looked at him.

"Morres! My baby! Can you recognize your mother?"

"Oh, Prince! You have finally regained consciousness!"

Caught amidst the commotion, Seongjin blinked in confusion.

A grand, ornate room. The attentive care of people who seemed to be servants.

At first, he thought he might be in the afterlife. Realizing that the situation was abnormal happened when a familiar voice echoed in his mind.

[Hey, quit standing around dumbfounded and wake up! Are you still half asleep?]

This absurd voice, could it be?

'...The demon king?'

[Ah, you recognize me! You weren't opening your eyes so I thought your soul was completely damaged. You know how intense Gehenna's flames are, right?]

Why is this bastard?

Are you telling me we didn't finish it all off?

[Woah, woah. Calm down, get your bearings. Your soul is still settling in, you know. This body you just got into, if you mess up, you could get bounced right back out, got it?]

What the hell is he babbling about? If Gehenna's flames weren't enough, if my punch wasn't enough, I'm more than ready to finish him off for good.

Seongjin, gritting his teeth as he tried to get up, found his body surprisingly sluggish and heavy. He collapsed back down. Not only because people around him were holding him back in surprise, but his body was also oddly languid and heavy.

It's hard to breathe. My arms and legs are too heavy.

"Morres! What's wrong? My child, are you in pain?"

"Prince! Please calm down..."

Let go! The Demon King is still alive! We need to kill that bastard...

[Hey, your blood pressure is skyrocketing, you know? If you keep this up, you'll die just as soon as you've been revived. Now, take some deep breaths, okay? Inhale, exhale. Inhale, exhale.]

What the hell is this demon king talking about! And what are these people doing, holding me down!

Let me go! Let go!

"Cough!"

Suddenly, a sharp pain pierced his back, and his vision started to spin.

"Morres!"

"Your Highness!"

As the desperate cries of the people faded away, darkness claimed his sight. When Seongjin came to, he was still in the same place, surrounded by the same people. And the goddamn voice of the demon king was still echoing from somewhere.

[Wow, I thought you were just prone to bad tempers, but it seems your anger really is out of control.]

'You, bastard...'

Grinding his teeth furiously, Seongjin heard the demon king quickly backtrack.

[Ah, sorry, sorry. I won't make any more annoying comments, okay? Let's just talk, let's talk. That's good, right?]

'What? This bastard?'

Their conversation was still somewhat tentative. But surprisingly, Seongjin, who had been raging so furiously he seemed likely to die from anger, quickly calmed down within half a day.

Because he found out that the demon king's physical body had been completely destroyed, and only a fragment of his soul remained like a leftover.

He was at a loss as to how to deal with a guy who was nothing but a voice, and getting angry seemed to be a waste of effort.

So he quenched his rage and listened quietly to the demon king's explanation.

The final battle had completely incinerated not only the demon king but also Seongjin's own body in the flames of Gehenna. For some reason, however, Seongjin's soul remained largely unscathed, and the fire had quietly died down.

Perhaps, the demon king suggested in his neutral tone, his soul survived due to the unexpectedly rapid evolution of the flames.

[While my noble soul was mostly burnt away, I have no idea why you remained unscathed.]

"....."

[Anyway, that's how I ended up losing nearly all of my power and vigor. All that's left now is perhaps a vestige of my original personality.]

The point is, he could never return to the mighty demon king he once was.

"Then you should have just disappeared somewhere long ago, why bother talking and rambling inside another's head?"

At Seongjin's dismissive response, the demon king sighed.

[That's not such a simple matter. Do you think I haven't tried? But I can't escape. Every time I try to distance myself from you even a little bit, I suffer unbearable pain, thanks to the holy energy around me. It's a terrifying pain that crushes the core itself. If time continues to pass, won't even the remaining fragments of my soul disappear completely?]

"Looks like we have a conclusion. Just vanish cleanly. It's simple."

[You brat! Would you do the same if you were in my shoes, huh?]

Of course, Seongjin wanted to eradicate even the smallest trace of that remaining soul.

But how could he kill something that doesn't have a physical form in the first place? There was no way he could summon Gehenna's flames right now.

Seongjin had a tendency to charge without looking around when he had a goal, but he was not a man to stubbornly stick to the impossible.

Once he accepted the situation, he found the annoying entity surprisingly useful. After all, the former demon king did know a lot.

The demon king, who had regained consciousness a day earlier than Seongjin, had already collected a fair amount of information about this new world and Seongjin's situation.

Using an efficient method of directly touching other people's souls and glimpsing their memories, or so he claimed.

Thanks to this, while Seongjin was lying in bed receiving the devoted care of the people, he began to quickly grasp his current situation based on the babbling of the demon king.

According to the demon king, this place was a completely different dimensional world, far removed from Earth or the demon world.

[We're extremely lucky. We had a high chance of being scattered beyond the void, but strangely enough, we've ended up in a main world]

Main world?

[It's a higher dimension. It's at least a couple of levels above the imaginary worlds¹, like Sigurd-34 Earth or Gehenna.]

'Imaginary worlds? What is Sigurd-34 Earth?'

The demon king clicked his tongue.

[Wah, such a primitive Earthling class. You don't even know the name of your own dimension. You don't even have a concept of dimensions, do you? You should have figured this out before rushing in to die. Oh...these ignorant fools.]

He regretted not wiping out the demon king's head completely. At least he would've been able to slap him around before the demon king could annoy him.

Feeling some eerie energy, the soul of the demon king began to shudder.

But to sense his spirit so directly, it's a little disgusting.

[You're harsh. You're a really ruthless guy. Even though we've become soul companions now.....]

'...Shut up!'

Anyway, this place belonging to a higher dimension is the Holy Empire of Delcross.

A powerful empire with many kingdoms and grand duchies under the rule of the Holy Emperor, who receives the protection of the gods from generation to generation.

The current Holy Emperor is the 17th, and the man would be this body's biological father.

In other words, he Lee Seongjin was now a prince. No wonder people were extraordinarily polite.

[Your name now is Morres Klein. The third prince and the fourth child of the Holy Emperor, who turns 15 this year.....]

'A child?'

[He's a very famous troublemaker.]

His mother, the first queen, Elizabeth Asein, is the daughter of the highly respected Archduke Asein, and among the women of the palace, she is the queen with the most distinguished lineage.

She had an unbeatable confidence even in front of the Holy Emperor and Empress, believing without a doubt that her son, who had inherited the noblest blood among the royal children, would be the crown prince to succeed the Holy Emperor.

And that expectation soon morphed into an excessive educational fervor and emotional attachment.

Fortunately, Prince Morres tried to live up to his mother's expectations when he was young.

He may not have been exceptionally gifted compared to his other brothers, but he at least diligently learned the demeanor of a prince.

However, from around the age of seven, he began to frequently lose his temper for no reason and gradually became lawless.

He ranted and raved at the maids and servants, often resorting to unprovoked violence. When he was bored, he would break things by throwing dishes and items around, and he continually tortured and stressed his escort knights.

During lessons, he would insult and mock his teachers, and after being scolded by the queen a few times, he stopped attending lessons altogether.

The demon king recounted the scandalous history of the troublesome prince as if he was looking at Seongjin's own shame.

'But how can you have such detailed information in just one day? Can I trust this?'

[Oh! These are the pieces of information I've obtained by directly contacting the souls of the people around us. They are high-quality information that you alone couldn't gather even if you were reborn. Be grateful.]

'.....'

After that, the prince's daily life plummeted downhill.

His once impeccable manners disappeared, and he began to find even the slightest physical activity bothersome.

Eventually, he gave up even his swordsmanship classes which he had somewhat enjoyed, lying in bed all day loafing around and incessantly snacking.

People couldn't understand why he had suddenly changed. They could only speculate that the young prince, who had so far obediently followed his ambitious queen mother, might have been unknowingly suffering from severe stress.

Over the years, the once noble prince became an ignorant, ill-tempered swine, rolling around due to his severe obesity.

[Then, he suddenly collapsed.]

The incident happened three days ago.

Morres, who had eaten well and gone to bed the night before, suddenly suffered from a mysterious high fever from dawn, and by the afternoon, he had completely lost consciousness. There were no signs of poisoning, and the symptoms were unfamiliar for any disease.

The skilled royal physicians rushed to help the prince, but he remained unconscious.

The emperor postponed national affairs and visited the sickroom, while the queen mother kept vigil over the sickbed in tears all night.

And four days after the fever began, not Morres, but Seongjin, woke up in this body.

'So where did the real soul of Morres go?'

That was what Seongjin was most curious about. Unintentionally, he had become a spirit possessing someone else's body, and even for him, who had no spiritual knowledge, this was not normal.

If they unlawfully possessed a healthy person's body, it would be a big problem if the original owner were harmed.

However, the reaction of the demon king was not so enlightened.

[Hmm? When I woke up, there were no other souls in this body besides us. Maybe he died from the fever?]

So he's saying they conveniently entered the body of someone who had just died from illness.

'So what happens if we leave here?'

[Why? Leave? Since it's a soulless body, there's a high chance it will just die, right?]

'...Is there a way to get out?'

The demon king's response was ruthless.

[Why not? Just die, that's it.]

'.....'

Seongjin looked terrified.

Certainly, being unexpectedly resurrected wasn't a bad feeling.

Even when he was about to face death with the demon king, he knew he couldn't escape annihilation, and he was intoxicated with the sense of achievement of having destroyed the demon world—even though there were some residual garbage that hadn't completely burnt—it felt enough.

But when he actually woke up, the past life filled with patience, suffering, and deprivation came to him in a different way.

The life of constantly wearing himself down in order to fight, to eliminate the underworld.

Seongjin's past life was far from what one could call happy.

What about now? Could he really live a new life in another's body?

Is it okay to consider this miraculous coincidence a compensation for his past unhappy life?

As Seongjin was lost in thought, the demon, who had no way of understanding his complex feelings, was teasing him from the side.

["Anyway, what if you're a pig? You've become the son of the highest person in the country? Wow, congratulations. You've hit the jackpot in life, you."]

Yeah, this was also a problem too.

Seongjin swallowed his saliva, looking at his massive body sprawled on the bed.

The bulging belly that blocked his view despite being in a lying position, and the thick arms and legs bloated with fat that couldn't even fully fold at the joints.

He was short of breath and felt tired just from squirming for a moment; this wasn't just the aftereffect of a simple fever.

To think he had to occupy such a worthless body. Seongjin sighed, recalling his previous body covered with powerful muscles.

'Is this really a good thing...'

This is what had happened in the past day.

And now, Seongjin, lying on a luxurious bed, reluctantly eats the porridge fed by Queen Elizabeth, as if he were a baby bird, with a napkin neatly placed on his neck.

"Now, Morres, say ah- one more time."

He was embarrassingly close to death, but at the sight of the affectionate queen, Seongjin reluctantly opened his mouth again.

The demon's almost breathless laughter echoed in his head.

["Hahahaha! I'm going crazy! I'm going to die! Are you trying to make me die laughing! Hahahaha!"]

That son of a gun, I will definitely get rid of him someday.

Seongjin swallowed the porridge roughly and then stopped the queen who was about to scoop the next bite.

"Um... Mother (eomoni)? My stomach is full now. You must be tired, I think you can stop feeding me."

"Morres....."

The queen gazed at her son with a sorrowful expression for a moment, then lowered her head and wiped her tears with the end of her extravagant lace sleeve.

"That's right, I suddenly realize that your memory is not intact. You've never called me mother (eomoni) before."

"Uh, um....."

Awkward as hell!

He had vaguely brushed it off, saying that his memory before the illness was hazy, to avoid any unwarranted suspicions. But every time he talked to the queen, Seongjin was nervous that he might be discovered as not being Morres.

Even now, Seongjin didn't know how to respond and was hesitating, but the demon who had glimpsed memories from the queen's soul gave him a hint.

[It seems like you usually called her 'Royal Mother'?]

I know, but so what.

Since he couldn't say 'Royal Mother', Seongjin ended up having no choice but to respond like this.

"...I'm sorry."

"What do you have to be sorry about? Your fever was so terrible. Even with the emperor himself administering treatment, the fever did not subside, so as a mother, I was worried that something terrible had happened."

The queen delicately adjusted her sleeve and carefully held Morres' hand.

"Just you waking up healthy is more than enough to make me happy."

When her gentle, warm hand touched him, Seongjin had to work hard not to harden his expression. He felt horribly guilty for having to pretend to be her son, when he was not.

Her real son was already dead, his soul gone, and she couldn't even mourn him because she didn't know the truth.

But then again, he couldn't tell her that he was another soul inhabiting Morres' body.

There was no chance she'd believe him, and even if she did, it would be problematic.

What if she immediately exorcises him? And if his soul really gets chased out of the body?

He didn't particularly regret his spare life, but he also didn't want to commit suicide in such a grand manner.

"But it seems there's a silver lining to you being sick. My child is sitting quietly with me like this, when was the last time?"

"Hahaha...."

This crazy Morres. How did you live that your mother could be happy about such trivial things?

Seongjin could only awkwardly smile.

4

The body, which began to show signs of recovery once, quickly improved. The food was also changed from porridge to regular food, and the range of behavior began to increase.

In the meantime, Seongjin spent time doing various exercises in his room in his spare time.

He wanted to run outside right away and do high-intensity aerobic exercise, but he decided that it was impossible with his physical strength, which fell to the floor while lying down due to illness.

'In addition, if I move too hard right now, it seems like my joints will fly.....'

Look at the trembling knees just by doing national gymnastics once.

Standing exercise is also burdensome, but if he run with this heavy weight, the cartilage won't just wear out.

Is there no swimming pool anywhere? He wanted to train with the feeling of rehab.

As he was clumsily struggling with his arms and legs, leaning part of his weight on the bed so as not to strain his body as much as possible, the demon king comforted him and spoke nonsense.

[Well, it's better than the first time though, right? It seems that the outline of the face is revealed a little.]

When he looked in the mirror, a huge blond boy approaches him with a sullen expression.

He had grayish blonde hair, and his slightly fierce eyes reminded him very much of Queen Elizabeth.

Although he is overweight, he seems to have grown quite well for a 15-year-old, but since he is not familiar with the average height of the people here, it is only a guess.

'I don't know of any change. Isn't it just a little swelling?'

[Shouldn't we inspire motivation with a positive mind first? Maybe not? If you keep working hard, will you become a handsome man from a pig? Now, fighting!]

I want to just destroy him. Seongjin shook his head and started his bare-handed exercises again.

* * *

The detached palace where Seongjin is currently staying is a pretty ivory building called 'Pearl Palace'.

From the outside, it was just a subtle and neat shape, but if you look around, it was a beautiful villa filled with luxurious and colorful decorations.

It is said that the First Queen built it specially for Morres, so it probably wasn't a normal effort.

It is equipped with all facilities for the prince's education and social activities, including small but luxurious bedrooms, a private study, a private gymnasium, a private greenhouse, and a private banquet hall. The gymnasium and the library were planned to be visited by Seongjin sooner or later.

However, as a result of observing for several days while building basic physical strength, Sungjin found out that this Pearl Palace is a place where things go a little strangely.

First, none of the humans who reside or visit the Pearl Palace have divine power.

It was a really strange thing. The entire imperial palace is filled with divine energy, but the source of that energy is not visible.

'I'm sure the area is overflowing with divine power to the point that the Demon King can't get out of this body without permission.....'

However, in reality, Seongjin had never met anyone with divine power after entering this body.

Morres' body is no exception. The current Holy King, Nathaniel himself, was an unprecedented holder of enormous divine power, but unfortunately, Morres, the son of the most ambitious First Queen, was not born with even a handful of divine power.

Well, it was a very fortunate thing for Seongjin and the Demon King. If Morres' body had held even a little divine power, the Demon King would have disappeared as soon as he entered this body.

'... What a waste. I could have sent it completely.'

[This bastard! Do you think you bastard will be fine alone? You are the evil spirit that entered the prince's body at will! If you were to be discovered by the priest, wouldn't you be exorcised right away?]

That might be a bit difficult.

Anyway, the Holy Empire Delcross has a strong theocratic system, and its influence extends to the entire continent. In other words, it means that it is a place where people with divine power gather from all over the continent.

However, there are only ordinary people without divine power in the Pearl Palace. Could this be a coincidence?

Not seeing that common healer, it was really strange considering that the precious prince had been brought back to life.

The demon king carefully guessed the reason.

[Maybe it's because the original Mores doesn't have divine power?]

'What does that matter?'

[Think about his reputation. Even though he's the son of the Holy Emperor, it is said that he has zero divine power. With that personality, he would have overlooked other people using divine power. I think he just went out of his way because of his inferiority complex?]

It's plausible, but is that all?

[Hey, that's why, let's go here. Isn't it good for us? Those with divine power are particularly sensitive to magic and evil spirits. How good is it without worrying about getting caught?]

Uh, wait a minute.

'But isn't Morres's father doing well? How can the priests avoid their father if they are stuck in a separate palace? In the same palace?'

[... Is the final boss your father?]

Seongjin sighed as he felt the demon king tremble.

I don't know either. Be it what it is.

Second, the servants of the Pearl Palace were somehow strange.

Pearl Palace is managed by a small number of servants. Excluding the minimum number of guards, the number of people residing in the palace compared to the size of the palace was few and far between.

One dedicated lady-in-waiting, two maids, a resident housekeeper, a chef, and a low-level administrative official.

Even Queen Lizabeth, who occasionally visits Seongjin, is accompanied by attendants, escort knights, and nearly 20 people.

Moreover, even these very few servants were unusual.

First of all, as an example, there would be Edith, the one and only lady-in-waiting.

She was a young lady with short bobbed hair and a graceful face, and she walked around the palace with a blunt expression unsuitable for an imperial court lady.

Every time she go to Seongjin's room alone, he thought at first that she had a lot of trouble at a young age in a poor working environment.

Even though it is a town without labor laws, shouldn't there be a minimum number of shift workers?

But this woman was no ordinary person.

Even if Seongjin makes a small gesture, she flies into the room, or she picks up and carries an enormous amount of food by herself.

What a surprise she was when she lifted Mores' huge body with her slender arms, saying that she would change the sweaty sheets while he was lying down. She initially suspected it was an assassin posing as her handmaid.

Hunter's intuition, forged by decades of battles with demons, said:

Maybe this woman is on par with quite a few knights.

He thought people here were just like that, but that wasn't the case. Even just looking at the First Queen, she is just a weak lady who grew up finely, and the same goes for her ladies-in-waiting who follow her when she goes on a journey. Although they were skilled housekeepers, they were all just women with extremely normal bodies.

Why is it that only Morres' dedicated handmaid is so special?

"Edith, how is Edith so strong?"

Well, if you're curious, you can ask yourself.

Edith, who opened the curtains to ventilate the room, quickly bowed her head and answered Seongjin's question.

"Yes, Your Highness. That's because I'm an Aura user."

Perhaps because the queen had such a strong influence, she maintained a relatively polite attitude even in front of the prince, who had a dirty reputation.

It can be said that it is a professional attitude that knows how to exclude emotions when working.

[She just said, 'What is this Pig Prince doing to annoy people in the morning?' in her thoughts.]

Of course, it was meaningless to the person next to the demon king who was talkative and liked to tell stories.

Seongjin, embarrassed for nothing, cleared his throat.

"Hmm, Aura user?"

"Yes, Your Highness. 'Aura' is said to be the power that is the basis of life that spreads evenly throughout the world. Those who consciously collect and use them on their bodies are called 'Auro users'."

In response to Seongjin's basic question, perhaps thanks to the excuse that her memory was not perfect, Edith gave an explanation without any doubt.

"As long as you enter Aura Initiation and be recognized as a proper Aura user, you will be eligible to take the Imperial Palace Knights entrance exam."

"Uh, you mean that, Edith too?"

"Yes, I also entered the imperial palace at first as a squire aspiring to join the Royal Guard."

"Squire? So, an apprentice knight?"

Seongjin's doubt deepened.

Why is a sane aspiring knight doing this in the Pearl Palace?

"That is....."

Edith glanced at Seongjin and cautiously continued.

"That... Your Highness, in the past, treated servants a little harshly....."

In short, as Morres' depravity escalated, injuries and complaints from employees continued.

The First Queen tried hard to crack down on the mouth, but it was impossible to cover it up quietly as people were getting hurt every day.

And the news reached the Holy Emperor's ears.

– Can't control it? Then the prince should hire someone he can't carelessly hurt.

On the way, the Holy Emperor arranged many servants of the Pearl Palace to other palaces, and recruited a few high-wage servants.

A high salary was offered to those who are relatively skilled in handling the internal auras, and those with skills higher than squire.

At first, people thought there would be no applicants. No matter how high the salary is, it is difficult to be a maid or servant to the innocent aspirants who have come to the capital with a swollen dream of becoming a decent imperial knight.

However, the Holy Emperor said without a sign of great concern.

– There must be at least one.

As expected, there were exceptions everywhere.

Edith, who decided to come without any connection at just the right time and stick around anywhere with just one skill as a user, entered the Royal Capital around that time.

"I took the entrance exam, but it's a little difficult to roll from the ground in the Knights."

"....."

Thus, the strongest handmaiden was born, who could catch a dish thrown with quick wits, fly away easily when a weapon was wielded, and smear fish bones with a knife containing Aura.

The more he listened to her explanation, the more Seongjin became confused.

'Where did this go wrong?'

[Well.....]

It was expected of Morres, who was corrupt enough to the extent that a servant could only survive if they can master Aura, but he also thought that the Holy Emperor who came up with the idea of replacing everyone and hiring Aura users was not a sane person either.

Of course, the strangest person seems to be Edith, who was caught up in it and is acting as an exclusive maid.

"... But Your Highness."

Suddenly, Edith looked up at Seongjin and tilted her head.

"Are you all right now?"

"What?"

"Before, if you heard even the slightest talk about the Aura, you would get very angry....."

"Angry?"

"You used to throw things all over the place."

"....."

The more I got to know Morres, the more he was an asshole. Why throw things over nothing? Are you a kid?

Seongjin opened his mouth, but he had nothing else to say.

"... Sorry."

Edith's eyes widened at his answer. She looked a little surprised, probably not expecting to hear an apology.

Soon she smiled and shook her head.

"It's okay, Your Highness. It was also quite fun to catch the flying dishes."

"....."

Seongjin looked at Edith, who was quietly lowering her head, with a pitiful eye and said to the demon king.

'She must be a little strange too.'

[I know.]

By the way, it means to come.

Sungjin thought deeply.

Seeing that Aura, Divine Power, and concepts that appear only in fantasy novels actually exist, Lee Seongjin realized once again that this is a different world.

Of course, Seongjin's world where the demonic gate was open and the war with monsters was also fantasy-like, but at least at that time it was a clear and tangible battle of power.

At that time, hunters became physically stronger even by absorbing the spirit of monsters, and the occasionally born supernatural powers only exercised physical power through psychokinesis.

The same goes for demons. Occasionally, there were those who generated high heat with incendiary materials or those with corrosive poison, but it was only a small fraction, and most of them were just ignorantly smashing them with force.

So, until the demon king tried to burn the soul with 'the Flames of Gehenna', Seongjin could not even imagine that such invisible forces could exist.

[That's because Sigurd District 34 was that much of a lower dimension. The fact that you are unfamiliar with such powers is proof that it was a low-level world where magic and divine power were not allowed.]

'It's kind of bad to say it's low-level. Why are you skipping Gehenna? You said it's the same sub-dimension.'

[Do you think that all flames are the same? Gehenna is a little different! At the critical moment when we are about to take a big leap, you guys get in the way.....]

'What?'

When Seongjin's eyes became fierce, the demon king quickly turned around.

[Ahem. In any case, such low-level flame worlds usually have limited spiritual abilities or powers related to the mind. It seems that the concept itself is connected from the Main World, but there is no way to actually demonstrate its power.]

'.....'

[So please don't treat Pandemonium Gehena as the same level as a lesser dimension like Sigurd District 34. Because that place was on the verge of transforming into a Regular World.]

Seongjin blinked his eyes.

What is a Regular World?

[This bastard makes a blank face again. Wow, you ignorant Earthling. Dimension, huh? Big, huh? It is classified into the Main Phase, the Regular Phase, and the Flame Phase, huh? Don't you know that?]

'Why is this bastard fighting again? Whether you classify the dimension into three or four, is that an important issue in the current situation?'

When Seongjin gets angry, the demon king's voice creeps in.

[It doesn't matter... It may not seem like.....]

'Let's get back to the point. So, how can I use Aura?'

If he didn't know, Seong-jin felt a strong interest when he learned about the possibility of a new power.

Originally a successful hunter who used to fly around, he was about to die of frustration to be confined to such a dull body.

It seems that there are no monsters in this world, so if he can't regain the power of a hunter, how about becoming an Aura user as the next best thing?

[I don't know that either. Because our world is different from here. To explain it with your perception of the earth, there is a difference between hydroelectric power generation and thermal power generation, no, nuclear power generation. That the way the world works is completely different.]

There are things that even the Demon King, who pretended to be proud as if he didn't know anything in this world, doesn't know.

At his words, the demon king snorted.

[Hmph! What do you know about that? This body is the demon king and the ruler of one dimension. It's strong enough even without that!]

The guy who got beaten up by Seongjin was the strongest.

'Then, what about Morres in the past? Was he a user?'

He thinks it's already wrong to say that divine power has to be innate, but if it's Aura, maybe it can be acquired through learning?

He didn't feel any special feeling that is presumed to be an Aura on this body, but it's not a very rare ability because it's a power that can handle not only escort knights but also even a handmaid skillfully.

However, Morres' garbage power far exceeded Seongjin's expectations. The demon king seemed to contact Edith's soul for a moment and find out about this and that, and then he sighed.

[Hmm, it seems that the difference in achievement is extreme depending on talent. There are people who can't even feel the Aura properly no matter how much they train, and there are talented people who use Aura as if they were breathing since they were young. It's a pity, but Morres seems to have been the former.]

What did the First Queen believe in and think of making this guy the crown prince?

Seongjin sighed.

'... Should I do some physical training for now?'

[Cheer up. Life is inherently unfair. For our existence, fighting!]

'Shut up!'

5

Around the time Seongjin was getting used to the new life little by little while doing physical training in the corner of the room, rumors began to circulate in the imperial palace that the prince had become a little strange.

It was because in the past, Pearl Palace, which had never been quiet due to the sound of swearing in a loud voice and the sound of breaking objects, was as calm as a windless water surface for several days.

At first, even those who thought that he had no energy to act evil after he was ill, gradually began to notice the change in the prince.

"I heard he doesn't complain about the food at all? In the past, it was rather rare that the table was not spilled."

"In the past, he made a fuss from time to time asking for snacks, but these days he doesn't even look for snacks at all. The amount of food was also greatly reduced."

The commotion happened gradually.

Until now, the servants, who had been careful with their mouths as much as possible because of the Queen, who opened her eyes and kept their mouths shut, started pounding cubes here and there to avoid being watched as their peaceful daily life continued.

"Why is he so meek? I'm rather anxious that something might explode."

"They said his memories isn't complete yet? People don't change easily. When he recovers, he will soon act like he used to."

"well. They say that people themselves have changed. He had such a high fever, so maybe his head got a little weird after all?"

"Shh! You're out of your mind, what if someone hears it....."

And all such rumors were being reported to the chief chamberlain through the eyes and ears densely spread within the imperial palace.

"... What a strange thing."

After hearing the reports from the attendants, Chief Chamberlain Louis rested his chin on his head and thought.

"It is said that it is not uncommon for a person to have such a complete personality change after suffering from a high fever or trauma."

Even as the attendant added, Louis shook his head in silence.

Prince Morres' change was certainly surprising and welcome.

However, the chief chamberlain was rather concerned about the Holy Emperor's attitude towards him rather than the prince's change.

He has been by his side every single day since the young Holy Emperor ascended the throne. So, he was well aware of how diligently the Holy Emperor put his heart and soul into managing the Pearl Palace without any variable.

Employees were directly nominated, and visitors were strictly limited. The resident driver who manages the accounting books separately and is in charge of security was also selected by directly reviewing the application documents.

That's why, in spite of Prince Morres' sudden change, it was rather strange that he had been quietly watching without any comment until now.

The reason for the change must have been due to the unexpected fever, but would it be too much of a doubt if he considered that this was also under the control of his master?

"It's time for Prince Morres's audience."

He guessed he should visit the prince in person before that and take a closer look.

Touching his smooth-shaven chin, the chief chamberlain made that decision.

* * *

"Did you have a good night?"

"Yeah, roughly."

If there is a person Seongjin sees most often after Edith, it would be the resident doctor at Pearl Palace.

This elderly councilor by the name of Ninnias was too sloppy to be seen as a member of the imperial palace.

Every time he opens his mouth, the smell of alcohol vibrates, and his nose is red, which makes him feel like an alcoholic.

Such shabby inspiration was a regular checkup, and he examined the Seongjin twice a day, morning and evening, but he couldn't trust anything he did.

Presbyopia or less sobering, he looked at Seongjin's complexion with dim eyes and nodded, but it is doubtful that he was seeing something properly.

He felt his pulse with his hand, which also had severe tremor, but his trembling fingers couldn't even properly touch it.

"Great. That's good."

What's good? Is this person a trustworthy doctor?

When Seongjin, taken aback, looked back at Edith, who was standing next to her, she sighed and replied.

"Ninnias is actually the one who mainly looks after the permanent knights of the Pearl Palace. There was originally a separate doctor for Your Highness, but....."

According to Edith, until recently, several well-to-do members of the Imperial Palace were on duty as Morres' personal physician.

They were said to be fairly well-known members of the 'Lyora School', which is the most recognized in the imperial capital.

However, when the prince collapsed from a fever and was unable to receive proper treatment, all of them fell out of favor with the Holy Emperor and were demoted to lower positions.

He must be touring the slums and seeing plague patients now.

What, then shouldn't we send a new primary care physician soon? Why are you treating the prince who came back to life like this?

"Kukukuku."

Doctor Ninnias, who had been quietly listening to Edith's story, suddenly let out a low laugh.

"Isn't that what really suits them? Because the Lyora Order always bullshit about them fighting the plague on the front lines."

At the sudden cynical words of the doctor, Sungjin and Edith eyes widened and they looked at him.

As if he had accidentally said something, the doctor was more startled than they were, and quickly tried to fix it.

"Oh, of course I respect the teachings of the Lyora School, the only tradition recognized by the Crusade of Delcross! How are I!"

[He speaks well of things he doesn't like.]

The demon king quickly added in Seongjin's head.

[The old man is now thinking 'It's been bad, you Lyora quacks...'.]

Well, even if he didn't tell me, he couldn't help but notice that talking about respect was bullshit when he saw the expression on the doctor's shit-eating face.

It seems to be antipathy towards the school itself rather than something personal.

Naturally, Seongjin had no choice but to ask the following question.

"Well then, Doctor Ninnias. Where is your school?"

The doctor stared at Seongjin for a moment with blank eyes.

It seemed out of focus like never before, but Seongjin got the feeling that the old man was seeing him properly for the first time.

After a moment of silence, Doctor Ninnias shook his head slowly.

"I'm sorry to inform you, my lord. I am a foolish pharmacist who learned by picking things up here and there."

"....."

"I was lucky enough to catch His Majesty's eyes and get a solid job in my old age, but I never really belonged to a school."

[It is a lie.]

This time, too, Seongjin was able to grasp the true intention of the doctor before the demon king tipped him off. He was an old man with an honest expression.

"Anyway, I don't think you need to do regular check-ups every day from now on, Your Highness. You have fully recovered from your fever."

The doctor hurriedly collected the examination tools and stood up from his seat.

"From now on, focus only on recovering your physical strength by eating a lot and exercising freely. And....."

"And?"

"Compared to normal people, it seems that the activation of the Aura in the body is a little weak, so I think that recovery will be faster if you put in effort at least in practicing Aura."

He had only recently started examining Morres, and it was clear that the old man did not know much about the idiot Third Prince.

If it had been Morres's original doctors, they would never have said the last word.

As soon as the words to come came out of the old man's mouth, Edith looked back at Seongjin with twinkling eyes.

".....?"

Girl, were you expecting me to throw something?

Seongjin looked at her blindly, and she immediately grumbled with a sullen face.

"My only pleasure....."

Edith, you're not a disk-chasing dog, so why are you looking for the pleasure of life in such a place?

Anyway, even if it wasn't recommended by the doctor, Seongjin was also thinking about starting outdoor exercise in earnest while managing his diet.

"Edith. Could you tell the kitchen to ask for less spice on the food from now on? Ask for plenty of salad without sauce. I don't mind eating food I don't touch."

I'm not in the mood to give you a low-salt, low-carbohydrate, high-protein diet, so I thought I'd have to pick and eat.

How much knowledge do people here have about nutritional components? As far as I can see, it seems to be somewhere between the Middle Ages and modern times.

Edith was unable to hide her puzzled expression at the unexpectedly unfamiliar order, but Seongjin slowly turned her shoulders and added a comment.

"Oh, and I want to go to the gymnasium, can you guide me?"

* * *

The gymnasium in the Pearl Palace was originally a place made for Morres' private swordsmanship lessons.

Of course, it wasn't used for a while after he struck his swordsmanship early, but it was kept clean even after that by the administrative officials who kept an eye on the queen.

As a result, at some point, the escort knights residing in the Pearl Palace had been transformed into a comfortable place for individual training instead of a distant Knights training ground.

But now all the knights stopped training and gathered in the corner of the gymnasium and stood with their eyes open. It was because the Pig Third Prince, who suddenly appeared, was taking over the not-so-wide gymnasium.

The prince was neither walking nor running, but circling the entire gymnasium at a moderate speed.

'What the fuck is that crazy guy suddenly getting wind of?'

The eyes of the knights who were watching the prince who was leading the gigantic body were not very kind.

Unlike the ladies-in-waiting, who had a strong military discipline, they were knights with relatively weak influence from the queen.

It's not uncommon for them to treat the prince rudely. Even now, some knights openly cast contempt.

However, to Seongjin, who had already set the goal of training his stamina and acquiring Aura, and started rushing forward, the unpleasant reactions of the knights were not a consideration at all. He whimpered and turned around a few times, and without even looking at the knights, he entered the Pearl Palace empty-handed, wiping his sweat with his sleeve.

What the hell just happened? The knights belatedly looked at each other bewildered.

It was a situation where he would have gone crazy at them for not bowing properly, but that fool just quietly exercised and disappeared completely?

The knights blinked their eyes for a moment, but soon resumed their personal training and thought.

'There are all sorts of strange things in life.....'

Everyone thought it was just a whim.

But the next day, and the day after that. The knights appeared at the same time and saw Morres walking around the gymnasium.

"Ugh! Heuk! Keugh! Huh!"

[Hey hey, you're out of breath. How many laps has it been that you're already dying?]

'Wow, such poor stamina.....'

Seongjin frowned while panting unsightly.

Originally, he planned to lightly train for a few days to build enough muscle to support his skeleton, and then start aerobic exercise in earnest when he lost some weight.....

'No, I'm already doing aerobic exercise with all my might?'

He'd only walked a few laps around the gym, but his lungs felt like they were about to explode and his heart was beating like crazy. His whole body was drenched in sweat as if it had been rained on.

At this rate, when do you build stamina and when do you learn aura? Slowly, annoyance rose.

The knights whispering in the corner with a disapproving expression were annoying for nothing, and the sweat dripping down his hair wet his eyes and stung them.

He was rubbing his eyes nervously when a dry towel suddenly appeared in front of his eyes.

He accepted it without hesitation and looked up to see an old gentleman looking at Seongjin with a smile on his face.

'Who.....?'

The old man was standing with several attendants. Looking at his white hair, he doesn't seem to be young, but his waist is straight and he's wearing a neat outfit with not a single button disturbed.

When Seongjin's eyes met, the old man took a step back, raised his right hand to his chest, and bowed his head respectfully.

"I greet the prince."

It is an old-fashioned gesture as if it were painted. The attendants following him also bowed their backs.

Seongjin didn't know how to react and was staring blankly at him, but the old man put on a slightly puzzled expression.

"This... I heard that your memories went missing after the fever, but I didn't pay a visit. I apologize. Your Highness."

He never loses his extremely polite attitude toward the young prince. He was a person with a respectful attitude.

Seongjin admired inwardly and picked up a towel to wipe away the sweat.

Seeing that, the old man smiled again, then lightly lowered his head and said,

"My name is Louis Feltre, Chief Chamberlain of the Imperial Palace. I am assisting His Majesty's side."

".....!"

Suddenly, someone like the right hand of the final boss appeared.

Seongjin's mouth hardened for an instant, but the old man, unaware of it, continued with a bright voice as he handed over a sweaty towel.

"It's been a while since you woke up from the hospital, and you're already doing this intense physical training."

"Well, just for exercise....."

"Since the young prince is so valiant, wouldn't the knights of the Pearl Palace follow suit and become more diligent? Indeed, it is the joy of the Holy Imperial Family, and it cannot be anything but the blessing of Delcross."

Seongjin looked around with an absurd face.

No, old man. Look at the atmosphere when giving flattery. Look at those knights over there. Don't you think they're going to fire lasers right now?

The Demon King clicked his tongue.

[Wow, this guy, is he serious? Is this a bean pod from the other world?]

It's not like it's not true, but the chief chamberlain has a happy face as if he were looking at his wonderful grandson.

Seongjin averted his gaze and cleared his throat.

"... uh, hm. Louis. So what's going on here.....?"

Seongjin, who was not used to treating an elderly man as a servant, blurted out his words clumsily, but the chief chamberlain didn't seem to care.

"After the prince passed out from the fever, His Majesty the Holy Emperor was greatly worried. Didn't he put off state affairs and inspected the Pearl Palace himself, and afterwards, refusing the healing priests and displaying his enormous holy power, he finally cured the terrible fever?"

"That... I heard of it."

He didn't know, but let's say that for now.

"Fortunately, the prince got out of bed in good health, but His Majesty was not easily relieved and ordered to take a closer look at your condition before the audience."

"Uh... That's really something to be thankful for."

"The prince is still recovering his health, so if you wish, He will personally go to the Pearl Palace during this refreshment time."

Huh? Yes? Are you going?

Recognizing Seongjin's bewildered expression, Louis quickly added an explanation.

"Oh, you seem to have forgotten about the regular audience. Since ancient times, His Majesty the Holy Emperor has had a regular refreshment time with the princes and princesses at least once a week."

".....!"

Does the king of a country have all the time for that?

This is unpleasant news for Seongjin, who wants to avoid encountering the Holy Emperor as much as possible.

"As you know, His Majesty's attention to his children is very special, and the audience has not been delayed until now unless there is a major event in the empire or an unavoidable schedule change. In the case of Prince Morres, however....."

However?

"There were many cases where appointments were canceled on the day of the audience. For some reason, it was not uncommon for you to send a message saying that you suddenly felt unwell right before the audience....."

"....."

"As a result, recently, it has often been the case that His Majesty the Holy Emperor asked the prince's intention in advance and personally delivered him to the Pearl Palace. He told me to ask the child if he would do the same this time."

Morres you crazy bastard! You say you broke your appointment with the Holy Emperor frequently? Is this bastard insane?

Seongjin felt a cold sweat flow.

6

Suddenly, a person called the Chief Chamberlain came and said that sooner or later, a meeting with the final boss awaits.

Not only that, it turns out that this world's asshole used to habitually beat the final boss fearlessly.

Seongjin was stunned for a moment.

"... Your Highness?"

"Uh... Um, yes. No! I....."

He was so flustered that my pupils trembled violently and his words kept twisting.

The desperation that he should not lose more points from the human who might be the final boss made Seongjin spit out a plausible sentence.

"This time, I will visit in person... Thank you for your consideration... That's my reply, so please pass it on."

You can't tell someone like the Holy Emperor to come and go.

He wished he could know a bit more about how Morres originally spoke and whether this was appropriate for etiquette. Strangely, the Demon King, who was usually busy chattering in his head without rest, is now still silent.

Fortunately, Seongjin's answer seemed to please the chamberlain.

"Since the prince is so dignified, how satisfied must His Majesty be? I will do my best so that God1 will not neglect the audience! Then, I will soon send someone to the Pearl Palace to give you a message, so please take care."

Louis showed his courtesy again with a dignified gesture and left the gymnasium with a calm face.

However, Seongjin's keen eye, trained in a long battle, did not miss the cheekbones of the head chamberlain flinching and trying to rise.

'What the hell did I do that he liked so much.....'

The more he thought it through, the more he realized how stupid Morres was before.

Seongjin, who briefly caught sight of the chief chamberlain's party walking away with light steps, sighed lightly and turned around.

Because of the unexpected meeting, the break was longer than expected.

Seongjin made up his mind and started walking around the gymnasium again. He had to at least go around a few more laps than yesterday before he could be confident that he was making progress.

Of course, he was out of breath before he had even walked half a lap, putting his firm resolve to shame.

The knights, who had gathered in groups of twos and threes in the corner of the gymnasium, watching the chief chamberlain, did not hide their uncomfortable expression when the prince, who they had expected to return soon, started his run again.

Some showed their annoyance and went out of the gymnasium, while others sat down and pretended to mend their equipment, occasionally sending disrespectful glances at Seongjin.

Up until now, Seongjin hadn't cared a bit about being cocky or not, but he was starting to get annoyed with the constant hostility.

Even if it's annoying, I think it's necessary to take care of the knights once in a while.

"Huk, huk."

How long did he go around the gymnasium like that?

Seongjin, who had been gasping out of breath and staggering, took a few more steps staggeringly before collapsing on the floor.

"Cough! Cough! Keuk, heuk, heuk! Heuk!"

His vision went yellow.

Wow, he felt like dying.

He didn't think it was this hard when he fought monsters while sleeping on the front line in Paju for a week.

As he was gasping for breath, a small voice quietly spoke to him as if it was crawling in.

[... Hey. So, are you meeting in the end? the Holy Emperor.]

'... Huh?'

At first, he couldn't understand it well because his head was in a daze due to lack of oxygen. Come to think of it, wasn't this guy strangely quiet from before?

'I think I'll have to? What were you doing anyway? Did you get some information from the chamberlain? It was so quiet that I thought you had finally disappeared.'

It was definitely the timing to get angry, but the demon king strangely didn't react.

[I did find out. I did.....]

The demon king replied with a strangely downcast voice.

[The chief chamberlain was a guy with resistance to detecting souls. It's not easy, so I had to focus.]

Sungjin tilted his head.

'Detection resistance? You never said anything like that until now. Could the chief chamberlain be a priest?'

[Are you crazy? Making contact with a divine spirit? I'd rather try suicide again.]

According to the demon king's explanation, detecting a soul is similar to talking to a sleeping person.

When not in a crisis or stressful situation, the soul is usually defenseless, as if it were half asleep.

If you send out what you want to ask there in the form of a thought wave, related memories sporadically emerge from the unconscious.

There was a limit to this seemingly convenient ability, but the demon king could not read the memories directly from Seongjin's soul. He didn't even know the exact reason.

[Such a lax and simple guy is secretly difficult.]

'What, punk?'

So, souls with strong mental power or divine power could not be touched.

In the case of a human with strong mental power, similar to a soul in a state of extreme tension, resistance to thought waves is high.

And souls with divine power will completely disappear the demon king's soul the moment he tried to contact it.

[In that sense, the chief chamberlain has a very strong ego defense. A person who is strict and has strong self-control. Such a person does not easily recall the memories he wants, and his mental barrier is so hard that it is not easy to break through it without damaging his soul.]

Even so, the demon king tried to get as much information as possible. Sooner or later, he would have to be dragged in front of the most powerful priest on the continent and wait for his disposition.

Will the Holy Emperor be able to recognize the remnants of another world and the demon world possessing his son's body?

'So, did you find out anything?'

[Unfortunately, there was no information that would be helpful right away. That old man is, first of all, a very fine-grained person in the imperial palace. He was bigger than I thought. The information he had was so vast that I couldn't focus on what I wanted to find out.]

Well, at first glance, it seemed to be relevant.

[So, I tried to get a rough idea of the Holy Emperor, right? But, how should I say this, his perception is very biased... That's why I don't trust it very much.]

'Can't trust it? The information of the chief chamberlain who serves the Holy Emperor right by his side?'

At Seongjin's question, the demon king's soul is slightly agitated. Perhaps, if there is a substance, it will feel like sighing.

[First of all, the loyalty the chief chamberlain has to the imperial family is real. To put it bluntly, he's so friendly even to Morres, who is being criticized for being a scumbag. On top of that, his faith in the Holy Emperor is so firm, well... To put it nicely, it's loyalty, but in a bad way it could be called fanaticism.]

'Is it enough to be called fanaticism?'

[Yes, he thinks the Holy Emperor is almost omnipotent, okay? Is this reliable information?]

Sungjin blinked his eyes.

Omnipotent?

[I don't think he's clearly aware of it either. He's just content with himself that he's giving his loyalty to such a good holy emperor. But at least in his subconscious mind, the Holy Emperor is by no means a mere human being. He firmly believes that he is the greatest successor of all times and the undoubted representative of the Main God.]

'.....'

[But you know what's really funny? He really doesn't have much faith in God. He's not very interested in religion itself.]

What's with that. He doesn't believe in God, but believes in God's representative?

[That's why it's funny. Isn't that a complete contradiction? But that picky guy doesn't know that! How far can the respect, admiration, and trust in a human go to the extreme?]

Sungjin stood up without a word. Suddenly, his breathing calmly subsides.

In the gentle breeze that blows, his heated body quickly cooled, and goosebumps appeared.

'... I don't think this is simply a matter of strong or weak divine power.'

God's representative.

Since Seongjin was close to an atheist in the first place, he didn't think that there would be an omnipotent person who actually represented God.

Just that the chief chamberlain subconsciously believed that the Holy Emperor might have something special.

For example, what if the Holy Emperor had the same ability as the demon king's 'soul detection'? Wouldn't the people around him think of him as omnipotent?

Whatever it is, one thing is certain.

'We, it seems likely that we will be caught. Is there any solution?'

[Maybe? Can't we just break the promise like Morres did?]

'That's a stopgap. Previously, Morres didn't even show his face, so he went all the way to the Pearl Palace himself. What will you do if they come here again?'

[What if we escape the imperial palace?]

'I don't know if I have time to prepare, how can I do that with this low-quality stamina? Besides, with this body, I'd be noticed wherever I go.'

[... We're doomed.]

Is that all you have to say?

Sensing the demon king's soul trembling in his head, Seongjin struggled to suppress the rising anxiety.

* * *

The main palace sent an attendant to announce the time for refreshments even before evening. Needless to say, the Pearl Palace turned upside down.

How long has it been since that fat prince went on an official outing!

Upon hearing this news, Queen Elizabeth led a large number of ladies-in-waiting from the Ruby Palace and attacked from the early morning of the day. Soon, the entire Pearl Palace went bustling under the direction of the queen.

Seongjin, who had planned to spend the entire morning at the gymnasium because it was an afternoon appointment, was caught by the ladies-in-waiting with solemn expressions before he even left the room.

"... Huh?"

With a bewildered face, he was taken to the bathhouse and was purified. That too, embarrassingly, in front of the lady-in-waiting!

As he struggled and protested, Edith poured perfume on his head with a determined face.

"Calm down, Your Highness. Shall we finish quickly and have a snack?"

Are you bathing a cat right now?

He stared at her in disbelief, and she tilted her head.

"Hmm, it worked fine before."

"....."

Previously, he was wondering how she dealt with the temper of Morres, who is was a scumbag, by herself, but turns out he was treated like an animal that couldn't communicate at all.

"Get out. I can take a bath myself!"

"While you were sick, I always took care of this and that, so why are you ashamed?"

This woman said it now.

As Seongjin showed no sign of backing down, Edith's expression suddenly darkened.

"Come on, Your Highness. Please kindly cooperate. Do you know how much the Queen will pester me if there is even the slightest setback in preparation?"

As the queen's visits increased recently, it seemed that this steel-mental maid was under stress without realizing it.

"Why do the maids of Ruby Palace bother to come to Pearl Palace? It's not even the their's palace."

Like saying 'Things that's less than a handfull. Fufu,' Edith laughs with an eerie expression. It was twice as scary because the user was doing that.

He quickly took a bath and came out, pressed by her sultry spirit, and this time, the queen's ladies-in-waiting were lined up in a row, holding very professional-looking beauty tools.

Soon he got his hair trimmed, his nails trimmed, his eyebrows trimmed, and a fuss breaks out.

"Ah, look at this beautiful hair that looks just like the queen!"

"Oh, you have lost a lot of weight. The contours of his face have become so defined!"

Don't lie, these guys.

'It's just a simple audience? What is this all about!'

Pulled this way and pinched that way, there is no mess like this.

Seongjin, tattered as if he had come through a storm, managed to breathe a sigh, but that was not the end.

A procession of maids with both hands full of clothes and accessories stretched from the end of the room to the outside of the hallway.

Seongjin's face went pale.

'Hey, how can I do this? How long do I have to do this!'

However, the demon king, who would normally have laughed at Sungjin like crazy, was in a strange state.

[Fufu. That one near the end, the color should be fine. Of course. Fufufufu.]

'.....'

Fortunately, Queen Elizabeth's taste was quite noble.

For a while, he was worried about the clothes with lots of frills coming and going, but the finally finished look was quite good from the perspective of a modern person, Seongjin.

The dark blue uniform embroidered with silver thread was neat at first glance, but if you look closely, you can see how much money, craftsmanship, and time have been spent on it.

As if it were not completely empty words to say that he had lost weight or something, the clothes were still quite plentiful, and the ladies-in-waiting were busy mending them for a while.

Of course, no matter how dressed up, it was a beautifully packaged pig.

Seongjin secretly sighed, but even so, his appearance was not so satisfactory in the eyes of the queen.

"Oh, Morres. How can you look so great!"

Not to be outdone by this, the soulless praises of the ladies-in-waiting continued.

"You are extremely devoted!"

"Isn't it because of the dark clothes that the prince's gorgeous hair stands out even more?"

"How about cuffs and brooches? How could it match the prince's jewel-like gray eyes!"

"Ah, it's a beauty that makes you fall in love at first sight!"

Hey, you've gone too far.

* * *

The main palace sent a carriage on time. He said he would prepare without a hitch, but the chief chamberlain was more meticulous than he thought.

As he climbed into the carriage, attended by Edith, two escort knights rode behind them.

'The imperial carriage is so splendid. It's definitely a different ride than a car, isn't it?'

[Oh, goodness. Are you a child? Aren't you a guy old enough to know that this is a carriage to the nether world?]²

'Shut up.'

However, shortly after leaving the Pearl Palace, the demon king trembled and called Seongjin.

[Hey, I don't have a good feeling.]

Seongjin, who had been spread out comfortably, straightened his posture with tight tension.

'What? Why?'

[Look outside, fool.]

'.....?'

[Isn't the main palace still far away? But the surroundings are already full of ominous light.]

When I lifted the curtains and looked out the window, I saw a vast panoramic view of the imperial garden.

On the vast green lawn, where the boundaries are not even visible, the imperial palace road stretches wide enough for three wagons to run side by side. At the end of the road, you can see the magnificent and beautiful main palace shining white.

And countless people were filling the large garden in front of the main palace.

Knights wary of their surroundings, aristocrats in groups of twos or threes, clerks hurriedly walking back and forth carrying piles of papers.

And a huge number of priests dressed in shining white uniforms.

'Wow, this is a little.....'

People in white clothes were visible beyond half of the crowd.

From plain robes to extremely splendid robes embroidered with gold thread, the crests of the main gods in the form of the sun and sword are always engraved on the white clothes.

It dawned on me that this place was the den of priests.

[Ah, I misunderstood! I thought it would be okay if I hid well in my body, but I was wrong. It stings my soul like being pricked with a needle just by being close to those with divine power!]

'.....'

Seongjin, who was nervous about the demon king's fuss, swallowed without even realizing it.

It seemed that many clergymen would recognize Seongjin any moment and rush at them, shouting that it was an evil spirit that had taken over the prince's body.

[We should have just run away when we had the chance.....]

At the same time as the wretched Demon King lamented, the carriage stopped.

He arrived at the main palace entrance, the residence of the Holy Emperor.

T/N:

1. The word here is 신 and it means god, but given the context I suspect that it's also a way for a person of his status to refer to himself? Not that he thinks himself as god, no, but more like something along the lines of 'this servant'. So the sentence might go something like "This servant will do his best to make sure the audience is not neglected". But hey I'm not the expert in the Korean language so I might be wrong.

2. Meaning they're convinced they're gonna die as soon as the Holy Emperor sees them and find that they've replaced his son's soul lol.

7

Stepping carefully on the rocking steps and getting off the carriage, a group of knights dressed in fancy uniforms greeted Seongjin.

"We greet Prince Morres!"

"We greet the Third Prince!"

The knights raised their swords in unison and thumped them on the ground with their sheaths, then lowered their heads in a moderate motion. It was a well-rounded courtesy that could not be compared to the resident knights of the Pearl Palace.

Seongjin's mouth opened involuntarily.

Oh, that was kinda cool.

Looking at the knights with their heads down blankly, one of them, who appeared to be the leader, approached Seongjin and smiled softly.

"I congratulate you on your belated recovery. Your Highness the Prince! From here on, our imperial guards will serve you."

He was handsome man with his dark blonde hair.

His well-trained, sturdy body was quite intimidating, but the small, round eyes made his overall impression strangely mild.

"....."

Not knowing how to react, Seongjin stared blankly at him, and the man's smile faded.

However, as if he had been warned beforehand, he immediately calmed down his expression, put his right arm on his chest, and bowed his head politely.

"My name is Marthain Klanos, a member of the Imperial Guard, and the leader of the 2nd Knights, my lord. It's really nice to see you back in good health."

Ah, it seems that this person was originally familiar with Morres.

Well, what can he do? Seongjin smiled shyly, and Marthain smiled softly at him again, and then he turned around and started walking in the lead.

He seems to have guessed that he might not know the geography of the main palace at all. Thinking that it was fortunate that there was a person with quick judgment, Seongjin followed him.

However, as soon as he stepped into the high arched entrance, the Demon King made a sound of pain.

[Ew... Stuffy. It feels like my soul is being crushed flat!]

'Why? Could those people be paladins too?'

[No. They seem to be regular knights... It's not that, it just feels like this area is exceptionally full of holy power. The moment I leave this body, I feel like I'm going to be crushed to death... ugh.....]

After that, the demon king completely shut his mouth. He called out several times, but the presence of the soul itself was extremely faint, and now it was difficult to even feel its presence.

He made up his mind to pretend he entered the boss dungeon, but he never thought that the demon king would be knocked out so quickly.

Concealing his anxiety, Seongjin slowly walked into the lobby of the main palace following the guides of the knights.

The office of the Holy Emperor was located at the end of the second floor of the main palace.

The wide hallway was relatively quiet, but occasionally people dressed in fancy clothes, who seemed to be high priests, would pass by the party.

Each time, Seongjin was nervous inside, but fortunately, they just stepped aside and greeted politely without any reaction.

'It seems that priests don't recognize that the soul has changed? Could it be that we were worried for nothing?'

Seongjin, a little relieved, called out, but there was still no answer from the demon king.

Couldn't withstand the energy of the priests and perished?

The complete annihilation of the demon king was originally what he longed for. He is the main culprit who led Sungjin's world to destruction, and the enemy who drove him to death by the Flames of Gehenna.

It's just that until now, there's no other way to use your hands, and the existence itself is so insignificant that he just left it alone.....

However, when he thought that the demon king had really disappeared, Seongjin felt a strange sense of emptiness.

"Your Excellency Cardinal Benitus!"

The thoughts didn't last long. It was because Marthain, who was walking ahead of him, suddenly stopped and lowered his head.

A thin old man stood in front of the party, poking his head over the shoulder of the lowered knight commander.

He was an eccentric old man with a long hooked nose and a drooping mouth.

Despite his small and diminutive body, the high priestly hat and the splendid robe embroidered with gold and silver made him look quite dignified compared to his size.

It's a cardinal..... He must be a high-ranking nobleman, right?

The old man stood upright and looked at Morres' party for a while, then slightly bowed his head toward the knight commander.

"You don't have to be so polite to me. Sir Marthain."

Contrary to his strict first impression, his tone was quite polite. Then, he nods his head towards Seongjin.

"Your Highness the Prince."

".....?"

What? Something feels terribly wrong?

Saying hello to the escort knight first and later pretend to notice the prince? And with just a nod?

The old man's attitude was strange even for him, who had no knowledge of Delcross' culture.

Seongjin's eyes narrowed. As if Marthain also noticed this, he restlessly looked at Seongjin.

"So, what's going on in the main palace?"

It is not a question directed at the knight commander who always stands guard at the main palace, but the cardinal does not pay attention to Seongjin and asks Marthain.

Truly, the courtesy was an old man who ate cheap wraps. As he was trying to see how far it was going, Marthain, impatient, took a step forward and warned the cardinal in a low voice.

"Your Excellency Cardinal. You are in front of the His Highness the Prince. Please set an example."

"Ahem!"

Cardinal Benitus, who made a sound that he couldn't tell whether it was a cough or a snort, only then turned to Seongjin and met his eyes. It was an arrogant posture with hands behind the back and belly sticking out.

"Yes, I heard that you have been through quite a bit of trouble lately, but it is fortunate that you are still in good shape... Huh?"

Except for the old man talking, he narrows his eyes and looks Seongjin up and down.

Marthain's face hardened at that clearly rude attitude, but the cardinal's eyes suddenly widened.

"Huh? By the way, wait... No, prince?"

Then, all of a sudden, he started approaching me with a straight face.

Seongjin realized something was going wrong.

"How... What is this....."

With a slightly bewildered face as if he had discovered something strange, the old man suddenly stretched out his arm toward Seongjin.

Soon, a hand surrounded by strong white light approached my eyes like a rake. It was not an auspicious light even to Seongjin, who was unfamiliar with it.

'Perhaps, this is the divine power.....'

It's the first time he's seeing divine power after coming to this world. His heart was beating fast, and all sorts of thoughts ran through his head in that brief moment.

Did he recognize Seongjin's soul? Or did he notice the Demon King who was with him? What will happen if he touched that divine power like this? Will he be expelled from the body?

If he wanted to live as the prince of the Holy Empire, this kind of thing will happen all the time in the future. At this point, it wouldn't be bad to try the divine power as a test.

That's right.

'Let's see, so you're just putting your hand in to get it?'

Seongjin's eyebrows crumpled involuntarily. He had no intention of arguing with the elderly in every detail, but still, isn't it a little too much to try to touch the prince as he pleases?

Seongjin, who almost threw his hands away reflexively, tried to brace himself. Those bony fingers of the cardinal looked straight and brittle at the slightest mishandling, so fortunately, before he could commit elderly abuse, Marthain quickly blocked Seongjin's way.

"Stop it, Sir Benitus!"

Stop. The old man, who stopped moving for a moment, looked at the knight commander with a puzzled expression.

"Do you know what Sir Marthain is doing now?"

It was clearly an attitude of blaming him, but the knight commander was adamant.

"No high-ranking clergy can approach the prince. The Cardinal is no exception to that."

"Don't you think that is strange at all?"

"This is His Majesty's command. It is to protect the prince."

For a moment, a cool air flowed between the two. The cardinal, who had glared at Marthain for a while with sad eyes, opened his mouth as if lamenting as soon as the knight commander showed no sign of backing down.

"Who the hell are you protecting from a priest who serves a god... ...
."

The cardinal shook his head and took a step back.

"Sir Marthain has always been like that. Why are you so blind to his words?"

"....."

"Then see you again. Sir Marthain."

Then he glared at Seongjin and shook his head sideways. It was more like a snort than a greeting.

"... Your Highness the Prince."

Then, without seeing Seongjin's reaction, he hurriedly passed the party.

Marthain was just staring at the back of the cardinal without saying anything, but the corners of his mouth twisted strangely, making an expression that he couldn't tell if he was laughing or crying.

But only for a while. The Knight Commander, who immediately regained his polite smile, bowed his head toward Seongjin.

"We're a bit delayed, Prince. Let's hurry."

The behavior of the two felt a little strange, but Seongjin soon turned off his nerves and followed Marthain obediently.

All right. He had a big job right in front of him, meeting with the Holy Emperor, so what does that have to do with it?

* * *

"Oh, Your Highness Morres! What a splendid figure you are! His Majesty the Holy Emperor will be greatly pleased!"

Upon arriving at the front of the office, Chief Chamberlain Louis, who has been waiting outside the door, approaches with open arms.

I was hesitant about the over-reaction, but Louis immediately flinched and quickly responded.

"Oh, I'm sorry, Your Highness. You are so compliant and dedicated that this servant forgot his manners for a moment."

There was a corner where the gentle-looking nobleman was secretly out of his arms. Seongjin smiled bitterly and asked.

"Um... Louis? As you know, I can't remember... isn't it? Is there anything I should be careful about when I meet my father? I'm sorry for bothering you more."

Louis's face lit up. If the Demon King had read his thoughts, he would have said this.

'You asked such a thoughtful question. That Sir Morres has become so dignified!'

Thanks to Morres, who faithfully laid his personality to the bottom, Seongjin can do whatever he want in moderation.

"I assumed that the prince would be confused about manners. Thankfully, His Majesty the Holy Emperor doesn't care much about outward etiquette. All you have to do is call him 'Your Majesty the Holy Emperor', and it's enough if you just show respect."

the Holy Emperor doesn't seem to have a very strict personality.

As he was feeling relieved inside, the chief chamberlain turned around and spoke to the door in a loud voice.

"Your Majesty, it is Prince Morres."

Now, in the boss room position.

Creak.

As the door to the office slowly opened, Seongjin walked into the room, trying to calm his pounding heart.

'In the worst case, I'll just be kicked out of this body.'

After engraving that fact in his heart once again through his encounter with Cardinal Benitus, his initial anxiety was greatly diluted.

Then, the vacancy is filled with curiosity, and soon thoughts start popping up here and there.

What kind of existence is the Holy Emperor, who is called the God's representative? When he tried to imagine it, he thought of the pope in the bread hat he saw on TV before Seongjin's world was destroyed.

That person was a grandfather, but since the Holy Emperor has a son in his puberty, he must be younger than that, right? Could he be a lot like Morres?

Was he a strong person? Or is it the image of a typically weak priest?

At least it didn't seem like he would be pushed back in terms of age. Now, he and the demon king are fighting and becoming childish together, but even so, Seongjin was over sixty when he died on Earth.

As he entered the room, half nervous and half excited, swallowing saliva, the first thing he noticed was the gorgeous refreshment set in the middle of the room.

he thought maybe it was considering Morres' taste. This is because he had seen similar desserts often served in the Pearl Palace.

Beyond that, he could see a large desk with splendid reliefs.

Looking at the documents stacked high and the books scattered here and there, he feel that this is a space for official affairs.

And.

the Holy Emperor stood in front of a large window that opened toward the terrace.

".....!"

Seongjin opened his eyes wide involuntarily.

'The Holy Emperor? Is that person?'

He was a well-groomed young man.

No matter how you look at his soft features and youthful face, he doesn't look like a father to an adolescent son.

Short trimmed black hair, simple-looking everyday clothes, and a sleek-looking body made him look more like a well-trained swordsman than a priest.

A man called a priest even wears a long sword on his waist!

There is no tall hat of a cardinal, nor a bread hat like the one worn by the pope. Only the white and splendid robe draped over his shoulders like a cloak made it possible to guess that he was not an ordinary high priest.

If I had to look for a similarity with Morres, would it be the gray eyes that catch the light and shine with a mysterious silver light?

Those warm eyes were still staring at Seongjin.

Is that the father of this fat man?

"Ah... Father?"

Oops! He was told to call him His Majesty the Holy Emperor!

He was so flustered that he had spit out the name that was in his head.

The Holy Emperor tilted his head to the side. He might be puzzled, but there was no expression on his cold face, so he couldn't guess what he was thinking.

"... Your Majesty the Holy Emperor."

As he quickly corrected himself and lowered his head, the Holy Emperor opened his mouth. It's a clean low pitched voice.

"Father is fine too, you certainly don't have any memories of the past."

"Yes. That is... It happened."

Seongjin blurted out his words. Actually, the soul has changed, but since he's in front of the Holy Emperor, it is strangely awkward to lie.

Fortunately, the Holy Emperor responded briefly as if he did not feel anything wrong with him.

"Okay."

Then, with strides, he approaches Seongjin. The elongated robe swayed accordingly, emitting a soft light depending on the angle.

He was watching the movement inadvertently, and before he knew it, the Holy Emperor, who had come one step closer, stopped walking.

Up close, he was taller than I thought.

Blink. He didn't know how to react, so he was looking up at him with his eyes wide open, but the Holy Emperor, who was looking down at Seongjin with an unknown expression, suddenly lifted his arm and stretched it toward his head.

It happened so fast, he couldn't react.

Clench. His fists, which were spontaneously clenched, are damp with cold sweat.

Did he hear it too? Was he going to die like this? Seongjin closed his eyes, anticipating the end. He did.

Thump. The hand came up to the top of his head.

'... What?'

Nothing happened.

[Hng?]

No, rather than nothing happened.....

[Hnggg?]

That familiar, low-key voice echoed in my head.

'... Demon King?'

The demon king's presence, which was so faint that it was impossible to detect, suddenly grew rapidly, and at the moment, a sharp vibration was transmitted. It felt as if my soul was stretching.

[What? Wait a minute, huuuh?]

'Are you alive? What happened?'

The demon king did not respond to Seongjin's words. Perhaps he himself did not know. Because the surprise and confusion he felt came through unfiltered.

[Huh? What is this... Oh? Hiiiiieek!]

The demon king's soul suddenly made a strange sound as if it was startled by something, then fell back into silence.

But this time, Seongjin let out a sigh of relief because he could clearly feel his presence.

At the same time, one side of the head cools down.

'What did the Holy Emperor do? Did he notice the existence of the Demon King?'

If he noticed, why didn't he get rid of him? Rather.....

But he couldn't afford to think any longer. It was because the Holy Emperor, who lowered his hand from the top of his head before he knew it, commanded in a calm tone.

"Sit down."

And the two dissimilar father and son sat face to face with the refreshment table in front of them.

8

Seongjin sat down and stared at the Holy Emperor in silence for a while. It was an expression of his will to gauge his intentions as much as possible.

It was the most disrespectful look on his son's face, but the Holy Emperor didn't seem to care as he lifted the teacup in front of him.

His face as he looked into the tea without drinking was so indifferent that Seongjin immediately doubted whether the person in front of him had emotions.

The silence between the two was broken when the Holy Emperor set the teacup down on the table.

"Don't like it? Didn't you usually enjoy eating?"

"....."

What? Were you suspicious of this?

Seongjin thought about it and called him cautiously.

"... That, father?"

"Yes, Morres."

In an instant, his pulse went blank. He was nervous about something, but the other person really seemed to have no idea.

'Well, it's a bit questionable, but you're going to treat me like a son, right?'

For some reason, Seongjin felt like he was going to be what he was, so he picked up a cookie in front of him.

If he didn't eat it, he thought he'd keep noticing, and it's a pity since it's already prepared.

Munch munch.

".....!"

It's more delicious than he thought?

Does the body that lost fat after a few days of dieting want sugar, or is it similar to Morres' original taste that Sungjin didn't even know about.

Decades of living mainly on preserved food on a planet that was devastated by the invasion of monsters. The desserts that the royal chef put the soul into were enough to satisfy his desolate taste buds.

Seongjin admired and tasted various kinds of desserts. In the meantime, the Holy Emperor would look at Seongjin without saying anything and would sip tea from time to time.

Only then could Seongjin take some time to observe the Holy Emperor.

'At first glance, he looks young and docile.'

Perhaps because of his strangely cool eyes, he doesn't look young at all. In reality, he may not be that young. Edith once told him that aging slows down when an Aura user reaches a certain state.

If so, how strong is he? Even for Seongjin, who had a history of fighting for decades, the decision was not easy.

In the case of Edith and the resident knights of the Pearl Palace, if they could regain some of their physical strength, they were confident enough to try rubbing it without an aura. Needless to say, it is possible to crush if it is in the state of absorbing the magic beast's spirit.

However, in the case of the Holy Emperor, it was ambiguous. He didn't feel any strong momentum, but when he tried to find a gap, it was strangely awkward.

Above all, Seongjin's intuition, forged in a long battle, continues to sound an alarm toward the Holy Emperor.

"This must mean that he's strong enough to be hard to measure, right?"

If possible, let's not stretch out on this guy¹. Seongjin made that decision.

After that, an awkward father-son conversation ensued.

"That's right, how have you been?"

"What... I have been doing physical training, and I am thinking of losing some weight."

"Good idea. I hear you are going to the gymnasium these days?"

"Yes. First of all, I try to start with light exercise and gradually increase the training time."

"Exercising too much can actually be harmful."

"I know. Once I get used to it, I can reduce the time instead of increasing the intensity. Then, wouldn't it be possible to read some books in my spare time?"

"Books?"

The Holy Emperor's eyes widened.

It was a meaningful change in expression that Seongjin, who doubted whether he was human because he had no expression, can read it for the first time.

Oho. This topic works. After all, there are no parents who would hate their children studying anywhere.

Seongjin felt a little more at ease and started chattering incoherently.

"Um... That's why I've been so ignorant until now... No, haven't I lived away from books?"

It's true that the demon king said so, right? Fortunately, the Holy Emperor did not show any reaction.

"....."

"Then, when I came back to life, I think it made me think about life again. A philosophical topic pops into my head. Why do you live your life. What do you do with life. Things like that."

"Philosophy."

"Yes. And I'm also curious about religion. Death and the afterlife, God and the soul, I want to know some of these things."

The Holy Emperor tilted his head.

"Are you interested in that? I think the first person who got kicked out was the theology teacher."

No, didn't Morres just skip all classes, regardless of subject?

"That's why, Your Majesty the Holy Emperor, no, Father. I have a real question."

"What are you curious about?"

"Yes. Do you believe your father has a soul? No, since you are the Holy Emperor, of course you'll believe it..... It's not like that, in my father's eyes... Can you see the human soul?"

"....."

It was an impulsive question. It was because of his personality that he couldn't hold back his curiosity at the moment when he was strangely convinced that the Holy Emperor would not harm him right away.

At the same time, it also penetrated the most fundamental suspicion.

What Seongjin had been worried about from the beginning, and what he still doubts about the Holy Emperor.

The Holy Emperor answered mildly.

"I can clearly see the soul in my eyes. Even if it is not, the priest who believes in the Lord naturally does not doubt the existence of the soul. As the prince of the Holy Empire, you shouldn't have such doubts."

"Then what does the soul look like?"

"It is the same as the person he was before he was born. Because the soul is affected by the body until the moment it dies."

Seongjin swallowed his saliva. Then.

"Then, maybe... What does my soul look like?"

The Holy Emperor did not answer right away this time.

"... Why is that all of a sudden?"

"No, what. I have lived a dissolute life so far, I wonder if my soul has gained this much weight too....."

It was bullshit even thinking about it, but Seongjin decided to be confident.

The Holy Emperor looked at him blankly for a moment with unknown eyes, then said.

"To confirm that, you will have to see your soul come out of your body first. Did you want to die?"

"....."

No, this guy strikes people when they're caught off guard.

He was wrong.....

The audience time passed faster than expected.

Seongjin was never a good social person even in his previous life, but strangely, in front of the Holy Emperor, words leaked out as if his tongue was greased.

Maybe he was such a talkative person, he was surprised at himself even during the conversation.

It's a quick adaptation compared to what he was nervous about considering the Holy Emperor as the final boss. Perhaps it was because of the relief that came from the disappearance of the threat to life he had been feeling all along.

"... So, while I was doing gymnastics on the floor, Edith suddenly came running in fright. She thought I flipped over and couldn't get up."

"Is that so?"

"I think I'll throw everything I have in my hand, how do I know how to run if I'm holding on something while working out my arms?"

"That's right."

"By the way, the tea is really good. I've never drank it much, but it smells really good compared to the tea called Melbourne that Edith brew the other day. It really tasted like bile."

"This tea is also Melbourne... .."

"... Yes?"

The Holy Emperor was a better person to talk to than he thought, because he silently listened to Seongjin even when he talked about nonsensical things. Of course, he wasn't a guy with a very good reaction.

Maybe that's why, even though he was actually almost the age of Seongjin's son, his father's voice came out well and smoothly.

"So I want to learn Aura. But I'm not sure how to start."

At the end, he also asked for this.

He seems to be the most powerful person in the country and a fairly strong Aura user, so if he can't take advantage of this opportunity, he's an idiot.

"That's right, Aura....."

The Holy Emperor rested his chin on his head and was lost in thought.

"They said that training in swordsmanship or spearmanship should precede it. I heard that there are unique Aura practice methods tailored to that skill, and the more you master them, the more you can handle Auras freely."

"Ah, there's a separate method of seniority!"

"okay. The basics of learning Aura are seniority. Of course, it is said that the classification of seniority becomes meaningless after reaching a certain level. Because where the heart goes, the Aura naturally flows."

"Then, first of all, while learning swordsmanship....."

What?

Seongjin nodded and suddenly became puzzled.

Isn't this man an Aura user? Why are you talking so bluntly as if you heard it from someone else?

"I heard that Father is also a user. How did you learn it in the first place?"

At Seongjin's question, the Holy Emperor rubbed the tip of his chin with his hand.

Um? Why do you look a bit embarrassed right now?

I keep watching, so I think I know a little bit about this expressionless man.

"That's it, I don't really remember how I got it. I moved habitually when using the sword, and later heard from my master that it was an Aura."

"... Yes?"

Seongjin's mouth fell open.

Wow, he heard that he had a talent for using Aura as if he was breathing since he was young, was basically what this person was saying.

"Come to think of it, even though you didn't know how to study when you were young, it seemed like you enjoyed swordsmanship lessons quite a bit. But no matter how much you practiced, you couldn't get a feel for the aura at all."

"Oh, um....."

"Even when you try, there was no result, so in the end you have lost interest in swordsmanship."

"I see....."

Suddenly, a flood of sympathy for that Morres floods in.

There was at least one thing he did with his heart, but he didn't even have the talent for that, poor bastard.

Seongjin's thoughts became complicated. It was because it was Morres' body, so he thought that the way to go would be difficult if he was naturally insensitive to aura.

"Will it be too hard? I thought that if it was something I could learn through training, I could somehow learn it....."

Seonghwang shook his head.

"In the end, it is a matter of time and effort. Even those who take time to feel the aura at first, I have seen cases where the speed at which they are mastered it is extraordinary. Furthermore....."

He stopped talking, stared at Seongjin's face for a moment, and then spat out unexpected words.

"... I don't think it would be that difficult for you now."

* * *

In the carriage returning to the Pearl Palace, Seongjin was spread out, leaning against a cushion in a proud mood.

Although he was a little tired, today's audience was quite a success.

Chief Chamberlain Louis was in tears.

"It's been several years since the two of you spent such a happy time....."

To make a decent grandfather so happy, this is a true example of respect for the elderly.

In addition, to Seongjin's request to resume the swordsmanship class, the Holy Emperor replied as follows.

"Sooner or later, I will send a suitable person to the Pearl Palace."

And one of the biggest achievements of all, is that he didn't have to worry about being exorcised in the future! Hurray!

The carriage writhing violently as the body of a large body writhed here and there in joy.

"Prince! What's going on! Are you okay?"

Hearing the coachman's shout outside, Seongjin quickly straightened up and cleared his throat.

"Ahem, no problem! I slipped off the seat for a moment. Don't mind it!"

[Good job. Are you a kid? I'm really ashamed to see others.]

And the demon king, who had been silent until now, finally opened his mouth. Seongjin responded happily.

"That's what I do when I'm alone. anyway are you okay? Why are you so quiet?"

[The impact on the soul is too great. I also needed time to recover.]

The feeling of trembling is vividly conveyed. It seemed like a really big deal.

[The main palace, it was truly a terrifying place filled with divine power. I thought I would die from being completely crushed. If the divine power hadn't been cut off at that time, if it had been a little late, I would.....]

Divine power blocked?

Seongjin also had some guesses. Just when the Holy Emperor put his hand on his head, he did something then.

[I don't know what kind of trick he did, but now there's a barrier around our souls.]

'... Barrier?'

[It seems to have a property that completely blocks spiritual energy as well as divine power. Now, even if someone with divine power is nearby, it doesn't sting like before. Only.....]

The demon king hesitated a little, then continued with a downcast voice.

[It's just that it's impossible for my soul to interfere with other souls.]

Wait, that means.....

[Yes, that's right.]

A trembling wave like a sigh is transmitted.

[Soul detection is no longer possible. I just tried it against the coachman and escort knight, but it didn't work at all.]

Does this guy's only usefulness disappear like this? Now, he really has become the embers of the Demon Realm.

The demon king exclaimed in a fit of anger.

[But now it is possible to move away from this body to some extent? Can you stop treating me like trash?]

So you've gone from lie detector to short-range navigation?

'Too bad.....'

Seongjin corrected his posture and sat down, looking out the window. As the twilight slowly sets, the ivory walls of the Pearl Palace begin to appear in the distance.

It had only been a few days, but it was strange that the Pearl Palace felt as cozy as home.

'For now, let's take comfort in surviving. He was a better person than I thought, and both of us are safe.'

However, the Demon King thought differently.

[What? Good guy? You're safe? Wow, you naive human being. If people are ignorant, their hair can become a field of flowers like this.....]

Seongjin was at a loss for words as a black and thick feeling of fear suddenly surged from his trembling soul.

[Maybe you don't know. You won't know unless you touch it soul-to-soul.]

'.....?'

[That... That's a monster. How could such a thing exist in this world?]

'Hey, monster is a bit.....'

[If not a monster? Do you really think someone that I, the great Demon King of Gehenna, cannot measure the limits of, is an ordinary human?]

To that extent?

Still, wasn't that person relatively kind to them? He gives good advice and saves the demon king.....

The demon king snorted.

[Hmph! Do you really think that monster doesn't know who you are? But why would he let you live? What about the evil spirit that stole his son's body?]

'It's a bit harsh to say it's an evil spirit. Cursing others, huh? Just doing harassment, or just do whatever you want! Isn't that enough.....?'

Huh? I'm an evil spirit.

Ignoring Seongjin, who suddenly gained enlightenment, the demon king began pouring out all the words he wanted to say.

[Let's see if we're gone. Isn't Morres's body going to die? So even if it annoys him, he'll leave us alone for now! And hey, how would his find his real son's soul? Perhaps the evil spirit that stole the body knows best? Because the clues are none other than us! Doesn't that mean he's going to stay by our side and keep an eye on us? Huh? Don't you know that?]

'Hey, calm down.....'

Seongjin was not as comfortable with the Holy Emperor's favor. But he thought, for a moment, that there was a real father-son bond.

Of course, he didn't convey that thought to the demon king. He was in a rage, and now he's crying.

[Scary. That guy, he's so scary.....]

While soothing the sobbing Demon King, Seongjin's carriage entered the Pearl Palace.

Before he knew it, a twilight was settling around him.

And that evening, an administrative official who visited Seongjin with Edith announced that the visitor restrictions placed on the Pearl Palace had been partially lifted as of today.

T/N:

1. 양반 literally means nobleman, but with the way Seongjin talks (and how later someone scolded him for referring to the emperor like that) I think he meant it more as the slang for that guy/that man. So I'll stick to that moving forward.

9

"So, you mean there was a visitor limit until now?"

Seongjin asked Edith while eating the lightly baked pre-dinner bread.

"Since when?"

"I don't know the exact period. It's been two years since I've been on the job, so it's clear that there were restrictions at least before then."

Edith answered as she poured water into his cup.

According to her explanation, except for a few servants and resident knights, all visitors were initially restricted from entering the Pearl Palace. Those who inevitably wanted to visit had to submit an application to the main palace. Even if it was a member of the imperial family, there was no exception.

And most of the applications were rejected. It's practically a no-entry ban.

"I can't believe it, am I not allowed to go out?"

Edith shrugged.

"As far as I know there was no such thing. It's just that Your Highness hates going out of the Pearl Palace, so you rarely go out."

Fortunately, it seems that Morres was not confined to the detached palace.

Indeed, he was even too lazy to go to the main palace once a week, so he skipped regular visits.

The human relationship of the prince of the Holy Empire, can it be like this?

"Still, you used to go to the town house to see a friend once every two months."

"Friend?"

"Yes, I think most of it was an appointment with the young duke¹ of Scarchapino."

It wasn't that he didn't have friends at all.

"Hmm....."

Seongjin chewed on his salad and was lost in thought.

It is said that there are no special restrictions on the Blue Rose Labyrinth or the Silver Rose Labyrinth, the palaces of the princes and princesses, so such measures were aimed only at Morres. It may have something to do with the reason why only the Pearl Palace had so few servants.

However, no matter how famous he was, is it really the right thing to do to isolate him in a separate palace while blocking visits from his family and friends?

Although Morres had a dirty personality, he wasn't particularly a heinous criminal, so wouldn't being locked up like this have a more adverse effect on his character and position?

"By the way, if it is released, what is partial release?"

"They said that high-ranking priests and paladins are still prohibited from entering."

"That....."

So, people with strong divine power should not enter the Pearl Palace at all?

The demon king whispered.

[Suspicious.]

'Oh, yes. It's very suspicious.'

What the hell is that Holy Emperor guy up to?

If he had known it would be like this, he would have been a little more active in researching this and that while the demon king was able to detect the soul. After finishing the meal feeling uncomfortable, Seongjin sighed.

Well, now he had to think about it alone, so there's no way to know what's going on. Whatever the reason, the fact that the restrictions were lifted immediately after meeting him must mean that Seongjin's impression in the audience yesterday was not too bad. He guessed he thought it would be less rotten if he's let loose.

Let's do what they can do now.

Soon, he erased all trivial thoughts and ran straight to the gymnasium.

"One two! One two!"

As usual, Seongjin started training by running round the gymnasium. Now, keeping the run at a fairly steady pace didn't put too much strain on my body. It's an encouraging development considering he almost crawled when he first came out on the field.

Intermittently, he started doing strength training as well. It was because he was losing weight rapidly unexpectedly and was concerned about muscle loss.

The knights of the Pearl Palace were training on their own, avoiding his range of motion, as if they were now relatively accustomed to Seongjin's appearances. The not-so-kind gaze was still the same, but they weren't openly hostile like before.

'Well, this is someone's gymnasium, but who can say it's safe?'

He snorted inwardly and took a moment to catch my breath when a stranger appeared at the entrance of the gymnasium. He was a man of considerable stature and well-formed.

He stood at the entrance for a while, looked around, found Seongjin, and approached with a bright smile.

Hm? That gentle, large-sized retriever-like face, where had he seen that face?

"Your Highness!"

He strode forward with his blond hair fluttering brightly, and as he put his right hand on his chest, he greeted him with a sharp smile.

"I greet Prince Morres."

"....."

So, where did they meet?

The man's eyebrows droop.

"... I am Marthain Klanos, the leader of the Imperial Guard and the 2nd Knights. Your Highness."

Ah, the kind knight commander who escorted him from the main palace yesterday.

Seongjin smiled a little too much in an apologetic heart and welcomed him.

"Sir Marthain! I never expected to see you at the Pearl Palace. What are you doing here? Are you off duty today?"

It's not wrong, but now he was wearing simple casual clothes, not a knight's uniform, and he was wearing only a sword. At Seongjin's question, Marthain smiled lightly and scratched his head.

"I came because I heard that the visitor limit has been lifted as of today. So far, I haven't been given permission to enter. You were sick, but I apologize for not being able to visit you once."

Seongjin blinked at the unexpected answer.

Does that mean you often applied for visits before? As soon as the restrictions were lifted, were you the first to run?

Uh, maybe this knight commander was closer to Morres than he thought.....

The demon king bluntly criticizes.

[You are bad! Wrong! Have you forgotten the guy you saw yesterday? How many people are good to this idiot?]

Ehem. He's really sorry for not recognizing. Sir Marthain.

Seongjin swallowed tears in his stomach, feeling guilty, but the knight commander didn't notice at all and asked in a bright voice.

"I heard you've been working hard on your physical fitness lately. Do you always come to the gym at this time?"

"Yeah, I spend most of my day at the gymnasium, unless it's a big deal."

"Excellent!"

In response to Seongjin's answer, Sir Marthain nodded with a warm eye smile.

"Then, if there is nothing special, from now on I can come to the gym together at this time."

"Sir Marthain? Why?"

"This is His Majesty's command. From now on, he asked me to watch the prince's swordsmanship."

They said they would send the right person, so maybe a knight commander?

It was a request yesterday, and the work was done faster than expected.

"I don't have a lot of skills, but I have a good understanding of basic Aura training classes. It will definitely help."

"Ohhh, is that so?"

"Yes, I mainly recruit and teach new squires."

He looks young, but he is the leader of the knights. I'm sure his skills are good, but for his humble personality, he's so confident that he seems to be really good at basic classes.

Marthain, recognizing the expectation and admiration in Seongjin's eyes, smiled shyly and scratched his head.

"It's embarrassing, but I was very late in my initiation because I came here myself. Since the period of digging the foundation was much longer than others, the process had to be hardened....."

It is said that there are people who master it quickly even if they are late in initiation, so this person seems to be that type. It is a solid foundation for guaranteed skills. Isn't that the perfect line?

Seongjin smiled.

"I'm still inexperienced. Please take good care of me, Sir Marthain."

"Yes, Your Highness!"

Marthain was embarrassed and lowered his head.

"Um, but....."

Unlike usual, Seongjin felt empty and glanced around the gymnasium.

Sure enough, all the resident knights of the Pearl Palace, who had been training here and there until just now, had disappeared.

Why? Certainly, even before Lord Marthain appeared.....

I was looking at the empty gymnasium, and Marthain asked.

"Sir, I mainly teach swords, but do you have any other weapons you particularly prefer?"

"Weapon?"

Seongjin was deep in thought.

When he was fighting monsters in the past, most of the world's infrastructure collapsed and supply was not smooth.

Not to mention weapons. Even the heat weapons were not eaten by the thick skin of the monsters, and the few cold weapons were also prone to chipping or breaking after a couple of knife cuts.

As a result, the hunters had no choice but to head to the bare ground with one strengthened bare body. Occasionally, the claws, pincers, and teeth of monsters were roughly trimmed and wielded, but should we really see them as weapons?

"... I don't think there is anything."

"If so, what are your memories of the swordsmanship you learned as a child....."

"doesn't exist. It flew clean."

When Seongjin answered with a refreshing face, Marthain sighed.

"Yes. Then, I think it would be a good idea to start with the standard swordsmanship of the Imperial Knights and the Banahas seniority method."

"Are there other options?"

"Imperial Knights basically learn both sword and spear skills, but in the case of Aura techniques, it is a rule not to start practicing other techniques until one has been mastered. They usually start with Banahas, which is intuitive compared to Wirose, which is designed for spearmanship."

Well, it still doesn't change that you have to learn both in the end, he added.

Seongjin tilted his head and asked.

"Isn't it better in terms of time to pay attention to only one? When you reach a certain level, the distinction of seniority becomes meaningless....."

"Eh?"

Marthain made a grotesque expression.

"Who did you hear that from?"

"Father said that it is a way to go to the place where the heart goes....."

Tuck!

Seongjin was momentarily frightened as Marthain suddenly hardened his face and yelled at him.

Well, it's a little scary because normally a mild-mannered person has a straight face.

"A certain level? What level do you think that level is? Even if you devote your life to it, how many people will reach even the tip of it!"

"Uh....."

"Where the heart goes... I beg your pardon? Is that something to say to a beginner? Yes?"

No, why are you angry at me.....

While Seongjin was sweating, Marthain suddenly stuck his face out in front of Seongjin's nose and emphasized it again in a strong tone.

"Forget about learning anything from him! If you've heard anything, forget it all here! You absolutely must!"

"....."

"Understand?"

The Demon King spoke quietly.

[Hey, doesn't it look like he's hung up on something?]

'... I know.'

For some reason, he had a hunch that the class with Marthain would not be smooth.

It was a memorable first lesson, but he didn't learn how to wield a sword right away. Marthain went around the gymnasium with Seongjin and did light exercises, first thoroughly checking his overall physical strength.

In the meantime, he heard a rough explanation of the origin of the Imperial Knights' standard swordsmanship and the characteristics of the Aura practice method, which I had to learn in the future, but with that alone, the morning passed quickly.

Finally, Marthain finished the class after explaining a simple meditation method.

"If we adjust the office hours of the main palace until late, we will probably be able to take more classes in the afternoon in the future."

Seongjin waved his hand in fright at the knight commander, who said that if it didn't work out, he would take a vacation and come to class.

Are you voluntarily returning your main job, overtime, and even vacation?

Compared to his fairly reliable first impression, the more he looked at Sir Marthain, the more he became a clumsy person.

* * *

Sir Marthain wasn't the only unexpected visitor that day. He eats lunch and is doing gymnastics in his room for a while, when Edith knocks on his door with a slightly embarrassed face.

"Your Highness. Lady Amelia came and is in the drawing room."

Who's Amelia?

Fortunately, the demon king, who was nerfed to be a navigator, had the information accumulated in advance.

[That's your older sister. The First Princess.]

First Princess?

"She didn't say she was visiting, did she? But did you just let her in?"

No matter how much of a brat Morres was, the palace of the prince is not be a place one could visit at will. Didn't Queen Lizabeth also send a message before coming?

"That is... Because she recklessly came in saying that she had to meet Your Highness..."

Ahh. Since she was a princess, it must have been embarrassing for Edith to bring her in or send her back.

Anyway, this was an unexpected situation. Didn't that guy Morres not get along very well with the other princes and princesses? Let alone paying a visit.

[Especially, they say that your relationship with Amelia has already broken down.]

'Whose fault was it?'

[Isn't that obvious? They said that Morres was very harsh when he told her that she was a lowly princess.]

'.....'

The purpose of this visit would never be a good thing. Seongjin sighed.

"Guide me."

Walking with a heavy heart, they arrived at the front of the drawing room, and before Edith could even open the door, they heard the sound of a chair being pushed as if someone was suddenly getting up from inside.

Then there was the sound of light heels hitting each other.

"Eh?"

Jump!

Suddenly the door was pushed back violently, and at that moment, Seongjin almost collapsed backwards in front of the door.

Confused, he looked ahead and saw a tall girl staring at Seongjin's face while holding the doorknob.

[Wow.....]

'Wow.....'

The Demon King and Seongjin exclaimed in bewilderment, but the girl in front of him looked like an angel who just came out of a fire.

A neat white dress with wavy, rosy hair. The shade of long eyelashes trembled over her delicate cheeks like a porcelain doll.

A pretty girl, like a single rose, was looking at Seongjin with wide eyes.

"... Morres."

"Yeah....."

So, is this the Amelia? But why is she looking at Morres with such an affectionate gaze? It seems a bit different from what he thought.

The demon king memorized trivial information from the side.

[He usually called her a lowly girl. Of course, you don't need to refer to that.]

'Shut up!'

Seongjin broke into a cold sweat and opened his mouth to the girl.

"Uh... That... Sister? What's going on here....."

However, Seongjin could not finish his words. As if a dam burst at the sound of his voice, the girl started to shed tears.

Then.

"Morres!"

Wham! The sudden weight of her arms made Seongjin fall on his butt.

"Huh? Huh?"

"Morres! Morres! Morres!"

The girl didn't care about the fallen Seongjin and just called his name and dug into his arms. It was a desperate gesture, as if it were a baby burrowing into its mother's arms. His chest was wet with tears in an instant.

No, what the hell is this?

Seongjin tried to say something with an absurd face, but soon shut his mouth and started patting her back with both hands. It was because her little girl's shoulders were trembling pitifully.

As she sobbed sadly, she began to repeat incomprehensible sounds as if she were talking to herself.

"Ah, you are alive! I'm back! I'm back... Really, really fortunate!"

... Yes?

T/N:

1. Young duke is what they call the heir of the duke.

10

-Please be my precious family, the one and only family I will love with all my soul.

When the foreign prince finally held her hand and whispered to her, the girl just nodded silently, unable to contain her throbbing heart.

This is the story of a girl who wanted to be part of someone's family one day.

* * *

She was suddenly dragged out of the tower, tied up, and walked for a long time wearing an blindfold. Her thin shoes touches the cold, hard stone floor.

Amelia shivered lightly as she smelled the strange smell of metal through the cool morning air.

The voice of the people, no, the voice of the soldiers. Weapons that sometimes cause friction and the strange heat condensed like a dam before bursting.

Eventually, the black cloth covering her eyes came undone, and she found herself standing in the middle of the wall.

"Look, Amelia."

She blinked.

As soon as her eyes, which had been covered for a long time, got used to the light, she saw longbowmen and foot soldiers tightly packed on the walls.

Inside the gates, Rohan's lancers were ready to rush out at any moment, and on both sides of the castle, thousands of infantry units lined up in long lines, waiting for the battle to begin, soaked in quiet excitement.

And the allied army camped like a swarm of ants on the plain beyond the wall. Even the flag of the Holy Empire, Delcross, that shines the brightest among the allied flags.

After taking in all the sights, Amelia turned her head to the side and met the man holding her blindfold.

King Leonard of Rohan.

At one time, she had no doubt that he would become the most loving family in the world, but in the end, he deceived and betrayed her and pushed her life into a pit. He was the culprit who framed her for her guilt and imprisoned her in a cold tower for years.

Leonard looked into Amelia's terribly dry eyes and raised one corner of his mouth.

"That's right, is it unfair? do you resent me? But all this is the retribution that a sinful daughter of the empire deserves. Aren't you the main culprit of this Holy War?"

Amelia showed no reaction. It was because she knew that everything he said was actually a lie, just because he knew it was a good fit.

Who was the real culprit of this war, neither the speaker nor the listener knew who it was.

A strong wind blew over the castle walls, blowing her rosy hair, which had been cut short.

Leonard gazed at the scene for a moment, as if bewitched, then raised his hand and gently touched its end.

"Romaine's plan was not even half successful. Your goddamn father did a good job capturing the raccoons in that kingdom."

He tousled her hair, brushed her rough cheeks, and finally grabbed her slender neck.

"So you have to pay the price instead. Now I will cut your throat and make it the beginning of this war."

Amelia closed her eyes as she felt the strength in the hand gripping her neck. She had no more regrets in her life, which was full of pain.

She just hoped that at least the allied forces will thwart this cruel man's ambitions, and that they will completely crush what he desires so that he cannot get his hands on anything. At that moment, that was all she wanted.

It was then that disturbances broke out on the front.

The allied camp, far away, began to stir, and soon after, a black shadow jumped out of the camp like an arrow.

Only one cavalry. It was a sudden rush made without any sign of openness.

Leonard hesitantly grabbed her by the neck and narrowed his eyes as he surveyed the allied camp. As the uproar grew, it seemed to be an accidental action that was not planned even on the enemy side.

After a while, a group of cavalry corps rushed out from the allied camp. It seemed that they were hurriedly chasing after the knight in the lead.

"That person....."

As the figure of the knight in the lead got closer and closer, the rumblings intensified even in Rohan's camp.

The knight's black armor and main huge stance on the back. And even the several spears worn on the sides.

A famous man who until recently had notoriety on the frontlines is charging towards the walls single-handedly!

"... The Black Demon!"

"It's The Black Demon of Delcross!"

"It's the Crown Prince! The Crown Prince of Delcross!"

Woosh-

The knight in black armor pulled out a single spear. As the spear was enveloped in an ominous dark red aura, the entire castle wall began to shake.

Was he crazy? He hasn't even come within range of the arrows yet, and he's going to throw a spear there?

"Shoot, shoot! What are the archers doing! Go ahead and shoot him!"

Bewildered, Leonard's order fell.

Swish-

The arrows soared into the air, covering the sky black, and after a while, they slammed to the ground with terrifying acceleration.

Kwa-kwa-kwa-kwa. However, the range was also a bit short. The knight ran past the field of arrows with the same posture as aiming the spear.

"Damn it.....!"

While the archers quickly reloaded their arrows, the prince narrowed the distance by another 50 meters and finally threw the spear he was aiming.

Crash!

Scattering auras, the spear flew with terrifying momentum and pierced the ground right in front of the castle gate. It couldn't reach the wall by a hair's breadth, but the faces of the soldiers who looked at the deeply dented ground became pale.

"Is, is he even human?"

"Ready to launch! Ready to launch!"

Hundreds of arrows soared into the air all at once again. The prince pulled out the sword from his back, created a wide sword shield with his aura, and deflected most of the arrows. However, it was not enough to block all the massive amount of arrows that were intensively sprayed.

Neigh! With the sound of a horse screaming, he fell off his horse and rolled across the floor. They wondered if he would roll around and get up like that.

Crash!

The spear that flew in again landed firmly in the center of the wall this time.

"This crazy.....!"

With a couple of arrows stuck in his armor, the black knight started running toward the wall again.

The horse's speed was incomparable, but the relentless appearance of running towards the castle wall with dark red aura burning all over the body was terrifying. Waiting for the reload, the knight commander's neck was shaking with tension.

Amelia watched the whole scene, standing on the castle wall, held in Leonard's grip. Her eyes, which had become numb to the point of insensitivity, trembled slightly as they showed emotional agitation for the first time.

She gave up her own life, but someone else has yet to give up. And he is running without hesitation to the place where he is sure to become a limb.

Swish-

The rain of arrows poured down mercilessly toward the prince once again. But this time, he wasn't the only one to face it. It was because the group of knights who ran after the prince who had left the camp without permission caught up with him and raised their shields all at once while the attack was concentrated on the prince.

Thwack thwack thwack. The shield made by intertwining shields quickly became a honeycomb.

"Hey! You crazy bastard!"

It was the sound of an unknown knight who had thrown a ruined shield and screamed at His Highness the Crown Prince.

Leonard bit his lip nervously.

"... Can he reach here? Can he really reach here?"

The knights formed a formation in a circle with the prince in the middle, and began to advance little by little in that state.

Arrows began to rain indiscriminately after entering the direct range, but the party managed to narrow the distance from the wall by alternately opening sword screens, probably all of them were considerable Aura users.

The crown prince was deflecting arrows with his bare face exposed, having lost his helmet while rolling on the floor.

Fierce looking eyes and a slightly sharper jawline with age. It was a familiar yet unfamiliar face to Amelia. In the meantime, he was grazed by an arrow, and half of his pale blonde hair is soaked in his blood.

"... Morres."

She thought they weren't close to each other since they were young. But why is that child trying so desperately to reach her like that right now, was what she was thinking.

At the same time, the gray eyes of the two people who resemble each other meet.

A moment. Morres' eyes widened.

Thump-

A sharp pain radiated to the right chest.

".....!"

Amelia looked down at the dagger lodged in her chest. The bloodstains spreading red on the shabby dress are unrealistic like blooming flower petals.

Following the hand holding the dagger, she slowly turned her head and looked at Leonard's face. He had the most desperate look in his eyes, but at the same time, his mouth was leaking a fishy smile.

"If you are so precious to them, what can I do? I have no choice but to return you. Only....."

"....."

"... I will never hand you over unharmed."

Thud.

Relying on Leonard's grip, she was barely standing at the end of the wall, and was easily pushed out of the wall with just a slight push.

"Amelia!"

She fell helplessly to the ground as she heard Morres screaming her name in the distance.

What she saw beyond the overturned vision is a calm blue sky like a lie. She thought she could see a bird disappearing through the clouds, but then she lost consciousness.

The sound of someone shouting, screaming, and clashing weapons. The sound of flesh being split.

"... Amelia, Amelia! Sister! Wake up!"

And Amelia's eyes opened as he continued to call her.

Cough! At the same time as she let out a cough, her chest hurts like it's burning. She rolled her eyes and looked around.

In the middle of a battlefield where forces from both sides collide.

Morres sat down next to the lying Amelia, his gauntlet removed and his hand pressed against her chest where the dagger was stuck.

"Mo.....!"

I wanted to call his name, but no sound came out. The dagger hurt her lungs, and every time she tried to breathe, she heard a whistling sound, and blood leaked out of her mouth.

"Shh... Don't talk, stay still, sister. The wound is open. I think I caught you well when you fell, but the place you were stabbed wasn't so good....."

Morres said as if to soothe Amelia, who kept struggling.

"Still, Father will come in a little while. These wounds are nothing to that man, so don't worry. Sister knows that, don't you?"

The younger brother's face also turned pale with tension. He continued to talk to her as if he wanted to reassure Amelia as well as reassure himself.

"Hold on for a moment. Amelia. If you endure a little longer, everything will be fine when Father arrives....."

Aah, His Majesty the Holy Emperor. Father.

Thinking of him, Amelia's dry eyes began to shed tears for the first time in years.

After objecting to marriage with Leonard until the end, and eventually disowning and leaving the house, she never sent a message to her father. Even if he comes now and sees her again, what will he say to Amelia.

Morres, who had managed to sense her guilt, spoke in a low voice.

"Amelia. That guy always thinks of and worries about sister. He wasn't mad at sister in the least, so when you see his face later, just pretend not to know and smile. Understand?"

"....."

"He was so disheartened with the loss of Logan not too long ago, it was kind of scary. I don't know what that guy will do if something even goes wrong with sister. That guy needs sister.

Amelia's eyes widened and she looked up at his face. He hadn't laid his eyes on Amelia the moment before. Unfocused gray eyes stare blankly into space.

Come to think of it, she thought it was because of nervousness, but why is his face so pale?

"... And at this point, I'd like to apologize a bit. I'm sorry that I recklessly talked to you and bullied you when we were young. I was all wrong....."

Amelia, who was examining Morres closely, was startled. She didn't notice because they were facing each other, but it was because his armor behind him was already filled with dozens of arrows.

Most of what wet his hand, which was pressing Amelia's chest, was his own blood.

Amelia realized he must have rushed into the rain of arrows to catch her as she fell off the castle wall. Even though she fell from such a high place, why did she not have any other wounds, and why did not even one of the arrows grazed her?

In that fleeting moment, Morres poured out all his strength for Amelia.

And only then, she could hear the shouts of the knights surrounding them.

"Hold on a little longer, Your Highness!"

"Anyway, they pop out all the time, don't they? Huh? Crown Prince, see you when you get out of here!"

"His Majesty is coming soon! Your Highness! Don't let your mind wander!"

Amelia sobbed helplessly, feeling Morres's breathing slowly fading away.

Aah. It's because of me.

Since I came to Rohan on my own, Father had to carry out unfavorable diplomacy continuously, and my younger brother, the Crown Prince, had to run into an unpredictable death.

And despite all their sacrifices, she eventually dies as their burden to the end.

It was then that the sky suddenly began to turn red.

11

The change on the battlefield happened suddenly. It was not yet noon, so it was a clear day without a single cloud.

The sun disappeared from the sky before they knew it, and a red light began to spread from over the horizon. It was a strange sight, as if blood was seeping into the air.

In the sky that suddenly became unrealistically dark, the spirit of the clashing soldiers gradually faded. In the air that seemed to be weighing down heavily, strength was gradually drained from the weapons facing each other. The agitation that started like that quickly spread throughout the plains, and the battle was greeted with a lull like a lie.

Under the red sky, the Holy Emperor was standing.

He appeared in the middle of the battlefield before anyone knew it and was walking slowly. Wearing short silver armor and a long robe like a mantle, he held his favorite sword, the Nutcracker, in his right hand, and a severed human head in his left.

The bloodstains splattered here and there on the shimmering white robe were particularly frightening.

The knights, who were engaged in a defensive battle surrounding Amelia and Morres, hesitated and retreated as the Holy Emperor approached. At the same time, Morres' body collapsed to the side with a thud. He has already lost his breath.

".....!"

Morres. Morres. Morres!

Amelia barely rolled her eyes, staring intently at the face of her little brother lying on her side. Instead of his name, she vomited up bloody water.

The Holy Emperor approached them and slowly bent his knees.

Thud. The head was thrown carelessly to the side, the long silver hair coiled around it as it rolled around.

He stretched out his hand and slowly stroked her blood-soaked head.

Father, Father. Morres.....!

Seeing the desperate appeal in Amelia's eyes, the Holy Emperor shook his head.

"I am a little late."

Until then, the knights who had been guarding the side with nervous faces fell to their knees.

"This can't be.....!"

Those who simply shed tears in dismay, those who wept on the floor, and those who stared into the sky in a daze. It was a sight that clearly showed how much they cared for the crown prince.

The Holy Emperor looked at them for a moment, then put his hand on the handle of the dagger stuck in Amelia's chest. For treatment, the blade had to be pulled out first.

Then Amelia gritted her teeth and shook her head from side to side.

She can never live like this. Sacrificing her brother, living a life alone. She was in pain until now, but she had no confidence to endure such a life that would have left only the pain she had to endure in the future.

Even if it is the worst sin of turning away from a father who has to remain alone.

It was then. A small pendant hanging from her neck protruded from the side.

It was a necklace with a drop-shaped jewel that Amelia never took off from her body as a keepsake from her mother.

The white and clean jewel rolls over the blood-soaked dress and emits a brilliant light.

The Holy Emperor was startled and picked up the jewel. For an instant, a colorful light passed from his eyes, whose expression did not change at all. Questioning and understanding. Then, relief and sadness.

He looked back and forth between the small pendant and Amelia's earnest eyes, then closed his eyes.

"Your Majesty, the princess' condition....."

An inferior knight urged him, but the Holy Emperor, leaving the dagger stuck in her chest, held Amelia's hand with one hand and began gently stroking her forehead with the other.

Amelia closed her eyes when the Holy Emperor's hand touched her, but when she realized that there was no light on her hand, she was relieved and surrendered herself.

His father's hand, which she held for the first time in a long time, felt very warm even without divine power.

Father, I'm sorry.

"You have suffered a lot so far. Amelia."

Father, thank you.

"Rest in peace now. Daughter."

Slowly, her vision began to blur.

The sky gradually sinks into a heavy red light. As if blood would drip at any moment. No it's already falling. Her vision soon becomes dark.

The muffled noise around her is getting farther and farther away.

What is this? What's in the sky? What the hell is going on? Agh!
Aaaaaaagh!

And her father's last voice.

"Don't worry, Amelia. This is something you don't have to go through."

Amelia, the First Princess of Delcross, met her death like that.

* * *

Amelia, who carelessly rubbed her eyes in the beating morning sun, blinked blankly for a moment as she lay down.

'What? Morning? Didn't I just die? Why am I still lying in bed.....'

Her face turned blue with the sudden fear.

I'm still alive!

"Ah... No! I don't want to live like this again! I am! I am!"

"Princess? Why are you like that?"

"Aah! Morres... Morres! Father! Father! Father!"

"Miss Amelia!"

Since morning, there has been a great uproar in the Silver Rose Labyrinth. It was because the First Princess, Amelia, suddenly burst into tears and had a seizure.

The princess cried and screamed, exhausted herself, got up and cried for a long time, and after a few hours she lost her energy and lay quietly on the bed.

The servants were taken aback by the normally calm princess' eccentricity and hurriedly called the imperial palace councilor.

"Whew. Your beautiful eyes are so swollen. Did you have a nightmare?"

Mirabelle, the exclusive lady-in-waiting, asked kindly, wiping the lukewarm wet towel from Amelia's forehead.

"Mirabelle....."

Amelia repeated her name weakly, and Mirabelle smiled and brushed back her hair that was disheveled on her forehead.

"Yes. Our pretty princess. Why do you keep calling my name today?"

"That's because you already died by Leonard's hand before I was imprisoned in the tower.'

Mirabelle was a handmaid with a warm impression who had taken care of Amelia ever since she entered the imperial palace. The princess, who was shy and pretty like a doll, was cherished and loved with all her heart from the beginning.

In the end, she followed Amelia to Rohan, where she met a gruesome death in the dungeon due to Leonard's severe torture. She remembers that there was no particular reason. Leonard did it purely to annoy Amelia.

Years had already passed in Amelia's mind. Now, when I think about it, grains of sand will flow instead of tears.

She closed her eyes, feeling Mirabel's touch as if it were a dream.

It was a bit late, but Amelia was gradually realizing her current condition.

It wasn't the hair that had been cut messily, but the glossy, rosy hair that wavy to the waist. Not rough and skinny hands, but healthy white and soft hands.

And Mirabelle, smiling kindly with a younger face than before.

She was clearly back in the past.

"Lie down for a bit. Miss Amelia. An imperial councilor will arrive soon. I don't know where it hurts, but you'll get better soon."

– Father will come. Hold on for a moment, Amelia. If you endure a little longer.....

On top of Mirabelle's voice, the voice of her younger brother, who couldn't be heard, overlapped.

Tears began to flow from Amelia's eyes again. Mirabelle clicked her tongue and wiped her eyes with her handkerchief.

"Oops. What's going on here? Not too long ago, the Third Prince collapsed, and the whole palace was in an uproar. Now, it's scary to imagine what a commotion would happen if even the princess said she was sick."

Amelia murmured in surprise.

"The Third Prince?"

"Yes. Prince Morres."

"Not... the Crown Prince?"

"Yes? What do you mean? Sir Morres? The Crown Prince?"

Mirabelle's face softened as if she had heard the most absurd thing in the world, but it didn't matter too much to Amelia. She jumped up from her bed.

Morres.

"... Morres is alive!"

Yes, then did you wish he would die while sick?

That pig trash harassed the princess quite severely, but that's probably not the case, is it? My kind-hearted princess?

Irrespective of Mirabel's confused face, Amelia was already putting the towel aside and getting out of bed.

"I'm going to the Pearl Palace. Get ready, Mirabelle. I need to meet him."

"Yes? However, the imperial palace....."

Mirabelle, who hurriedly followed the princess as she walked into the dressing room and tried to dissuade her, hesitated momentarily and took a step back.

He felt a strange sense of intimidation from the princess, who spoke clearly with a determined gaze like never before.

"I need to meet Morres right now!"

That's why we've come to this situation.

The two of them, who were normally incompatible, sat face-to-face on the sofa in the living room and kept an awkward silence.

Amelia, who had burst into tears as she hugged Morres in a fit of emotion the moment she saw Morres' face, was now blushing and sipping bitter tea.

Seongjin, who has an unexpected refreshment time, doesn't know what to say, so he just rolls his eyes.

"I... So, you had a nightmare about me dying....."

"Ye... Yeah. That's right. So I don't know."

Amelia bowed her head in embarrassment.

She returned to the past from death, but that didn't mean she could tell the truth outright. That she, well, she had nightmares wasn't a very convincing explanation.

Look. Isn't Morres also tilting his head, perhaps a little puzzled?

However, Seongjin's situation was a little different from Amelia's. He was working hard on the demon king in his head.

'Hey, how did this happen? Are the two of them really bad? Why does she look like an ordinary older sister who is worried about her sick younger brother? Huh?'

[This is what people, no, demon lords are! You met her in the garden the day before you collapsed and cursed at her? A lowly woman, a disgrace to the Holy Imperial Family, a lowly bitch, and... Should I do more?]

'.....'

Wow, Mores you son of a bitch.

The idiot who gets the most swearing in the imperial palace, but who are you calling the shame of the Holy Imperial Family?

Seongjin cleared his throat and scratched his head.

"Ahem! Uh, thanks anyway, sister. Um... So, you were worried about the fever?"

First of all, let's say thank you for worrying. Seongjin's thoughts were simple.

But what Amelia paid attention to was something else.

"You're calling me sister now."

Seongjin averted his gaze in surprise, but Amelia touched the teacup for a moment and smiled gently. She smiled vaguely, as if reminiscing about the distant past.

"That's right. Come to think of it, I think it was around this time."

The trash, who was a disgrace to the Holy Imperial Family, seemed to come to his senses at some point, lose weight and learn swordsmanship.....

And at the same time, his attitude toward Amelia also became very docile, but she hadn't readily accepted this change in her previous life.

It was because the face of Morres, who had been hostile to her with a ferocious face since childhood, was embedded in her mind.

If Morres was sometimes spoken to first, he would turn his head away or walk away. In the end, the two never had a chance to reconcile properly, and soon after, she fell in love with Leonard and left for Rohan.

Amelia smiled bitterly.

"If I had been a little more open-minded and approached at that time, our relationship would have made a huge difference."

The family I longed for was not far away.

And only then did she meet Morres and say what she really wanted to say.

"I'm sorry for neglecting you until now, Morres. I wanted to say that."

"Uh....."

Seongjin was very embarrassed.

What? Is this person an angel?

Morres did the bad thing, so why is she apologizing?

The demon king whispered.

[Hey, is the atmosphere okay right now? Now that this has happened, how about trying to improve the relationship?]

'How?'

[You apologize too! You've been wrong so far. When will you have an opportunity like this again?]

'That's right.'

It was the perfect timing even for Seongjin. Not seeing his chance to pass up, he bowed her head to Amelia and quickly issued her apologetic words.

"No, rather, I'm sorry, sister! I don't know if you've heard, but I can't remember well after I was sick. However, I know that I gave you a hard time while being immature. I really want to apologize!"

Amelia stared blankly at Morres. She looked at her little brother's round crown as he bowed his head, a little embarrassed.

She could still see the bloody sight of that soft pale blonde hair.

The still plump body and round, dry face overlapped with the young man's face, which had cooled down while being an arrow holder.

– I'd like to apologize a bit. I'm sorry that I recklessly talked to you and bullied you when we were young.

'Ah.....'

She cried so much that she felt like all the water in my body was drained today, and even then, there were still tears left to shed. Amelia's eyes widened, and she started to shed tears again.

As if the demon king was dumbfounded, he reprimanded Seongjin.

[Hey, you said you apologized. Why are you making the child cry again?]

'No, what did I do!'

Seongjin didn't know what to do, so he stood up awkwardly and apologized again.

"I am really, really sorry. Sister."

"It's okay, Morres."

Her tear-soaked cheeks glowed white.

"You already apologized to me."

She was laughing through tears.

It was a smile brighter than anything else in the world.

12

A stormy day passed and the next morning came.

The servants of the Silver Rose Labyrinth had to pay attention to the princess in a different way than yesterday. Because the princess, who surprised them by pouring out her emotions to the extreme, became excessively lethargic this time.

The intense memory of the death awakened her emotions, albeit temporarily, but as a little time passed, the intense agitation at that time gradually subsided inside.

Her body was a 16-year-old girl, but her mind was that of a queen confined to a tower alone for a long time.

Leonard's mental and physical abuse over the years. Those painful memories continued to eat away at her mind even now, back in the past. She had returned to the Amelia of that time, completely exhausted and as dry as the desert.

"Miss Amelia....."

Mirabelle looked at the princess with pitiful eyes as she lay down on the bed, weak and slumped.

"Don't be too heartbroken. There must be a way to fix it."

"Huh?"

Amelia questioned incredulously, then realized that Mirabelle was looking for the cause of this melancholy in the wrong place.

"It was your mother's precious keepsake, but how did they manage it... I'll give the lady-in-waiting a good scolding!"

Necklace. It was the story of a necklace found broken in the morning.

A small white necklace that was carefully kept in a jewelry box as a keepsake from her mother when she was young. When she was in the tower, she hadn't taken it off her body for even a moment.

"Mirabelle. Could you bring it to me?"

"Yes? But if you see it, it'll hurt more....."

"I'm okay. Please."

Mirabelle obediently obeyed her orders. Soon the broken necklace was wrapped in a clean handkerchief and passed into Amelia's hands.

She unfolded the handkerchief and rolled the fragmented pendant.

It's strange that this is broken.

The white jewel in the pendant was an unnamed miscellaneous jewel, and the ladies in charge of precious metals always admired it, saying that it was somehow harder than diamond.

As proof of that, wasn't it still hanging around her neck until the end when she went through that hardship in Rohan?

But to hear it suddenly split in two in the jewelry box.

'However, this is proof that I have returned to the past.'

Amelia's eyes narrowed coldly.

'Now I won't make the same mistake again.'

She rolled up the pendant wrapped in a handkerchief and swore again and again.

'Never again, Leonard, don't be fooled by that motherfucker. Never!'

But what next?

If she doesn't get involved with Leonard and doesn't go to Rohan, then what?

Is it enough to not be taken advantage of by him?

If so, can she just hide in the Silver Rose Labyrinth and live quietly so as not to become a burden to Morres and Father?

'I don't know.....'

Amelia clutched the handkerchief to her chest and burrowed into the bed.

Her mind was already too tired to think about life and its direction.

The next morning was bright. Mirabelle was on the verge of exploding.

"Princess, please eat something today. Alright? The imperial physician says there is no serious pain, but how long are you going to skip meals?"

Amelia sat up from her seat with a smile on her face.

"Sorry, okay. Could you bring me some simple soup?"

"Ah! You have to wake up and wash your face! Now, let me brush you. Why is our lady, the princess, acting like this these days!"

Amelia thought blankly, her hair bobbing back and forth from the emotional brushing.

Aah, Mirabelle. Because now all problems are solved.

Morres is still alive, and His Majesty Father is still alive and well. I will no longer be their burden. Are there any problems?

Mirabelle's sighs could be heard overhead.

"Really, what is this? They said that as soon as he got up from the hospital bed, the foolish prince had gone to exercise in order to recover his stamina, but now our pretty princess wants to be lazy after that?

There was a momentary twinkle in Amelia's eyes, and the light returned.

"Morres....."

The princess muttered blankly.

"Shall we go to the Pearl Palace....."

Mirabelle, who would normally have hated hearing the name of Morres, strangely, today, her whole face turned bright and she shook the bell with a jingle.

"Good idea! Now, after a simple meal, shall we dress up beautifully?"

Soon the maids gathered, carrying scented oil, bath products, and all kinds of dresses and accessories.

* * *

An unexpected spring breeze blew in the Pearl Palace gymnasium.

The goddess of spring, wearing a pale yellow dress and her hair decorated with small white flower decorations, has descended.

Seongjin, who had been taking a breather for a while after completing the two sets of runs at the gymnasium, widened his eyes.

"Whoa... Sister. What happened?"

The female knight who accompanied her as an escort was also quite beautiful, but Princess Amelia was a girl who truly boasted unrivaled beauty. She has an atmosphere that combines extreme brightness and neatness at the same time.

"Yeah, I stopped by after thinking about it on the way. I heard you live at the gymnasium these days?"

Amelia smiled shyly and continued as if a little apologetic.

"I don't know if I'm interfering or not. Everyone is training so hard....."

He followed her gaze. The resident knights of the Pearl Palace are training hard in the corner of the gymnasium with their tops open.

These bastards?

"Well, it was break time anyway. You don't have to worry about it, as it's well taken care of."

Seongjin waved his hand.

Amelia looked at Seongjin with a bit of admiration as he stretched back and forth even while taking a breather. They said it had been a few days since he appeared at the gymnasium, and he looked like he had lost a lot of weight.

His stomach still jiggles whenever he moves, but it's a huge improvement compared to the past when he was waddling and rolling.

"You really have changed. You have lost a lot of weight."

Seongjin smiled bitterly.

"Fufufu. There is no diet as sure as marching with military gear on."

The weight this body has to lose easily exceeds the weight of the full outfit, Sister.

Of course, Amelia, not understanding what he was saying, tilted her head.

Sir Marthain, who seemed to give up his duties immediately and come running, was unexpectedly taking time to hand over his duties. It seems that from now on, he will put off all work to his lieutenant and focus only on Seongjin's lessons in earnest.

Thanks to that, Seongjin was still training alone at the training ground. Well, that is until today.

In order to leave a little bit of energy for class, the scene unfolding right in front of him is not very good for mental health, so let's do some training in the morning.

"I'm going to have lunch now, would you like to have it before dinner?"

It is unimaginable between the two before. The escort knight winced and looked at Amelia, but she smiled happily and nodded her head.

"Yes, let's do that. Morres."

And the brother and sister left the gymnasium, ignoring the earnest eyes of the resident knights.

* * *

"Hmm... You say this is the purpose of life?"

Seongjin had just finished taking a shower and was sitting face to face with Amelia at a modestly set table.

Unexpectedly, the two talked well, but Amelia, who was normally shy, was surprised inside. She said it was because her meal time with him was more enjoyable than she thought.

Even until morning, she had no appetite at all, but before she knew it, she was emptying the food and making a lot of noise. Perhaps the unprecedentedly intense greeting two days ago played a role in breaking down the wall between each other.

"So you're saying you don't know what the purpose of living in vain is after you've gotten away from the guy who bothers you?"

"To sum it up, that's it."

Somehow, Amelia was consulting with him about her recent worries. Of course, she couldn't tell him that she had regressed, so it was a vague story somewhere.

Seongjin tilted his head.

I felt that this kind of conversation was not very unfamiliar. Oh, didn't he tell the Holy Emperor that he wanted to know why a person lives?

But could there be someone who could make the life of someone such as the princess so painful? Enough to lose the purpose of life? Who is that?

The demon king nodded in a calm tone.

[Yours. It's your story.]

'No way... Right?'

Seongjin frowned and pondered for a moment before opening his mouth.

"Hmm, sister. This is purely my opinion, just take note."

Amelia nodded eagerly.

"Okay."

"So you're saying it's all thanks to someone else that you got away from him? It means that you didn't even have a chance to do anything yourself."

"Yeah."

"And he's still living a fine life?"

"Yeah."

"So, is there anything to worry about? Until you have another purpose in life, focus on tormenting him. You have to pay back the damage with interest, and get compensation for the psychological damage as a bonus."

"Hmm....."

Amelia's face darkened.

"I think I should too. At one time, my resentment was so great that I only thought of revenge."

In the first few years after learning Leonard's true feelings, Amelia also gnashed her teeth and vowed revenge on him. She would risk everything and pay back with all her might.

However, while she was confined for a long time and spent a painful time, her vengeance gradually wore off without doing anything.

Leonard.

He was the king with all the power of Rohan.

Amelia, on the other hand, was just a powerless prisoner.

Besides, can it be said that he alone is solely responsible for Amelia's downfall and death?

Many people's ambitions, struggles for interests, and conspiracies. She was just helplessly tossed and trampled in it.

The foolish queen, who had only been imprisoned for so many years, did not even know who she had to avenge.

It was so sad, and in the end it made her shrink herself.

However, Seongjin clicked his tongue and shook his head.

"Wow, this sister is so naive again. What do you think is so complicated? Sister. Revenge, first of all, starts with taking only one guy and beating him up."

".....?"

"Listen, sister. First of all, take a picture of the one that bothers you the most! And only care about how to temper that bastard. You don't need anything else. You're going to follow that one bastard to the end of the world."

For a moment, he felt a piece of garbage tremble in Seongjin's head. Why is he shaking again?

Seongjin wasn't a delicate person enough to realize that it wasn't like someone else's story.

"Then, the officials will come out one after another, right? Then lose again. What if that bastard is the most powerful? By the time you kill that bastard, everyone else must be dead, right? What? Is your revenge over?"

Huh? That's true, but.....

Somehow it sounds like a very simple thing.

Amelia tilted her head.

"Imagine him begging to sister with a double nosebleed. I assure you, there is absolutely no time to be depressed. Purpose of life? Sister, is there anything in this world that fills the heart as much as the pleasure of revenge?"

"....."

The demon king sighed.

[No, you demon!]

"True revenge, sister. It's not just a process you have to persevere to see results. Think of the perfect trap you design to taffy your opponents. How beautiful is it? How precious and rewarding must each of the steps taken to execute this be?"

"....."

"Then what if there is something you want to do? then you can do something else. Retaliation from the other side? What are you worried about? The strongest backing in the country is our father."

"Yeah, that's right."

Amelia felt that her mind, which had been complicated until now, became much clearer.

"Yes, you are right. I definitely want revenge."

Could she ever be satisfied with just avoiding getting involved with him? Why did she try to ignore that fact until now?

It was because she thought it would be beyond her power. Because she felt that if a goal was unattainable, she would have to give up. She tried to console herself that it was not right to waste her life on such things.

So she became helpless. Only her empty shell remained.

"I thought revenge that didn't reach the end was just futile. But true revenge is something that enriches life not only in the result but also in the process itself."

A bright smile bloomed on Amelia's face.

Let's not turn away from her true desires anymore.

That's right. I want to see the ruin of Leonard.

There was nothing left but that longing. Maybe she went back to the past for that.

If you fear not succeeding, you will love even the process of failure.

If the already exhausted mind says that no life can sing, from now on revenge will ignite her desire, give her joy, and make her life shine.

Little by little, the light returned to Amelia's eyes. It was a blue light that had never been seen before.

Seongjin was startled for a moment and avoided her gaze.

That, excuse me sister.

I'm not the target... Am I?

13

Chief Chamberlain Louis entered the office and was startled. It was because the Holy Emperor was lying on the sofa in his office with his hand on his forehead.

It was a rare look from the young holy emperor.

When he saw the chessboard lying on one side of the table, he smiled knowingly.

"Come to think of it, today was the day the twin princess and prince had an audience. Did you play chess again?"

Nate let out a murmur.

"It's getting more and more difficult to deal with those two. Can't they simply play like children?"

"Isn't it something you can just lose?"

"If I don't do my best, it's a problem because they'll notice it like a ghost."

Well, they were very intelligent twins. The chamberlain nodded his head.

"By the way, what about Amelia?"

Louis knew that the Holy Emperor had been keenly aware of the situation at the Silver Rose Labyrinth recently.

Two mornings ago, the First Princess had a sudden seizure and called the imperial doctor. Although he had heard reports of no particular abnormalities in her health.

"They says she eats less and is a little depressed."

"Okay."

"And I heard that she visited the Pearl Palace twice."

"... That is surprising."

Two children who never seemed to get close started coming and going. It's certainly a welcome thing, but it would rather prove that what happened to Amelia wasn't just a change of heart.

Nate sighed as he got up from the couch.

"It would be nice if she could tell me what the hell is going on at the audience tomorrow."

At that time, the Holy Emperor could not even imagine what kind of trouble his lovely daughter would bring him.

* * *

Unwillingly, the direction of a naive girl's life changes completely, and thanks to this, her father is going to grab the back of his neck¹.

However, Seongjin, the culprit behind all of this, was heading to the gymnasium with a throbbing heart, unaware of anything. This is because the swordsmanship class with Marthain, who has finally finished taking over, has begun.

He's was a little sorry for the adjutant who took on the duties of the knight commander. However, being able to have one-on-one lessons with a motivated swordsmanship teacher all day long was an opportunity that would not have been easily obtained if it were not for the prince.

Seongjin was a little impatient because he wanted to come in contact with the unknown power to come quickly.

After a couple of laps around the empty gymnasium without a resident engineer training somehow, Seongjin finished his warm-up with his usual national gymnastics. However, Marthain, who was watching him closely, wrinkled his forehead.

"Your Highness, is it okay if we continue the class as it is? Aren't you feeling uncomfortable somewhere?"

"Huh? I'm fine though? Why?"

Now he's got some strength and he can move.

Seongjin was puzzled and asked, and Marthain asked again.

"Are you sure you have fully recovered from the fever?"

"The doctor said it was okay to exercise. Why, is something wrong?"

"But why is the Aura....."

Marthain looked carefully at Seongjin's complexion and then continued with a rather serious face.

"A while ago, I thought it was because you just woke up from the sickbed. I don't know why Your Highness' Aura activity is still so weak like a sick person even though you've recovered."

Aura is the power that is the basis of life that spreads evenly throughout the world. It is said that even if you are not an aura user who performs contraction from the outside, a certain amount of aura activity will basically occur if you have a normal body.

Occasionally, in the case of a weak person or a person with a disease, this aura activity is weakened. However, Morres' body is said to be extremely inactive, like a person with a serious illness.

"Can you see it? I can't even see Aura."

"Of course it is not visible. However, if you become accustomed to feeling the flow of the Aura, it is possible to guess the degree of activity within the body by detecting the movement of the Aura around you."

It is said that Aura originally has the property to distribute evenly like air or water. If you try to collect the Aura that has flowed into your body without sending it out, the Aura will move faster and faster to fill the gap.

So, the more Aura is used, the more energy is used, the more naturally Aura moves around that person.

It is also a way to indirectly guess the state of others, Marthain added.

"... Oh, come to think of it!"

There was something that suddenly came to Seongjin's mind. These were the words Doctor Ninnias had said in passing during his last regular check-up.

-Compared to normal people, it seems that the activation of the Aura in the body is a little weak, so I think that recovery will be faster if you put in effort at least in Aura practice.

When he told that to Marthain, he tilted his head.

"Did the doctor say that? There aren't many members of the clinic who really feel the activation of Aura, but he seems to be quite experienced."

"Yes, Doctor Ninnias didn't seem to take it too seriously. I heard that I was inherently insensitive to Aura, isn't that why?"

However, Marthain seemed very surprised by Seongjin's words. He breathed in vain and immediately stared at Seongjin's face with round eyes.

What? Is it strange that I say that his Aura is dull?

As expected, he was seriously contemplating whether he should break the plate at least once, but Marthain opened his mouth with a slightly pale face.

"Your Highness previously....."

He licked his lips for a while, as if his mouth still didn't come off, then swallowed dryly and cleared his throat.

"As far as I know, before you got sick, your Aura activity wasn't much different from that of normal people."

"Really?"

"Yes, Your Highness. So, if it's not the aftereffects of a fever, what could be the cause?"

Somehow, when he first opened his eyes in Morres' body, he thought it was exceptionally heavy. Maybe it wasn't just because of being overweight.

Anyway, it was fine now. It's not too hard to move.

Seongjin swung his arms around to loosen his shoulders and spoke indifferently.

"I must have lost a lot of weight and my body was a bit weak. I'll be fine soon."

Marthain had a slightly confused expression, but soon nodded.

"Yes, the doctor has some truth. It's true that once you start contracting your Aura, your Aura activity will increase, so even if you have the aftereffects of your illness, your recovery will be quicker."

Then he began to elaborate on how to meditate. It was the first step towards full-fledged Aura training.

* * *

At that time, in the Holy Emperor's office, the countdown started with a large bomb manufactured by Seongjin the day before in Amelia's hand.

"Hmm....."

Amidst the heavy silence, Holy Emperor Nate let out a short sigh.

Audience time with his daughter alone. This is because his daughter, who would normally talk for hours about the flowers and accessories she received as a gift and the prince she admired, kept her mouth shut.

He looked down at Amelia's rosy hair, her head bowed down, and his eyebrows furrowed slightly. Because that little head is full of worries.

Nate decided to untie the knots one by one. First of all, he tried to change her mood by conveying news that her daughter would like.

"Amelia. About the Second Prince of Rohan you always talk about."

Confirming Amelia's flinching reaction, he continued.

"He sent me a letter saying he would visit here soon. As if he's going to eventually become the crown prince instead of his sickly older brother. It looks like he's trying to solidify his position as the crown prince by receiving official teachings."

Leonard of Rohan.

A sleazy bastard who sings that his daughter has longed for him since last year.

Although it was distasteful to directly deliver the news of the scandalous bastard, it is said that parents cannot beat their children. His daughter said that she likes him, so what more can he say?

However, his daughter's reaction, which he thought would be delighted, was completely unexpected. Amelia lifted her head in a flash, and soon he noticed that jewel-like tears began to drip from her large gray eyes.

"Father, Your Majesty, this girl does not want to meet Leonard! That cruel man will eventually become the source of evil that will harm me, Morres, and Delcross!"

Nate was instantly taken aback by his daughter's sudden violent reaction.

And bombs were dropped on him.

"Your Majesty, I... returned from death to the past!"

It was a sudden bolt from out of the blue.

Afterwards, Amelia's complaints poured out as if a blocked dam had burst, shaking the office like a storm.

To sum it up roughly, Leonard, that damn bastard, seduced his beloved daughter, openly spied on her, deceived and mistreated her, and soon began to physically and mentally abuse her. Even that was not enough, she was confined in a cold tower for years, and finally killed in front of his eyes.

And his daughter returned to the past from that gruesome death?

These were stories that were not easily believable.

"Aah! Your Majesty was so against it from the beginning, but this foolish daughter of yours ruined everything!"

"....."

Nate just stared blankly at his daughter, who was now starting to sob.

There was a lot to say, but he couldn't easily ask any of them. It was because Amelia's voice pouring out like she was vomiting was so desperate.

"Last night, this girl had a lot of troubles too. Will I embrace this secret alone? If so, how far can a girl's power change the future? Even coming here, I was constantly conflicted. However!"

"....."

"It is a conspiracy that begins within the royal family of a neighboring country. These are events that will bring about a great war on the continent. If I don't discuss all of this with Father, the greatest monarch of the continent, who can I ask for help?"

At least, as if it were true that she had been thinking all night, thick dark circles were sitting on Amelia's always neat face.

"... I am well aware that all of this is nonsense for Your Majesty to hear. But for me, every day was like hell. Those vivid memories cannot be dismissed as a midday nightmare."

"Is... that so?"

"Yes. Your Majesty the Holy Emperor, Father. It has been a long time since I came back."

She swallowed sadly for a moment, then raised her head.

"So this girl will take revenge. I will pursue him to the ends of hell. I will crush all his hopes and utterly ruin them. I won't forgive anything that gets in my way!"

"....."

"Only his body will appease this girl's hunger, and his blood will satisfy my thirst."

Fufufufufu.

His daughter, who was like a single rose, laughs gloomily while making a scary sound.

Nate blinked in bewilderment. Had he been misinformed about this child all this time?

Okay, let's just say everything Amelia said is true. Even so, is this tender child calmly harboring a sword of malice towards others?

She is the daughter who did not hold a single grudge against the Marquis² who neglected her as a child. How can a person's personality itself change like this in one day?

As he stared at his daughter's venomous eyes, which were only unfamiliar to him, Louis, the chief chamberlain, who was watching from the side, tipped off to him.

"Apparently she has been hanging out with Prince Morres recently....."

"....."

That's right, Mores.

Nate let out a small sigh.

From some time ago, there was always that child in every causal distortion.

"... Amelia."

The Holy Emperor did not hastily say that he believed in her.

Nor did he console her that it was simply her nightmare and that it would not be true.

He just asked this.

"It must have been a very long and painful time for you. Shouldn't you be compensated for this now?"

"....."

"If I use my hand, Leonard, he won't be king. You will not go to Rohan, you will find other happiness in Delcross. Why do you want to throw away the time you regained for revenge?"

But Amelia firmly shook her head.

"I came to realize that a girl's happiness could never be separated from her revenge. Your Majesty."

A blue light is burning in the eyes of the daughter who was just beautiful and neat.

The Holy Emperor realized. She can't be stopped.

In the end, he had no choice but to ask in a low voice.

"Do you have... a specific plan?"

If it is unavoidable, as a father, he has no choice but to generously pour in advice.

"After he took the throne, didn't he go through a complicated process to find a reason to confine me? In order to guess the power structure at the time, it is necessary to find out the current situation of Rohan....."

"I don't know how it was possible for you to be so completely cut off from Delcross. Even in Rohan, there are many talented subjects of Delcross. What I remember about that place....."

"Isn't it strange why it should have been a Holy War? Instead of a war, it's possible Rohan was trying to draw in allies under the guise of a Holy War....."

"Daughter, that Leonard is not a person with exceptional strength. Aren't you out of shape when you're so easily hit by a dagger? Swordsmanship class starting tomorrow....."

The tea time with his daughter turned into an insidious time plotting the destruction of the royal family of a neighboring country.

After seeing off Princess Amelia safely, Louis entered the office and stopped in shock. It was because the Holy Emperor was lying face down on his refreshment table with his hand covering the back of his neck.

Arguably, it was the first time the chief chamberlain had seen this in his many years as an assistant.

The Holy Emperor groaned a little.

"I'd rather just play chess for a week and a half....."

T/N:

1. When people grab their neck in stress. Nate will be doing this a lot when dealing with children, ESPECIALLY Morris.
2. Just a reminder, Amelia's mom was an illegitimate daughter to a marquis and Amelia's life was pretty miserable before Nate found her and brought her to the imperial palace.

14

The Holy Emperor Nate is not a deeply religious person by nature.

However, what he dare to say without shame is that he did not particularly seek carnal pleasure or senseless romance.

That is to say, he didn't lead his life recklessly enough to be called [The Unprecedented Playboy Holy Emperor].

But why did he already officially have five children when he ascended to the throne at the young age of 21? Here, too, there were some circumstances which deserved sympathy.

Born as the son of the hated Second Queen, the Third Prince of the former Holy Emperor, he was unfortunately the most talented human being among his half-brothers.

A prince with innate elegance, a brilliant brain, and even a talent for swordsmanship. He was naturally a top priority for other members of the imperial family.

In addition, the son of the powerless Second Queen who was shunned by the Holy Emperor and kicked out by her family. He had to be eliminated first, and even if things went wrong, he was bound to be the most uncompromising target.

Because of this, he suffered numerous assassination attempts from a young age.

Several raids, as well as various attempts to poison in particular, continued to happen. Not to mention three meals a day and food and beverages, it was not uncommon for the entire villa to be engulfed in poisonous smoke.

No matter how quick-witted Nate was and possessed extraordinary divine power, he could not avoid the crisis of crossing life and death several times.

Before he was 10 years old, the Second Queen, who suffered from poison for several years, eventually died.

It's been a long time since the people of the castle or family stopped visiting altogether. His one and only son was also poisoned, and it was a lonely death in a bone marrow.

By then, Nate's health was also in critical condition. The oracle of Kornsheim left behind a curse-like prophecy saying that he would never see an heir from now on, and that he would die a miserable death at a young age.

The members of the imperial palace also unanimously declared that the poisoned young prince had already become infertile. In addition to this, even if you take good care of your health from now on, it is accompanied by a gloomy prospect that it will be difficult to exceed the terms and conditions.

A prince who has no rear ship and cannot see his heirs.

Everyone was unaware that Nate had been unofficially removed from the throne entirely.

For more than two years after that, the prince steadfastly survived by himself. Even after reaching this point, poisoning attempts continued, so it was a tearful struggle for survival.

However, after going through an event where he vomited blood again at the imperial palace banquet celebrating the birthday of the holy emperor. Little Nate, his patience finally exhausted, thought with a carefree smile as he lay in his bed.

Fuck, life.

After that day, the poor third prince disappeared completely from the imperial palace.

After leaving the capital, the young prince wandered the country alone for years.

At first, he reluctantly ran away to live, but as soon as he escaped the small fence of the imperial palace, many of his natural talents began to bloom brilliantly.

His uncharacteristic cleverness allowed him to evade the pursuers in the imperial palace, and the miscellaneous skills he picked up here and there allowed him to quickly rise to the level of excellent swordsmanship. The suppressed divine power was also completely released, allowing it to exert miraculous healing power.

Is that all? Everyone who met him treated him kindly.

An experienced hunter, a talented treasure hunter, an independent hidden pharmacist, and a wandering sword master.

It was a passing relationship for a while, but they all saved the talent of the prince and tried to help.

It didn't take long for the prince to transform into a fairly competent adventurer. The desperate nomadic life is now becoming a pleasant foodie trip to enjoy the life that is not long left to the fullest.

Many years after running away from the imperial palace. Although he was a bit infrequent, the assassins continued to pursue him, and Nate periodically moved from city to city and wandered around the country. As his hair grew thicker to a certain extent, he naturally began to have meetings with women.

Nate must have been quite a style to be eaten by women. Even though he revealed that he couldn't settle down in one place, there were many women who wanted a cool swordsman and a fleeting flame of romance.

At that time, Nate was someone who enjoyed wandering around, but on the other hand, always had a fear of a terminally ill life, not knowing when he would die.

So, if he can remain as a momentary good memory for them, then his life would be worth a little bit. Thinking about it now, he met women with his own desperate reasons.

He was always faithful to love, feeling that it might always be the end of his life.

It may sound like an excuse, but the women who met him were very happy, and parting was always heartbreaking and beautiful.

The only thing Nate overlooked was that his health quickly improved as he got rid of his periodic poisoning and started to deal with his Aura properly.

And since his innate divine power greatly exceeded previous popes, the healing power of his body was also beyond imagination.

That is to say, he was not sterile.

He found out about it when he was almost 20 years old. In the city where he stayed for quite a long time as the frequency of his pursuers decreased, from the day his lover Melody vomited.

The doctor's diagnosis was pregnancy.

There was no doubt about the lover. Because he knew better how innocent and noble she was.

'No way.....'

An eerie assumption passed through his mind.

From then on, Nate hired the Information Guild and went on to inquire about the women he had dated before.

Since when did he become normal?

What was the oracle's prophecy about having no heirs and short-lived?

If, by any chance, other women had children, how are those fatherless children doing now?

While anxiously waiting day by day, Melody's stomach began to grow, and by the time winter came around, he was able to receive an answer from the Information Guild.

– Judging from the women's future actions and the baby's appearance, there are currently three children suspected of having the client as the parent. Further reports will be made as the investigation progresses.

That means there may be more if you look for them.

Cold sweat flowed like rain.

'What should I do? Let's find them all and take responsibility... No, then what about the Melody? First of all, I'm going to have to marry Melody, how heartbroken will she be when she finds out?'

He had that thought.

'Oh, what if those women are already in a family with someone else? Then, wouldn't it be true love to just pretend not to know and wish for happiness? No, no. That's irresponsible.....'

Nate grabbed his head. Because even he thought he was too trashy himself.

But the water has already been spilled, and the flesh has been shot.

While struggling with pain, he decided to focus on taking care of his lover, whose birth date was approaching. And in order to ascertain whether it was a situation where he had to intervene, he additionally commissioned a detailed investigation into the current situation of the other women and children to the guild.

However, aside from his complicated personal circumstances, the situation in the Holy Empire began to flow strangely.

It seemed that the battle between the First Prince and the First Princess for the succession was in full swing, but the Second Prince suddenly seized the market and knocked out the Princess.

Shortly thereafter, the Holy Emperor suddenly passed away, and a civil war between the First and Second Prince factions broke out, but surprisingly, the two princes died at the same time due to a small friction between the troops in the capital.

Nathaniel Klein, 21 years old.

The auspicious day when Melody finally held her beautiful daughter in her arms.

And the day when the three Holy Knights and five cardinals came to the village in groups and knelt at once in celebration of the birth of a new Holy Emperor.

The information guild announced that they had found another child, and he inherited the throne and officially became the father of five children.

* * *

"Are you still paying attention to what the princess said?"

Click. Nate raised his head at the sound of tea cups clinking. It was Louis, the chamberlain, who had been assisting him for the past several years.

He is a competent fellow who takes care of the tea that the Holy Emperor enjoys in the evening without even ordering it separately.

"Hmm....."

Nate moved his chin to the other hand and asked a question in passing.

"What do you think? How much can be believed from what Amelia said?"

Louis smiled softly.

The young Holy Emperor he served had occasions like this. It was only after he had finished his thoughts and reached a complete conclusion, that he asked for the opinion of the chief chamberlain, who would not even refer to it.

So the seasoned chief chamberlain gave a moderately common sense opinion.

"Wasn't she originally a kind and imaginative person? She must have had a frightening dream."

"That's right."

Nate nodded.

"How about the Pearl Palace?"

"I've been told that Prince Morres and Sir Marthain devoted themselves to swordsmanship lessons all day long. Both of them are more motivated than ever before, and I heard that he seems to be doing well."

"Right."

Nate gave a short answer and raised a cup of tea.

The chamberlain silently stayed by his side. It was because he knew empirically that the Holy Emperor would command him to do something soon.

After a while, Nate opened his mouth.

"... Louis."

"Yes, by your command."

"Get the necklace from Amelia's room."

Louise's eyebrows rose slightly.

Among the many accessories possessed by the princess, there must be only one that the Holy Emperor specifically refers to.

As the chamberlain, who knew even a little about the jewel, it was impossible not to know that the Holy Emperor was taking this incident more seriously than he thought.

"Your Majesty, that necklace....."

As the chief chamberlain opened his mouth in confusion, the Holy Emperor suddenly raised his hand.

He was stunned speechless, but immediately shut his mouth when he realized that Nate was staring at the ceiling.

"....."

Soon, a dark figure falls from above. He was a man in a black outfit.

He was an agent of the Information Guild, who Louis was familiar with, but his skills were truly ghostly. Even when he appeared, he didn't seem to be there, but he didn't even hear the sound of him sitting on the floor.

How the hell does the Holy Emperor know in advance that this man is coming every time?

"Your Majesty the Holy Emperor."

The man, who got down on one knee and bowed respectfully towards Nate, continued to report with a low voice as he kept his head bowed.

"There is a new progress in the long investigation, so I visited late."

"....."

Louis was startled and looked at the Holy Emperor. It was because there was only one issue that this information guild had been hanging on to for a long time.

As expected, Nate's face, which maintains a poker face for a while, is slightly wrinkled.

"... Say it."

"Yes, we tracked down the woman Your Majesty met in the Eusenian Hot Spring Village. After she left the village, her activities were completely cut off and we have been walking in place until now, but while searching for her, there was someone who vaguely remembered that she was the daughter of a male writer in Rohan."

It's Eusenian. Perhaps it was in the middle of his wandering period.

Strangely, it turned out that she was a person of Rohan.

"It is said that she even gave birth in the hot spring village and was on her way home. However, there was no record of entering Rohan, so the investigation was disrupted. It turns out that before entering Rohan, they were attacked by bandits....."

Clack.

Hearing the sound of the teacup being set down on the table a little harshly, the informant glanced up at the Holy Emperor's face and continued.

"Everyone in the party, including the woman, died, but after that, there were eyewitnesses who said they saw a boy from the bandits. The baby was probably raised by thieves, and was captured after the situation....."

Louis, the chief chamberlain, stared at the Holy Emperor's clenched fist as if the blood would disappear, and then quietly closed his eyes.

It was the moment when the Holy Emperor's eighth child was confirmed.

15

Several days passed.

In the meantime, Sungjin spent a fruitful time going back and forth between the library and the gymnasium. It was a faithful time he had only experienced decades ago in his school days, devoting all his energy to self-development without any worries.

There was Morres' personal library in the Pearl Palace, which was very large compared to the size of the palace and had many collections.

Just when he thought he'd take the time to look into it, Amelia cautiously asked him to use the library. He said that he was interested in the international situation and the situation of neighboring countries, and she wanted to study specialized books.

There were only small libraries in the Blue Rose Labyrinth, the palace of the princes, and the Silver Rose Labyrinth, the palace of the princesses. However, going to the Imperial Library or the library of the main palace was too far away.

On the other hand, the Pearl Palace library has the advantage of having a large collection of books and not far from the Silver Rose Labyrinth.

– There are not many libraries that have this many specialized books. It was because it was prepared by referring to the theological academy.

This is what the librarian and administrator said with great delight when a person came to the library, which had been flying only flies, for the first time in a while.

Indeed, it was said that the queen had built it with all her heart and soul for the education of the third prince, but it seemed that the level was comparable to that of a specialized educational institution.

And Seongjin, who visited the library for the first time with Amelia, learned a shocking fact.

It's true that the language he used so far was not actually Korean!

[Wow, I thought it was lacking somewhere before, but did you only know that now? I'm more curious that you didn't know that until now.]

The demon king sneered. Seongjin made a fussed face as he flipped through the books written in an unfamiliar language.

'Can it be that I have to study the spelling again?'

After recognizing that fact, Amelia's chatter next to me came to me with a very strange feeling. Why didn't he know until now? Sentence structure and pronunciation is a foreign language completely new to him?

What was even more surprising was that despite this, Seongjin had no major problems understanding her words.

Seongjin asked the demon king with a sudden thought.

'Just in case, aren't you speaking Korean right now.....'

[What? Punk?]

The answer that came back was absurd.

[Why would I, the Demon King of Gehena, speak the language of a low-level world like Sigurd District 34, and not even an official language at that, but a corner country? I don't even know what it means.]

'Then how are we still talking?'

[That's because this body is in the middle of a direct dialogue with the soul through thought waves. Ignorant Earthling.]

The demon king, who seized the opportunity to pretend to be proud after a long time, was arrogant.

[If you're like me, it's not even a task to read thoughts before words. There is no language that this body cannot understand.]

ah. Is that so.

Then, is Seongjin's understanding of words related to the fact that the demon king reads his thoughts first?

The Demon King answered his question coolly.

[Shall we try it?]

Then, in an instant, his presence disappeared from my mind.

'.....!'

They said I could get away from this body a little bit, so it was like this.

While he was thinking blankly, Amelia, who was wandering around, approached him with an excited face and spoke to him.

"There are so many books here, Morres. It doesn't seem to fall short even compared to the main palace library! Can I use it more often in the future?"

"Yes, of course, Big Sister Amelia. Feel free to use it anytime."

Unfamiliar language still flowing softly from his own mouth. It seems to have nothing to do with the existence of the Demon King.....

'Could it be that I was a language genius?'

However, the demon king, who returned after a while, dismissed his opinion at once.

[The language center is in the brain, right? The soul is Lee Seongjin, but this body belongs to Morres. Shouldn't this be seen as what Morres' body remembers?]

It was a very plausible statement. If so, maybe.....?

With a glimmer of hope, Seongjin pulled out a book and began to look closely at it. After looking at it for a while, sure enough, there were a few letters that were recognizable.

That is, onomatopoeia, and very simple words.

[It is at the level of a child who is just learning letters.]

The demon king summarized it in one sentence.

Wow, Morres you fucking son of a bitch.

How is it that a prince can't even read properly even when he's reached puberty?

Seongjin, who had suddenly started to study a foreign language unexpectedly, looked at the sky with a bewildered face, and the demon king comforted him and chuckled.

[Consider it luck that Delcross adopted the phonetic alphabet. Won't you learn quickly because you know the language? Go for it!]

On the other hand, life at the gymnasium has undergone many changes.

First of all, it is because Seongjin, who has lost quite a bit of weight, cuts down on physical training and aerobic exercise, and starts learning swordsmanship from Sir Marthain in earnest.

The standard swordsmanship of the Imperial Knights he was learning was a very simple and effective swordsmanship that a genius knight named Banahas refined based on the swordsmanship of the Delcross Empire about 100 years ago.

It is a practical swordsmanship that organizes old swordsmanship, originally passed down in 15 types and 9 types, into 8 types and 10 types.

It was a great swordsmanship that was established as the basic swordsmanship of the knights along with the Banahas technique he devised.

Among them, Marthain focused on Seongjin for the most basic movement 1 and movement 2. It was the basis of all the movements, but it was a process that had to be mastered first in order to learn the Banahas practice method.

"Well, that's strange."

Marthain said curiously to Seongjin, who wielded a wooden sword while sweating.

"Certainly, the prince does not have the basics of swordsmanship or attitude at all. Even so, you seem familiar with handling weapons."

That's right.

After wielding the claw of a monster for decades, it's easy to come up with a cool form of your own.

"And I can already see a lot of bad habits. The arm holding the sword must be stopped with full force. But you have a habit of swinging it with all your might and subtly relaxing it before stopping it. The same goes for a frontal stab. Why do you keep rotating it counterclockwise?"

Holy shit. What he wielded at will for decades returned as poison.

Seongjin gritted his teeth and tried to make his sword as plain as possible.

Fortunately, his tenacity to hold on to one thing shined through, and soon after, he was able to correct most of the pointed out habits. Of course, if he lost his guard even for a moment, his right arm would rotate without realizing it.

Marthain was satisfied.

"Originally, I was going to repeat movement 1 and movement 2 until we entered the Aura practice, but the prince is progressing faster than I thought. I don't think it would be too much trouble to go through a little bit of swordsmanship training."

And while learning the 3rd and 4th movements, Seongjin's bad habit was discovered again.

"Why do you pull the sword down toward your waist while performing a simple slanting up slash? Isn't this just too twisted with a sword to be a simple habit!"

Seongjin swallowed the tears inwardly.

All of these were things that came from beating the hard outer skin of monsters, but there was no way that Marthain would know his circumstances. In the end, he swung his wooden sword until his palm was grazed all over and corrected all of the pointed out habits.

Needless to say, Marthain was amazed.

"You seem to be a really gifted swordsman! It's not just a matter of sword talent. It's not easy to correct a habit even for knights who have risen to the heights, but Your Highness is tenaciously digging into it and eventually fixing it! Being devoted to one thing is one of the most important virtues for a prosecutor."

However, contrary to the comparatively rapid progress of swordsmanship, Aura practice training was strangely ineffective.

The Aura practice method begins by carefully refining the sense of Aura through meditation and then gradually applying its operation to the basic formula that is the basis.

It is said that there is a time gap of several days to several years depending on the talent in putting the operation into motion. If you succeed in weaving an Aura into one movement according to your will, then you can say that you have entered the practice.

However, it is said that in most cases, it does not take a few days to feel the Aura and begin to accumulate energy in the body in small amounts.

However, Seongjin hadn't felt any energy for almost a week.

After much thought, they tried doubling the meditation time.

"The Aura melts into every movement in the body. Now, let's start with breathing in and breathing out. The refreshing air when inhaling and the fine energy spreading in it spreads to the chest with a slight tickling feeling."

"....."

"Calm the mind and contemplate the inner self. Now, feel the Aura flow through your veins and into every nook and cranny of your body. It puts your mind at ease....."

Even Sir Marthain, who couldn't wait, tried something hypnotic!

"Hypnosis! I explained the process of absorbing the Aura in detail!"

He was very distressed.

"The prince tends to adapt to swordsmanship training fairly quickly, so maybe it would be a good idea to feel the flow while performing basic movements."

So they did.

"Now, that's just the motion. Can you feel a slight tickling sensation running down your arm at the end of that cut? The Aura rotates from the elbow to the wrist and from the inside to the outside."

"Yes, here you should have the feeling of hitting down from the knee and pushing up from the foot. Tap tap! Like that. Yes, tap tap! It feels like that. It is to make the lower body firmly fixed as the Aura flows in the opposite direction in succession."

To Seongjin, it sounded like bullshit.

Finally, the exhausted teacher and student collapsed onto the floor of the gymnasium helplessly.

Hey, Sir Marthain. Didn't you say you're really confident in one basic class?

"Well, it's a bit harsh for me to say this, but it seems to me that your sense of Aura is a bit dull."

Such an assessment finally came from the mouth of the amiable knight commander, who was trying to avoid pointing out Morres' lack of talent as much as possible.

"It took me twice as long as everyone else to get into the practice, but it took less than two days for me to feel Aura and start practicing."

Wow, Morres really was an Aura beyond imagination.

While Seongjin wrapped his head in frustration, Marthain looked up at the sky at the gymnasium with a little vague eyes.

"Thinking about it, it's understandable that you gave up swordsmanship when you were young. Lord Logan, who started the class together with you, succeeded in initiation in just one day, but Your Highness have not made any progress even after a year. It makes sense to get discouraged."

Sir Marthain. Can you stop beating people up for not being talented just because it's someone else's business?

Who is Logan by the way?

[That's your big brother. You rascal.]

The demon king, who was bored with nothing to do during training, said it was this time and gave the information he knew.

It turned out that the Holy Emperor had quite a lot of sons and daughters, as many as seven.

Logan, the third child and second prince among them, is the son of the empress, and he is the same age as Morres, a few months older than him.

However, this son seemed to be a great talent. He is said to have been gifted with powerful divine power as well as a genius who entered the practice in just one day.

It is said that his appearance resembles the Holy Emperor the most, so there are already many people in the public eyeing the second prince as the next prince and trying to line up.

Even his personality is in great shape. It is said that he is taking the initiative to lead the young paladins for the seawater subjugation.

'It's completely different from Morres.'

A fool who only eat and rolls around in a separate palace, having close to zero divine power.

A talented and good-natured young paladin who kills seawater¹ for the sake of his people.

It was a good target for comparison.

'If you think about it, Morres is quite pitiful.....'

As Seongjin was thinking while looking at the passing clouds, Marthain, who had been sitting down with his head down, suddenly stood up with his fists clenched.

"It can't go on like this. Your Highness! I think we need to take some special measures!"

".....?"

Seongjin looked up in puzzlement, and Marthain's eyes were burning as if he was prepared for something great.

"It is too early to give up. Here's something you haven't tried yet!"

Why not try sooner? Is it dangerous?

"It's okay. It was a method that helped me a lot when I was young and hit the wall of initiation."

"Well, if that's the case....."

"Then, could you give me your hand for a moment?"

Seongjin got up from his seat with a doubtful face and held out his hand.

"Believe me! I will definitely help you feel the sense of Aura!"

The face of Marthain, who emphasized his faith again while holding Seongjin's hand, was quite grim.

This is really unsettling.

T/N:

1. I'm guessing this is referring to some type of demon kind or just hostile enemies? I'll keep it as seawater until given more context.

16

"It is a completely different matter to adjust the Aura that naturally flows through the body as desired, and to let it flow out of the body."

Marthaine began to explain.

The two stood facing each other in the middle of the gymnasium. Seongjin's outstretched hand was supported by him with his left hand, and the middle and index fingers of his right hand were raised and placed on his wrist as if touching his pulse.

He calmly continued his explanation.

"Even if it's a small amount, expressing the outside air means putting that much strong will into the Aura. In other words, the Aura emitted to the outside cannot be mild at all, and inevitably exerts strong destructive power and influence on the outside."

"....."

"Especially, pouring outside air into another person's body is, in other words, no different from stabbing a sharpened blade into that body."

The longer his explanation goes on, the more Seongjin's anxiety grows.

Sir Marthain. Why are you explaining this in a way that makes it feel like you're about to spill an aura into someone else's hands?

"Of course, it is not impossible for those who are very skilled in the use of Aura to pass them on to others without any harm. Since the intention loaded into the Aura is free, the effect is also natural, and if you use it extremely delicately, it is possible to make others feel like your own Aura."

According to Lord Marthain, his uncle was at such a level.

He said that for his dull nephew, who could hardly get a feel for the operation of the Aura, he handed out the Aura from the outside and learned the changes one by one.

Of course, the young Marthain at the time didn't recognize at all that the process was so dangerous, he was just happy to make progress during training.

"I have a long way to go to reach my uncle's level, but I am also a high-ranking knight who's about to reach the level of Dekaron Knight. When it comes to the delicacy of Aura management, this body is one of the top spots among the knights. It will be absolutely safe, so don't worry too much, Your Highness."

No, wait a minute, then why is your expression so hardened?

Aren't you nervous, Sir Marthain? Right?

Seongjin asked in a cold sweat.

"That... So, if there are any mistakes along the way....."

"The body will be torn apart by the Aura."

Aaaaaagh! What are you trying to do to me? You're a grown man!

Fortunately, Seongjin's hands were not torn apart and covered in blood. As Sir Marthain had assured, he was a fairly advanced Aura user.

Through Marthain's fingers touching his wrist, he felt things like fine grains of sand tingling and running down his arms. It's a small amount, but it's a distinctly different energy.

After some time passed, Marthain stopped dripping his aura and wiped the sweat from his forehead. A look of exhaustion was evident on his face, as if he had consumed more mental energy than he thought.

"My level is low, so this is the limit. How did you feel?"

"It felt like sand was flowing in."

"Did you feel a different energy than usual?"

Seongjin nodded.

"Why can't I feel this certain energy at all by myself?"

Sir Marthain's face brightened. It was a minor achievement that was finally seen after several days of shoveling.

"Seeing that you even grasped the texture of the Aura I used, perhaps Your Highness' initiation is not too far away."

"Does it feel like this even if I use Aura in my own body?"

"When your aura actually flows, the feeling will be a little different. weaker and softer... So, is it like the feeling of flowing water? Some people say that it is tingling like a weak cramp."

"Hmm....."

I started to guess what the feeling of the Aura that seemed to catch something floating was like.

So it's like that.

'It feels similar to strengthening the body by absorbing the spirit of a monster, doesn't it?'

Using the absorbed power to match muscle movements, block external impact, and weave it into a weapon to make it sharper.

These are the things Seongjin did in the past as naturally as breathing.

When he thought about it carefully, there were many similarities between the Aura operation of movement 1, which Marthain explained in detail, and the way Seongjin applied the monster's spirit to his muscles when he performed similar movements.

Contrary to Marthain's brightening, Seongjin's face darkened.

At first, he thought that Aura was a completely new quality of power, so its aspect would be completely different. So even if he didn't feel anything in his body, he just thought it was because he was dull.

However, if you think about it, it was Seongjin who had been fighting while assimilating foreign energy throughout his body for the past few decades. There was no way he would not notice the movement of such a distinctly different force.

Seongjin contemplates his body condition again, but he still doesn't feel any foreign energy.

This means one thing.

It was that there was a more fundamental problem with Morres' inability to use Aura.

* * *

Can there be a person without a single Aura in his body?

Anyone who has learned even a little bit of Aura practice will categorically say that this cannot be the case.

This world was very rich in the flow of energy, which is the basis of Aura.

Ordinary people could also faintly feel the flow of energy flowing from the air to and from the body if they put in a little effort. It was a different matter to store or operate this energy as an Aura inside the body.

Auras occur naturally in the human body, albeit in extremely small amounts. Although it is a small amount, it is continuously produced in the body in an amount that can be noticed by those who are sensitive.

In other words, fundamentally, there can never be a person whose Aura concentration is close to zero.

[Could it be an illusion? Wasn't it really just a fleeting moment when you felt that power?]

The demon king murmured.

[Aura is a power that is unfamiliar to me. No matter how low I am, there is no way that I, the king of demons, cannot distinguish between demonic spirit and aura.]

'Hmm.....'

[Occasionally, when I saw your dedicated lady-in-waiting, it just felt like she was wielding a little stronger vitality. Okay? Demonic energy and Aura are fundamentally different powers.]

Seongjin came out of the training ground after the morning training and was walking in the garden of the Pearl Palace.

Originally, it was time to take a shower and go to the palace to have lunch, but now he didn't feel like it. He didn't consume much physical strength because he had to come to most of the morning training and skip the exercises, and he didn't sweat much either.

Above all, today is the first time in a week that he has an audience with the Holy Emperor.

He had pushed away Queen Elizabeth and her ladies-in-waiting, who had been in a frenzy since morning, under the pretext of not being able to miss training with a teacher sent by His Majesty himself.

If you go in now, it's obvious that there will be a fuss because they don't have time to eat anyway, and you're caught by them and grooming yourself.

Let's run away.

Seongjin, who made that decision, came out of the Pearl Palace and started to walk aimlessly along the long tree-lined road outside the palace.

[That's why even if you're used to feeling the monster's spirit, it might not help you feel the Aura.]

'Why is that? Is it the same as absorbing energy from the outside and building and managing it?'

[Are the alien Aura of creatures from other worlds the same as the original Aura of creatures in this world? Did you say Aura is a force close to the source of life force.]

'Then let me ask you one thing. Does Morres' body have that life force you felt?'

[That.....]

The Demon King hesitated for a moment.

[Very... It's rare, but isn't that because it hasn't been long since he woke up from a hospital bed?]

'... As expected.'

Seongjin's suspicion gradually grew closer to certainty.

It wasn't that Morres was insensitive to Aura, but that in fact, he might not even have the slightest perceptible aura on his body.

He stopped walking and was lost in thought.

'Then what should I do now?'

After all, Seongjin didn't have to risk his life for Aura. He started exercising because of his health. The world isn't in danger like before.

In addition, he became the noble status of a prince. Even if he doesn't become an Aura user, he can spend the rest of his life comfortably.

But.

For some reason, he really wanted to learn.

It looks fun.

Once he started, he wants to see it to the end anyway.

In Seongjin's eyes, the spark of courtesy that used to appear every time he was stabbed was quietly burning.

He organized his thoughts.

The first thing that comes to mind is to find someone who has mastered the Aura and have his current status confirmed. Knowing the cause will help him find a solution.

However, since even a person as strong as Sir Marthain was not aware of Morres' condition, at least someone stronger than him was needed. Yes, a person Marthain said was about the level of his uncle.

A person who is proficient in using Aura and knows other people's bodies well enough to freely spill their Aura on other people's bodies.

But where can you find such a person.....

"Ah.....!"

Seongjin blinked his eyes.

There was someone.

A person with a very high level of Aura, who seems to be able to answer well when SeongJin asks.

Someone who seems to somehow solve it if you ask for help.

When he looks up, he sees the familiar Imperial Palace Road at the end of the tree-lined road. Probably, if you follow that road in a straight line, you will pass the wide imperial garden and come to the main palace.

I have an appointment today anyway, and it's a little early.

'... Shall we go?'

[Hey, hey..... Why are you going in this direction? Hey, where are you going?]

Ignoring the demon king's uneasy trembling, Seongjin started to walk toward the main street with strides, following his memory.

Fortunately, he didn't get lost. Was it just that it was farther than expected?

When Morres appeared at the entrance of the main palace in informal casual clothes and with a wooden sword at his waist, the knights of the imperial guard who stood guard were very bewildered. However, they quickly correct their expressions and slam their swords on the floor, lowering their heads.

"We greet the Third Prince!"

As expected, the knights of the Royal Guard are different. Seongjin smiled happily and asked a knight for guidance.

Even the demon lord didn't complain that his soul is dying under the pressure of divine energy like before. Although he was just crouching down with his mouth shut because he was just tight.

Occasionally high-ranking priests in fancy robes and tall hats passed by the Seongjin, but they, too, took no notice and stepped aside to give a short bow. Seongjin, who confirmed that the barrier made by the Holy Emperor was working properly, walked inside the main palace without hesitation.

At the end of the hallway on the second floor, several administrators and priests were speeding back and forth carrying bundles of papers.

'Is it a busy time?'

The door to the office was wide open for people to come and go.

I sneaked a peek inside and saw several priests arranging papers stacked on the table with quick fingers. Chief Chamberlain Louis and three young administrative officers lined up on either side of the Holy Emperor's desk.

The Holy Emperor was sitting at his desk in a comfortable outfit, scribbling something on a document, but soon noticed Seongjin's gaze and raised his head. He still had a cold face, not knowing what he was thinking.

"Your Highness Morres!"

Following the Holy Emperor's eyesight, the chief chamberlain looked back at Morres and was delighted. In an instant, everyone in the office stopped working and bowed in unison.

"We greet the Third Prince!"

Seongjin smiled at them.

"Um, did I come a little early? Uh... If you're busy, please continue your work."

The Holy Emperor stared blankly at Seongjin for a moment, then, without looking back, waved his left hand and gestured.

"Dorian."

A fragile-looking young man standing near the desk holding a pile of papers approaches him with a bewildered expression.

The Holy Emperor put down his pen and stood up, throwing something that looked like a large stamp into his bosom.

"This is a jade chain. Leave the papers on the left aside for now, and take care of everything else."

"Ye... Yes?"

"Turn it all over to the executive secretary in the morning."

The face of the official called Dorian turned pale.

Before he knew it, the chief chamberlain was approaching the Holy Emperor, holding a white robe. The Holy Emperor asked in a nonchalant tone while accepting his attendant and slipping the sleeve of his robe roughly on his arm.

"What about lunch?"

"... I came straight from the gymnasium, so I haven't....."

Seongjin, realizing a moment late that this was a question he was asking himself, answered, and the Holy Emperor turned to Louis and gave instructions.

"I'll be in the backyard with Morris."

"Yes, I will prepare as you said. Your Majesty."

The chief chamberlain bowed his head politely.

The Holy Emperor, who strode out to the entrance without even adjusting his collar, passed Seongjin and gave a small glance.

"Let's go."

Hey, Your Majesty? Father?

It must be a mistake that you seem like you're running away, right?

Ignoring the young administrative officer's earnest gaze, Seongjin turned and followed him. They continued walking down the hallway on the second floor at high speed.

"Can you leave what you're doing? You seemed to be very busy."

Seongjin asked, but the Holy Emperor did not answer right away. Behind him as he steps forward without hesitation, the hem of the white robe flutters and casts soft light.

"... Keep in mind, son."

He was trying to keep up with the stride and follow him, but when he reached the other end of the hallway, the Holy Emperor suddenly opened his mouth.

"National affairs is like a gigantic clockwork that goes back and forth without any deviation."

"Clockwork?"¹

What is this man talking about all of a sudden?

Seongjin was dumbfounded and looked up at the back of his head.

"Yes. What would happen if you tampered with the elaborate clock mechanism?"

"Uh... Will it break?"

"Exactly so."

Seongjin tilted his head and asked.

"That means....."

"This is how to govern a country."

"A country."1

"That's right. It will suffice for you to put competent subjects in their places, and simply let them function properly."

"....."

He was a guy who spoke very grandiosely about skipping.

b

1. In both these sentences Seongjin was so taken aback he forgot to speak in formal speech so he stuttered and added a '-요' to fix his mistakes lol.

17

The place where they arrived to after following the Holy Emperor was a one where the word backyard was put to shame.

No, can he even dare call this place a garden?

Just in the middle of a wide open green lawn, sparse garden trees stand as if they sprouted in a drought. Even that is a meager number that can be counted on one hand.

What is this desolate backyard? Is it a soccer field?

The Holy Emperor, who managed to notice Seongjin's bewildered gaze, said.

"Sometimes this place is used instead of a gymnasium."

Indeed. Next time, he'll ask him to look at his swordsmanship here.

In the middle of the lawn, there was a small table that was too small to be called a dining table.

As the two settle down, the servants of the main palace come out belatedly and prepare a simple meal on the table. Seongjin had planned to skip lunch, but when he saw the neatly prepared food, he felt hungry for no reason.

The two started eating without saying anything.

"Hasn't there been much progress in training?"

Seongjin, who was eagerly chewing and swallowing a piece of meat, looked at the Holy Emperor in surprise.

This guy was like a ghost.¹

He went on nonchalantly, putting the knife down on an untouched plate.

"Several days have passed since the skilled knight commander was sent, but you haven't even formed an Aura core, let alone pile up layers."

Seongjin blinked his eyes. It was because he thought that the Holy Emperor's words were strangely specific.

Sir Marthain and Doctor Ninnias simply said that his aura activity was weak, but why does this guy seem to have a fairly detailed grasp of the level of energy in his body?

Maybe this is it.

"Apart from indirectly guessing through Aura initiation, is there a way to know exactly what level of Aura someone else has accumulated?"

"It's usually hard to tell unless you deliberately show it outside, but....."

"....."

"It is not that there is no way at all."

Seongjin grinned and showed his teeth.

He was certain that he had come to the right person.

"Yes, Marthain did such a trick."

When he talked about the recent training situation, the Holy Emperor slightly raised the corner of his mouth. Whether it's a smile or a sneer, it's an ambiguous response.

"The approach was not bad. And then?"

"Yes, rather than progress, I think I got a clue."

"A clue."

"That's right."

Seongjin wiped his mouth with a napkin and looked at the Holy Emperor for a while, then tilted his head slightly toward him and said quietly.

"That... Father. People say that my Aura is bizarrely thin. So, for some reason, I suspect that the Aura inside my body has already been depleted."

"....."

"Of course, just in case. Are there any constitutions in the world that do not accumulate Aura?"

He thought it would be a relief if he didn't get scolded for saying things that weren't trivial in his heart. However, the Holy Emperor's reaction upon hearing that was surprising.

His eyes widen a little, then narrow slightly. Soon after, his eyebrows frowned a little, then he put his hands on his chin. Then he lowered his eyes and began to ponder something.

Wow, this is the first time he's seen such a big change in expression.

This man is on to something!

Seongjin unknowingly swallowed his saliva and watched his actions.

"Hmm....."

The Holy Emperor was immersed in thought for a while, and then gestured toward the chief chamberlain.

"Louis."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"Clear the place for a while."

Louis bowed his head politely, and the table was cleared in an instant. Surprisingly, in less than 5 minutes, the nearby workers had completely disappeared.

The Holy Emperor was silent for a while as he gazed at the whole view of the back garden. Seongjin couldn't stand it and was about to open his mouth, but the Holy Emperor turned his head and met his gaze.

"The person who looked like he was going to be able to use his aura right now is making no progress, so I just wondered if his laziness disease had flared up again."

Yes? Is that what you're thinking about?

"But after hearing what you said, it dawned on me that there were other possibilities. I'll have to check that out."

"Eh?"

Another possibility?

"Hand."

The Holy Emperor said, as he put his hand on the table. Seongjin momentarily realized that he was going to use a method similar to what Marthain did.

When he put his hand on the table, the Holy Emperor lightly wrapped his hand around Seongjin's wrist.

"This is not a simple awakening of the senses, but a test to know for sure the whereabouts of the Aura. Unlike what Marthain did, don't be too surprised because you might suddenly get a lot of Aura."

Seongjin swallowed and nodded.

At the same time, a cool sensation began to run down his arm from the wrists that were touching.

'... Oh?'

It was literally like flowing water. A far more powerful sensation than Marthain's Aura spreads through the entire arm in a refreshing way without any tingling stimulation.

Is this the feeling of flowing his own Aura that Masain explained and Seongjin imagined? It's comfortable, so somehow it feels like even the arm muscles that were knotted up in the recent swordsmanship class are completely relaxed.

Seongjin opened his mouth in a strange feeling and admired it, but soon the sense of Aura from his wrist was cut off.

"I stopped just now. Examine the flow of the remaining Aura."

At those words, he woke up and tried to observe the flow of the Aura. However, the effort was not rewarded, and the sense of Aura gradually faded and disappeared completely after passing the shoulder.

"Uh, I don't feel it now."

Seongjin tilted her head and said. He thought it was a fairly large amount of Aura, but it disappeared without a trace like this?

However, the Holy Emperor's expression became quite serious.

"Your guess is correct. The Aura has completely disappeared. It's leaking somewhere."

"It's leaking?"

The Holy Emperor was looking at Seongjin's chest. As if Aura was leaking from there.

Just in case, he wonders if this man can see Aura?

While looking at him with suspicious eyes, the Holy Emperor started pouring Aura again.

The flow of water, more intense than before, climbed up his arm. It was a very large amount, but strangely, there was no strain on the body at all. The cool stream of water passes through the elbow, passes through the shoulder, fades, and flows through the chest... What?

The Holy Emperor tried to push more and more Aura, but it couldn't get past the chest and disappeared.

This time, Seongjin could definitely feel it. So, closer to the back, rather than the chest.....

"It's a scar."

A scar?

After saying something incomprehensible, the Holy Emperor let go of Seongjin's arm and rubbed his chin, thinking again.

Even though he operated his aura like that, he didn't look tired in the slightest. He felt sorry for comparing him to Marthain all the time, but it was definitely on a different level from him.

After much time has passed the Holy Emperor began to explain as if he had completely organized his thoughts.

"There is definitely something like a passageway in your body, and I went there and confirmed that everything went out. So, no matter how hard I tried, the Aura wouldn't gather in your body. It is unknown when the passage started and where it leads."

"Uh....."

Suddenly it became a fantasy. Although this is a different world.

Passage? Passage in the body?

The Holy Emperor continued talking to Seongjin, who was taken aback.

This is not a physical passage, but a spiritual passage through which Aura-like energy or soul flows.

The passage must be open in both directions, but it is a little strange that the energy escapes only from Morres' body.

Since this does not normally happen in the body of an ordinary person, he speculates that it may have something to do with Morres' resurrection from the dead.

It was a very absurd thing, but Seongjin was not without a guess.

'Could it be that my soul came here because Morres had that passage?'

If so, he can naturally guess where the passage is connected.

Sigurd District 34 or Gehena, where the demon king said was a lower dimension.

This is Seongjin's original world.

"You have two options."

As Seongjin's mind became complicated, the Holy Emperor continued his explanation.

First, to wait for the passage in the body to close.

Since this phenomenon is not normal, there is also a possibility that it will close naturally as the body recovers. Of course, the odds were slim.

Moreover, even if it is closed, it is unknown how long it will last, and you may have to live without Aura for the rest of your life.

Second, fill the passage with water to keep it from leaking further.

If the passage is empty and the Aura is leaking out, then fill it completely with Aura. Even if there is a hole in the dock, if it is full of water, the water will no longer leak because of the water pressure.

"Something like that... Is it possible?"

To Seongjin, it sounded like he was about to pour water into the open sea.

"Fortunately, the passage isn't that big, so I guess I can try it on the edge. I have done something similar before."

"Are there other cases like this?"

"There are. Of course it's not that common. I have seen two so far."

Two people? It's not common, but I wouldn't say it's very rare, right?

As Seongjin opened his mouth wide, the Holy Emperor continued.

"The reason I explain these options to you is that any choice carries some risk."

First, if the aisle is left as it is, there's a possibility that the aisle will widen rather than close.

It is said that when a person with a passage is under extreme stress or under spiritual pressure, the passage may suddenly run out of control. One of the two people the Holy Emperor saw was such a case.

It is said that the runaway passage is no longer limited to spiritual things, but becomes an ant hell that affects even the physical reality. There was a time when an entire nearby village was sucked into that wide passage.

What is it, it's not even a wind hole in the palm of your hand, is that a black hole?

"Isn't it a big deal then? If that happens, what should I do?"

"We need to get rid of the entrance to the aisle. At that time, I closed it myself."

The Holy Emperor's eyes are cold as he answers.

Seongjin felt chills run down his spine as he seemed to know how he closed it without asking.

"Then isn't there no other choice? Rather than risk becoming a walking disaster, I should take the second option!"

As long as I can block it by filling the passage, I don't think there's a better way than that.

However, the Holy Emperor paused for a moment while looking at the panoramic view, and then suddenly asked Seongjin a strange question.

"Do you know what priming water is?"

"Yes?"

When he asked back with a bewildered face at the unexpected question, he kindly continued his explanation.

"It is a method used by people in the mountainous regions of the west to water for farming. When there is a drought, the people there install something like a small waterwheel with a thin water canal connected from the bottom to the top. You put it on a pulley and turn it quickly to pump the water up."

Suddenly, the topic of farming came up. However, Seongjin listened in silence.

Because he thought that the Holy Emperor wouldn't say something like this for no reason.

"Sometimes, however, if the slope is too high, no matter how fast the pulley rotates, the water will not flow back. Do you know what they do at such times? Pour water into the aqueduct beforehand."

"....."

"In order to draw water, it is to first fill the empty canal with water. That is the priming water."

It seemed that he gradually knew what the Holy Emperor wanted to say.

In other words, the priming water is not that different from filling the passage with Aura.

"Then, the danger you mentioned is....."

"It's good that you understand quickly."

The Holy Emperor's eyes widen as he gazes at Seongjin. The strangely cold gray eyes looked like the blade of a sharpened sword.

"Until the pulley turns, there will be no problems. But, if you try to pull the water in the canal."

"....."

"Whatever is on the other side of the passage, it will easily be pulled this way too."

The demon king's soul, which had been silent and crouched until now, suddenly trembled.

Seongjin's world perished with Gehenna.

Maybe there are a few survivors. However, he doesn't think it's a number that's enough to continue the species.

There was nothing left of the infrastructure that could serve as a foundation for mankind. Nothing would grow on the land polluted by the corpses of monsters.

Moreover, even if mankind luckily avoids destruction, after the death of the demon king, the Earth will be swept away by the collapsing Gehenna and one day completely disappear.

What on earth remains there, and can it come over to this world?

After organizing his thoughts for a while, Seongjin soon made up his mind.

T/N:

1. A saying that basically means someone somehow knows what the other person is thinking or have supernatural powers that only ghosts have.

18

Seongjin stood in the center of the back garden with the Holy Emperor.

Either way, there is only one choice. Blocking the passage even temporarily to block the possibility of congestion. As long as he doesn't deliberately touch the blocked aura, he'll be safe forever. There was no room for worry.

The Holy Emperor gently pressed the lower part of Seongjin's right collarbone with the palm of his hand. Probably the closest location to the open passage.

"If the flowing flow of Aura is strong, breathing may be a little difficult. However, keep in mind that it is only an illusion caused by the flow of aura, not bodily sensations."

Seongjin nodded, trying to hide his tension.

"Let's begin."

Suddenly, a large stream of water poured into his chest. It was a surprisingly large amount, but it was still a refreshing flow that did not burden the body.

The stream of water hovers near the chest and then hisses under the right shoulder blade before disappearing.

That's the passage. For Seongjin, the position that had been ambiguous until now was now clearly felt.

The amount of Aura starts to increase little by little. As soon as it disappears into the passage, it fills the chest again.

However, it was still lacking. All the Aura that was still pouring in was clearly sucked through the passage.

"Hup."

Seongjin controlled his breathing, trying hard not to breathe as much as possible.

Even though there is actually no restriction on breathing, the feeling of water filling his lungs somehow made his chest feel stuffy.

Whoosh. His breathing is getting heavier, but his hair sways lightly as wind swirls around the back garden.

'How long will this go on?'

Suddenly, Seongjin became curious. No matter how successful an Aura user is, as long as he is a human, there must be a limit to the Aura stored in his body.

However, the volume of input shows no sign of ending at all. The passage was still sucking in every sip of Aura, and the amount of Aura flowing in was still increasing.

A little worried that he might be overdoing it, he glanced at the Holy Emperor, but he still looked down at his hand with a normal face.

Or, perhaps, he is staring somewhere beyond Seongjin's chest, somewhere in the invisible passage.

Splash.

There was an illusion that he could hear the sound of the waterfall pouring in his ears. The amount of influx of Aura is so large that confusion arises in the senses.

Now, rather than water pouring into his body, it felt like his body was crawling into the river.

'I'm out of breath.....'

He was constantly holding my breath so that he wouldn't hyperventilate just in case, but he heard the demon lord muttering in his head.

[This, this is crazy. There's no way this is possible for humans.....]

'I also think it's insane.'

Trying to forget his increasingly painful breathing, Seongjin looked away. But a strange sight came into his eyes.

He heard that the wind around them was getting stronger little by little from earlier, but when he looked closely, the wind was swirling around them in a circle. The grass on the floor lay on its right side and rose above the ground.

The long robe worn by the Holy Emperor also floated in the air on the wind. It was as if the whole air around them was rising.

The flying hair mercilessly hit his face, and the grass stalks that flew here and there whirled around, and then soared into the air in a counterclockwise direction.

For a moment, a possibility popped into Seongjin's mind.

How can the Holy Emperor continuously pour out Aura that far exceeds the amount that one human being can accumulate.

'No way, this guy. Is he pulling the Aura around us now?'

They were literally the eye of a typhoon.

The garden trees that were a little further away swayed as if they would soon break in the strong wind. Even so, the grass of the support that was empty is starting to be pulled out. The small table where they had eaten until earlier was blown away weakly by the wind and tossed into the corner of the back garden.

'Anyway, I think this is a bit dangerous.....'

Seongjin, who was breaking into a cold sweat at the chaos around him, rolled his eyes and looked back at the Holy Emperor.

This guy, too, closed his eyes and furrowed his brow, as if he was feeling a little tired now. He feels a slight trembling in the hand touching his chest.

And yet, the rushing torrent is still getting stronger!

The demon king screamed in his head.

[Oh crazy! He's thinking of pouring more here!]

Rumble rumble!

A handful of garden trees were broken and thrown to the ground, and the small table that had been bent on one side bounced around and soared into the air.

They were now in the stormy sea. He felt his body being pushed backwards by the strong waves, and his breath caught in his throat.

He can't keep to his senses. In an instant, Seongjin's spirit was being swept away by a fierce current.

[Kuaaaaaaaaaaaaaa!]

When he heard the screams of the demon king, it went away in an instant.

And it went dark before my eyes.

* * *

"... Huh?"

Marthain, who was beating the resident knights of the Pearl Palace in the middle of the drill hall, quickly raised his head and frowned.

Suddenly, the wind was blowing strong, but the Aura in the air was shaking like crazy.

"Is it the main palace? no way....."

He glanced at the resident knights, who were exhausted with spirit, and then turned around and started running toward the main palace.

* * *

Crash!

Suddenly, the prayer room door was opened violently, and the paladins who were standing on the alert were startled and corrected their posture.

Katrina, the leader of the Knights of Saint Aurelion, who had just been in private prayer, strode out with a stiff face and began putting on the short armor.

"What about the lieutenant?"

The knight, flustered by her behavior, who seldom violated the prayer time, replied a beat late.

"Sir Francis is now at the academy. Regarding the relic....."

"Well, okay. If he feels something, he'll catch up."

She kicked the sword belt with one last click and pointed at the door with the tip of her chin.

"I'm going to the main palace right now. You guys follow me."

* * *

"What the hell is this, chamberlain!"

Balthazar, the commander of the 1st Knight of the Imperial Guards, rushed to the support with fearsome momentum, howled.

Suddenly, all the Aura in the air seemed to be swept away somewhere, and then a storm came down on the back garden of the main palace. It was a whirlpool of Aura that was colossal to look at.

In the fierce momentum of trees being pulled and blown away, the servants are gathered at the edge of the storm, unable to do this or that, and are only stomping their feet.

What kind of lightning strike is this all of a sudden in the peaceful imperial palace!

In Balthazar's opinion, only the Holy Emperor himself could perform such feats on all continents.

So, he grabbed the person who was most likely to know the whole story and started to shake him.

"What the hell is he doing again? Come on, answer me!"

But Louis, who was caught by the collar, was muttering while looking at the storm with a dazed face.

"Over, over there..... Over there His Majesty the Holy Emperor, His Majesty and Prince Morres....."

"Even Prince Morres?"

The strength in the grip of the old knight, who was strong, was drained. In a situation where even the young prince was involved, he thought that this would never be what the Holy Emperor intended.

Balthazar looked back at the storm, and for the first time there was a light of nervousness in Balthazar's eyes.

* * *

Crackle crackle.

With the sound of burning flames in the background, he slowly moved.

A mess of broken wooden fences, torn down barracks, and overturned military trucks.

And all around are covered with corpses.

The corpses of comrades strewn with monsters here and there.

This place is definitely a place in Seongjin's memory.

The place where the superhuman unit, who decided to fight for the last time, left with tears behind. The last outpost that was completely in ruins.

There was only one thing that was different from that time.

All of this was engulfed in a red fire that was not there at the time.

Crackle. The tree of the slanted wooden fence split open and fell to the floor scattering sparks.

Seongjin stopped walking and looked down at his hands and body.

Battle clothes and combat boots stained with blood and bodily fluids of monsters.

A scarred hand with a tattered bandage wrapped around it.

This is Lee Seongjin's usual appearance. But why does it feel so strange?

When he raised his head again and looked at the dark red flames covering the tent, the flames that danced here and there as if they were alive came slowly towards Seongjin.

As he put his hand to greet it, the flames were sucked in and stuck to his hand.

This heat. It's a familiar heat that he's experienced before. As he stared blankly at the burning hand, the flames crawled up his arm and began to spread.

The sleeves of the combat uniform are on fire, and the skin on the forearm is distorted.

And a calm voice was heard.

"It is indeed a flame that burns up even the soul."

Fwoosh.

Suddenly, a rush of cool air came from behind, and the flames were pushed out in an instant.

"No matter how much I pushed it, the heat hardly went away, so it was no wonder that the inside of the passage was completely burned and empty."

The dark red flames burned more and more fiercely and struggled, but they could not invade the border drawn round around Seongjin. All of a sudden, the flames that had spread to his body completely disappeared.

Surprised, Seongjin looked back and saw a man who should never be here standing with his arms crossed and looking this way.

An involuntary voice came out of his mouth.

"... Father?"

No, why is this man here?

"This is the story of when you had a fever. I wondered where this kind of fire came from, but it really is a flame from hell."

The Holy Emperor looked around for a while, then slowly approached Seongjin. As he gets closer, the flames are pushed a little further outward.

The light of the fire was reflected on the long white robe, giving off an unrealistic red sheen.

Coming closer, he was almost at eye level with Seongjin.

Like pouring cold water on the head, it gradually clears his head.

The Holy Emperor is in this world.

He sees the true nature of Seongjin.

He.....

"... Your Majesty... The Holy Emperor."

A suppressed sound escaped Seongjin's mouth. His own voice was full of fear that was difficult to explain.

At Seongjin's call, the Holy Emperor stared blankly at him for a moment, then tilted his head slightly to the side and answered. As if a little puzzled.

"Yes, Morres."

What?

"No, this... But....."

"You seem to need a bit more training, son, to be pushed all the way here without being able to withstand that level of Aura."

"Son... Um, Father?"

While he was stuttering in embarrassment, the Holy Emperor turned away from him and waved his hand.

"Open your eyes now, I'm a little tired too."

"Yes?"

That was the end.

Swoosh.

A strong stream of water rushed in from somewhere. In an instant, the scenery in front of his eyes disappears.

The ruined outpost.

Bodies filling the base.

The Flames of Gehenna struggling in red darkness.

Seongjin's spirit began to drift helplessly again.

[Morres.]

Like a dream, the voice of the Holy Emperor resonated in my brain.

[Keep in mind that when you pull water in a canal, things on the opposite side are drawn together.]

* * *

"...nce!"

"Lord Morres!"

He woke up to the sound of someone calling loudly.

As he blinked and focused for a moment, he saw a familiar gentle-faced knight smiling brightly.

"You're awake, Your Highness!"

"... Sir Marthain?"

For some reason, Seongjin was lying leaning on Marthain's arm.

He tried to get up, but he just gave up because of the spinning feeling. His whole body is languid, he has no energy.

"Ohh, Your Highness the Prince!"

"How fortunate!"

Looking around, he was surrounded by old knights and servants of the main palace, who had never seen him before. Only then did he slowly begin to remember the circumstances behind it.

Ah, we... completely blew away the main palace's back garden. There must have been an uproar.

"... How's Father?"

Yes, where is the person responsible for this accident?

At his question, Marthain and the old knight met eyes for a moment and then spoke to Seongjin.

"Relax, Your Highness. His Majesty will be safe."

"....."

Seongjin, who followed Marthain's gaze as he moved around unsteadily, found the Holy Emperor surrounded by another group of people from a little distance away.

He, too, was being supported by the knights of the Imperial Guards, but somehow his eyes were closed and his head hanging down as if he was completely unconscious.

A middle-aged woman in silver short armor is holding his hand and pouring divine power that shines white, while the chief chamberlain next to him hovers around restlessly.

The old knight, noticing Seongjin's gaze, spoke in a soft voice that did not suit him.

"Don't worry. He's just a little exhausted."

"... Okay."

Seongjin nodded.

It will be fine. He's a guy who pretended to be proud until the end.

Unknowingly, he put his hand on his chest where the passageway was.

It was as if he could hear the sound of water droplets splashing somewhere inside his body.

19

Night at the main palace came a little earlier than usual.

After the aura storm riot in which all of the back garden was destroyed, the people of the main palace were distracted by the aftermath for a while.

Above all, the Holy Emperor that was at the center of the storm has not yet awakened. The chief chamberlain busy calling for a priest and the imperial palace doctor, and dismissed most of the servants who are bustling at the palace to ensure sufficient rest for the Holy Emperor.

The main palace, with only a minimum of attendants and escort personnel, greeted an exceptionally quiet night that day.

A man in a black coverall penetrated the darkness.

The man who walked quietly through the hallway of the main palace, who was sleeping deeply, and avoided the guards who were on guard everywhere, and with familiar movements landed in the hall of the palace without a sound.

In the middle of the bed, where the moonlight streamed in through the window, drawing a long plaid pattern, the young Holy Emperor lay quietly with his eyes closed.

Considering that he usually noticed his approach like a ghost, it was very unusual. Maybe it won't happen again.

The man's footsteps headed towards the bed without a sound.

But he couldn't get any closer and had to stop. It was because a blue blade had touched his neck.

"Who do you dare to look at with such disloyal eyes?"

Francis Argen, lieutenant of the Knights of Saint Aurelion.

A paladin who was one head taller than an average person and had a sharp look was glaring fiercely at the intruder.

"....."

For a moment there was a chilling silence in the room.

"Francis."

Their confrontation was soon over.

The Holy Emperor sat up from his bed and was looking at them. It is a very normal face for the one that had been lying unconscious until now.

"Withdraw your sword. He is from the guild."

The young paladin stared at the man for a moment after hearing the order, but then sighed and drew back his sword. Freed from the threat, the guild's informant immediately knelt down and bowed his head toward the bed.

"Your Majesty."

"Report."

"I have identified their whereabouts. They are currently in a slash-and-burn village located at the end of the western mountain range, near the border of the Kingdom of Flandor. The guild identifies this village as bandits disguised as slash-and-burn villagers. It is said that after a subjugation order was issued in Rohan, a large number of bandits settled here along the western mountains."

The Holy Emperor slightly frowned.

"... Is it the border area with Asein?"

"That's right."

"What a coincidence."

The Kingdom of Flandor had been in minor local friction with the neighboring Dukedom of Carthage for as long as forty years. The fight that started over dowry has turned into a dispute over the rock salt mine near the border, and now only the insidious Archduke Asein has been reaping tangible benefits between them for decades.

Of course, even if they settle down, is it between Asein and Flandor? The anticipation was not very good.

The Holy Emperor was silent in thought. The guild's informant raised his head and stared at him for a moment, but then he lowered his head again at the command of the Holy Emperor.

"Further investigate the movements of the upper ranks between Flandor and Asein. Regarding the slashed-and-burn village, don't neglect monitoring for now and report any unusual issues immediately."

The informant bowed his head in the utmost respect, then disappeared as silently as when he appeared.

Francis, who briefly glared in the direction the man had disappeared, turned his head toward the Holy Emperor. A look of displeasure is evident on his face.

"That stealth isn't normal. Since when did assassins come and go in and out of the imperial palace like this?"

The Holy Emperor sat comfortably on the bed and waved his hands.

"He is a guild informant with whom I have known for quite some time. You don't have to be so nervous."

"You mean the one who sheds such a disrespectful look?"

"At least he's not an idiot who throws himself at the impossible."

The young paladin twisted one corner of his mouth.

"How can you be sure that is impossible? Is Your Majesty confident that you will not be hit by a knife under any circumstances, or that you will not die with a knife stabbing into your heart?"

It was both. However, the Holy Emperor also had a sense of limit that prevented him from uttering those words. Instead, he asked another question.

"What about Katrina?"

The leader of the Knights of Saint Aurelion was famous for going out of her way in whatever business regarding the Holy Emperor. If it were her, she would most likely have insisted on not leaving the side of the unconscious Holy Emperor.

As expected, Francis replied in a slightly annoyed tone.

"Then why did you do something that makes people worry? It hasn't been long since the captain changed shift with me. Stop making older people suffer."

Then he sat down on the sofa on the far side of the room and leaned his sword against the armrest. He opens the book he had closed in succession and raises his glasses.

It was a bizarre sight in the dark of the night, reading with an Aura.

After spending the night in this place, the uncomfortable Holy Emperor rubbed his chin and ordered.

"It's been hard you. Now go back and rest."

However, the arrogant lieutenant, who had gone against him to his face for nearly 10 years since his days as a squire, was too well aware of the timing when he could chew on the order of the Holy Emperor.¹

He turned over the page of the book and snorted.

"Am I doing this because I like to work all night? I'm tired of arguing with the academy president all day."

"That's right, it's okay now so....."

"It is the order of the captain. I have to switch with the captain tomorrow morning."

Through the glasses, Francis' sharp eyes emit a cool light.

"Instead, if I don't get a day off tomorrow, I swear to God I will resign."

* * *

Seongjin woke up to the sound of birds chirping in the garden of the Pearl Palace at the same time.

It was early in the morning, before the workers started working in earnest.

Usually, he jumped up as soon as he opened his eyes and started the day with stretching. Today, he just lay there looking at the sunlight coming in through the curtains with a blank face. Something felt strange.

It was an exhilaration that was difficult to describe.

The texture of the soft bedding that hugs the body feels coarse. Even the movement of each small piece of dust floating under the sunlight came with a strange sense of reality. Every time he inhale and exhale, the change in concentration of gases that permeate and exit each alveolus is vividly conveyed.

There's no way.

'Is this... Aura? Am I feeling Aura?'

Seongjin jumped up with excitement.

Finally!

He almost jumped off the bed and walked around the room barefoot, feeling strangely lighter than usual.

Seongjin, who was pulling up his pajama pants that were about to slip down at his movements, realized that his stomach circumference had suddenly shrunk noticeably.

'... Huh?'

He casually turned his head to look in the mirror.

There stood a rather well-groomed boy.

The contours of the face, which had been deeply buried in the flesh, are revealed, and the volume of the body is noticeably reduced. Although he was still chubby, he could be praised for looking healthy and not bloated like before.

He lost a little more weight, but most of all, he felt that his body was compressed and hardened. The skin, which showed signs of sagging due to rapid weight loss, was firmly attached.

His eye level also rose a bit, but rather than growing taller, it seemed as if his skeleton, which had been bent and twisted in a bad posture, had returned to normal. His shoulders were straight and his spine was upright even without straining to stand.

It is an overly dramatic change for something that happened in one day.

Seongjin, who possesses the knowledge of modern civilization, felt as if his knowledge of physics and physiology was denied at once.

All of this is just a change caused by the return of a depleted Aura? It was the moment when the theory of omnipotence was clearly embedded in his mind.

'Looking at it like this, there are parts that resemble the Holy Emperor.....'

Although his impression was a little fierce, resembling the beauty of Queen Elizabeth with her sharp eyes, his lower lip revealed as he lost weight and his mouth with delicate lines definitely resembled the Holy Emperor's.

He turned around and looked in the mirror in a strange mood when he heard a polite knock on the door.

"Did you cough, Your Highness?"

He saw Edith, bringing a new water bottle and a clean cloth as usual, enter the room with an unexpected person behind her.

"Sir Marthain?"

"How are you feeling, Your Highness? Do you feel uncomfortable anywhere?"

No, why are you here since morning when you are not a resident knight of the Pearl Palace?

The knight commander approached Seongjin with a polite smile.

"Well, yesterday was a mess, wasn't it? Inevitably, it seems necessary to reinforce the boundaries of the Pearl Palace for a day or so."

So, he said that he volunteered to stay overnight at the Pearl Palace, which was not his place of work.

"But wasn't Sir a knight of the Imperial Guard? Why didn't you stay by Father's side....."

"Is there even a place for me? Sir Katrina personally rolled up her sleeves. The main palace is probably guarded by the Holy Knights of Saint Aurelion."

Marthain also told me about the situation at the main palace.

The Holy Emperor, who woke up safely last night, is said to be completely back to normal this morning. Of course, he said he skipped the morning assembly on the pretext of poor physical condition.

Even this is nothing different from the usual, so there is nothing to worry about in the main palace.

"Don't worry, the guards aren't neglecting their duty. According to the manual in case of emergency, the alert is working without omission."

Are you really okay with that?

Well, in an emergency, shouldn't the head of the knights still show his face in the main palace? There are other people too.

"What is the problem? I am the leader."

Even the well-rounded knight commander, who held the discipline of the guards like a knife, had a looser corner than expected.

"Besides, there's no way something could happen to His Majesty the Holy Emperor."

"....."

Ah, that must have been why he stopped being a stickler for rules.²

Seongjin, who was about to head straight to the gymnasium after seeing Sir Marthain's face in the morning, ran into an unexpected difficulty.

Suddenly, the volume of the body was excessively reduced, and none of the clothes fit. No matter how tight the waist strap was, the moment he swung his wooden sword once, his pants almost slide down.

In an instant, all the servants of the Pearl Palace were mobilized for sewing.

Seongjin, who expected that this time he would come and learn the practice properly, was greatly disappointed. He was eating breakfast in a baggy nightgown, and Marthain said in a bright voice as if comforting him.

"But from now on, classes will be accelerated. You, too, have certainly felt Aura."

It seemed that he had some idea of what had changed in Seongjin's body.

"Does Sir Marthain sense the change too?"

"Of course. The flow of Aura around the prince has become quite active compared to yesterday. There must be something similar going on inside the body."

Ugh, I want to run to the gymnasium right now.

"Anyway, it's hard to understand from common sense."

Seongjin said with a sullen face as he rolled up his sleeves that kept slipping down the back of his hand.

"How can a person's body shrink like this in one day? Can this really be explained by Aura alone? Are all Aura users going through this?"

Among the resident knights of the Pearl Palace he encountered on his way back and forth, there were some quite fleshy ones. Of course, they must also be proficient Aura users.

Marthain smiled.

"Because Aura is effective in making the body healthy and restoring the damaged body. Aura users usually experience physical changes in a positive way."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. An Aura user who has attained this level does not get a cold, and does not even get cavities."

Wow. As expected, Auror is omnipotent.

"Of course, changes usually take place over a long period of time, and it is the first time I have seen a noticeable change in one day like the prince, but... .."

After saying that, Marthain smiled shyly and scratched his head.

"Well, wouldn't His Majesty the Holy Emperor know something and act well?"

"....."

It must have been that way that was out of common sense.

His Majesty the Holy Emperor taught Prince Morres something by using an aura.

It is said that His Majesty the Holy Emperor did something with aura, so that the prince lost weight and became healthy.

Rumors seemed to have spread in the imperial palace that way.

The servants who had gathered to mend the clothes were also startled when they saw Seongjin for the first time. In Seongjin's opinion, it was a strange thing, but everyone seemed to think that he had done something else, and it was a natural atmosphere.

Amelia, who had visited the Pearl Palace since morning, was surprised for a while, but then she just made a vague expression as if she was seeing something missing.

Even Queen Lizabeth was like that. Her son is completely different.

-Ah, how long has it been since you woke up from the sick bed... Such drastic teaching to such a weak child, I must say something to him today!

She just trembled with the corners of her eyes pointed upwards.

'His Majesty the Holy Emperor is a cheat key.....'

You guys, no matter how different the world is, don't you accepting it too hastily?

It was such a crazy morning.

It was when Seongjin received a set of clothes that had been hurriedly mended that he noticed the change.

While changing his clothes, he casually spoke to the demon lord.

'It's a job to live wearing only tailored clothes. If I lose more weight, I'll have to mend it again. right?'

But there was no answer coming back.

'... Hey? Demon King?'

Only then did Seongjin realize that he didn't feel the slightest sign of the demon king around him.

T/N:

1. Basically Francis here likes to talk back to Nate but he's still a loyal subordinate so he knows where the line is between what's okay and not. This time Nate told him to leave but he refused knowing Nate won't forcefully kick him out anyway.

2. 아, FM을 벗어난 건 그쪽이었구나. I'm not too sure what it means, just that FM seems to be someone who follows rules well (but not particularly in a good way). I tried to reword it to my understanding but as usual I could be wrong.

20

The demon king has disappeared. Since when?

It was too late to notice because he was intoxicated with the feeling that his whole body filled of Aura. Come to think of it, it seems that there has been no sign of him since morning.

There are often times when he was crouching down without saying anything, so even if it was quiet, he didn't think it was a big deal.

'Is it true that he hasn't been there since morning?'

How was last night. After being caught in a storm, he was brought back to the Pearl Palace while he was dreaming and fell asleep until morning.

Was the demon king there back then?

'Oh, wait a minute. When was the last time he spoke to me?'

Seongjin recalled the voice of the demon king who had been caught in the storm and screamed.

– Oh crazy! He's thinking of pouring more here!

– Kuaaaaaaaaaaaaaa!

Could it be that that was the last time?

Seongjin broke out in a cold sweat.

As expected, just as Seongjin's consciousness flew to Earth at that time, the demon king also flew to another world somewhere.

Or, although it's a hypothetical assumption, wouldn't it be possible that the soul of the insignificant demon king perished in that powerful storm?

If he's drifted away somewhere, where should he find him?

'But do I really need to find him?'

Since only the two of them flew to this world, they have their own sense of comradery, so they keep watching, but the two are originally implacable enemies. Wouldn't it be good for both of them if he disappear like this?

Seongjin, who thought for a moment with a hard face, stirred his hair wildly.

Oh, whatever. He said he couldn't leave this body, but if he survived, he'd be back soon.

* * *

Seongjin, who arrived at the gymnasium later than usual, was taken aback by the unexpected situation. It was because as soon as he entered the entrance, five or six of his knights rushed over and all at once put their hands on his chest and bowed his head.

"Greetings to the Third Prince!"

One voice booms. What's this? For a moment, he thought he was watching the main palace guards.

Seongjin rubbed his eyes and looked at them again, but there was no doubt that they were the resident knights of the Pearl Palace.

What did they eat wrong? Why are they suddenly like this?

"Your Highness! You've arrived!"

From the other side, Sir Marthain walks with a fresh face.

Seongjin, who instinctively realized that this change had something to do with that person, asked.

"Sir Marthain? What's with them?"

"Yes, Your Highness. Discipline is slack, so I did some mental training yesterday and today."

From now on, he'll take good care of them so that they can become someone who can help him by his side. Marthain added with a bright face, and the faces of the resident knights who were supporting each one turned dark.

Come to think of it, Seongjin also had something on his mind. When Sir Marthain appeared at the gymnasium, all the knights ran away with their backs.

He passed it on without much thought at the time, but it seems that Sir Marthain is more notorious among knights than he looks.

Seongjin looked at the resident knights with a little pity.

They were shameful people who dared to show only disrespect towards the prince, but their face is already turning black, no matter how much they have rolled over the past two days. Seeing that pitiful figure, I didn't even feel hatred.

"Hmm, Sir Marthain. You work for the main palace guards and even takes care of my swordsmanship, but isn't it too much to manage even the resident knight?"

However, Lord Marthain was adamant.

"Residents is recruited here and there, but belongs to the Imperial Guard. I have no tolerance for the discipline of those under my responsibility."

"Uh, yes....."

Seongjin shook his head excitedly at the resident knights whose eyes were slowly fading.

Wasn't that what you usually do well?

Once he started to feel the Aura, the class was a breeze.

Seongjin, who was meditating after listening to Marthain's detailed explanation on how to save energy, was able to create an Aura core the size of a millet near the lower abdomen.

The auras, which did not listen and escaped here and there even after trying to fix them, suddenly came together in a circle the moment they filled up a certain amount and found stability. It was still a small amount, but he could feel the Aura spinning a little more actively around the core.

'It's definitely a different quality from the spirit of a monster that spreads evenly throughout the body and is absorbed.....'

And before long, he was able to build up even the first layer of Aura around the core. It was more difficult to stabilize than the core, but eventually the Aura began to spin smoothly in the lower abdomen, creating a ball the size of a grape.

"It's really amazing that you can make all the layers in one go! It's hard to believe that you were lost before."

Most of all, it was Marthain who was delighted with his achievements.

"Now all that remains is to constantly build layers! Of course, the Aura is also stored in the muscles and skeleton, but this is a gradual change that occurs as a result of using the Aura for a long time. There's nothing more explosive than layering an Aura core."

You'll need at least three layers to properly weave into a swordsmanship movement, he added.

Seongjin, who was excited about the achievement he had made, was about to try to go up to the second layer, but Marthain shook his head.

"It will take a little longer to build the second layer. If the power required to make a core is one, and the power required to make the first layer is roughly three, then when building the next layer, at least close to 10 Auras must be gathered at once."

According to his explanation, much more Aura is required to offset the force of repulsion between layers than to form layers. As the layers pile up, this repulsive force increases exponentially.

Culmination of the body. When it comes to the level of the 10th layer knight, Dekaron Knight, the repulsive force alone reaches hundreds of times compared to the first layer.

"Therefore, it is necessary to meditate for a long time and practice using a much larger amount of Aura than now. It's fast enough even now, so take your time and proceed slowly."

So, Marthain added cautiously.

"I apologize for seeming to disturb you while you are engrossed in your practice, but if you have time, could you please visit the main palace for a while?"

According to him, all of the Holy Emperor's official schedules today have been canceled.

Of course, everyone knows that he is fine now, but it was still an incident in which the surroundings was destroyed and the Holy Emperor collapsed from exhaustion. It seems that it is good for others to see that the prince visits the hospital before it is too late.

Even so, the last thing he saw yesterday was him lying down unconscious, so he was a little worried. It's a bit of a burden to just visit without an appointment to see His Majesty the Holy Emperor.

When he said that, Marthain smiled.

"Perhaps important people have already visited the hospital. He got to skip his schedules with great energy, but he must have been unable to take a break because he was greeted by people he was not happy with. He'd be very happy if he could see the prince's face even for a moment."

Seongjin nodded obediently and held out a wooden sword to Marthain.

There would be plenty of time to practice in the future. At least, isn't it all thanks to the Holy Emperor that came to be possible?

When he was still concentrating his mind on his chest, I still felt like something was shaking.

However, Marthain's face as he accepted the wooden sword was a little strange.

The eyes that were round from laughing are gradually distorted, and the corners of the mouth that used to draw a smile tremble.

What, why are you like that all of a sudden?

"I don't think the day will come when the two of us can live like this again....."

".....?"

Marthain, who had swallowed his words as if he was laughing or distorted, turned around before Seongjin could ask. Then he pointed out two of the resident knights waiting by his side.

"You and you! Escort His Highness to the main palace. The rest will go round the gymnasium from now on!"

Yeesss?

As the knights' faces turned pale, Marthain yelled.

"You sent the prince to the main palace alone yesterday without an escort? Can you guys still be called the proud Guards of Delcross! From now on, I'll rip off that poor mental head and fix it!"

Uaaaaaahhh.

Hearing the desperate screams of the knights, Seongjin quietly conveyed his condolences.

* * *

The Holy Emperor was receiving all the visitors in the drawing room attached to the bedroom.

By the time Seongjin arrived, there were already visitors in the parlor.

"Oh, Prince Morres! How can you be so devoted! The future of the Holy Empire seems to be in blissful brilliance!"

Chief Chamberlain Louis gave a grandiose compliment and then gave a sneaky hint.

"... Her Majesty the Empress is currently inside."

When the Holy Emperor was absent from his duties, Louis explained, Empress Tatiana would usually fill in for him on official occasions.

As he approached the open drawing room entrance, he heard the sound of quiet conversation.

"... how about... Rohan's... protest....."

"... informal... one by one... required....."

"... possess a problem... until the birthday... careful....."

Louis politely knocked on the open parlor door.

"Your Majesty the Holy Emperor, Your Majesty the Empress. Prince Morres ate it."

The two of them, sitting on the sofa and drinking tea, looked back at Seongjin at the same time.

"Oh my!"

The first to respond was the Empress.

She opened her eyes wide, then covered her mouth with her hand and smiled softly. Even if it wasn't, her slightly drooping eyes gently curved.

"Prince! In the time I haven't seen you for a while, you've become very wonderful. How happy Elizabeth will be!"

Clatter. Afterwards, the Holy Emperor puts down the teacup with a slightly harsh sound.

There didn't seem to be any major changes in his expression other than his slightly widened eyes, but Seongjin's sharp eyes noticed the slightly trembling pupils.

Hold on a second?

What are you so surprised about?

As he looked at him with a puzzled look on his face, feeling betrayed for some reason, the Empress stood up with a smile on her face.

"This... I guess I was holding on to the sick person too carelessly with business as an excuse. I will get going, so you two have a good time."

"Then take care on the way back, Tatiana."

"Yes, Your Majesty. Please do not forget that the birthday is near."

Then, with graceful movements like flowing water, she gently approaches Seongjin.

She was a tall, crane-like beauty. With an inertial eye smile on the corners of her waterdrop-like eyes, the Empress lowered her head toward Seongjin and whispered.

"It makes me very happy to see the prince in such good health again. How great was His Majesty's concern so far. That's right, I hear you've got a little trouble with your memory, right?"

"Yes, what....."

He didn't know the proper response, so he just answered with a sullen face, and the Empress gently raised the corner of her mouth.

"Prince, don't dwell on it and be respectful. Everyone will be happy just letting go of the past."

".....?"

He doesn't know what she wants to say, but why does it feel like he's being turned around?

As Seongjin frowned involuntarily at the unknown displeasure, the Empress took a step back from him and smiled harmlessly.

"Then, I will leave."

She caught a glimpse of the Holy Emperor's eyes, which somehow became cold, bowed gracefully, and left the drawing room.

"....."

"Sit down."

The Holy Emperor pointed at the sofa across him with the tip of his chin. Seongjin slumped back in his seat, leaving behind his slightly uneasy feelings toward the Empress.

"You're busy, but didn't I interrupt you for nothing?"

"No, it was just fine. There will be no audience or official schedule for the time being from tomorrow, so it will be hard to see your face for a while."

"Yes? Could it be that you need long-term care?"

He looks fine to him.

While Seongjin was puzzled, the Holy Emperor shook his head.

"I plan to enter the prayer room soon. I just handed over the work a little earlier."

"The prayer room?"

"... That's something you don't remember."

According to the Holy Emperor, he sometimes had to leave for days to pray.

In the meantime, the official schedule was given to the Empress, and the cardinals who were in charge of the council's chairman and the executive department were delegated their respective powers before closing.

In the depths of the main palace, there is a huge prayer room that only the Holy Emperor can enter, and it is said that the door is sealed by the Order of the Holy Knights so that no one can enter or leave while he is inside.

They did say that this is a theocratic country, and the head of the country even does closed prayers.

Seongjin, who was close to an atheist even in the previous world, had no choice but to ask this without realizing it.

"Pray for what? For the Empire? Does that even work?"

He wondered if it was a bit of a celibate question to ask the Holy Emperor, who is said to be the representative of the Main God, but his answer was unexpectedly cool.

"At least people won't believe that."

So it's an official excuse to loaf around.

No wonder the Holy Emperor, dressed comfortably and holding a teacup, looked somewhat relaxed. There is no court uniform, which was always worn in an assortment of colors, so it feels like he was on vacation.

"By the way, it seems that you have finally made progress in your practice. Is it still on the first layer?"

Seongjin, realizing that the Holy Emperor's eyes were on his lower abdomen, was certain.

This human, it seems that he really comes and sees something.

"Yes, thanks to Father, I finally made my Aura layer. So, I have a question for you."

"What are you curious about."

"Yes, what the hell happened to my body?"

A change close to metamorphosis that cannot be explained simply by forming Aura. At least, Seongjin had no doubt that the incident yesterday had had a profound impact.

"Hmm....."

The Holy Emperor slightly averted his gaze.

"It's not that I don't have any guesses....."

A slurred expression is a rare expression of lack of confidence.

"As you know, Aura has the property of restoring the human body and transforming the body into an ideal form."

Seongjin had also heard sufficient explanations from Marthain. When Aura flows through the body, the body changes in a positive direction.

Didn't he just say that it was a gradual change over the course of a lifetime?

"It's more likely a matter of total amount of Aura than a matter of time."

According to his explanation, it was. Even if you use your Aura every day, there will always be a limit to the amount that your body can absorb and use throughout your life. This means that if a sufficient amount of Aura is supplied, the change in the body can also be rapid.

That's what it means.

"Are you saying that the amount of Aura that passed through my body yesterday exceeds the amount of Aura that humans roll in a lifetime?"

Seongjin opened his mouth wide. Is that possible?

T/N:

Also some extra information, Holy Emperor Nate has three wives.

Tatiana, the Empress, is Second Prince Logan's mother. Lizabeth is the First Queen and as we know is Third Prince Morres' mother. Then there's Melody, the Second Queen and the mother of the Third Princess, and also the woman Nate was with when he found out he was, in fact, not impotent lmao. He also has a lover who lives in the Imperial Capital but outside of the palace, probably because she refused the position of queen, who is the mother of the twins Fourth Prince and Second Princess. First Princess Amelia's mother already passed away, and I don't know about the First Prince Owen's mother but I'm assuming the same.

21

The Holy Emperor said it wasn't actually the of time he used Aura that affected that affected the change, but an enormous amount that a person could not reach even if they worked hard for a lifetime.

-What level do you think that level is? Even if you devote your life to it, how many people will reach even the tip of it!

Suddenly, he remembered that Marthain had burst into anger at Seongjin. Did he say to abandon the idea of learning anything from this guy?

When Seongjin's expression became subtle, the Holy Emperor took that as a sign of understanding and continued talking.

"Hmm, that's because the passage eats up more than expected, so it's just that the amount of Aura dragged in inevitably increased. It didn't go to such a dangerous situation."

It seems that yesterday's Aura storm was an accident that was not expected by the Holy Emperor. Falling down from exhaustion was probably not in his plan.

"As expected, you used the Aura directly from the outside, didn't you? How is that possible?"

"Didn't I tell you before? When you reach a certain level, go where you want to go....."

"Ah, yes."

Sir Marthain was right.

He doesn't think this will be of much help.

After that, time passed quickly as they talked about swordsmanship training and Aura training.

"Can you watch my swordsmanship next time?"

After this guy took care of him for a while, his Aura performance increased dramatically. Could swordsmanship be possible in that way?

Seongjin expected that, but the Holy Emperor's reaction was sluggish.

"That might be difficult. I've never formally learned swordsmanship from the basics, so I don't know what to teach."

Yes? You self-study swordsmanship?

"By the time I met someone who could be called my teacher, my sword was already strayed. A sword he can neither sharpen nor teach anyone, so he said."

Wow, you really are a guy with no common sense.

Some people wield weapons at random for decades and develop a bad habit, while others wield them at will and invent their own style of swordsmanship?

The Holy Emperor glanced at Seongjin's bewildered face before adding.

"Still, it seems possible to clash swords for fun. After praying, let's have a sparring session."

So while I'm gone, practice quietly. Don't make trouble.

That's what the Holy Emperor was saying.

That evening, news of His Majesty's closed prayer spread throughout the imperial palace.

And even after that night passed, the demon king's soul did not return.

* * *

[Sniffle.]

Ah, what is it?

[Huuhuuu.]

Don't cry. You're not a kid, what are you doing grossly?

[Huwaaahhh.]

Please don't cry. It's noisy, so don't cry but talk.

[... call... sniffle.]

What, punk?

[Call me.]

Oh, alright.

"... Ah, so noisy. Calling. I'm calling....."

Seongjin opened his eyes in surprise at his own voice.

Chirp chirp. As always, birds chirping in the garden.

After blinking a few times, Seongjin's spirit completely returned. Faint sunlight streamed in through the curtains covering the large windows, illuminating the entire room in a dim light.

He rubbed his eyes and rose from his bed.

Did he have a dream?

He thinks he heard that stupid guy keep whining?

'... Demon King?'

Still no answer.

Seongjin sighed and scratched his head. Now, he feels like he has to admit that the Demon King has completely disappeared.

But what was his name?

* * *

"Okay. Did you go and speak directly to His Majesty yesterday? Did you hear anything else about the closed prayer?"

Marthain, who approached with a wooden sword, asked with a slightly strange expression.

"There was nothing special about it. Why?"

"It's because the timing is a little off."

"Is that so?"

After morning meditation, Seongjin was doing some light stretching.

Behind them, several resident knights are circling the gymnasium in an undisturbed posture. Ever since Sir Marthain began appearing in the Pearl Palace, the resident knights were literally changing day by day.

Well, they are going to die.

"Father said it happens sometimes?"

When Seongjin turned around and said something insignificant, Marthain slightly furrowed her eyebrows.

"It's the same as the supreme ruler of the empire is leaving the capital. Could it be that simple?"

It is said that person usually go into prayer to ask for help from the Main God when the imperial family is in trouble or the empire is facing a national crisis. The last time he went to the closed prayer two years ago, the southern front was actually at a very precarious time.

"But isn't there no clear cause now?"

In addition, the birthday banquet of the Holy Emperor was approaching in two months.

A sensitive time when royal families, high-ranking nobles, and envoys from each kingdom and grand duchy gradually adjust their visit schedules.

Then Marthain added half-heartedly.

"Of course, since His Majesty is doing it, I guess there must have been an important reason."

Marthain evades with a confused face.

Soon, the two were absorbed in class.

The standard swordsmanship of the Imperial Knights entered the movement 5.

It was definitely fun to learn a new movement, but he also wondered if it was a bit rushed. When he questioned Marthain, he looked at Seongjin with a very proud face and smiled.

"You already know how important it is to lay a solid foundation. That's wonderful. However, once you make it to the third layer of the Aura, you can only practice movement 1 and 2 for a while after initiation. You'll get bored enough, so let's slow down for now."

Is that so.

Seongjin moved the wooden sword countless times following the newly learned movement and fell into a trance.

There is a definite difference between wielding a weapon against monsters at random and sophisticated swordsmanship with human combat in mind. It was fun.

The resident knights who were training at the gymnasium were watching his movements one by one, but Seongjin didn't notice it.

The morning training time passed in the blink of an eye.

"By the way, Your Highness. The Aura around your body has become really active. That's just how fast the stamina increases. At this rate, I think you will be able to come and build the second layer sooner or later."

"Huh?"

Seongjin blinked at Marthain's words.

"Oh, didn't I tell you? Sorry. Actually, I made the second layer last night."

"... Yes?"

It was a pity that the afternoon training was cut short because he went on a visit yesterday. So, he meditated a little longer than usual before going to bed at night, and the second layer was created.

As he explained that, Marthain's expression changed to something worth seeing.

"Feeling an Aura, the second layer in one day....."

"Yeah, now if I build one more layer, I can come and start the exercises in earnest, right?"

The minimum standard for draining a sufficient amount of aura from the short circuit to both limbs is the third layer of Aura. When you build those three layers, you can start practicing weaving Aura in swordsmanship movements.

If you start initiation like that, then you can officially call yourself an Aura user.

Unlike Seongjin, who was very excited, Marthain seemed a little shocked.

"No, why did someone who can do this well, up until now....."

Seongjin shrugged at Marthain, who was muttering blankly.

He made up his mind to pull it, and the Aura in the air came into his body more easily than he thought. It's a huge improvement compared to the previous times when he couldn't even detect Aura.

Perhaps being caught up in an Aura storm has made him a little more Aura-friendly. Or, because he had a habit of using monster energy, it was relatively easy to use Aura.

Anyway, at this speed, it seemed like he could become stronger than he thought.

Seongjin, who happily wrapped up his wooden sword and turned to the Pearl Palace for lunch, paused for a moment and looked at the fence of the gymnasium.

"... Huh?"

Is it because of the mood? Something feels wrong?

It was a strange feeling that he had never felt before.

"Why are you doing that, Your Highness?"

Marthain approached, puzzled, but Seongjin calmed down a little more without answering.

Even when he was originally a hunter, he was praised for having a different sense than other colleagues.

Even now, it's nothing compared to when he was in his prime. However, some of the senses that had been sharpened to the limit were still intact, and somehow, in a hurry, they caught the eyes looking toward the gymnasium.

"Sir Marthain. Who is over there?"

"Yes?"

Marthain blinked his eyes for a moment, not knowing why. However, his complexion soon changed and he shouted in a low voice to one of the resident knights standing nearest to him.

"Sir Kurt! There is someone spying on the Pearl Palace!"

"Yes? Spying?"

A mature knight called Kurt asked with a dumbfounded face.

"Can you feel anything?"

"It's faint, but it's definitely nearby. They're a person who controls their aura quite skillfully. It just seems like they're not used to completely erasing their presence."

"... Are you saying they're not an assassin?"

"I think it's close to a knight, but I'm not sure yet."

Sir Marthain instructed him with a determined face.

"Right now, search the area around the gymnasium. Divide into two groups and create an encirclement from the entrance of the gymnasium to the back gate of the Pearl Palace without any gaps."

Sir Kurt was still dubious, but he didn't particularly dispute the words of the knight commander, who was known for his skill.

As if he was accustomed to leading the resident knights, he quickly divided the number of people and led one of them and ran out. Soon all the knights, except for the minimum number of escorts, left and the gymnasium was empty.

"I think they already noticed....."

Seongjin looked towards the back gate of the Pearl Palace in the distance, estimating the presence quickly moving away.

Was it necessary to start the search so conspicuously? Look. That hurriedly running away figure.

"It seems like a formidable opponent, wouldn't it have been better if the Sir, the strongest knight, had hit the back alone?"

"Because it's formidable, I can't leave the side of Your Highness."

Marthain put his hand on the sword at his waist and answered with a grim face. Judging by the twitching of the muscles in his forearms, he is probably holding back from wanting to jump out.

Well, even if you usually look docile, he's still the captain of the knights. When he's so serious, Marthain has a slightly intimidating face.

'Swinging a wooden sword in this atmosphere is a bit much, let's just sit and meditate.'

He was thinking such a carefree thought while everyone was rigidly stiff, but after a while, the resident knights trudged back to the gymnasium.

As expected, they were empty-handed, but the face of Sir Kurt, who had led them out, had turned serious.

"A paladin was wandering around the Pearl Palace. He noticed and ran away before we could even create a siege."

"Did you check who it was?"

"Unfortunately, the distance is far, so to the identity... But I definitely saw the pattern of the black sword engraved on the knightly uniform."

A black sword wrapped in a golden chain.

"Holy Knights of Marcias!"¹

"Perhaps so."

Seongjin silently listened to the conversation between the two.

'The Holy Knights?'

Come to think of it, he remembered that the Demon King had grumbled the other day. There are five useless Holy Knights in the imperial palace.

They declare that they will inherit the names of the five great saints, and depending on their purposes, they are said to carry out their own duties in different departments.

Among them, the demon king emphasized to Seongjin that he had to be extra careful with the Holy Knights of Marcias. Probably because the department they are based in.

"... The Heresy Court."

Sir Marthain's face contorted.

"As if those ungodly men had been waiting for you as soon as His Majesty was gone....."

Sir Kurt spoke to Marthain in a low voice.

"With the exception of some paladins, access to the Pearl Palace is strictly restricted. If they ignored it, could it be that His Excellency Cardinal Benitus himself gave the order?"

"Looking at how quickly he ran away, it shouldn't be like that. There is a high possibility that it's the work of an individual, below the commander of the knights."

"Shall we ask the Heresy Court?"

"It will be useless. Even so, it is a department with a strong closed atmosphere, and there is no way they'll give an answer easily with that dishonest stance."

Marthain thought for a while with a hard face, then smacked his lips with a slightly uneasy expression.

"There is no other option for now. First of all, we have no choice but to further strengthen the security of the Pearl Palace until His Majesty returns."

And the two knights looked at Seongjin's face at the same time as if they had planned it.

Marthain had an expression of concern, and Sir Kurt had an expression of admiration.

"Anyway, you're really great, Your Highness."

Sir Kurt stuck out his tongue.

"How did you know the spy was hiding? I didn't even notice it at all."

"Huh? well, I just felt a little strange, so I checked."

In the past, even among hunters, he had a high reputation for searching for monsters, but he can't say that.

Seongjin scratched his cheek while receiving the gaze of the resident knights who were a little amazed.

In fact, it's best not to say that there was one more spy a little further away. Run far away anyway, since it seems wrong to catch it already.

* * *

A secluded garden quite far from the Pearl Palace. A man staggered down the small side road to the administration building and sat down on the ground gasping for breath.

"... Huff, huff, huff!"

The skinny middle-aged man, breathing heavily, was wearing a white priestly uniform with the Main God's pattern engraved on it.

Originally tidy clothes are now crumpled, stained with sweat and dirt. It was because as soon as he saw the movement of the resident knights, he turned around and ran like crazy, and then even rolled a couple of times on the street.

"Cough! Cough!"

The man trembled, breathing heavily as if he were about to die.

But the expression on his face was more of joy than pain. His slender cheeks were wet with tears and sweat.

"... At last!"

After taking a deep breath, a sobbing voice escaped from the man's mouth.

"Here at last! He is here!"

As the long years passed, his strong faith also gradually faded. Even so, when he heard rumors that the trash had turned into a completely different person, how anxious he was at the thought of just in case.

He was able to see it with his own eyes, taking advantage of the moment when the monitoring of the castle was neglected.

And he realized. His long hours of endurance were never in vain.

"To this place... He said he would come!"

The wait was long, but in the end it happened as He said.

Then.

"... In the future, everything will be done as you wish!"

After that, the man did not know how to move with his head bowed on the dirt floor in a reverent posture for a long time.

T/N:

1. Previously I wrote these as [Knights of Saint X], but I decided to change it into [Holy Knights of X].

22

It's only been a day since the Holy Emperor entered the closed prayer. The atmosphere in the Pearl Palace was changing rapidly.

Little by little people began to come and go to the Pearl Palace, which was like a small isolated island within the imperial palace.

Attendants carrying letters came in and out, and small gift boxes and bouquets of flowers began to be delivered.

It's been quite some time since the access restrictions were lifted, but the reason for this belated change was obvious. Until now, it means that people were nervous about the Holy Emperor.

Requests for visits began to come in from here and there, and the one and only lady-in-waiting became very busy as well.

"Oh, this is a big deal. Your Highness!"

He was just leaving the gymnasium from morning training when Edith called to Seongjin with a very nervous face.

"What is it?"

"I just got a message from the Ruby Palace. The Queen told me to prepare refreshments without a hitch because she is coming with a special guest!"

Isn't that just a usual guest reception?

"What's the problem?"

Seongjin stared blankly at Edith, who had a teary face.

"But I don't know how to brew tea properly?"

"... What?"

You punk. Then, while you are fully aware of your poor skills, you brought me such tasteless tea all this time?

Seongjin felt his blood pressure rise.

"Why did you get a job as a lady-in-waiting if you don't even know how to make tea?"

"I didn't know. In the first place, the recruiting condition was [Aura users] only."

Oh, that's right. She did say she originally wanted to be a knight.

Still, isn't it already her second year as a maid? It's time to learn how to make tea.

However, Edith also had her own excuses.

"Because Your Highness originally didn't enjoy tea, and there weren't any particular guests visiting."

"I heard that Father sometimes come?"

"His Majesty the Holy Emperor was always accompanied by the chief chamberlain, so I had nothing to do. Lord Louis has prepared the perfect refreshments from the main palace."

Come to think of it, it seems that Louis himself served tea during the last audience.

"What should I do? I just did some practice, and it just tastes like rotten grass. How do I serve this to the guests?"

So you know well what the tea you brew tastes like.

"Well, tea is originally grass and water. Won't it be okay?"

After replying indifferently, Edith stomped her feet.

"But Your Highness! It is said that the Queen has made a new request. She said that since it is the first time your fiancée is visiting the Pearl Palace, there should be no shortage of hospitality to her!"

Seongjin heard something he couldn't let go of there, and asked Edith back.

"Wait, Edith. But am I engaged?"

"That's right. When did you get engaged without me knowing, Your Highness?"

"... Huh?"

"... Yes?"

* * *

"I Invited Lady Valois to the imperial palace on my own account. But suddenly, I realized that the two of you were still meeting for the first time? Even though marriage talks have been going on for such a long time."

When Queen Lizabeth arrived at the Pearl Palace, Seongjin managed to sit down at the well-appointed refreshment table.

The Queen did not look for any flaws when she saw the assortment of refreshments. She didn't even bother to sit back and taste it.

Edith couldn't help but feel glad. Seongjin inadvertently took a sip of the tea in front of him, and a deep bitter taste like bile rose up.

'I wonder about it every time, but how can grass and water taste like this?'

Trying to control his expression, Seongjin faced the new visitor the Queen had brought.

Lady Valois, Chloe Mia de Valois.

The fluttering light curly hair and the water-colored dress harmonize, making her look like a small girl who might float into the sky with a simple tap.

According to the Queen, the Valois family is a great aristocracy with roots in Brittany, and is a prestigious family that has produced outstanding scholars for generations. The dean of Delcross Theological Academy is also from the Valois family.

That's why even before Chloe was born, there was occasional talk of marriage with Morres on the Queen's line. Fortunately, it's still a story that only comes out privately, and it doesn't seem like an official engagement relationship.

Right. Considering the times, an engagement started from the womb is not incomprehensible. The problem was the opponent's age.

'... 12 years old?'

Since Morres is 15 years old, it must be a calculation that there will be a fairly decent age difference when he becomes an adult. Of course, if it's a real Morres.

Seongjin's age before his death was estimatedly 64, and at the age of 12, she could almost be his granddaughter.

No matter how much he decided to pretend to be Morres and live on a steel plate, this is far beyond what he can afford.

The girl sitting across from him was quietly chewing on dessert and bobbing her legs. Cold sweat broke out on Seongjin's back as she watched him.

"Seeing the two of you together makes me even more confident in this marriage talk. Aren't you a really beautiful pair to look at?"

"....."

Seongjin made an impression without even realizing it, and had to drink poisonous tea once more to hide it.

His tongue goes numb beyond the bitter taste.

Edith, are you sure the tea wasn't poisoned?

In any case, it was an awkward refreshment time, with the Queen talking alone and the two parties to the engagement keeping silent.

"How long has it been since we had such a friendly refreshment? Seeing that the Prince was so calm, you must also like Lady Valois. I am satisfied that the two of you seem to fit better than I thought."

Oh, it's fine if he just didn't make a fuss.

Queen Lizabeth continued to talk for a long time after that, from trivial topics such as the weather to the latest status of a famous salon in the social world, and the newly launched 7th Knights as the Imperial Guard.

Chloe calmly chewed on a snack and chimed in, while Seongjin blankly nodded and sipped bitter tea.

"I didn't even notice. The conversation was fun, so I didn't realize how fast the time goes."

How much time had passed, Queen Lizabeth rose from her seat, leaving Chloe behind.

"I will get up first, so the two of you should chat a little longer. Opportunities for the two of you to face each other are rare, so I shouldn't waste that precious time like this."

As if it were not empty words to say that the conversation was enjoyable, the Queen's eyes, which were usually sensitive, relaxed quite gently.

Following her, the ladies-in-waiting and all the escort knights left, and finally, Edith and the engagement party were left alone in the spacious drawing room.

'This has become difficult.'

Seongjin clicked his tongue as he watched the little girl pick up the snack.

He's not used to dealing with children.....

After thinking for a while, Seongjin cautiously opened his mouth.

"Um. So, Lady Chloe....."

"Call me Chloe, Your Highness."

Said the girl as swallowed the piece of macaron she was chewing on.

He wondered if she had a timid personality because she had kept quiet until now, but her sharp tone was unexpectedly bold.

"While marriage talks come and go, being too distant can also be a story for others."

"....."

The girl slightly folded her eyes and made something similar to an eye smile. Of course, those eyes weren't smiling at all.

"I don't know why you are looking at me with such an apologetic face. Sir, are you thinking of embarrassing me by refusing to talk to me?"

Astutely, the little girl seemed to be aware of some of Seongjin's reluctance.

Just like that. Seongjin, who wanted to make his wishes clear for her sake, realized that the matter was not so simple.

"If this engagement is broken, Chloe... will you get in trouble?"

"Well, there is nothing to worry about. It's just that I'll be shamed by the adults in my family, shamed by the young girls I interact with, and shamed by the social world where I'm about to debut, and I'd rather just die."

... It's getting very difficult.

"Isn't it burdensome to decide to get married already at such a young age?"

"It is a burden. The wedding ceremony with the Holy Imperial Family is a great honor for the family just by coming and going. Whoever the opponent is."

Even if it's a rumored trash.

The girl's raised mouth seemed to have somehow swallowed these words. However, Seongjin had no intention of responding to the little provocations of a child, whose judgment was twisted.

"That's why it won't be easy to get rid of later. The glory of the family doesn't guarantee Chloe's happiness, so wouldn't it be better to be a little more cautious about the wedding? Is it okay to make such a thorough selection only for the family?"

"... Yes?"

"You may suddenly have other hopes for the future or want to live abroad. Or maybe in the future you will find someone you really want to marry."

"....."

"In any case, it will not be possible after the marriage has progressed to some extent."

"Hmm....."

Chloe removed the sneer from her lips and put on a serious expression. After observing Seongjin's face for a long time, she carefully opened her mouth.

"... Your Highness?"

"Yea?"

"Do you think I was forced to come here because I couldn't overcome the pressure from my family?"

It was a straight line.

Why, aren't there such stereotypes? A 12-year-old young aristocratic girl might somehow think, 'I'm going to marry a prince on a white horse! I don't like opponents decided by my family!'

Ah. Of course, Morres himself is something like a prince.

"Like preparing to sacrifice my life for the family?"

"Isn't it like that?"

"No."

Chloe answered firmly and ran her finger over the corner of her mouth smeared with cookie crumbs.

"Hmm, this is a bit unexpected."

The girl looked at Seongjin with slightly deepened eyes, as if she had a lot of thoughts.

"You seem to be genuinely concerned about me, so I will be honest with you. With just the fact that I had already had marriage talks with the Holy Imperial Family before my debutante, I can attract a lot of attention once I debut in the social world."

"... Is that important?"

"That's right. After that, the influence I will have on the social world will soon become my strength and lifelong asset. It is by no means a choice only for my family."

Chloe seemed to have a fairly firm opinion about this marriage talk. They say that the family has a lot of scholars for generations, so even a child like this has a different idea.

As she was agreeing with a somewhat uneasy feeling, she glanced at Seongjin's eyes and cautiously continued.

"In addition, you don't have to attach much importance to this wedding talk."

"... Why?"

"It is not a relationship in which each other feels heavy responsibility. I'm sure I'm not the only partner in marriage talks that 'only talks come and go'."

So there's other fiancée candidates?

When Seongjin looked at Chloe in amazement, she asked with a slightly mischievous smile.

"Isabella, the daughter of the wealthy Scarchapino, and Julia Meyer, the granddaughter of Cardinal Meyer and knight of the Imperial Guard. Both of them are from prominent families, and they are now in full bloom and are proud of their mature beauty."

Isabella Scarchapino, who is called the flower of society, and Julia Meyer, who was assigned an unconventional assignment as the lieutenant of the 7th Knights at a young age in recognition of her talent as an outstanding knight.

While listening to Chloe's explanation, Seongjin suddenly had a thought.

Queen Lizabeth left after talking for a while about major social news and the newly launched 7th Knights. Although he assumed that the occasional squint at Seongjin's face was simply because she was concerned about Morres' health.

The Queen conveyed the current situation of the other marriage partners and looked at Seongjin's reaction.

"It seems you don't have any memories of them either, Your Highness."

And the Queen got her answer, and somehow left with a satisfied face.

Seongjin's lips hardened. It was a new alarm about Queen Lizabeth.

He thought she was just a pitiful mother with a spoiled son, but why is she circling around people instead of asking openly? Could she have some kind of scheme to hide from Morres?

Above all, the fact that she created this kind of opportunity as if she had been waiting as soon as the Holy Emperor was away was proof that she, too, had been paying attention to the Holy Emperor.

"No marriage talks have been confirmed yet. Marriage talks that are only mentioned in private for a long time, in the end, the longer they drag on, the more they gain from each other. So Your Highness....."

Chloe's smile faded a bit, as if she had accepted Seongjin's hard expression.

"If the reason you disapprove of this marriage talk is purely out of concern for my position, then please do not refuse the marriage talk first."

"... I understand. I'll wait patiently for Chloe to throw me away."

Since Morres already had a bad reputation, it would be a big deal if he become broken hearted once or twice. It's not that difficult.

Seongjin nodded his head obediently, and Chloe blushed a little and then raised her teacup with a relieved expression. She always had a relaxed attitude, but deep down, it seemed that she was anxious about breaking up the marriage talks on her own.

"Hold on.....!"

Perhaps she was quite thirsty, she gulped down the tea without giving Seongjin a break.

"... Cough! Oh my!"

Chloe's eyes widened as she managed to swallow the tea without spitting it out.

The trembling eyes lingered for a while on Seongjin, who stood up from his seat and stopped. Soon after, her eyes alternately examine Seongjin's half-empty teacup and Edith's face.

There was a new realization in Chloe's eyes, which turned to Seongjin's face again.

"Your Majesty, you are a more generous person than I thought."

That you're still keeping it alive.

She didn't say it with her mouth, but her cold gaze toward Edith made it clear what she wanted to say.

Gulp. He heard Edith swallowing dry saliva from behind him.

* * *

"How was the imperial palace, my lady?"

In the carriage on the way back to the mansion, the maid cautiously asked Chloe, who was exceptionally quiet.

The little girl, who had been on high alert in the morning and sharpened her blades like a hedgehog, now sat quietly, as if deep in thought.

"Well, it wasn't as bad as I thought."

No one knew how annoyed she was when she suddenly received an invitation from Queen Lizabeth last night.

She thought it was a good talk, but not a story that would go deep in the first place. Prince Morres didn't have a very good reputation, and there were already plenty of other great candidates for the Queen.

Perhaps that is why the Queen picked Chloe and invited her. Because she was the most easy opponent to come and go at will.

'Even so.....'

Contrary to rumors, Prince Morres, whom she met in person, was a very handsome boy. She heard that he also has a dog-like personality, but looking at it today, he seems quite thoughtful and serious.

He didn't ignore her like a child like everyone else did, but treated her as a proper lady. He was even subtly cool when he confirmed that she would throw him away.

Chloe rubbed her slightly heated cheeks and muttered.

"From now on, I think I will send a bouquet of flowers to the Pearl Palace regularly."

"... Yes?"

The lady-in-waiting asked back in bewilderment, but Chloe's little head was already spinning quickly.

Isabella Scarchapino, who believes in her innate beauty and is arrogant.

Julia Meyer is dedicated to training as a knight and is famous for hitting the iron wall with people courting her.

'Good. If we move one step faster, this side is not without odds.'

Fufufu.

In front of the lady-in-waiting, who was confused and didn't know why, Chloe smiled softly and clenched her fists.

T/N:

1. She didn't think Queen Elizabeth would take the marriage talk this seriously to the point that she made the two of them meet face to face.

23

Seongjin, who lost most of the day's training time because of an unexpected visit from his fiancée, tried to run to the training ground as soon as Chloe left. For him, who was gaining momentum from his recent training, every minute and every second was a waste.

But this time, too, there was an unexpected hindrance.

"Hi, Morres."

"Hi, Morres."

As he was running out of the lobby of the Pearl Palace, a small carriage stood blocking the entrance.

Children poking their heads out of the window are waving at him. They were pretty children like porcelain dolls that looked the same as if they were cut out of a mold.

Who are they?

He looked at Edith who was beside him with eyes asking for an explanation, but she just hung her head indifferently.

"I did not receive a separate message that they would visit. Your Highness."

If the demon king was there, he would have proudly and released the information. Suddenly, his absence is felt in a big way.

Fortunately, Marthain, who followed behind him, solved Seongjin's curiosity. He placed his hand on his chest and made an angled bow toward the children.

"Greetings to the princess and the prince."

"Hi, Older Brother Marthain."

"Hi, Older Brother Marthain."

So, they were Morres' younger siblings.

Herna and Gades.

The two were twin princess and prince who had just turned 13 years old.

The two, who are said to be living with their mother in a mansion in the capital, visit the imperial palace by carriage once a week when it is time for an audience.

The two grumbled that today's appointment had been canceled thanks to the Holy Emperor's closing prayer, and although they were only two years younger than Morres, they had a strangely childlike side to them.

"Of course, it's not that Father Holy Emperor deliberately avoided us. But it's still regretful."

Herna grumbled and crossed her arms around Seongjin's right arm.

"I've been waiting for a week to meet His Majesty Father. So we came to the imperial palace to play."

Gades pouted and grabbed Seongjin's left arm.

"Well, Father Holy Emperor doesn't like playing chess that much, though."

"Well, I'm suggesting that we play chess because it's fun to see His Majesty Father look troubled."

Then, the two began to stare at Seongjin's bewildered face.

"So will you play with us, Morres?"

"You're not going to kick us out, are you, Morres?"

Two pairs of identical purple eyes twinkle mischievously.

Wow, what is this?

Seongjin broke out in a cold sweat, not knowing what to do.

In the previous world, Seongjin was hit by Gehenna Gate before he even got married. He never dreamed of having a normal family or having children.

Besides, the world was too harsh for children. As the superhuman unit was formed and the battle with the monsters continued, even the few children died one by one.

So he couldn't figure out how to deal with innocent children who were just clinging to him. He looked at Marthain with his little brother and sister in his arms, but the man was feeling moved on his own without knowing Seongjin's thoughts.

"To see Prince Morres getting along with his younger siblings like this....."

Guess they weren't very friendly in the first place.

Why are you guys doing this to me all of a sudden?

"Because Morres is Morres?"

"Because Morres is none other than Morres."

A sullen smile appeared on the faces looking at Sungjin.

It's strange to appear out of nowhere and pretend to be close, but the twins didn't seem to care about Seongjin's sudden change in appearance. It's been a while since they've seen him, so he must look completely different.

"Morres was originally a bit strange."

"Morres wasn't normally normal."

What, these guys?

Anyway, the same voice answered one after another, so he was confused as to who said what.

With bobbed hair trimmed to the same length and the same face, there is only one thing that can tell them apart. It was just that one was wearing a dainty dress and the other was wearing cute shorts. Even the clothing designs are similar.

He doesn't know who their mother is, but is it emotionally okay for the children to dress twins like like this?

Seongjin exclaimed urgently as he struggled to hold on from the little kids who grabbed his arms and pulled him into the wagon.

"Hey, hey. I have to go to the gymnasium now. I'll play with you next time, so go see Amelia today. 'Kay?"

Today, he promised himself that he would definitely come and build the third layer, but what kind of a hindrance is this!

The twins looked at each other for a moment.

"Isn't Older Sister Amelia still confused?"

"Doesn't Older Sister Amelia need a little more time?"

Then, the two nodded to each other as if they understood what they had understood, and then began to pull Seongjin's arm again.

The pulling power of the little ones wasn't very strong, but that doesn't mean he can throw them out.

Seongjin, who had been dragged helplessly, looked back at Marthain with a face desperate for help.

"Hic, Your Highness being on good terms with your siblings like this....."

Marthain turned his head to the side and tried to hold back his tears.

That person is already messed up.

In the end, Seongjin had no choice but to get on the carriage with the twins. Most of all, it was because Sir Marthain was blatantly blazing with eyes asking what he was doing instead of spending time with his brothers right away, throwing away training.

In addition, the Knight Commander of the Imperial Guard even volunteered to escort them.

"If it's Older Brother Marthain, it's reliable."

"If it's Older Brother Marthain, no need to worry."

But these guys.

Amelia is older sister and even Martha is older brother, but why am I just Morres?

"Because Morres is Morres?"

"Because Morres is none other than Morres."

Herna and Gades smirked strangely.

The carriage they rode in soon left the imperial palace and ran down the huge avenue toward the main street. It seemed that the imperial palace road was connected to the road that penetrated the entire city in a straight line.

As soon as the manicured tree-lined avenue ended, a sparsely populated shopping street soon became a bustling plaza lined with tall buildings. A colorful crowd busily fills the streets, and colorful quad carriages and large wagons run through the streets in rows.

He feel that it is the capital of the most powerful empire on the continent.

While he was staring out the window blankly, the twins announced their future schedule.

"We're going to the dressing room downtown."

"I have to go to the Salon de Mercy now."

".....?"

What is Salon de Mercy?

While he was blinking, Marthain, who was sitting next to him, tipped him off.

"It is the most famous high-end menswear store in the capital."

Why do kids go there to play? Aren't they only old enough to go to a children's clothing store?

"Then let's go see the new puppet show on Rue Bertrand!"

"It's a puppet show featuring a cruel hero and a pitiful demon king!"

Now, that's a good place for kids to go. But it seems that something was a bit twisted.

"Then go to the Monkey Watchtower in the fountain plaza and we're done."

"Yes, it can be said that we went around all the places we had to go to today."

Monkey Watchtower?

His head automatically turns toward Marthain.

"It is a pub with a lot of regulars because the price of alcohol is cheap. It is also a place often used by the knights of the Imperial Guard."

This time it's a bar. Why do children go there again?

What are the standards for them to play? And why should he follow them?

"Yeah, well, what are the selection criteria?"

"Yeah, yeah, why do we have to go?"

The two just looked at each other and smiled mischievously.

The Salon de Mercy was located in the center of Rue d'Este, lined with famous dressing rooms. It is a street where you can best feel the latest trends of the Kingdom of Brittany, which is said to lead the fashion trend of the continent.

At the entrance of De Mercy, the latest Brittany-style costumes are hung. Seongjin, looking at the narrow sleeves with ruby buttons hanging from the narrow waistline, looked tired, but the twins shoved him into the entrance and said.

"Have a good time, Morres. We'll come pick you up in a little while."

"Speak slowly and come, Morres. We'll come find you before it's late."

What? Didn't you ask me to play with you?

Seongjin was making a puzzled expression, but the twins were getting farther away, buried in the crowd.

As he turned to follow them, a roaring clerk's greeting caught him.

"Welcome, handsome young master! Is this your first time here? Come in!"

A woman in a flashy pink dress with heavy make-up approached him with an exaggerated smile on her face.

"Welcome. Salon de Mercy leads the latest fashion of Delcross! All the fine gentlemen of the capital are regulars here. Come on, this way....."

She tried to pull Seongjin's arm violently, but was blocked by Sir Marthain, who had intervened between her and Seongjin, and opened her eyes wide. Marthain yelled at the clerk so loudly that the whole store rang.

"How dare you say such rudeness! This is the prince of the great Holy Empire, Lord Morres!"

The people in the dressing room all turned their heads toward them.

Soon, people's eyes are filled with astonishment, and they start whispering among themselves. Seongjin felt embarrassed for nothing.

Fortunately, de Mercy's clerk was a professional who had won against high-ranking people. She quickly cleared her bewildered expression and bowed respectfully to Seongjin.

"Forgive me for the rudeness. I made a mistake because I did not expect such a noble person to come personally."

Soon after, the other clerks who ran out lined up in a line from the entrance and bowed their heads in unison. Seongjin realized that he had completely missed the timing to leave the store.

"God bless Delcross! Greetings to the wise Prince Morres!"

All of the clerks, male and female, wore dark pink uniforms. While he was in awe of that monstrous sense, a large man approached Seongjin with light steps from inside the store.

He was holding a colorful fan and wearing high heels, wearing a dark pink fur over a flamboyant black and light pink outfit. In an instant, he knew at once whose taste the pink clothes of the store clerks were.

"Oh my gosh, what is this? Oh my gosh, Your Highness Morres! How do you keep getting better and better? Oh my, how nice!"

Sir Marthain's expression slowly hardened as he watched the approaching man, twisting his body in disdain. Fortunately, right before the knight commander exploded, the man gave Seongjin an appropriate example.

He was a seasoned person who knew well when a high-ranking person felt uncomfortable.

"Blessings to many generations of the Holy Imperial Family! Madame Justine of Salon de Mercy welcomes the noble Prince Morres."

It is a cool gesture that looks like a theater actor in a way because the arm movement is big and old-fashioned.

On the other hand, the end of the words was also strangely stretched, and it seemed that he was acting cute or playing a joke.

Seongjin looked closely at the man for a moment with a subtle sense of difference.

If it weren't for excessive makeup and flashy costumes, he was a man with excellent muscles and bones that could be called a good warrior. He has a massive build and well-developed muscles throughout, but he doesn't feel his Aura activated around his body. That means he's not an Aura user.

But why does Seongjin's intuition sound an alarm at the man? Sir Marthain must have felt the same way, so he whispered to Seongjin.

"Madame Justine is the most famous designer in the capital. He has a great reputation even within the imperial palace, but I never thought he would be like this....."

"He's not an Aura user, is he?"

"Yes, he is not. But strangely, prayer is wonderful. It's hard to believe he's just a designer."

The man smiled while the two of them whispered. As the red-painted lips draw an arc, a beauty point the size of a little fingernail moves together.

Seongjin, realizing that he was standing quietly waiting for him to state his business, hesitantly opened his mouth.

"Hmm, that... I'm thinking of making some clothes....."

It was an obvious thing to take out of the dressing room.

Madame Justine covered his mouth with a fan and let out a hum of laughter. His two eyes, which look more beaky with excessive eyelash makeup, draw a crescent moon sullenly.

"Ohoho! Is this the first time you have personally visited the Salon de Mercy? Queen Lizabeth has been a regular here for a long time."

"Is, is that so?"

"Yess. Aren't our clerks visiting the Pearl Palace every month to make clothes for Your Highness? Today, it is an infinite honor that this Madame Justine will be able to serve Your Highness himself!"

Most of the clothes in Morres' dressing room must have been made by this person.

"Now now, let's go to the special room upstairs. We adjust the entire process from size to fitting so that the precious person is not uncomfortable."

That's right, once he could get out of this mess, he'll go anywhere.

Seongjin left behind the shop assistants and some customers whispering in the corner, and followed Justine up the stairs.

Now that he had come to the dressing room, Seongjin thought about getting a pair of clothes that he could wear comfortably while training.

However, while looking at the fabrics, embroidery samples, and various designs that Madame Justine had brought, the direction of the conversation began to flow strangely.

"Oh my! You don't like being too bright, and you don't like being too dark because it's gloomy, right? You definitely have an eye for the capital's fashion these days! These days, fabrics that are dark yet bright when exposed to light are popular."

He just said he didn't like it because he thought it would get a lot of dust when wearing white or black while rolling around the gymnasium, but suddenly strange fabrics with a rainbow sheen popped out.

"Ohohoho! You say to cut down on cuffs and thread decorations as much as possible! It is indeed a bold choice that is ahead of its time! Then, even if it takes time, how about enhancing the dignity by inserting small hand embroidery in every corner? The hem of the cuffs and the hem of the trousers are embroidered with precious stones and pearls!"

He asked him to remove as much obstacles as possible so that he could do radical training, and he said he would sew jewelry into his clothes. Seongjin couldn't even guess what the finished clothes would look like.

Madame Justine hummed as he scribbled something in his design notebook, wondering what was so exciting about it.

Soon after, the clerks who came in trembled once when they said they were taking Seongjin's measurements. Seongjin, who thought it was all about height and waist circumference, learned for the first time why so many parts had to be measured when making human clothes.

His mind was completely tattered and he was sipping the juice that Justine had prepared for him in a daze.

"You look tired, Your Highness."

Seongjin snorted without answering.

Sir Marthain, in the middle of an exciting argument with Madame Justine about whether to have a peacock pattern or a butterfly pattern.

Knock knock.

It was then that a cautious knock was heard.

When Marthain opened the door, a young man with a weak impression crept in and bowed toward Seongjin.

"Glory to Delcross. Greetings Prince Morres, a long-time supporter of the Golden Truth Society."

Golden Truth... What?

T/N:

Just in case anyone jumps on me, Madame Justine is referred to as 남자 (man) in the narration. I'm taking the term Madame as something that's more like a title instead of a prefix, similar to how all knights are called Sir regardless of their gender.

24

Golden Truth Society.

An academic society that explores the truth of this world without prejudice based on pure academic curiosity.

Andrian Davis, a young man who introduced himself as the head of the society in the capital branch, was a scion of a fairly high status. His skinny, diminutive physique was typical of a corner scholar, but the tight, downturned mouth seemed a little stubborn.

"His Excellency Cardinal Kaplan is my uncle."

When he said that, Seongjin did not miss the momentary expression of slight contempt on the young man's face.

"Our society, which was once on the verge of extinction, was able to face a great turning point thanks to the prince. For the distant future of the empire, our members are always moved by the wisdom of Your Highness who has generously and silently supported us for many years."

"What, I'm touched."

"No! It is indescribable how deeply the indignation we feel every now and then when slanders come from ignorant people."

Of course, Seongjin had no memory of supporting them.

However, it was clear that now was not the time to explain about his memories since he was sick. It was because he got the feeling that the society that this young man was talking about was not a place that was normally active in the sun.

It is a matter within the Holy Empire, where the authority of the Main God pierces the heavens. It is not only on Earth that a group that claims the truth is a perfect environment to be branded as a cult.

As evidence of that, the face of Sir Marthain, who was silently listening to the conversation next to him, was gradually hardening.

"When I heard that you suffered from a severe fever, I was terrified that something unpleasant might happen to you. It is a great honor to be able to meet you and say thank you, even if by chance."

"Um, is that so?"

"Yes, to be honest, I was worried that seeing you in person like this would hurt you, but I have no idea when I will be able to greet the prince, who rarely leaves the imperial palace....."

It seems that he stopped by the dressing room and heard that Morres had come by chance, so he came to visit on an impulse. It is said that it is a regular dressing room for gentlemen in the capital, indeed.

Marthain took a step forward and tried to say something, but Seongjin quickly raised his hand to stop him. The moment they showed a strange expression, he was sure that the young man would quickly run away.

He had to figure out as much as possible about what and how far Morres was caught up in the current situation.

"It is because I believe that your quest will always be of great help to Delcross. There's nothing I can do differently, I just wanted to help in a small way."

"Ahh, as expected....."

The young man seemed very moved. The little doubts and insecurities that had lingered in his eyes until just now had completely disappeared from him.

"Actually, there was some talk within the society as well. There were some terrible people who misunderstood your intentions under the pretext that Your Highness did not show yourself and only delivered donations. However, having heard the words from Your Highness myself today, I know for sure what a foolish doubt it was. It is just overwhelming."

"Uhm. That's right."

It meant that there was no direct contact with the people of the society. Is it true that Morres was the one who sponsored it?

His mind was getting complicated, but the young man lowered his head and continued talking hastily.

"As you have an ignorant companion with you, if more than this was said then it will surely cause unnecessary misunderstandings. I'm going to leave now, so please take care of yourself. The only person we can truly rely on at Delcross is Lord Morres."

He glanced at Sir Marthain's hardened face and walked away.

Wow.

Suddenly, he felt like he had been hit hard in the back of the head.

"... Do you know anything about this, Sir Marthain?"

"I'm sorry, but this is the first time. Your Highness."

Marthain's face was hideous. As he approached Seongjin with the momentum of shouting at any moment, another clever and timid knocking sound was heard.

The two of them looked at each other's faces with an ominous premonition passing by.

"The irreplaceable great happiness of Delcross! With sincere gratitude to Prince Morres, who sponsors the Plague Society of Adelheit....."

Outside the door, a short, gourd-headed man was bowing respectfully.

* * *

When the twins returned to the Salon de Mercy, Seongjin made friends with a total of three groups.

Golden Truth Society.

Plague Society of Adelheit.

Blue Republican Revolutionary Front.

All of them are unusual organizations that wouldn't be strange if they were immediately accused of being a traitorous group and killed.

Morres you crazy bastard! What the hell is the Prince of the Holy Empire doing all the time!

– While I'm gone, practice quietly. Don't make trouble.

The last words that the Holy Emperor left before doing closed prayer come to an unusual resonance only after reaching this point.

"Our Salon de Mercy is also a place for social gatherings of highly educated young masters."

Madame Justine, who was seeing him off, said, rustling a handle fan. Seongjin glared at him without answering.

You bastard is the most suspicious.

There was no way that those people would have gone up to the special room without the tacit permission of the dressing room.

Above all, no matter how tumultuous it was, he couldn't erase the suspicion that the Madame's influence must have had a big impact on Morres' visit being known to people in various groups in that short time.

Either that or not, Madame Justine just smiled as she stroked her dark pink fur.

Soon after, when Seongjin climbed into the carriage with the twins, he raised his long arms and bowed deeply towards the carriage.

"I look forward to seeing you again from the bottom of my heart.

Prince Morres."

A heavy tone that doesn't even stretch at the end of the word¹.

It was his true voice, spoken for the first time by Madame Justine.

Surprised, Seongjin looked back at him through the window, but the carriage had already left. In an instant, Salon de Mercy was moving away.

Clatter clatter.

Herna and Gades were sitting side by side in the seats across from Seongjin, staring at him.

"Did you have a good time, Morres?"

"Have you had a good time, Morres?"

"....."

Seongjin didn't know what to answer.

What do these children know? Did they guess in advance who would approach Seongjin?

It was obvious what the position of the prince of the Holy Empire would be like if it became known that he was sponsoring such militant groups. Are they planning on taking advantage of Morres' weakness and threatening him?

Considering the possibility that it might be a coincidence, he had no intention of speaking openly about those strange organizations in front of the twins. But at least this one must be asked.

"You guys, did you know? What are you up to?"

"Um, are you upset about this? Everything is for Morres."

"Yeah, are you a little sad? We think of Morres quite a bit."

"....."

They don't deny that there were any special intentions.

The twins added, as if admonishing him, with resolute faces, as if they were aware of Seongjin's complicated mind.

"Now you're going to go to some social gatherings by yourself, Morres."

"You must not be under the protection of His Majesty Father forever, Morres."

Seongjin sighed.

If he pays close attention to these kids, he will only get answers that go round and round as before. Even if not, the information currently given to Seongjin is extremely limited. If he sharpen his edge too much now, he might miss out on things that he can at least find out.

First of all, let's adjust the rhythm a little bit.

"... Where next? Didn't you ask to see the puppet show?"

At Seongjin's words, the twins smiled brightly at the same time. It was a smile of infinite innocence on a face as smooth as porcelain.

* * *

Bertrand Street.

Decades ago, this was an unsightly street lined with shabby warehouses located next to the market.

Then one day, a theater company from Brittany rented a shabby warehouse and started performing, gradually transforming into a theater district.

Named Bertrand Avenue after the most famous actor in the troupe, this place is now home to three large opera theaters, three huge ballet theaters, and dozens of theaters and small theaters, it has become a cultural street where various other theatrical performances are held.

Performances were often held not only in theaters but also on the streets, with one-act plays to promote plays, arts performances from other countries, and small puppet shows for children.

They were usually played on a small simple stage set up in a plaza.

The place where the twins led Seongjin was also an insignificant simple stage where the performance had just begun.

A small window in the middle of a large plank is the entire stage. There are no seats, so children stand huddled in front of the stage waiting for the performance.

Seongjin was a little taken aback because most of the children gathered around the age of five or six. I think this is a very young age for the twins.....

Anyway, the show started. A few burning candles placed in a large oak barrel next to the stage are lit, and the red curtain opens to reveal two small puppets.

'What's with the condition of the doll.....'

It was a shoddy doll that couldn't even be called a stuffed toy, let alone a marionette.

As flimsy dolls with eyes and mouths roughly patched with cloth and stitched together appeared swayingly, a disappointed sigh flowed from the mouths of some children.

However, even that disappointment dissipated as the narration flowed. It was because the voice with strange magic captivated the children at once.

[This is the story of two demon kings from another world. The story of the Demon King of Dreams and the Demon King of Fire making a promise and betraying each other. A story about an unfinished fight.]

The yellow and red balls of cotton that looked like cheap leftover poop seemed to be the two demon kings.

'... Didn't they say it was the story of a hero and a demon king?'

Seongjin wondered for a moment, but soon began to focus on the puppet show.

There was a hypnotic resonant in the husky voice that resonated as if he was chanting lowly. It is a voice with a strange charm that makes it impossible to distinguish whether it is a woman or a man, old or young.

[The Demon King of Dreams had an important mission. They swore to protect precious dreams from a terrible catastrophe that threatens the world. So, the Demon King of Dreams decided to become a powerful Demon King of Stories someday.]

A red lump of shit exited the stage.

In the middle of the small stage, only a yellow mass remained, making a spleen decision. The expression of the doll, which seemed to be tongue-in-cheek and sticking out, was not so important.

[They knew they must fight a hero to become stronger. They soon found a suitable warrior and gave battle. But unfortunately, the opponent was a very cruel person.]

A dirty gray lump appeared next to the yellow lump. And the yellow and gray lumps did a few head-butts.

Is that scruffy hunk a warrior?

Are you doing that as if it were a battle?

Embarrassed, Seongjin looked at the twins holding his arms, but the two of them kept their eyes on the puppet show with serious faces. He shrugged once and looked straight ahead again.

[The Demon King of Dreams realized that they could never defeat him with their own strength. So they locked him in a dream and ran away. Their dream of becoming the Demon King of Stories was thwarted by the hero like that.]

Children's sighs flow. It seemed that they genuinely felt sorry for the demon king's escape.

Guys? Aren't you supposed to cheer for the hero?

[At that time, the Demon King of Fire appeared. He said he would help the Demon King of Dreams in crisis.]

The red poop appeared again.

After that, the story progressed swiftly. It is embarrassing to even call it a puppet show, and most of the plays are stories that only lead to narration.

The Demon King of Fire promised to go into the dream and get rid of the hero in his place, but in reality he intended to eat the Demon King of Dreams itself.

On the other hand, the Demon King of Dreams was planning to bury both of them in a dream and kill them if the Demon King of Fire got rid of the hero.

Beneath the candlelight swaying in the wind, the shadows of hidden dolls dance gloomily.

For young children, it was an overly dark story full of petty betrayals. And the highlight of the gloom began when the hero reappeared.

The cruel hero succeeded in defeating the Demon King of Fire, and he beat the demon king for three days and three nights and half a day. Even for the last half day, only the face was slapped.

One by one, the children began to whimper, saying that they felt sorry for the demon king. Even to Seongjin, he was a terrible guy.

"Wow... What a bastard. That cruel guy....."

This is why he's called a cruel hero. At this point, even if it were him, wouldn't he side with the demon king?

Seongjin, who had clicked his tongue, suddenly felt a strange gaze and looked down. Herna and Gades had been staring at his face for some time.

What? Why? What?

T/N:

1. Usually Madame Justine talk 'playfully' by making the words in a sentence longer (like "yeess" or welcoomee") but in this sentence he didn't do that.

25

The puppet show came to an end.

A yellow lump approaches the side of the red lump lying on an angle.

[The Demon King of Dreams fell into deep sorrow after seeing the death of the Demon King of Fire. Although they faced each other, they were once allies fighting the same enemy. So, they decided to mourn him who died a miserable death at the hands of the evil hero.]

Why is the story like that?

What kind of children are those who fought to the death until now?
Where did the hero go again?

[The Demon King of Dreams honored his sad death by calling their friend's name.]

The voice that recited the narration was low, but deep emotions of sadness that could not be hidden came out in it. Before he knew it, the children were holding their hands together and weeping.

Is this what collective hypnosis is like? He thought something was strange, but Seongjin also felt a strange sensation as if a corner of his chest was frowning. It was as if something directly stimulated his brain and elicited a mental change similar to emotion.

He can only speculate that the puppeteer's voice might be the cause, but there was no way to confirm this.

The voice with that strange magical power said calmly.

[Goodbye forever, Al Fahas, the Demon of Fire.]

Jeeeee. In an instant, a tinnitus spread in Seongjin's head as if something was cracking.

".....?"

[Rest in peace, Al Fahas of Fire.]

Crack. Seongjin felt a slight dizziness from the small shock that rang once again.

"Bye, Demon King of Fire Al Fahas!"

"Rest in peace, Al Fahas!"

The children gather their mouths and shout.

"Goodbye forever, Al Fahas of Fire!"

He feels nauseous.

While trying to calm his shaking stomach, Seongjin suddenly thought. Something is very wrong with this.

Herna and Gades didn't chant along with the children. They just looked up at him with slightly worried eyes while holding Seongjin's arms as if to support them.

The context of the story is poor, and the puppet show, which has no coherent theme, suddenly ended with a heartwarming ending.

The children who had been mourning the Demon King of Fire for a while left their seats one by one, and now only a shabby plank with a curtain down and a few burnt candles remained on the simple stage.

As if the narration and puppet show were conducted alone, one person was tidying up the stage while taking care of the puppets. They have a slender physique and wears a long, loose robe, so it is difficult to tell whether they are a man or a woman.

They wear a shabby half-mask that reveals their slim lower body, and their long silver hair is tied and hung down below their waist.

After the puppet show ended, Seongjin, who had calmed down like a lie, tried to approach the puppeteer who was cleaning the stage. It was impossible not to know that the strange phenomena and puppet shows that Seongjin had experienced earlier had something to do with the Demon King of Gehenna.

But there were two pairs of arms pulling him back.

"You mustn't meet that person yet, Morres."

"That person won't tell you anything, Morres."

But wasn't it these guys who brought him here?

Seongjin didn't mind and tried to move again. Then, Herna and Gades came hanging onto his arms, this time carrying their entire body weight.

"Father Holy Emperor wouldn't like it if he knew you were here."

"You mustn't make trouble for His Majesty Father any more than this."

Seongjin stopped walking this time. It was because the eyes of the twins, who always seemed relaxed, are more desperate than ever.

He stood there for a moment and thought.

What the hell do these kids know?

How reliable the twins' recommendation is another matter, but what is the possibility that Seongjin will get additional information if he ignores these guys' words and contact the puppeteer?

In addition, when the Holy Emperor was mentioned, he remembered the last request he made before entering closed prayer.

-Don't make trouble.

Come to think of it, today might have been the day he really just broke his words. Of course, most of the cause was because of these unknown children.

Above all, his premonition, which is sometimes shown in unexpected places, strongly conveys the feeling that now is not the time.

After glancing at the puppeteer, who was still busy cleaning up, Seongjin was meekly led by the twins' hands to the carriage.

Sensing a strange gaze from somewhere, the puppeteer turned around.

However, apart from the occasional glances of the busily walking passers-by, no one paid much attention to them. In the distance, only a small carriage was moving away from the plaza, and the streets where the sunset had begun to sink were relatively quiet.

Was it an illusion? They tilted their head.

The distinctly dulled senses of the body were not very reliable.

"I wondered where you went at this time, what are you doing with the kids?"

From the other side of the plaza, a tall man approached the puppeteer waving his hand. He was a very sleek-looking young man with healthy tanned skin and shiny black hair.

The clothes, which were comfortably buttoned up with a couple of buttons, were quite classy, and the confident smile that he must have had from birth lingered on his firm chin.

The puppeteer bowed their head respectfully toward him.

"Prince Leonard."

"Hey, didn't I tell you to call me Leo? This is an informal visit. Romaine."

"Yes, Lord Leo."

Leonard approached with great strides and comfortably placed his arm on the small puppeteer's shoulder.

"Listen anyway, Romaine. It's already been several days since I entered the capital and asked for an informal meeting, but these scoundrels still have no news."

"Is that so?"

"Isn't it frustrating? How many times have I been contacting them from a few months ago to get some official papers, but all they've done is brood over it."

Leonard grumbled as he stared into the void with a face full of dissatisfaction.

"So what if he's the Holy Emperor? He can't be that amazing, just playing hard to get."

Of course, Leonard had no way of knowing that the Holy Emperor had been disapproving of him since before – because he was the kind of guy his daughter was interested in.

And the fact that now he's completely out of the limelight for things he hasn't yet done.

"Perhaps your request for an audience will not be accepted."

Romain answered calmly. It wasn't a voice with a strange resonant sound like the puppet play now, but a thin but normal male voice.

"Shit! Why?"

"It's not that he doesn't accept it, it's that he can't meet you. Lord Leo. Since yesterday, the spirits defending Delcross has greatly diminished. Perhaps the guardian left the capital."

That's why it is possible for him to perform such tricks right in front of the imperial palace.

Romaine didn't bother to say that.

Hmm. Leonard said with a serious face, resting his chin on the arm over Romaine's shoulder.

"There is only one way now. Handsome guy."

"... Yes?"

... Who are you talking to?

Leonard, who was well aware of Romaine's shy face under the mask, laughed with a chuckle.

"Don't you know? There is a beautiful rose that has not yet ripened in that imperial palace. Didn't that guy care for his daughter a lot?"

"You are so confident."

Romain slipped back his shoulders, which had begun to feel heavy, and crossed his arms.

"You should have seen the princess' eyes looking at me at last year's birthday party... I'm willing to bet. She's a pitiful girl who fell in love for the first time."

Romaine's eyes deepen under the mask at the prince's confident declaration.

Leonard is like a ghost when it comes to women. If what he said was true, things might be easier than expected.

The most obstructive was a simple way to effectively pressure Delcross and tie the Holy Emperor's hands and feet.

"So, Romaine. You too, stop doing these useless things with the kids, and think about a way to get in touch with the princess naturally."

Got it?

Leonard tapped Romain on the shoulder with a smile on his face, then turned around and waved.

Again, head to the nearby pub. If the request for talks is not going to be accepted anyway, he must be trying to change his mood until the birthday party.

Romaine, who was staring at the back of the prince who was moving away, suddenly muttered to himself.

"Neither the Hero nor the Demon King of Fire could kill the Demon

King of Dreams that was not talked about. It's the only way he can do this nonsense."

A voice no one heard spread hollowly in the middle of the empty plaza.

* * *

Dusk fell and darkness settled everywhere. Seongjin, who had been dragged around all afternoon without knowing why, now had his final destination in front of him.

Monkey Watchtower. It is a small pub with many regular customers from the Imperial Guard.

"It won't take too long here, Morres."

"Just say hello to the owner and leave, Morres."

Herna and Gades, who dropped him off in front of the fountain plaza, didn't even get off the carriage this time.

After warmly waving to Seongjin and Marthain, who were looking at each other with bewildered faces, they slammed the carriage door shut.

"....."

"First... Shall we go in, Sir Marthain?"

"... Yes Your Highness. I don't even know what it is anymore."

The two of them were determined to go wherever they wanted to go.

With weak steps, they trudged toward the small wooden door of the tavern. Beyond the door comes the chatter of already drunken guests.

Creak. When the stained wooden door opened, the smell of alcohol rushed in along with the heat inside.

The outside is small, but the inside is also a narrow bar. Five rough wooden tables against undecorated wooden walls were all the furniture.

Surprisingly, every table is packed full of customers in this clumsy shop. Holding large wooden goblets one by one, they were laughing and talking loudly about what was so exciting.

I heard that the price of alcohol in this house is extremely cheap. Of course, they only deal with poor quality dark beer.

When Seongjin and his party entered the entrance, the drunken guests gave them a quick look, but they didn't even recognize who they were, and they didn't seem very interested. Soon they turn their heads again and laugh or scream.

Marthain also kept his mouth shut and followed closely behind Seongjin, as if he had no intention of yelling at them to serve the prince in this atmosphere.

The store owner was an elderly man. He was dressed in an old leather vest and apron on a well-groomed figure, and the round, shiny top of his head stood out.

He was wearing a black eyepatch over his right eye, and judging by the long scar protruding from the eyepatch, it was a knife cut.

He waited for Seongjin to approach and asked in a gruff voice, spitting out a thick wooden pipe.

"What did you come here for?"

"I just came to say hello."

Seongjin responded politely. For some reason, honorable words naturally come out for this old man.

"Hmm....."

The old man chewed on his pipe and studied Seongjin closely.

Somehow around the time he doubted whether he knew who he was, the old man stroked the empty crown of his head a couple of times and said,

"You are too young to share a drink. But it's a bit late to say hello."

"....."

"My name is Breman. Well received. I will give you an answer soon."

What is this? Was the greeting some sort of keyword?

Seongjin was thinking about it, but Breman issued a toast.

"Cheers."

Seongjin and Marthain faced each other.

"Old man, one more drink here!"

"Give me here too!"

Just then, orders started pouring in. He wanted to ask something more, but he couldn't stand the atmosphere. Turning around and walking out the entrance, just before closing the wooden door, Breman called out to them.

"Anyway, be careful! Since he is away for a while, flies are attracted as if they were waiting!"

Seongjin looked back, but the owner had his back turned and was standing there filling a new beer glass.

When he arrived at the Pearl Palace, it was already after it was completely dark.

Seongjin was almost a super corpse. It was because so many things had happened in half a day, and after watching the puppet show, his physical condition had dropped dramatically.

First of all, he was very hungry. As he leaned back in the seat without energy, Herna and Gades came up to him as if they were sorry.

"You worked hard all day today, Morres."

"It went well. Great work, Morres."

Of course, after the twins snacked on snacks in the carriage whenever Seongjin and the others were gone. It was even worse.

"Then, good night, Morres."

"Sweet dreams, Morres."

Seongjin, who waved roughly at the twins who came to say goodbye with bright faces, stumbled into the lobby of the Pearl Palace, dragging his dangling feet.

And he was at a loss for words at the tremendous sight that unfolded before his eyes.

Numerous gift boxes of various sizes, and various attendants holding them, fill the lobby of the Pearl Palace.

Art and antiques were randomly piled up on one side of the hallway, and bouquets of flowers that couldn't find a place to put them were scattered all over the stairs.

And the letters piled up like a mountain on a tray. A huge number of invitations to the Third Prince to social gatherings were waiting for him.

The amount is so huge that one would believe that all the people in the capital wrote letters to him.

One day.

All of this happened just one day after the Holy Emperor entered closed prayer.

26

[Call me now, this is no place to be. Huwaaangg]

How do I call you?

[Call me, Lee Seongjin. Whimper.]

Hearing someone's sad cry, Sungjin opened his eyes.

What. Was that really a dream?

His mind slowly returns to reality. It is the morning of the Pearl Palace as always.

He rubbed his tired eyes and rose from his seat. Exhausted, he stretched out until the morning to sleep, but perhaps because his mind was busy, he wasn't tired at all.

Normally, he would have stretched and ran to the gymnasium, but now he wasn't in the mood for that at all. Seongjin just blankly sat on the bed and recalled the events of yesterday.

"Don't worry. We are on the side of Father Holy Emperor and Morres."

"We just want to help with what we know."

Herna and Gades assured Seongjin, who was staring at them from the other side of the carriage. He was on high alert after the puppet show.

"Al Fahas. What is that? Is that the name of the Demon King?"

Seongjin asked what he was most curious about. As soon as he heard the name, he felt strangely upset and his stomach churned.

But the twins shook their heads.

"It's a different name. They are denying the real thing by calling the wrong name."

"It's a more insignificant and inferior attack than a long, long slap in the face."¹

Seeing an expression of sincere indignation on the twins' faces, Seongjin averted his gaze for no reason.

But it was strange. Now, no matter how many times he repeat Al Fahas, he doesn't feel the same shock as before. When he asked, Herna and Gades nodded as if it were natural and briefly explained to Seongjin what the puppeteer had done.

The reason the offended person performed the 'funny' puppet show was to use it to create something called a flame barrier.

The 'bad' puppeteer created an 'insignificant' flame image with unclear boundaries, and tried to overlay it on the real demon king and the world. Because of that 'unreasonable' action, the blow that the demon king received also affected some of Seongjin.

I'm not sure what you mean.

When he asked why the puppeteer was doing such a thing, they said it was because the 'nasty' guy was a 'terribly bad' guy who threatened the safety of this world.

More than that, don't you guys just really hate that puppeteer?

"What binds someone to this world is the name he is given, Morres."

"If you keep denying your name, you will eventually be unable to set foot in the world, Morres."

Anyway, this is what made it certain.

The twins knew about the Demon King of Gehenna and seemed to understand that he had some sort of relationship with Seongjin. Maybe it's too much speculation to assume that they even knows Seongjin's real identity?

Besides, he doesn't know why, but these kids seemed to be trying to help the demon king who disappeared anyway.

Then.

"Do you guys know what the demon king's real name is?"

He had a little bit of expectation, but unfortunately the twins answered with a sullen face.

"That's probably something not even Father Holy Emperor knows."

"We don't know what His Majesty Father doesn't know."

"This is the Holy Empire. Why do you, the children of the imperial family, try to help the demon king?"

"It's because Father Holy Emperor willingly allowed him."

"His Majesty Father seems to think he's needed."

After all, all these twins talk about was the Holy Emperor.

"The twins don't know what even the Holy Emperor doesn't know. If so, what the twins know means that is also known by the Holy Emperor....."

Seongjin was muttering blankly while staring into the air when a knocking sound came.

"Prince Morres, did you cough?"

As always, Edith comes in and sets the water bottle and cloth down on the table. Soon after, she pulled back the curtains and ventilated the room, telling Seongjin.

"This is a message from Lord Marthain. There is something he needs to find out this morning, so he asks the prince to meditate alone and review swordsmanship."

It reminds him of Sir Marthain, who left the Pearl Palace last night with a very confused face.

Knowing that the prince he was serving was suddenly involved with various radical groups, he must have felt the need to confirm the facts as quickly as possible.

Golden Truth Society.

Plague Society of Adelheit.

Blue Republican Revolutionary Front.

What on earth was Morres originally thinking when sponsoring such organizations?

'Well, it's no use if I think about it now.....'

If he finds something, Sir Marthain will explain it to him. He don't know why, but he cares a lot for Sungjin.

At least, if Morres did something wrong, he didn't seem to have the personality to inform others, even though he would try to rectify it.

Seongjin decided to put aside various doubts for a while and focus on training. For now, he decided to focus on what he could do.

The Holy Emperor also told him to train. If something goes wrong, won't that guy come forward and help?

He think he knows the whole story to some extent.

Anyway, once the closed prayer is over, he think he should have an open conversation with the Holy Emperor.

* * *

Even without Sir Masrthain, the resident knights of the Pearl Palace, once disciplined, were still the same.

As soon as Seongjin entered the gymnasium, they rumbled and straightened up the ranks, and everyone greeted with a loud voice.

"Greetings to the Third Prince!"

"Uh, good job everyone."

Until recently, it was a little awkward because they were fighting without words. Seongjin smiled shyly and headed to the corner of the gymnasium.

Let's start the day clean with meditation.

Before sitting down and meditating, as a habit, check the ripples of the aura inside his chest. After that, he felt something calming down.

Breathe slowly and begin tracking the flow of Aura. The minute flow that seeps into the body through the inhalation and gathers in the lower abdomen.

The circulation in which it circulates here and there along the core in the lower abdomen and then spreads throughout the body.

And, like when absorbing the spirit of monsters in the past, he spread the Aura evenly to the skeleton, muscle fibers, and even the skin.

Marthain said that he shouldn't just try to forcefully twist the flow of Aura. Of course, that didn't mean to let the Aura flow on its own.

He was told to guide the direction gently on a line that does not go against the flow and lead to the lower abdomen. Also, when you draw out Aura from the core, do not disturb its natural flow and flow it from the center to the periphery like water.

That is, flowing from where enough is needed to where it is needed.

In the past, when absorbing the spirit of monsters, Seongjin did not try to move the flow of spirit itself. He just clearly recognized what to strengthen with it and where the flow should be.

Maybe Aura management is similar to this? Is it necessary to twist the flowing water with force?

All he needed was to draw the flow where it fell short. To do so, it was to accurately recognize the desired place. It was what he desperately wanted from the absence of Aura. It was to materialize that wish into a clear image.

Isn't that what it means to go to the place where the heart goes?

There is something to refer to the words of the Holy Emperor.
Sungjin thought.

Above all, the sense of controlling the flow of the huge Aura that the Holy Emperor had experienced not long ago was still vivid in Seongjin's memory. Recalling the refreshing flow, he tried to collect the energy that spread and pull it to the core.

A gentle wind was blowing around Seongjin before he knew it, but he didn't realize it. The fact that some of the knights who were training were looking at him with surprised eyes.

Round and round. It's fun to see the gathered Aura quickly create a round orbit. Even if he does not try to press together with force, the flows drawing round and round circles gradually converge to the critical angle on their own and eventually form a layer.

One, and another.

A small smile appeared on Seongjin's lips as he sat with his eyes closed.

"I've seen something like that before. So, back in the day, when Lord Baltazar was meditating....."

One of the knights who was watching the scene with a blank face suddenly muttered. It was Maria, a high-ranking knight who requested to be dispatched from the 1st Knights of the Imperial Guard to earn money for alcohol.

All of the resident knights at the gymnasium had stopped practicing and were sitting huddled together watching Seongjin. The low-ranking knight Haven, who was sitting at the end of the line, pouted.

"No, no matter how you do it, are you comparing a beginner to Lord Baltazar?"

"Then have you ever seen anything like that? How does the flow of Aura materialize like that?"

Haven, who was speechless, rolled his eyes wide and reluctantly replied.

"Umm... Like the Aura storm that His Majesty the Holy Emperor caused a while ago?"

And he was stunned by all the knights' ridiculous glares.

His Majesty the Holy Emperor was no match for him.

"Genius....."

All the knights fell silent at a single word that sounded like a sigh that came out of someone's mouth.

Genius.

Until now, no one had spoken out, but everyone thought of it at least once while watching Sir Marthain and the Third Prince training for the past few days.

No matter what method he learns, he quickly masters the movements, the honesty of wielding the sword until he corrects it as soon as he is pointed out, the sword dance that instantly falls into a state of trance and rides on an instinctive rhythm.

And from the moment he sensed Aura, the Aura around his body were being activated at a rapid pace.

In the appearance of the Third Prince, they could never recall the lazy and dull pig from before.

With such a genius talent, why had he been doing such stupid things?

"... Shit!"

One of the young knights sitting at the far end spat out a curse word and then jumped up and left. He had a long, torn scar on one side of his forehead.

Haven tried to grab him in surprise, but Sir Kurt stopped him and shook his head.

"Leave him alone. That guy will have complicated thoughts too."

"But....."

"Wouldn't that be a bit futile? In the end, I wonder why the captain had to leave the Knights like that."

"....."

The rest of the resident knights again began to look at Seongjin and the wind blowing around him in silence.

For a long time, absent-mindedly.

'Is the 5th layer a bit unreasonable at once.....'

How much time had passed, Seongjin sighed and opened his eyes.

He wanted to meditate a little more while he was away, but it didn't seem like the incredibly strong repelling force would be offset so easily.

It will probably take quite a while to make the next layer. As Marthain said, these are things to do slowly over time.

Besides, he wants to wield a wooden sword soon.

Seongjin, who tried to get up thinking that far, was startled for a moment and collapsed again.

When he came to, an angel was squatting in front of him and staring at him.

"... Older Sister?"

Amelia was pretty as always. Her light pink dress and her hair, braided with a red ribbon and pinned up, are neat and pretty. Dressed so cute, she sat on her knees in front of Seongjin, quietly resting her chin and looking at him.

"When did you come? What are you doing here?"

"Yeah, I was thinking of having lunch together and I was watching you meditate. I don't know what it is, but it looks great."

Oh yeah? Seongjin looked around him in a cold sweat.

On one side of the gymnasium, he saw the resident knights training with stiff movements due to nervousness. How long have they been doing this?

Whether or not she knew Seongjin's bewildered feelings, she mumbled with a calm face.

"You become so strong because you train like this."

".....?"

Amelia's clear gray eyes grow dim again.

She often looked at Seongjin and made those eyes. She seems to be staring into the distance, or as if recalling her old memories.

"You're such a great child, Morres."

Seongjin brushed off his seat and burst into laughter.

"Is there anything great to say? I just started what could be called seniority. We still have a long way to go to get it right."

"No, even to me who doesn't know much, it's so extraordinary."

Amelia stood up from her seat holding Seongjin's outstretched hand, and emphasized it once again with a voice full of unfounded confidence.

"Trust me, Morres. You will become incredibly strong in the future."

Well, I don't know why you're so sure, but thank you for believing in me, Older Sister.

"And you'll probably become a cool young knight who looks good in black armor."

Suddenly, why black armor?

"Isn't that the perfect look for the demon of the frontlines? Cold-blooded and heartless."

No, but as a prince of the Holy Empire, being a demon is a bit much.

"The Black Demon of Delcross that makes others tremble in fear just by looking at him. Isn't that wonderful?"

... Uh.

This older sister, who looked like a fairy, seemed to have Second Grade Syndrome2.

T/N:

On a random note, Morres and Amelia calls Nate 아버지, but Herna calls him 성황 아빠 while Gades calls him 아빠 폐하. There's also some moments where Nate was called 아바마마. These kids have so many different ways to refer to the parents I had to make up some new terms in English for it. The way the twins call him, 'dad' would have been more suitable than 'father'. But 'Dad Holy Emperor' and 'His Majesty Dad' sounds a bit weird? At least weirder than using father. On one hand though, using dad instead of father shows how the twins are still very childish. What do you guys think though? Should I just keep using father or should I adjust and change to dad? Let me know in the comments! (Do people even read the T/Ns? lol)

1. They're talking about Seongjin slapping/punching the Demon King to death lolol.

2. Chuunibyou. Quoting Google, "Early teens who have grandiose delusions, who desperately want to stand out, and who have convinced themselves that they have hidden knowledge or secret powers."

"Actually, I also recently went to Lieutenant Dimross to learn how to practice."

Amelia said as she tore the pre-dinner bread.

Recently, at the recommendation of the Holy Emperor, she started studying this and that, and she learned it at the same time.

Sir Dimross is the Lieutenant of the 1st Knights of the Imperial Guard. A mature knight with extensive battlefield experience, he is famous within the imperial palace as a master of spearmanship and the Wirose technique.

If asked who was the strongest swordsman in Delcross except the Holy Emperor, everyone would undoubtedly pick Balthazar, the commander of the 1st Knight of the Imperial Guards.

When he was in full swing on the battlefield, his insolence in breaking through a siege alone on the southern front and wiping out a large army of pagans is still talked about like a legend.

However, it was clear that even Balthazar still was at the level where Dimrose gave him a hand when it came to spearmanship, at least he was at the level of being the strongest on the continent in terms of pure spearmanship.

"But why is Wirose? Sir Marthain said that it is a practice that is a bit burdensome for beginners to learn, right?"

Seongjin stopped chewing the bread and tilted his head.

There is a reason why most of the knights are initiated through the Banahas seniority method. This is because the flow of swordsmanship and the flow of Aura are consistent and intuitive without conflicting parts.

Even if you don't, if you adjust the Aura separately, use your swordsmanship properly, and go back to the direction of the Aura in a hectic state, the introductory difficulty will go up exponentially.

On the other hand, Wirose is different.

-I'm going to say this about the standard martial arts of the Holy Empire, but Wirose is a bit of a sinister martial arts.

Marthain gave such an evaluation with a chewed face.

With one of the most basic thrusting movements, the Aura is sequentially divided into two directions to maximize break-through.

Here, the process of overlaying the Aura on the weapon also basically goes in two directions. When it came to the final movement of spearmanship, only the weapon had to be rotated by overlaying four-direction Aura on it, it was truly a monstrous technique.

This is why it is so rare to find a knight that touches the extreme of Wirose.

Amelia replied in a dejected voice.

"Did I know that beforehand? I just answered spearmanship when Father asked what I want to learn."

Ah, so that's why he attached the strongest spearman.

Since that guy is in the state of turning Aura 'as he pleases', he probably wouldn't have cared too much whether it was in four or ten directions. Do you understand what the difficulties of beginners are in the first place?

"But why are you suddenly using spears? Aren't you usually more familiar with the sword?"

"Umm....."

She looked at Seongjin with strange eyes and smiled.

"Someone I know is good at throwing spears. It was pretty cool, so I wanted to try it too."

With just one flick of the hand, the castle wall crumbles.

The soldiers of the enemy army could only gasp.

As Amelia starts to explain by patting her hands, the escort driver standing behind as well as Edith, who is in the middle of serving meals, look at her with red cheeks. She is just as lovely as her face, they're about to die.

Hey, everyone. Your cute princess is making a radical statement that she wants to blow up the enemy's castle with her own hands. Yes?

"So, I started spearmanship, but even though I practiced it, I had no idea what I was doing. I can't understand Lord Dimrose's explanation at all."

Seongjin was also well aware of how vague the explanation of the martial arts sounded to a beginner who had no knowledge of martial arts and was just beginning to feel his aura.

Even though he said his Aura was depleted, didn't even he, who was a monster hunter with a lot of bones, get lost in Marthain's explanation for a while?

"But seeing you practice today, I thought I discovered something. Ah, I also think that this is training....."

The girl's white cheeks are rosy, and her clear eyes twinkle like stars.

"Somehow, I get the feeling that seniority is going to become more and more fun."

It is the face of someone who is fascinated by something. No matter what this kind of person is passionate about, it is bound to produce results quickly.

Seongjin smiled heartily, thinking that sooner or later Amelia might make a leap forward in seniority. Until he heard the next words that followed.

"I never thought all things for revenge would make life so much fun."

No, Older Sister. Do you really want to learn spearmanship to get revenge?

You say you're going to hit people with the power to break down castles?

He can see the way the escort driver and Edith send support from the bottom of their hearts towards the beautiful girl who is full of enthusiasm.

Without asking, 'Our princess, fighting! I don't know who that person is, but just end them!' You must be thinking about something like that.

All of a sudden, Seongjin felt really sorry for the person who was going to be avenged.

* * *

Sir Masain, who said he would return for the afternoon class, never showed up at the gymnasium after that.

Well, let's review swordsmanship. Seongjin performed a sword dance in order from movement 1 to movement 5 by himself.

But then a strange thing happened. He was excitedly swinging his wooden sword, but unlike before, he felt that something was breaking.

"... Hmm?"

Seongjin tilted his head and tried the 1st and 2nd movements again. He was the hardest to learn and the most confident. Swish swish. Hook.

"... Hmm?"

It was the same anyway. The tempo he had been accustomed to before was subtly twisted, which hindered his successive development of his movements. Why is this happening all of a sudden?

Hmm? Uh? What?

He lost his way and was wielding one expression over and over again, when someone cautiously spoke to him from the side.

"... That, Prince Morres. You shouldn't weave Aura together like that. If you don't develop the basics of seniority first, the connection between the layers will go wrong."

Seongjin turned his head.

The one who spoke to him was the resident knight with whom he was quite acquainted. He remember thinking that his small body and slightly protruding front teeth gave him the impression that he would be shy.

He suddenly pointed it out, but he was even more startled and hurriedly shut his mouth. He stopped the training that the other knights were doing and focused his gaze here.

"Ah, I am very sorry! I don't know, I will stop... interfering with your training....."

"Oh, no, it's not like that. But what about you?"

"Yes, Your Highness! I am Haven from the 3rd Knights of the Imperial Guard!"

The knight quickly put his hand on his chest and lowered his head. However, what Seongjin paid attention to was something else.

"So, that... Did you say weave Aura?"

Seongjin stood next to him and slowly went through the movement 1. He tilts his head and unfold it once more.

The knight who introduced himself as Haven reflexively trembled whenever Seongjin swung his wooden sword. It was as if he thought he would strike him down with a wooden sword at any moment.

"... Seriously?"

Seongjin understood the knight's words only after repeating the first movement three times.

After haphazardly forming the 4th layer during morning meditation, the Aura flow was now strong enough to have a tangible effect on the movement. That's why Marthain said that the section where the introductory training for seniority begins is from the 3rd layer.

Unbeknownst to him, he was pouring it into his muscles at will in a way that used the spirit of the old monsters. So the movements get awkward and the beat gets twisted.

Seongjin smiled broadly at the knight who was still cowering nervously.

"Did you say Sir Haven? Aren't you amazing? I didn't even know that I was leaking Aura, how did you find out?"

Haven blinked his eyes involuntarily at the feeling that the gymnasium suddenly brightened.

The Third Prince, who always looked fat, was a boy who laughed quite a lot.

"That, there are often people who neglect the basics of seniority and get over it, but later their movements get twisted. It goes wrong starting with movements 1 and 2. You can see it in action. This is a common mistake made by inexperienced squires."

Haven was diligently explaining to Seongjin without even realizing it. The appearance of being nervous about being hit by one was already gone.

"Ah, that's why you knew I was shedding freely! I went to Aura again and I could see it."

"How do you see the Aura flowing through your body when it's not external air? If you just move the Aura correctly, the motion will change a little, so everyone sees it and corrects it."

"Right. Do you know how to shed your Aura just by looking at your movements....."

Seongjin nodded.

"That means you have a high understanding of each movements, right? As expected, people who are at the level of imperial palace knights are amazing."

He was genuinely in admiration.

To be honest, until now, he had been ignoring the resident knights because they were mediocre. He thought it would be worth trying to some extent without an Aura as long as his physical strength recovered a little.

However, even these low-level knights had very specialized knowledge about Aura training and swordsmanship. It is the moment when the resident knights are seen again.

A proud look passed across Haven's face for a moment, as if he had heard the quiet admiration, like talking to himself.

"Then, how should I practice from now on? The layers suddenly increased today, so I haven't learned how to weave them properly from Sir Marthain yet."

Before he had a sense of Aura, he had heard how to weave a couple of shapes for a while, but there was no way he could hold a proper movement with it. Should he wait for Marthain.....

Haven flinched at Seongjin's question, but someone else's voice interrupted from behind.

"Binding the Aura to the core is itself a training. Your Highness."

"You're.....?"

She was a knight with a slightly unfamiliar face. Her long, wheat-colored hair was tied up casually, and her hair was sticking out here and there, but her facial expression was very solemn and looked quite old.

As her face hardened slightly at the careless question, Seongjin quickly apologized.

"I'm sorry if I've met you before. I don't know if you know, but my memory is hazy after I got sick....."

"Oh no, Your Highness! I am Maria of the 1st Knights of the Imperial Guard. It hasn't been long since I was dispatched to the Pearl Palace. My greetings are late."

Judging from how she was waving her hands, it seemed that she was the type whose expression hardened when she was nervous rather than angry.

"So, you bind the Aura?"

"Yes. That's right."

Seeing that her voice cracked high as she answered, Seongjin thought that she must be someone who is more nervous than she looks like she has a lot of experience.

Of course, he didn't realize that most of the tension was because of himself, who was rumored to be trash.

"Well, there is no one who teaches introductory practice as solidly as Sir Marthain. Even if we explain it, it's easy to make strange habits anyway, so I thought it would be better to practice tying the Aura to the core instead....."

According to her explanation, even skilled knights sometimes deliberately train with their Aura tied to the core.

It is a process of clearly recalling before and after weaving Aura to remind them of proper Aura operation, and correcting the basics of swordsmanship, which tends to go wrong depending on the habit of weaving Aura.

In addition, detaining and turning the Aura that tries to circulate throughout the body is itself a training that makes aura management skillful.

"That... Isn't that a great idea?"

Seongjin's eyes shone. If the Aura flows uncontrollably and the movements are twisted, wouldn't it be a natural solution if he deliberately practiced not spilling it as she said?

He stood for a while and contemplated the core. The Aura is spinning well in the lower abdomen.

He lowered the wooden sword a couple of times, trying to keep it there. The Aura that was habitually flowing down his arm was pulled back to the core.

"This....."

It's a bit tricky, but he guessed it will work?

"Thank you, Sir Maria! I will give it a try!"

Seongjin shook her hand brightly and soon immersed himself in a new practice.

Pull with a single pole. The Aura that was habitually spilled all over the body is captured in the core.

The movements that had been cut off began to regain their flow little by little.

Not only the Aura flowing from the core, but even the Aura absorbed through breathing did not spill on his limbs. All Aura that interfere with movement are excluded from swordsmanship.

It was a very new experience. The energies that he had habitually used before came back with a clear form.

In what form and in what order, it was only after completely blocking the Aura that it was more clearly recognized.

Little by little, the layers finally connect completely, and the movement begin to soften like water. Seongjin started to dance with the sword in the rhythm again, in a trance.

All of the resident knights at the gymnasium stopped training and were watching the Third Prince frantically wielding a wooden sword.

"Senior, let's be honest. Were you embarrassed to throw your words away?"

A red-nosed knight asked Maria teasingly.

"I didn't know he could really do that....."

Maria shook her head. She said it in a daze, but she said it was because tying her Aura was never a difficulty that beginners would try.

There were many people who struggled for a long time to release the Aura from the core in a distinct form to their limbs. It is not for nothing that introductory practice is called the realm of talent.

However, as soon as that young prince built more than three layers, he was circulating it naturally through his limbs without knowing that he was spilling it.

In addition, the Aura that has already flowed smoothly is completely tied back to the core?

It was an Aura operation in a higher level than pouring out with a form.

Prince Morres must be a real genius.

Among the resident knights looking at him as if possessed, one young knight with a gloomy face turned around and quietly left the arena.

28

It was late, when the sun had already set and darkness had fallen, when Sir Marthain returned to the Pearl Palace.

Seongjin had just finished dinner and was holding open a picture book he had borrowed from Amelia.

There were a lot of professional books in the library of the Pearl Palace, but when he searched to learn letters, he couldn't find any easy books for children.

It was clear that Queen Lizabeth had not considered that Morres' knowledge level at all when she first created the library.

It was the angelic Princess Amelia who extended a helping hand to Seongjin, who was worried about how to start studying letters.

She treasured all the picture books she read as a child, and willingly lent them to Seongjin, who said he had a fading memory of how to read.

Occasionally, on the day they had lunch together, she would open the picture book and slowly read it to Seongjin. She also listened intently to Seongjin's voice as he stuttered and read it.

-It has been a long-time dream of mine to read books with my family.

To Seongjin, who was apologetic for making her waste time, she smiled as she was rather happy.

Thanks to this, Seongjin had reached the level of reading a simple storybook by himself, albeit at a slow pace.

Well, considering that he told the Holy Emperor that he wanted to read philosophical or religious books, there was still a long way to go.

So today, while eating dessert, he was flipping through a children's book with cute animal pictures on it, when he heard a knocking sound, and Marthain entered the room with a very tired face.

"It is much later than expected. I'm sorry. Your Highness."

Seongjin silently closed the book and looked at him.

Today, Seongjin made a lot of progress in his training. That's why he desperately needed Marthain's advice, but he didn't feel like blaming him when he saw him walking in with a haggard face.

"Okay, you said you had something to look into. Is the job done well?"

Looking at the atmosphere, it doesn't seem like there was much success.

Sure enough, Marthain shook his head with a gloomy face.

The Golden Truth Society, Plague Society of Adelheit, and the Blue Republican Revolutionary Front.

Suspicious organizations that Morres is said to have sponsored.

"First of all, we investigated all the ledgers of the Pearl Palace, which contain records of the use of personal funds, but no records were found about these organizations."

From the morning, he scoured the administrative officer of the Pearl Palace and investigated every detail of sponsorship and donations within five years.

However, only one orphanage and one small theater on Rue Bertrand were the only regular sponsors, and there were only a few cases of occasional sponsorships to relief groups for the poor.

There he considered two possibilities.

First, it is possible that Queen Lizabeth sponsored these organizations in his name on behalf of Morres.

Second, there is a possibility that the imperial palace forces trying to harm Morres sent sponsorship money in his name.

So, from then on, he rushed to the main palace and investigated all the records of funds in the internal affairs department for several years. The secretary in charge and the administrative priests were frightened when they thought that a financial audit would start unexpectedly.

And the result was clean. Most donated to orphanages and poor relief organizations. Occasionally patronage of arts organizations.

At least, funds within the imperial palace had never flowed directly to those suspicious organizations.

"And....."

Seongjin made a tired face. Just by listening to it, I could clearly feel how much Marthain had to shovel today.

"Of course, it is not impossible that among the organizations in the sponsoring records, there are ghost groups that are only on the records, or that the records have been washed several times here....."

Marthain blurted out his words. Judging by the atmosphere, tomorrow he's going to carry out each sponsor list and investigate one by one to see if the organization really exists and whether the funds are properly invested.

No, that's it! Stop it, you stubborn man!

How are you going to investigate it all by yourself?

Seongjin waved his hand and said.

"Sir Marthain, there is no end to that. The Sir only investigated the details of donations and support, but don't you think about the possibility that someone made a false purchase history of expensive items such as art and siphoned off the funds? Are you going to investigate all purchases made to the imperial palace within a few years?"

"....."

"What if they don't have the goods? If it's damaged or sent as a gift somewhere, there's no proof, right? No, they might have just handed over the goods. Or that the artworks in the palace storage are forgeries and the real ones are in the auction house."

Marthain's face turned pale. He doesn't think he'd ever thought of that possibility.

"Or how about this one? What if I listened to someone's request and asked for support in return?"

"... Did you ask for a price!"

Sir Marthain was about to pass out.

No, this guy. It's not that he did it, but it's a possibility.

Well, I'm not sure if Morres really did that.

Seongjin decided to appease Marthain.

He knocks on the sofa and Marthain stumbles over to him and sits down. It was only after Edith handed over the cookies she had left for dessert that he seemed to come back to his senses a bit. That's why he's going to eat some rice.

"Come on, Sir Marthain. What I said is, in the end, a matter of possibility. The odds of it actually happening are extremely low. How could it be normal to siphon off the imperial palace's funds?"

The light slowly began to return to Marthain's eyes, which had been half-fazed.

"In addition, there is something absolutely necessary to realize the aforementioned possibilities. It is the presence of helpers outside the imperial palace."

"That word....."

"Now we don't have to track my money transfer history, but we have to track my social interactions from before."

Seongjin smiled brightly and held out a large tray to Marthain. There was a tray stacked with invitations to invite the Third Prince to social gatherings.

"Now that you're back, would you like to read invitations with me? As you read, explain who these people are."

And he's also studying the spelling at the same time.

Sir Marthain's complexion began to turn black, but Seongjin had nothing to shy away from.

Wouldn't it be enough to be thankful that you prevented the shoveling from starting again tomorrow?

So they hung on sorting invitations until late into the night.

First of all, it can't be a temporary event, but what seems like a regular meeting.

All invitations to personal events, such as birthdays and engagements, were blown.

Gatherings in places too far from the capital were also excluded. Morres' lady-in-waiting said that he rarely left the palace for long periods of time.

Some invitations, such as gatherings focused on noble ladies and academic conferences related to theology, that could be confirmed that they had no contact with Morres were also removed.

After culling the rest, only three invitations remained.

The first caller was Orden Siegsmond. It is a clean, white letter with an old-fashioned border.

"This is Grand Duke Siegsmond. He is the son of the current Marquis of the North, and the grandson of Sir Vincent Siegsmond, who was famous as a great general in the past. He is also famous as the disciple of Balthazar, the best knight on the continent."

The Siegmund family is not a central aristocrat, but they are a great aristocrat that no one can ignore because of their great power.

It is said that the Grand Duke also has a reputation throughout the continent for his outstanding martial arts. It is said that he is regarded as an idol among the young masters of Delcross, such as easily sweeping the championship in martial arts competitions held in several countries.

Every year before the birthday party, he comes to the capital and has a meeting with young masters who follow him.

"Rather than being close friends, I think it's an invitation to all the high-ranking young people in the capital."

Marthain added.

It's a meeting right before the birthday party, so there's still plenty of deadline, so let's put this aside for now.

The second is Ricardo Scarchapino. He is an aristocrat from Ortona and the second son of a wealthy man.

Wait, Scarchapino?

That Scarchapino who is having a marriage talk with Morres?

"Probably the richest family in Delcross. Prince Ricardo is a very gregarious person, and is known for having regular meetings with the children of powerful families."

Correspondence is also brilliant in gold and smells like money.

Discussing the situation on the continent, changes in the economy, and trends in the art world, it must be the most mainstream meeting in Delcross.

It's doubtful that this kind of person really has anything to do with Morres.

Oh, come to think of it.

-Still, you used to go to the town house to see your friend once every two months.

He remembered what Edith had said in passing. Did Morres say that the only friend he interacted with was the young master of Scarchapino? Could it be this person?

Seongjin looked at the invitation once more.

Meeting ten days later. He'd better go here first.

The third caller's name is Kenneth Diggory. He was the fourth son of the second son of Cardinal Digory, head of the administrations.

What? Which position is a bit delicate to say that this is important?

Marthain also tilted his head.

"He's not a well-known figure in the social world, but I didn't know they had regular meetings like this. I heard that he entered the theological academy, but I don't think he made much public appearances after that."

That is to say, he is not well known. Seongjin stroked the smooth black envelope and was lost in thought.

It seems to be a somewhat inferior meeting to invite the prince, but considering the prince's reputation as a trash, it seems that Morres will be treated as a human being only at this level.

Most of all, the last phrase in the letter bothered him.

-The prince's old friend, Jonathan McCalpen, is also looking forward to seeing you again.

Did Morres have any other friends besides the young master of Scarchapino?

"Does Sir know this person named Jonathan?"

At Seongjin's question, Marthain shook his head.

"Sorry. I don't know the details of his personal connections. At least he is not a well-known person in the social world."

"Hmm, I mean....."

The meeting is just three days later. It's the fastest, should he just that he's getting some fresh air?

Until then, Seongjin thought so lightly.

Time passed smoothly after that.

Marthain, who beat the unsuitable detective role, returned to the gymnasium the next day. He looked at his disciple, who had built to the fourth layers at once while he was gone, all dumbfounded, and then sighed.

"No, why is someone who can do this well until now....."

Sir Marthain, didn't you already say something like that before?

Well, it's not that he can't understand his feelings. Hunter Lee Seongjin has to be a bit amazing.

Anyway, the long-awaited introductory process of Aura practice has finally begun.

As soon as Seongjin started class, he thought that he would be able to wield a sword while freely spilling his Aura.

However, he had to revise his thoughts right away, because Sir Marthain taught meticulously, slowly pointing out each movement.

Even if you think you've mastered one type, you don't immediately move on to the next one, just repeat it until it's fully absorbed in your body.

He doesn't know if he teaches well, but he knows that he pursues perfection in his movements to the point where there is no time to develop bad habits.

They said that it would be boring once they entered the initiation, but even Seongjin, who had a history of repeated training, progressed so slowly that it was frustrating. He practiced for two days with less meditation, but he still couldn't get out of movement 1!

Of course, the resident knights who were using the gymnasium together had different opinions.

"Prince, the progress is really fast."

To Seongjin, who was about to vent his anger, Sir Kurt spoke as if to soothe him.

"At this rate, movements 1 and 2 will all be finished within a week, right? Then you will graduate from the basics."

Is that so?

Sir Kurt was one of the few high-ranking knights, and he had a serious personality who did not usually say empty words. His words are quite trustworthy.

"Me, Your Highness. I entered as a squire! I only had movement 1 in 4 months! But considering the average of the knights, it's not even slow!"

Sir Marthain was so harsh that he almost deserted at that time.

Sir Claudia, whose round face and freckles were her charm point, pouted.

In the meantime, Seongjin has slowly made friends with other knights besides Maria and Haven. More than half of the knights who volunteered to earn money from here and there were mostly casual and cheerful.

Occasionally, as in the beginning, there were people who glared at him with contempt, but considering Morres' reputation in the past, that might be appropriate. Seongjin decided to ignore the slight rudeness.

While he practiced in the gymnasium and occasionally read children's books, time passed quickly, and the day of the meeting arrived.

With Sir Marthain and Sir Kurt as escorts, Seongjin left for a quiet residential area on the outskirts of the capital. Even back then, it was a light-hearted outing.

That was until five or six young men in black robes greeted him all at once.

"Welcome to the meeting of the Black Prophets."

Seongjin involuntarily stopped breathing.

Another dubious eccentric group was here!

29

On the morning of Kenneth Diggory's meeting, Seongjin meditated at the gymnasium as always and devoted himself to one movement.

After training a little earlier than usual, he took a shower and got ready to go out.

In the meantime, there had been one more major clothing repair, but no one would be able to look at Seongjin and think of the old fat boy.

The limbs that had not yet grown were elongated without any flab, and good-looking muscles were firmly established here and there in the body where the fat had disappeared.

Seongjin smiled happily at the suit that was quite sleek.

Looking at it this way, isn't Morres a pretty handsome guy? Well, the genes of the parents of good boys and girls don't go anywhere.

With only two men, Sir Marthain and Sir Kurt, as escorts, Seongjin rode the carriage toward the meeting place on the outskirts of the capital. Until then, he had the mindset of going lightly to get some fresh air.

The carriage left the city center, up and down a couple of hills, and began passing sparsely run-down mansions. The wagon rattled badly because of the poor road surface.

"It's not a neighborhood where the capital's aristocrats usually stay. I can't believe there are social gatherings in a place like this."

Looking at the slightly dreary old houses, Sir Marthain made an impression. He said then he should have known something was wrong.

Not long after, Seongjin and his party arrived at a huge mansion that was, to put it mildly, antique, and objectively looked like a ghost would pop out at any moment. The garden, apparently untouched by the gardener, was overgrown with overgrowth, and withered ivy completely covered the fence and the mansion.

"....."

"Is it right where people live?"

There was a rare look of nervousness on Sir Kurt's face, who was always gentle.

They were looking for an abandoned house, but soon a servant appeared from the entrance and escorted them into the mansion.

The party arrived at the banquet hall after walking for a long time through the old corridors that were not properly cleaned and were covered with spider webs. Anxiety that something is going wrong grows little by little.

The escort knights were stopped at the entrance of the venue, but Seongjin shook his head quietly at Marthain, who was about to protest. Still, they've come this far, so shouldn't they at least check what kind of meeting it is?

Besides, just in case, Seongjin wore a sword borrowed from the armory around his waist.

Even though he is a beginner in swordsmanship, he is a monster hunter with decades of fighting experience. He was confident that at least one part of his body would be taken out no matter what happened.

Creak.

The door opens with a heavy sound, and soon the whole view of the banquet hall comes in at a glance.

Seongjin, who entered the room, flinched at the moment.

It was because six young men wearing black hooded robes pulled down to their noses all stood up from their seats and approached him.

Even in broad daylight, the banquet hall is covered with thick curtains and does not let in any light. In the middle was a single large mahogany table.

Under the dimly lit candles here and there, the long shadows of young men stretch out in various directions and sway gloomily.

What? What's this the gloomy group that look like they will launch a demon summoning circle right now?

"Welcome to the meeting of the Black Prophets."

The young man at the forefront takes off his hood and says.

he wondered where this might be the head of the demon worshipers, but the exposed face was more normal than he thought and had a good impression.

The young face, which seems to have barely passed the terms and conditions, is handsome and sincere. What the hell is a guy like a church brother doing here?

"I have heard a lot about you. My name is Kenneth Diggory. It's an honor to meet you, Your Highness."

The greeting voice is obviously polite, but he doesn't even take a simple short bow toward Seongjin.

It seemed to be left to be seen whether they looked down on Morres, or whether the group itself was in an atmosphere of excluding excessive greetings.

Seongjin nodded without answering and looked around the rest of the people. Seeing the generally calm reactions, it seemed that no one was actually acquainted with Morres.

Oh, except for the guy on the far left over there.

When Seongjin's eyes met, that chubby robe was visibly embarrassed and flustered.

Maybe it's that guy? The link between this organization and Morres.

"I've heard a lot about you too. It's a pleasure to meet you, Kenneth."

After briefly greeting the hooded young man, Seongjin opened his arms as he approached the chubby robe.

"Jonathan, Jonathan McCalpen!"

He smiled brightly and squeezed the shoulder of the guy who was slowly backing away.

It's you right? Where are you going to run to? The culprit who lured Morres to such a suspicious organization.

Seongjin put one arm around Jonathan's shoulder, who was trembling, and smiled as he looked around at the rest of the crowd.

"Now then, I want to introduce you guys formally, right?"

Seongjin, who had a few words with the members of the Black Prophets, learned surprising facts.

First, these six black-robed young men, including Kenneth, were all classmates at the Theological Academy, or seniors and juniors. Jonathan McCalpen is also two years Kenneth's junior.

"The priests do not try to explain the questions that arise to anyone. They just tell you to believe, and keep suppressing those who don't!"

"... Aah, that's right. It's bad to force people to blindly believe in something for no reason."

"So the religious indoctrination and oppression that has covered this continent is preventing people from escaping from the swamp of ignorance. What do you think, Your Highness?"

"Oh, I think it's a real problem."

"Exactly!"

What the hell is the normal curriculum for, why are these kids so angry?

Is this okay? Holy Imperial Theological Academy?

Second, most of them were bloodlines of wealthy high-ranking priests in Delcross, a theocratic society. It's just that they are collateral, or even direct, or they are alienated bastards who are hit by many children and don't get attention.

Yeah, like Kenneth, the fourth son of the second son.

"The theocratic society is an outdated social structure that has fallen far behind the times. Look at the many kingdoms and principalities that have been subjugated to Delcross! They do their best to keep the cardinal sent from Delcross out of politics. What about the result? Look at the brilliantly developed countries like Rohan and Brittany!"

"... Of course. It is right that religion and politics should be separated. Naturally."

Rather than attempting to separate theocracy, it was probably to avoid Delcross' interference in internal affairs.

"This current situation in which direct descendants of high-ranking clergymen inherit high-ranking positions regardless of their ability! If we can't break this link, the future of Delcross will never be bright!"

Seeing the guy clad in black spouting overheated eloquence while swinging his arm, Seongjin just nodded quietly.

That was right. It's just that he's benefited from being a high-ranking priest's family, but he looks even more angry because he's not in the line of succession.

Thirdly, Seongjin assumed that Jonathan had seduced the idiot Morres, but in reality, Morres had been begging Jonathan McCalpen to introduce him to this group for about a year.

No, did you really do something useless like that? This trash!

"Due to the nature of our gathering, it was virtually impossible to invite the prince of the Holy Empire to this place. I think you will fully understand how much pressure we are feeling right now."

Kenneth spoke in a calm tone, occasionally glancing at him as if examining his temper.

"But you said you were close friends with Jonathan, a member. We also had to take into account that you have not spared a lot of financial support for the activities of our Black Prophets over the past year."

Seongjin almost opened his mouth wide in surprise.

Were there any other organizations that Morres supported?

"So, the members' opinions came together that it would be difficult to ignore the prince's request to visit the meeting any longer."

Jonathan, who is sitting next to him, begins to become visibly restless. Seongjin narrowed his eyes and glared at him.

He thinks he found at least one outside helper who stole the palace funds, but he thought he'd have to take a closer look at him once he got out of here.

"To confess now, I may have secretly believed in the many bad rumors surrounding the prince. Our friend Jonathan is also shy, so it's a bit difficult to solve misunderstandings....."

Jonathan's face is now pale.

Guess he wasn't very active in introducing Morres to this organization. Well, those rumors were all true, so he can't really blame him.

"However, seeing the prince in person like this today, I realized once again how foolish our prejudice was."

"Yes, even our members, who claim to be prophets to dispel the ignorance of prejudice, have not been completely free from gossip."

"I am deeply reflecting."

"Couldn't you say that you are the only one of the members of the Holy Imperial Family who can properly see the twists and turns of this empire!"

As soon as he hurriedly cheered for something, it seemed that the members' liking for Seongjin had risen significantly.

And fourth. In fact, what he found out earlier was nothing compared to this.

"There was a long hesitation before meeting the prince, but today our members made a decision here."

At Kenneth's calm declaration, the other four members, except for Jonathan, put their black hoods down to their noses again. Jonathan belatedly put down his hood, but his chubby face was clear that he wanted to cry.

"I am going to officially accept Prince Morres, who is working hard to bring a new future to the continent, as a member of the Black Prophets!"

The black robes nodded in unison. One of them held out the same black robe to Seongjin.

"Uh... I appreciate your decision."

Seongjin hurriedly put on a robe to hide his embarrassed expression.

"Well then, Prince. Please prepare your heart."

Kenneth puts on his hood, speaking in a solemn voice.

"Now, as a Black Prophet, it is time to enter into the mysteries of this world."

"....."

Seongjin's mind was becoming infinitely more complex now.

Aren't they just young people with Second Grade Syndrome who are a little dissatisfied with society? What else is the mystery of the world?

Kenneth nodded, and a black robe pushed hard against an empty bookshelf in the corner of the venue.

Creak. The bookshelf spun around, and soon a small alcove appeared. It was a secret space with a dark staircase leading down to the basement.

This is where the atmosphere gets really weird.

Soon, the Black Prophets holding small candles began to descend the basement stairs in a row. Seongjin was caught in the middle of the heat, unable to do this or that, and had no choice but to follow them in silence.

Occasionally stroking the hilt of the sword hidden under his robe, Seongjin descended the seemingly endless narrow staircase.

The lightless stairs became increasingly dark, and it was uneasy to rely on small candles, but before long, small green moss began to appear around them.

At the end of the stairs, a damp stone wall covered with moss soon follows. There were a lot of green spores floating around that gave off a strange glow, and Seongjin had to try hard not to inhale them.

They walked for a long time along the passage lined with stone walls.

The passage widened little by little and eventually ended in front of a huge stone wall. When the group paused at the large door in the middle of the stone wall, Kenneth, who was walking the furthest behind, slowly approached the door and turned toward Seongjin.

"Behold, Prince."

As he pushed the door back, Kenneth's gaze was fixed on Seongjin's face. He spoke to him in a low, slightly exaggerated tone, as if he were performing a play.

"This is the truth that this country hides under the mold of religion, the mystery of the world!"

Creeaak.

Seongjin's eyes widened as the stone gate slowly opened.

That's right. The fourth is the most important.

The fact is that these demon worshipers did indeed summon something into this world.

A large space surrounded by stone walls that looks more like a huge cavity than a room.

In the middle of the space, surrounded by moss and glowing green, a black lump that could only be described as a giant maggot wriggled ominously.

30

'Fuck me.....'

These are the words that came to Jonathan McCalpen's mind as soon as he saw [it].

The last time he saw it three days ago, it was just a black mass the size of a man. It wriggles when you touch it, and occasionally emits a strange moan like 'queaek'.

But what about now? It was bulky enough to occupy more than one-third of the room. It swelled more than six times in a few days. The surface of [it] continues to ripple black as if it were the surface of a stormy lake.

In addition, tentacles or roots extending from [it] were densely entangled in the room like a spider's web. Strangely shining moss that had not been seen before is spread in a deep blue color as if to cover the area around it.

Something is wrong. Something is going very wrong. What the hell has happened here in the past three days?

It wasn't just Jonathan who was surprised. The other prophets are also looking around with bewildered faces, as if this is a sight they have never seen before.

Only Kenneth Diggory, the creator of this surreal landscape, was watching them with a gentle smile.

'I shouldn't have set foot in a place like this in the first place.....'

Jonathan backed away in a cold sweat, but Prince Morres passed him and stepped in front of Kenneth.

"The caterpillar of Bantra Moss. Fortunately, the channel isn't open yet."

He was more calm than expected. His face was a little hardened, Jonathan thought, but he looked a little angry rather than nervous. Maybe it was because of his eyes, which became fiercer after he lost weight.

Prince Morres.

The shame of the Holy Imperial Family, the biggest trash in Delcross.

Compared to the last time they met two months ago, the prince now looked like a completely different person. At first, Jonathan said he was wondering if he was right.

As if it wasn't just his appearance that had changed, he, who would have been making a fuss before looking for Jonathan, is now just quietly moving his eyes and scanning the entire room.

Before long, the gray eyes that met Kenneth again were not fear or astonishment, but pure doubt.

"Why is a monster of Gehenna here?"

Ahahaha. Kenneth laughed loudly and happily.

"You know this? It is as the Sage said! He said that perhaps the prince would be able to share our mysteries with him. Indeed, bringing you here was not a wrong choice!"

"Sage?"

"Yes, soon you will be able to see him too."

Kenneth said that and slowly started walking toward [it]. The roots-like things tangled on the floor wriggled violently as if they were earthworms the moment his feet stepped on them.

"Brothers, chosen prophets. There's nothing to be afraid of! Evidence that our mystery is getting closer to the moment of truth has only now emerged."

Kenneth, coming up close to [it], turned to the prophets and said.

"Everything is according to the prophecy of the Sage."

His hard face was filled with unprecedented confidence, and for a moment Jonathan wondered if he was being overly frightened.

As expected, the members who were not sure what to do and kept an eye on it noticeably regained their stability.

"Everything is according to the prophecy of the Sage."

"Everything is according to the prophecy of the Sage."

Hahahaha.

Loud laughter reverberates through the wide space.

"How lucky you are, prince! Because at this very moment when the mysteries of this world open, you can be with us prophets."

Saying so, Kenneth's eyes had a strange glint in his eyes, like that of a fanatic.

Aah, everything is going crazy. Jonathan sat down on the floor, thinking.

The roots of the monstrous creature that moves little by little. The strange enthusiasm of the prophets, who are trembling with anxiety inside, but expect something to begin.

Only one, the still young Prince Morres, stood at the center of the mess, maintaining his composure.

He opened his mouth to Kenneth in a cold tone.

"Did the Sage say that? That if you only fill it with three people, something will open."

Stop. Kenneth looks back at the prince in amazement. There was a stern expression on his straight face for a moment, but Prince Morres didn't mind and continued.

"It's not the mystery that you guys think about. It's a channel that opens. Coordinates to connect that damn thing's consciousness to its community, a signal to call other bantras here."

"... What?"

"You don't want to reform Delcross, but you want to destroy it?"

For a moment, Kenneth Diggory's face contorted terribly.

"What are you talking about!"

"I'm saying that Sage deceived you."

"Nonsense! Such nonsense.....!"

Shaking his body, Kenneth began to lash out at the prince. He, who was a promising student at the academy, now looked like a madman who had completely lost his rationality.

"Are you going to deny the mysteries of this world! Are you with those hypocritical priests! I didn't mean to call you here! After all, you are also the blood of that filthy Holy Emperor!"

However, even in the face of the violent rage aimed directly at him, the prince's gaze did not waver in the slightest.

"Then answer me. Kenneth."

Jonathan found out for the first time that a person's pupils could look colder than the metal on a sword blade.

"Didn't you really throw people at it as food?"

What?

For a moment, Jonathan's mind went blank after hearing the unbelievable words.

People? What?

Then, as if cold water had seeped in, his head, which slowly returned to reason, began to think.

Was there really no price to pay for a black mass underground that had not seen any change for almost a year suddenly grow so big in a matter of days?

Come to think of it, where did the servant who stood guarding the door whenever he visited this stone chamber go?

Why didn't the maid who cleaned the conference room of the prophets every time brought tea to them today?

The expression disappears from Kenneth Diggory's horribly distorted face like the ebb tide. Jonathan could see the answer he didn't want to know in his face.

"... This crazy!"

One of the prophets threw off his hood and shouted at Kenneth. It was Astley Vecher, the junior who first founded the Black Prophets' Association with him.

"You fed that thing? Are you insane, senior?"

"... What?"

Kenneth, whose expression had completely disappeared from his face, stared at Astley with only his eyes wide open. Jonathan got goosebumps because it looked like explosives on the verge of exploding.

"How can we bet that such an obscure thing is really the mystery we are looking for? It's just the words of the Sage! But throwing people in there? Is that true?"

"....."

"Calm down, Senior Kenneth! Didn't I always say that the Sage is suspicious somewhere?"

Astley stepped right in front of Kenneth and he grabbed Astley's black robe almost simultaneously.

"... Kuck!"

Kenneth Diggory smiled softly at the junior who struggled while being grabbed by the collar.

"If you've always had so many questions, why didn't you tell me earlier? Astley. I have no choice but to give you the first chance to encounter the mystery."

"... What!"

Astley's face went pale. Instinctively, he knew what Kenneth was up to.

Sure enough, he dragged his junior by the collar and started to move towards the ominous mass.

"Three people. He said it would take three lives to open the door of truth."

"Wa, wait.....!!"

"I have nothing to say. Now, as a member of the proud Prophets, please be the final key to completing this great moment."

Jonathan gritted his teeth as he looked at Astley, who struggled and was being dragged helplessly.

It's a thing has grown enormously in just a few days. he had no idea what that thing would become if it ate one more person.

He needs to stop it... But there is no strength in his legs.

It was then that Prince Morres opened his mouth.

"Sorry, but."

Schwing. A well-honed sword was pulled out from within the black robe.

"No matter what you do, that channel won't open."

Jonathan looked at his face casually and was at a loss for words.

The prince showed his teeth and smiled.

A light wind blew from the tip of the sword held upright, and at that moment the prince kicked the ground.

* * *

Crash-

The old mansion shook slightly from the sudden, weak vibration. Marthain and Kurt, who were sitting in the hallway and having a boring time, stood up in amazement.

Crash-

A series of vibrations are transmitted along the floor. Dirt and dust poured from the ceiling.

"... It sounds like it's ringing from the ground?"

Could it be an earthquake?

The two pushed away the servant who tried to dissuade them and hurriedly ran toward the banquet hall. Earthquakes were rare in Delcross, but in preparation for the odds, the prince had to be evacuated from the old mansion.

"Your Highness!"

However, the banquet hall was empty. Soon, Marthain's face contorted when he discovered a secret staircase leading to the basement at the corner of the banquet hall.

"No way....."

Crash-

Vibration rings again. The epicenter is obviously right below the mansion.

The two of them met each other's eyes, and then both of them quickly ran down the stairs.

Queueek!

After inserting several knife needles, the bantra caterpillar wriggled madly and let out a vomit-like scream. It's truly a mystery how a thing that doesn't even have a proper vocal organ can make such a sound.

Because of the rubber-like thick skin, the sword couldn't go very deep, but it struggled to die. Fluffy dust fell from the sturdy stone walls.

Leaving it wriggling as it was, Seongjin dragged Kenneth Diggory's droopy robe.

This guy, is he okay? He forgot the Aura flowing through his body and hit the back of the head as hard as he could, and he felt something unpleasant.

"Hey, don't get distracted there and come out here."

He said to the prophet who was sitting in a daze.

It looks like he still can't get out of the shock of almost becoming food for the caterpillar, but he still wanted to hurry up. If he got accidentally swallowed by the glowing caterpillar, this would be difficult. As it turns into a pupa, the channel will open.

The rest of the prophets had already been pushed out toward the corridor.

He winked at Jonathan, who stumbled up, and fortunately, he was quick-witted and quickly stepped out to help the fallen man. Of course, when he stepped on something like a wriggling tentacle, he was frightened and froze.

"You're okay. It's just like antennae or roots. It's not dangerous yet."

As if he was somewhat relieved by Seongjin's words, he carefully avoided the roots and began to pull out the prophet.

Well, the moment it turns into a chrysalis, it will become a monster tentacle that entwines and kills everything that moves, but if he tells them that now, it will have the opposite effect.

Fortunately, the clever prophet soon recovered from the shock and started walking on his own feet, and the party worked together to drag Kenneth Diggory out of the stone wall room.

"Now take this guy upstairs. Go and call my escorts."

Jonathan looked at him in surprise at Seongjin's words.

"Yes? How about the prince?"

"I have to do something with that guy first."

Jonathan made a very moved face, wondering what he was thinking about Seongjin's answer.

No, it's not like that. It's not what you think.

He could have waited for Sir Marthain and Sir Kurt to come here, but Seongjin decided to try his hand first.

Although the final nutrient supply to become a pupa was blocked, there was also a slight possibility that the caterpillar, feeling threatened, could open the channel while undergoing incomplete metamorphosis.

Above all, Hunter Lee Seongjin had never left a wriggling monster alive.

While Jonathan and another prophet supported Kenneth Diggory on both sides, Seongjin grabbed his sword and headed back to the stone-walled room.

"Uh, is blood flowing from Senior Kenneth's nose?"

"Didn't he get hit in the back of the head? Why did his nose bleed when hit from behind?"

"Could it be brain damage....."

It's dangerous here. Get out of here quickly, you guys!

31

Crash crash crash-

The thick tentacles pop up here and there and knocks on the stone wall. The caterpillar, deprived of food and suddenly hit by a blade, switched to the maximum attack posture to exclude the enemy.

Boom.

Seongjin clicked his tongue as he quickly lowered his stance to avoid one of the tentacles that had been swung wide sideways.

If it was Seongjin in his prime, he would have closed the distance in a single step and smashed his core with a single punch, but in his current state, it was not easy to dig into the vicinity of the caterpillar. It is not easy to set foot properly thanks to the roots that have become more wobbly.

Seongjin, who hit a tentacle flying in front of his nose with his sword while turning his body sideways, slid backwards as if he was tumbling back while avoiding the tentacle that flew in behind him. After tapping and beating like this, a sense of crisis came over him that it might really be attempting an incomplete metamorphosis.

If he can only tell where the head is.

Seongjin frowned as he rolled to the side to avoid the successive tentacles.

It looked like chewed gum, but surprisingly, it also had a basic digestive system and nervous system. It has a mouth and eyes, and there is also a part that can be called a head. And in his back of the head is an important organ he needs to break first.

Bartosh. Its official name is the Bartolomeo organ.

It is a transforming organ of the nervous system that is commonly found in clustered monsters.

In the early days of the Gehenna Gate incident, there were times when its own research was actively conducted, such as dissecting monsters and analyzing specimens.

Of course, the research faded after they learned that there was no solution other than killing all the superhumans. It was also the cause that the intellectuals capable of systematic research died one by one.

Anyway, after it was known that the transparent coffin-like crystal found in the back of the monster was a channeling organ, the hunters first learned the location of Bartosh and how to break it when they first went hunting.

It was because the difficulty of hunting doubled when the demonic spirits launched a linked attack through channeling.

'For now, let's shave off the covered flesh as much as possible.'

Seongjin made up his mind as he cut off the two long-shot tentacles with one sword. If most of that rubber clay-like mass of flesh comes off, you will be able to tell where the head is.

Fortunately, the blade of the sword he was holding was quite good, so there was no great difficulty in cutting the outer skin of the caterpillar.

Of course, some of the knights' supplies were of good quality, but there was no way they could easily cut through that thick monster's flesh with just a simple piece of metal. This was possible because the blade was covered with Aura.

Seongjin didn't recognize it properly, but he was overlaying Aura on the blade as a trick to deal with the monster's spirit.

'Somehow, I think my cutting skills have improved compared to before?'

Is it the effect of formally learning swordsmanship?

While he was vaguely thinking about that, he was trimming the small roots of the caterpillar, when he heard urgent footsteps in the distance, and Marthain ran into the room.

"Your Highness!"

Marthain's eyes widened as he ran inside screaming vigorously. It was because the prince was swinging his sword as he hopped between things that looked like turbulent black dough.

Sir Kurt, who ran into the room after him, also found Seongjin and the caterpillar, and opened his mouth with a stupid face. His jaw dropped.

Seongjin ran quickly towards the entrance of the room. The caterpillar sensed a new intruder and threw out its huge upper leg with all its might.

Slash.

Fortunately, the movement of the tentacles was not very fast, so he was able to easily cut it before it reached Marthain and Sir Kurt. Seongjin blocked their way and warned them.

"Be careful not to touch that black thing. You'll be pulled towards its torso immediately."

In an instant, his body was pulled back in a roar. Marthain grabbed Seongjin by the hem of his robe and quickly pulled him backwards.

With a stiff face, he got between Seongjin and the caterpillar and drew his sword.

Sir Kurt, who came to his senses, also pulled out his sword and reflexively slashed one of the upper limbs.

"... What is that?"

"It's the caterpillar of Bantra Moss! It's a monster!"

"A monster? What is it? Is it different from seawater?"

It might be different? First of all, monsters don't exist in this world.

Just as he straightened his sword again and was about to run towards the caterpillar, a sudden strong grip grabbed his shoulder and his body swung to the side. It was Marthain who turned Seongjin around, but he had an ugly face that seemed like he would shout at him at any moment.

"What the hell are you doing here when something like that comes out?"

No, why do you think it's my fault, Sir Marthain?

This is unfair! This thing was raised by Kenneth Diggory! I don't even know where it came from!

Meanwhile, Sir Kurt shouted as he gallantly charged at the caterpillar.

"Is it okay to slash them all, Your Highness?"

"Ah! Watch out.....!"

Sir Kurt, who was running towards the center of the caterpillar while dodging the tentacles, stepped back in a moment of fright. A round mouth suddenly appeared in the center of his torso.

A large opening with two rows of hideous hook-like teeth quickly engaged, making a terrifying grinding sound. Snap!

Sir Kurt, who almost jumped into the caterpillar's mouth in an instant, muttered like a groan.

"Good lord....."

Marthain quickly ran to the side of Sir Kurt and cut down one of the tentacles aiming at him. In the meantime, the caterpillar's mouth disappears again into the black flesh, as if it had never appeared before.

Seongjin poked his head out over the entrance of the stone wall and gave a belated instruction.

"Sometimes a mouth protrudes from the middle of the torso! If you get bitten and it gets even a little bit of nourishment, you might turn into a chrysalis, so be careful!"

"... Is that a creature with something like a mouth, Your Highness?"

Marthain asked with a pale face.

What, are you surprised with the mouth?

Seong-jin suddenly became very curious about how they would react if they were asked to accurately find and destroy only the 5 cm diameter organ attached to the end of the central nervous system that passes through the caterpillar's larynx.

The caterpillar's resistance was persistent. It was noticeably slower than the first time, but still a large number of tentacles flew in nonstop.

Seongjin, whose body was itchy, tried to enter the room hesitantly, taking advantage of the confusion, but Marthain, who managed to notice this, glared at him with fierce eyes.

Sheesh. Okay, got it. He'll stay put.

How did Lee Seongjin, the last hunter of mankind, end up like this?

It must have been their first time dealing with monsters, but they were still considered advanced knights. Marthain and Sir Kurt quickly adapted to the indiscriminate attacks of the tentacles and wielded their swords skillfully.

Their swords had a distinct external air that could be clearly distinguished even in Seongjin's eyes, so the power itself was different from his clumsy swordsmanship.

With a sharp swing, three or four pupae were blown away, and the caterpillar's body itself, which was a short distance away, began to be cut apart.

However, it seemed that it rather aroused a sense of crisis in this monster. Seongjin swallowed, noticing that the caterpillar was occasionally shaking as if it had been electrocuted. That's a signal to try incomplete metamorphosis!

"We need to quickly find and destroy his core! Sir Marthain! Sir Kurt!"

At Seongjin's cry, the faces of the two change into grotesque expressions.

Yes? Pick something out of that rotten dough and attack?

But he doesn't have time to elaborate.

"Can you deal one blow so strong that the outer skin is pushed out at once?"

It is difficult to distinguish because it is wrapped in a thick outer shell that is highly deformable, but once the outer layer is pushed out, that caterpillar also has a certain structure with a distinct structure.

If only the head was briefly exposed with a strong attack, Seongjin was confident that he could immediately smash the Bartosh. Of course, it would be perfect if the attack destroyed the core at once.

"Strong attack... you say?"

Marthain's face became serious. When he suddenly stopped moving, the quick-witted Sir Kurt started covering the caterpillar and Marthain by blocking it.

Whoosh.

As Marthain concentrated his mind, the blade of the sword began to faintly vomit sword blades. The Aura slowly rising from the blade seemed to become more and more distinct, and then the air surrounding the blade grew stronger.

Then, what slowly appeared was an Aura Blade that shone bright gold.

It shines brightly, embodying the blade of a clean sword that extends an inch longer than his sword.

He said that he was ahead of the Decaron Knight, and indeed, even among the imperial knights, those who had reached it were able to be counted by hand.

Holding that long golden sword, he took a step forward.

Slash.

For a moment, he swung it so fast that it seemed like there was a solid yellow line horizontally. It was a silent blow without even a sound.

Kwakwakwakwa!

Masain was holding the sword, but belatedly, a strong shock wave rushed in. The stone wall shakes as if it were going to collapse, and the fragments of the cut off tentacles are thrown here and there.

It was a great power comparable to Seongjin's fist in his prime. The thick outer skin of the monster is pushed back in an instant, revealing the outline of a caterpillar covered in a thin rubber film.

It wasn't just the skin that was pushed out. Marthain's attack cut off the caterpillar's hideous snout as well as about a third of its body at once.

Unfortunately, the long, horizontally cut sword narrowly missed the core. It must have been unavoidable because it was a sword attack wielded without a clear goal.

And Seongjin did not miss the light that began to flicker brightly from the side of his head. He drew his sword and ran towards the caterpillar's head.

"Your Highness!"

Seongjin jumped on top of the caterpillar's head, leaving Marthain's startled cry behind, and stabbed the blade of the sword precisely at the point where the body joint and the back of the head were connected.

The outer skin that had already been pushed back returned to its original position and the flickering light was covered in an instant, but his long experience was able to accurately pinpoint the Bartosh's location.

Thump.

The familiar feeling of something like a hard coffin colliding with the tip of the sword was transmitted.

However, the depth of the attack was a little too shallow to completely destroy it in one blow. It must have been because the amount of Aura he was using was too small.

Today, Lee Seongjin loses face several times.

"Sir Marthain! Destroy its core!"

Crack.

Seongjin shouted as he pushed Aura into the sword and stabbed it a little deeper. I felt a crack in the Bartosh, but it was too soon to be relieved. In order to completely block the channeling attempt, you also need to destroy the core and completely get rid of it.

Fortunately, the caterpillar, which had part of its body blown away by Marthain's attack, did not completely cover the glowing core even though it was covered with an outer shell. Sir Kurt instinctively thrusts his sword down toward a faintly glowing spot within his torso.

Crack.

At that moment, the caterpillar started shaking like crazy.

"Your Highness!"

Screeeech!

Along with the voice of Marthain screaming, the agony of a caterpillar that vomits out that it is dying shakes the inside of the stone chamber.

Seongjin gave strength to the sword embedded in it and held on on top of its head with his teeth clenched. Will the Bartholomeo organ get destroyed, or the core completely deactivated first? He couldn't be a little bit off guard until it was completely silent.

Slither.

Something started to wrap around Seongjin's body. These are the roots of the thing that started to become active as the pupae progressed.

Beeeeeep. Its outer skin trembles with strange tinnitus.

Gurgle. Suddenly, the eyes of the round guy are exposed outside the skin, and those pupils are focused on Seongjin.

The sword-embedded Bartosh blinked.

The pale blue light confined to its core also flickers.

Blink. Blink.

And.

The caterpillar stopped moving completely at some point.

In an instant, like a lie, the surrounding is enveloped in silence.

"... Heuk!"

Seongjin let out the breath he had been holding back.

It was close. The channel was just about to open.

Ironically, it was the roots of the Bantra that were wrapped around here and there that supported Seongjin's body, which almost slipped due to loss of strength in his legs.

"Your Highness!"

"Are you okay, Your Highness!"

Marthain and Sir Kurt rushed towards Seongjin. In particular,

Marthain's face was completely white, and it looked as if he would run out of breath at any moment.

It's not worth the worry. Seongjin waved his hand at them frantically.

"I'm... Okay."

It was then that Seongjin's ears caught a strange sound.

[... Seongjin... Lee Seong...]

'.....?'

At first, he wasn't sure. Who in this world knows Seongjin and calls him by his name?

[Lee... Seongjin.....]

But really, somewhere, he hears a voice calling his name.

Seongjin looked around and suddenly looked down.

It is the Bartosh with his sword embedded in it. A monster's channeling organ with a hazy light hovering around it.

[Lee Seongjin.....]

Beyond the organ of the Bantra, where there was still a faint light, something was calling for Seongjin.

32

"Your Highness!"

"Are you okay, Your Highness!"

The young prince, who was performing a feat of stabbing the monster body with a sword as if he were in a rodeo, exhaled.

"I'm... okay."

Kurt clicked his tongue. He thought he wasn't a normal human from the time he went to and from the gymnasium, but where did that persistence come from, sticking a sword in its neck until his opponent died?

Besides, look. Those calm eyes, as if that was nothing.

Anyone who sees him will think that he is an old war veteran who has mastered seawater subjugation.

Rather, it was Sir Marthain, the commander of the knights, who had a pale face while tearing off the unpleasant tentacles that were wrapped around the prince's body with his hands.

Where did all the momentum that he used to beat the resident knights go? Can that be solved by hand?

Kurt raised his sword and cut off several tough tentacles that were pulling the prince's body.

He doesn't know what happened, but it was settled anyway. That's what he thought.

So when the prince's body suddenly fell forward, Kurt didn't immediately realize what had happened.

"... Your Highness?"

Sir Marthain, who had accidentally received Prince Morres, who had suddenly collapsed into his arms, called out to him in dismay. His voice became desperate after examining the prince's condition for a moment.

"Your Highness!"

Sensing unusual energy, Kurt quickly cut off the remaining tentacles and knelt down towards him.

"What happened, Sir Marthain?"

"Sir Kurt....."

Sir Marthain's face, looking up at him, was blank, as if his soul had been drained.

"... His Highness is not breathing."

* * *

[Lee Seongjin.....]

It was a call he could never ignore.

[Lee Seongjin.....]

Before Seongjin could even recognize it, he responded to the sound.

No, rather than a response, it was just that his soul reacted to it automatically. As if he reflexively listen to every sound that calls him without being conscious of it.

Whoosh.

He feels a strange sense of floating, and his consciousness is quickly separated from reality. A dull sensation as if he is submerged in water and looking at the sky through a huge screen of water.

-Your Highness?

It seemed that Marthain's voice could be heard in the ringing ears, but it went away in an instant.

His vision suddenly distorted, and at that moment, his soul began to be sucked into something helplessly.

Uh... I, seem to have messed up?

Seongjin realized that his soul had left Morres' body. Compared to the fear of being exorcised by a high-ranking priest or the Holy Emperor in the past, it was a really futile ending worthy of a sigh.

So easily?

No matter how possessive it is, can the soul escape the body so easily?

Passing through the thick clouds and the warm fog at great speed, his soul was flying in the dark night sky before he knew it.

Music sounds from somewhere. The small notes that looked like a music box or a xylophone suddenly became five separate lines and began to stretch. Seongjin couldn't tell whether he was listening or watching.

[Lee Seongjin.....]

The faint voice calling him continues.

He doesn't even know how to get back to Morres anyway, so let's focus on what's right in front of him. When Seongjin decided to listen to his voice, the soul that responded to his will now began to run at an incredibly fast speed.

He flew like a shot through a cluster of stars. The stars twinkling in the distance start to grow long like the teeth of a comb.

Even though he was flying directly, Seongjin felt dumbfounded. It must be a lot farther away than it looks, but it stretches like this. He had no great knowledge of physics or astronomy, but if this was space, he was already flying at a speed far exceeding the speed of light.

After all, he don't need to study or anything. After death, everything becomes clear like this.

How much time has passed.

The last sparsely connected star disappeared, and now his soul was floating in an infinitely deep black space. Seongjin's soul trembled in instinctive fear that his existence itself would disappear.

It wasn't that there was darkness there, it was so black because there was nothing there. Was complete absence so piercingly cold?

If it had not been for the faint light that surrounded his soul, if it had not been for that call that seemed to be cut off, Seongjin's soul might have lost its strength and froze and shattered at any moment.

And there it was.

A small light that looks precarious like a candle that will go out at any moment.

[Lee Seongjin.....]

A small soul that now looked like a handful of dust was flickering red, occasionally letting out Lee Seongjin's name like a sigh.

That's right. There is no other person who called him by his name other than this one.

Seongjin, who felt a little pity for his ungainly figure that seemed to fly away at any moment if he blew it, carefully wrapped his hands around the demon king's soul.

Well, he doesn't have a body, so he doesn't know if it's okay to call it a hand.

[Lee... Seongjin?]

Suddenly, enveloped in unexpected warmth, his soul flashed a faint red light rapidly. The strange feeling was conveyed intact.

[Yeah.]

[Lee Seongjin?]

[That's right.]

[Really Lee Seongjin?]

You bastard, if you call me one more time, I'll throw you away.

As if his fierce will had been conveyed, the demon king's soul trembled for a moment. And then the next thing he spit out is this.

[Why are you here?]

What, punk? Is that what the person who called me here should say?

However, the feeling of crying came from the demon king's soul.

[You should call me there! What would we do if you were summoned here?]

[.....]

[We're doomed. Now we are done.]

Then why are you calling me incessantly? I was fine, and then suddenly flew away.

The Demon King sniffled at Seongjin's grumbling.

[I couldn't help it. This is a space of nothingness where everything is scattered in an instant. If it hadn't been for the barrier by the Holy Emperor, I would have disappeared the moment I flew here.]

He said that his spirit was kept alive thanks to the Holy Emperor. Seongjin nodded his head as he looked at the group of white lights surrounding him. Guess this was the barrier.

Of course, it was the Holy Emperor who blew this guy to this place, but now it seems that he is just grateful, so there is no need to remind him on purpose.

[Now, the only bond that holds my soul is you. So I had to constantly remind myself of your name by repeating it over and over again.

Otherwise, my soul would have been scattered long ago.]

[.....]

[I don't know how long I've been here either. The concept of time is also strange here.]

So he kept crying. The demon king didn't say anything, but Seongjin could feel what he had swallowed. Remembering the sorrowful cries he heard from time to time in his sleep, he felt a bit salty.

And surprisingly, the words that the demon king spat out one after another were apologies to Seongjin.

[Sorry. I didn't mean to bring you in on purpose.]

[Uh.....]

Seongjin didn't know what to answer for a moment. He thought this guy would just set fire to him and stick to him, saying 'I won't go alone, kuhuhuhu'?

However, the only feeling conveyed from the demon king is pure guilt.

In the end, Seongjin gave a rough answer like, "Oh, well," and soon shut up. The two of them wandered around in the dark space without speaking for a while.

Surprisingly, the immense fear of being weighed down by the emptiness that he felt when he first came here felt a little diluted just by having someone to share his thoughts with. Seongjin, who had been watching the demon king's soul occasionally blink in red light, suddenly muttered to himself.

[What will happen to Morres if I fly here like this?]

[Since the soul is gone, wouldn't he have died as it is?]

Aah, yes. He really is dead. He feels a little sorry for Sir Marthain and Sir Kurt, who followed him as an escort.

While he was thinking that, his heart became strangely calm.

The demon king seemed to feel the same way.

[Originally, it was going to be like this from the beginning. Our souls should have flown here wrapped in flames. It should have been scattered and died a complete death.]

[Oh. I see.]

He said that the Flames of Gehenna suddenly evolved and brought them to the Main World. At first, the memory of the demon flying to the void and talking about something is vague.

[We haven't completely left the Main World where Morres was yet. This place is similar to the boundary between the dimension and the void.]

No one was listening, but suddenly the demon king lowered his voice and whispered.

[I didn't come here, but in fact, the Main World Delcross belongs to is going to be in great danger soon.]

What does that mean all of a sudden.

Could it be that, like Sigurd District 34, the Gate to the Demon World will open?

However, the demon king's explanation was a bit serious.

[High-ranking demon lords and lords of the alien dimension are paying attention to this place. Occasionally, I feel the frightening eyes staring at Delcross intently.]

The demon king's soul trembled with fear.

According to his explanation, the souls of the owners of the gaze have such a high level of soul that even if they attract attention, their souls will be crushed flat. That was why he broke down and lowered his voice.

Had it not been for the barrier of the Holy Emperor, the demon lord's soul would have perished long ago just by indirectly feeling that gaze.

[I don't even know their names, and even if I did, I couldn't say it out loud. However, I do know a little about some high-ranking demon lords.]

According to the Demon King's explanation, it was like this.

Unlike the rulers of the alien dimension who open the gate like Gehenna and look for opportunities to invade directly, those high-ranking demon kings are said to enjoy spreading their attributes in that world and subtly infiltrating it.

Before the invasion starts in earnest, the entire world is trampled on and ruined.

And their nature was the real problem.

[They are the Lords of 'Famine' and 'Plague', and 'War' and 'Death', respectively.]

Oh. They sound like a lot of trouble just by listening to them.

Doesn't that mean famine, plague, war, and death are going to unfold on a large scale in this world?

And when the disaster swept through once like that, the next time the high-ranking demon kings and alien monarchs would directly open the gate and attack. What kind of total mess is this?

The demon king's soul shone brightly. If he had a body, it would feel like tilting his head.

[In fact, I've never seen so much attention focused on a single world.]

He knows very well that it is going to perish desperately as much as there is interest in it.

[When will the invasion begin?]

[Who knows? Because they are guys whose concept of time is very different from that of the human world.]

Seongjin got a little serious. It was only for a while, but it was a world he had been attached to while living as a Prince of Delcross, but he didn't want to let it perish like Seongjin's old world.

The faces of Sir Marthain, Queen Elizabeth, Edith, Amelia, the twins, Sir Kurt, and the other resident knights of the Pearl Palace pass by.

And Father, His Majesty the Holy Emperor.

Does he know about this?

[Come to think of it, that's what I'm wondering about.....]

Seongjin suddenly became curious.

[Isn't there definitely a God in this dimension? Why does God stand by such an invasion?]

Seongjin was originally close to an atheist in his world, but rather than saying he didn't believe in God, it was closer to not being interested in the existence itself at all. He would die too busy fighting monsters, so he was not in the mood to cling to something with no clear evidence.

Well, among his colleagues, there were devout believers who devoted themselves to prayer the more difficult it was.

But this world was different.

There is a certain proof of God called divine power, and there is the Holy Emperor called the representative of God.

In addition, Seongjin now realizes the existence of the soul, and he also learned about the beings who seem to be in an adversarial relationship with God.

At this point, it becomes rather difficult to remain a pseudo-atheist any longer.

[But why does the God who takes care of this dimension only look at those guys looking for opportunities?]

Seongjin asked the demon king a question, but the answer came from an unexpected place.

[It is because the Main God who takes care of Delcross is not a personal god, son.]

Yes?

Seongjin looked back and saw a form, wrapped in bright light, staring at him with arms crossed. The light surrounding him is spreading so widely that the souls of Seongjin and the demon king are buried in the light.

Suddenly, Seongjin realized that the cold that pierced his soul had gone.

[You said you wanted to study theology and philosophy, didn't you? You don't know anything at all.]

Uh.....

Why is this man here?

33

The boundary between the world of Delcross and the void.

In the depths of the darkness, where the void was so vast that all presence was crushed, a soul that boasted a most radiant presence suddenly appeared.

It was the Holy Emperor. It's the Holy Emperor... right?

Seongjin had to doubt his eyes for a while at his unexpected appearance – Although he couldn't be sure that he saw with his eyes because he was in a spirit state.

He was the same as the Holy Emperor that Seongjin knew. A calm face as always, a long white court robe draped casually like a cape in a comfortable outfit.

The only difference is that everything is wrapped in dazzling white light. The light was so overwhelming that the demon king's soul died again and collapsed into Seongjin's arms.

In addition, there is something like a golden crown floating above his head. It was an unusual crown with sharp golden thorns stretching out in a circle.

When he sees it shining brightly, he wonders if it is a halo or something.

Somehow, the Holy Emperor with a very holy aura appeared, and he was scolding Seongjin for not studying.

[You are the prince of the Holy Empire. Shouldn't you at least have the minimum knowledge of the Main God worshiped by the empire?]

In addition, this man, for some reason, his expression was more diverse than usual. Looking at Seongjin, the expression of pity is revealed without filtering on his face.

Uh, is this really the time to nag?

[And if this happens, couldn't you call me on your own? It shouldn't have taken too long to find you.]

[That, I mean.....]

[I told you not to cause trouble. I don't know where you got that fearless attitude from... Tsk.]

He clicked his tongue. This man just clicked his tongue!

Normally, he had a poker face that made it impossible to know what he was thinking, but the Holy Emperor in his soul state was somehow overly honest in expressing emotions.

But anyway, Seongjin felt unfair.

[No, Father, Your Majesty the Holy Emperor. Even though I died suddenly like this, I still protected Delcross from the threat of demons! I stopped the Bantra Moss from rushing into the capital in droves!]

Right. At least, a gate incident was about to happen in Delcross.

At this point, isn't it worth taking pride in that he behaved shamelessly as a prince?

[That... Well done.]

The momentum of the Holy Emperor has softened a little. His gaze briefly turned to the trembling red soul fragment hiding in Seongjin's arms.

A disapproving look passed by, but he didn't say anything about the demon king. Seongjin, feeling pricked for no reason, hugged him a little deeper as if hiding the insignificant soul.

[That said, isn't it a problem that you left your body like this? Thanks to that, I also had to leave suddenly, which became a very awkward situation.]

As the Holy Emperor slightly frowned, Seongjin asked in a puzzled way.

[What situation? Aren't you in the prayer room right now?]

Then he hummed. He pretends to clear his throat and averts his gaze.

This man, what are you doing right now, throwing away all your schedules?

Oh, come to think of it, isn't it just good timing? Seongjin thought.

When I asked if he could see my soul, he said, "Do you want to die?" But didn't I just die?

The last time he came and got caught in a storm, he was too flustered to ask, but Seongjin thought he should point it out clearly this time. It is clear that he obviously knows Seongjin's identity, but how long is he going to treat him as his own little son?

[That, Your Majesty the Holy Emperor. Can you tell me what my soul looks like now?]

[.....]

[How did you know I died suddenly? How did you find me so quickly after flying to the boundary of the void again?]

Even Seongjin, who had no concept of dimensions, could tell that the distance from Delcross to this place was unimaginably far away. There is no way that it would be possible to find the soul of Seongjin, who had flown on its own, by searching here and there blindly.

He stared blankly at Seongjin for a moment, then put on a sullen expression and kept his mouth shut.

What is it that you don't want to say?

It was then. The fact that the demon king, who was hiding in Seongjin's arms, conveyed the feeling of terrible fear as if his breath stopped.

They're looking here.

[What the hell.....]

In an instant, the Holy Emperor's robe wrapped in light covered Seongjin's head.

Looking at him with a puzzled expression, not knowing why, the Holy Emperor turned his head and stared somewhere far away with cool eyes.

Is it too much for Seongjin to feel that his face looks rather pale, even though he is a soul?

[You've been here too long. It drew unnecessary attention.]

As soon as he finished speaking, Seongjin felt it too. A deep gaze that scans them somewhere.

It rides leisurely as if a bug is crawling on the skin, and each touch is as sharp as being stabbed with a sword. The weight of that awfully pure malice made him choke.

Is this the gaze of those high-ranking demon kings and alien monarchs? It was said that the soul would be flattened with just the gaze, but the gaze of monarchs of different ranks was so heavy.

Even though he was surrounded and protected by the light of the Holy Emperor, the touch was so vivid that he was horrified, and Seongjin was gnashing his teeth to control his trembling soul without realizing it.

[It's still one guy, but more guys will come soon. We can't delay any longer.]

In the words of the Holy Emperor, he felt a rare feeling of nervousness.

Seongjin realized. This person, he knew that this world was targeted.

[Go now. Don't worry too much about Marthain.]

The Holy Emperor raises the corner of his mouth, and puts his thumb and middle finger on Seongjin's forehead as if he were about to flick it. Seongjin instinctively prepared for the shock and grabbed the demon king tightly in his arms.

[Go back. [Morres].]

Snap.

* * *

Something like water droplets dripped down his cheeks. Huh? What is this?

Besides, why does his body keep shaking like this? Shake shake.

Kuek. It hurts! It hurts so much. Stop. Sto.....

"... Keugh!"

When something like a small scream leaked from Seongjin's throat, the shaking of his body stopped for a moment.

"Your, Your Highness!"

"Your Highness!"

Cough cough. Seongjin bent over and coughed several times.

What? His heart really hurts like crazy. He thinks it hurt less than this when he was kicked by a monster in the past and his entire ribcage collapsed.

He heard someone whispering cautiously next to him.

"Sir Marthain, isn't his ribs broken again?"

Uh, Sir Kurt? What's that? Again? Againn?

He thinks he just heard something he can never overlook?

Seongjin, who had wrapped his chest and rolled over to ease the pain for a while, finally lifted his head and looked around. The pain was so great that even tears welled up in his eyes, blurring his vision.

The place where he lay was just outside the stone chamber where he caught the caterpillar of Bantra Moss. Inside the entrance, you can see a black mass and tentacle roots that have lost their strength and have dried up and twisted.

And there were quite a number of people surrounding Seongjin who was lying down.

Sir Marthain, Sir Kurt, and one paladin he's never seen before.

And in the back, a group of people in shining silver armor.....

Among them, the paladin standing right next to Seongjin lowered his stance and raised his hand over his chest. He was a tall man wearing short armor and wearing glasses, and although his sharp eyes made him feel sorry for him at first, he seemed to have a very bad temper.

Soon, a white light seemed to wrap around his hand, and the chest pain subsided in an instant.

"How many times has this been, Marthain? You guys don't have a proper line. If you had done CPR twice, his ribcage would be completely crushed."

Okay. This is all because of Sir Marthain.

Wanting to say something, Seongjin looked up at him and was at a loss for words.

Marthain had a face that had gone out of his soul. He rolled up his sleeves to press on his ribcage and held his hands together, staring blankly at Seongjin.

He had been performing CPR for so long that he was sweating and breathing heavily, as if he had just sprinted through the gymnasium.

Above all, his face is a mess of tears or sweat. What the hell is that like for a grown adult?

Uh... If it's like this, what am I supposed to say?

I'm the one who had my rib broken, so why do I feel like I should apologize?

"Ahem, ahem....."

All eyes were drawn to the sudden sound of clearing coughs from behind.

Among the knights in silver armor lined up behind them, a man who seemed to be the leader took a step forward and opened his mouth to Seongjin's group.

"Now that the prince has woken up safely, would it be all right if we, the Knights of Saint Marcias¹, take it over from here?"

He was an elderly knight in splendid silver armor. His oddly angular forehead, sunken eyes, and thin mouth that looks a bit cunning catch his eyes.

Above all, his eyes. Those cold eyes that glanced down at Seongjin were too full of malice to say that they were directed at the prince of the Holy Imperial Family.

"The prince is the main suspect in this case. Therefore, he, like the other suspects, must go through a fair interrogation process....."

Is that something to say to the prince who died and came back to life?

As if Seongjin wasn't the only one who had such thoughts, Marthain's face, which had been expressionless until then, slowly began to look ugly.

"How dare you say this his face!"

Marthain growled at him with a grimly contorted face. Not only the old knight, but even Seongjin flinched at the eerie killing intent that spread in an instant.

Some of the knights lined up unwittingly reacted and pulled out their swords. Schwing, Schwing.

Schwing.

Sir Marthain and Sir Kurt also pull out their swords while blocking Seongjin's way. In an instant, the air around them froze tight.

An volatile situation.

Fortunately, someone quickly intervened between Marthain and the old knight. It was the paladin who seemed to have a bad personality from earlier.

"Sir Durand."

He raised his hand slightly toward Marthain, immediately lifted his glasses once, and opened his mouth to the old knight. Perhaps because he was so tall, he looked down at the old knight, but because of his impression, he somehow seemed to look down on his opponent.

"As you know, all religious and legal issues that arise with Prince Morres are entrusted to the leader of the Knights of Saint Aurelion in the absence of His Majesty the Holy Emperor. This also includes the Heresy Court's right to investigate and prosecute."

The old knight called Durand replied with a dissatisfied face.

"Regardless of the legality of the exception, Sir Katrina is currently absent. Isn't she assisting with His Majesty's closed prayer?"

"And in Sir Katrina's absence, the authority is to pass to her lieutenant, Francis Argen."

"... What?"

The old knight's face crumpled terribly.

"Therefore, unfortunately, the demand to hand over the prince's recruits cannot be established in the first place. It is purely my prerogative to decide now whether or not to see him as a suspect."

Durand shouted in a fit of fuss.

"Sir Francis! You are not an Inquisitor, but a mere lieutenant, recklessly trying to infringe on the Heresy Court's inherent authority?"

"What....."

The young paladin laughed and spit out a magical sentence that could overcome any situation.

"This is His Majesty the Holy Emperor's command....."

"Such a cheeky bastard!"

The old knight's eyes were burning with anger. His hand went to his waist as if he were going to draw a sword at any moment, and Francis calmly searched his chest and handed out a letter.

"He said that it could come to this and told me to deliver it to Sir Durand directly."

Durand hesitates and accepts the letter. It was an enforcement official issued through the formal certification process of the administration. And in the official document, there was only one sentence written in a beautiful handwriting.

-Don't be too mean and wait for me.

Durand's hands trembled, but he couldn't carelessly throw away the letter. It was because on one side of the letter, there was even a large jade seal stamped on it.

"This... This is impossible! I will tell this to Cardinal Benitus right now!"

"Don't worry about that."

Francis said plaintively, pulling up his glasses. From Seongjin's point of view, he seemed to be on his side, but he was a talented person who looked very hateful even from his side.

"Without a single misspelling, an official document with the same contents should have already reached Cardinal Benitus by now."

"Kuaaaghh!"

Seongjin, who turned his eyes away from the old knight who let out a roar of anger into the air, relaxed his body and closed his eyes.

Oh, who cares. Settle it yourself.

First of all, too many things happened today.

'Hey, are you all right?'

[... Yeah.]

When he asked a question, a small response came back.

While flying back to Morres' body, he was worried that he might have dropped him, but fortunately, the demon king's soul seemed to have returned safely with him. Seongjin smiled a little relieved at the presence of a familiar soul that felt like before.

Rest a little for now.

When he wakes up later, he will ask him what his name is.

* * *

At the same time, in a slash-and-burn village in the corner of a mountain range on the west side of the continent.

The Holy Emperor, Nate, wakes up and was disappointed to find himself surrounded by a group of savage bandits.

'They really left me behind.....'

"Runing away, you bastard? Come on, fess up! Who the hell is behind this! Are you Asein's spy after all?"

"Is there a snitch here? If you don't fess it up, things won't look good for you, you bastard!"

A bandit grabbed him by the collar and pulled him up, tapping his sharp dagger on his cheek, threatening him.

Nate let out a quiet sigh.

T/N:

1. Changing it back from 'Holy Knights of X' to 'Knights of Saint X' because belatedly realized that's a more accurate translation. Sorry for the confusion.

34

On the western side of the continent lies a long, rugged mountain range stretching from the south to the north.

This lengthy range starts from the border between the kingdom of Flanders and the Asein Republic, passing through Rohan, climbing northwards, and getting increasingly treacherous until it ultimately becomes the boundary of the habitat of the sea beasts.

In the past, it was called by various names like the White Eagle Range or the Blade Range, but now, the people of the continent simply referred to this colossal range as the 'Western Range.'

At the beginning of the Western Range, near the Flanders kingdom border, there existed a small flower village, established only a few years ago. It was a small village built by a minority of Flanders people who had lost their homeland during the war with the Carthago Republic and sought refuge in the mountains.

Recently, the village population ballooned to nearly a hundred as refugees flowed in from Rohan. Needless to say, there was a severe shortage of housing, supplies, and food.

The transformation of the little flower village into a den of bandits was almost instantaneous.

One reason was that many of the new refugees were former thieves who had fled from Rohan, being chased by the Rohan's suppression squad.

Coming down from the mountain with a few rabbits caught in his traps, having not had much luck with hunting, Aslan noticed a strange carriage parked in the village square.

'It's smaller than usual...'

Aslan asked the man standing next to him, "What did they steal this time?"

"I'm not sure. It seems to be a peddler crossing from Asein to Flanders."

"Ah, really... what are they all doing? This is already the nth time this month. What will they do if the Asein Archduke organizes a suppression squad?"

The man shrugged as Aslan scowled. "Well, what of it? It doesn't seem like a proper merchant, and would Asein really care? They say it was an easy score with no escorts."

Listening to the man, it seemed the peddler and his party were found by a search party scouting the mountain. With just one carriage carrying a sack of food, three prisoners, and two low-ranking mercenaries, they were stealthily slipping out of the old trade route, which merchants seldom use these days. The merchants and mercenaries, upon encountering the bandits, immediately abandoned the carriage and fled.

"There were prisoners?" Aslan asked, puzzled.

Why would a peddler be transporting prisoners across the border?

"They're all guys who received capital punishment. Sometimes, Carthago sells these guys for a cheap price. They put them in the dark mines and make them dig until they die."

The dark mines of Carthago were the absolute worst. It would probably be better for those guys to just die here.

The man said this, shook his head and walked away.

Sure enough, three men were dragged out of the carriage following the sacks of food.

One was completely disfigured with burn marks all over his body, making his face unrecognizable. Another had a hollowed-out eye socket and all of his fingers cut off. Seeing their horrific appearances, Aslan unknowingly furrowed his brows.

The last man, who looked relatively unscathed on the outside, had a dark brand on the back of his head visible above his loose robe. Even from a glimpse, one could tell it was a dreadful brand given by the heresy judge.

The mark of a devil worshipper.

In some sense, he was the worst condemned criminal among the three.

The three were transported to the leader's place.

'They'll probably check their background before they kill them.'
Thinking this, Aslan turned away from the square and left.

Aslan was an orphaned boy from Rohan. He did not know what his parents looked like, and as far as he could remember, he had always lived among a gang of thieves in Rohan. He didn't even know his exact age. From various information picked up from the gang, he could only guess that he was probably not older than 16.

In the rough and uneducated gang, Aslan was a remarkably standout boy. He was naturally calm, intelligent, and quick to learn. He learned various fighting techniques shown by the gang members and helped a hunter-turned-thief, learning how to set traps. One thief, a former village guard falsely accused and on the run, even taught him basic aura manipulation.

There were a few people in the gang who had bad luck and met the gang, but thanks to their useful skills, they survived. People like Seymour, the medicine man, or Gustav, the low-ranking priest. They generally held resentment towards the gang, but they were relatively kind to young Aslan. He soon learned to read and how to harvest medicinal herbs from them.

Not much later, Aslan, despite his young age, held an undeniable position within the gang.

He was the one who led the most companions among the fleeing thieves, setting out for the south early and successfully establishing his own power.

At first, Jerome didn't care much for young Aslan, but as he got to know the various talents that Aslan possessed, he began to grow fond of him. Gradually, he started seeking out Aslan more frequently for various matters. From preparing hangover remedies and simple medicines to organizing a list of stolen goods, there were many problems scattered around that were difficult to solve without Aslan. Among them, included discerning aura users.

He had been mentally preparing himself, assuming that they would be looking for him soon, and sure enough, the leader's confidant called for Aslan. By the time he arrived at Jerome's quarters, two corpses were already being carried out. They were the burned prisoner and the one missing fingers he had seen earlier.

At the gruesome sight of their completely battered faces, Aslan momentarily furrowed his brows before stepping into the shack.

"Those two bastards had their tongues cut out. They just made annoying noises, so I couldn't see any reason to keep them alive." Upon seeing Aslan's face, Jerome explained his unasked actions with an irritated face. Considering they were no longer in a state to work properly, their deaths were an expected course of events.

Jerome was a cruel man. His strength was as formidable as his towering physique, and his fist was quick to fly at the slightest provocation. His wife became crippled from being beaten, and his son became limp-legged after being thrown as a child. Presumably, it was Jerome who had smashed the faces of the two prisoners.

Naturally, Aslan's gaze drifted towards the third prisoner standing before Jerome. He was in a better state than expected. There was fresh blood at the corner of his mouth, suggesting he hadn't escaped being hit, but it was a relatively lenient punishment.

Jerome pointed to the prisoner with his chin and spoke to Aslan, "This guy is an apothecary. He used to be a priest, but was declared a heretic and tried after conducting research on the plague."

In other words, a useful person for our village. The third prisoner's survival rate had exponentially increased.

"Check if this guy is a trained aura user."

Jerome, despite his hasty disposition, said it with an icy demeanor.

Although he's been boldly robbing the trade top these days, Jerome is essentially a cautious man. Even with a prisoner with such a harsh brand, he does not completely rule out the possibility that they could be spies sent from Asein or Flanders.

Aslan approached the prisoner and examined him carefully. The man was taller than he appeared, and his frail body, wrapped in a loose robe, felt typically priest-like. He didn't appear weak, but it seemed difficult to assume he had received professional physical training. Above all, it felt as though the flow of aura around him had almost stopped, a characteristic of those who were extremely weak or bedridden.

"This guy is not an aura user. Rather, his aura is unusually weak for a living person."

Jerome nodded. "Well, if the body of a man who's been through a heretic trial is normal, that would be even stranger."

Aslan, thinking that his task was over and turning to leave, another order stopped him.

"See if his knowledge is really useful by taking him with you."

Ah, Aslan hesitated to respond. He wasn't exactly thrilled about the idea.

Jerome's order to 'take him along' essentially meant that Aslan had to take care of everything from food to sleeping arrangements for him. There was no deadline, and if the prisoner escaped by any chance, the responsibility would entirely fall on Aslan.

"Hmm..."

As he was hesitating to respond, a sharp voice rang out from inside the shack.

"Why bother? Just kill him, father."

A boy with a nervous disposition limped towards them. It was Jerome's son, Kaien, who had been unable to walk properly since he was thrown as a child by the man.

Unlike his robust father, the boy often victimized by violence had a somewhat twisted and frail physique. However, he strongly resembled his father's cruel temperament, and Kaien's face was always distorted with rage towards his surroundings.

Even now, his fierce eyes were full of malice as they roved over the prisoner.

"Why do we need two apothecaries? We already have this guy." He pointed to Aslan with his chin.

"Apothecaries are valuable personnel, Kaien."

Hmph. The boy snorted at his father's answer.

"Ah, father, think about it. Haven't we been robbing the trade top recently? Even if you're worried about the reaction from the Archduke of Asein, a perfect apothecary appears just in time?"

"Hmm....."

"Would you use him when it's creepy? Why do you keep him alive at risk?"

"He's been tried as a heretic and branded. Do you think he's a spy sent by Asein?"

"But why does he look fine to me? Isn't that strange?"

"That's my business, not yours."

"Ah, let's just kill him off. It's simple, isn't it?"

"Shut up. Get lost before I land a punch."

Aslan felt a headache coming on from the nerve-wracking argument between father and son.

Kaien, that bastard, was always hell-bent on killing everyone in sight. Jerome was no different, but Kaien's stubbornness was somehow provoking a sense of rivalry. If a third party was having such a headache over this, the prisoner whose life was hanging by a thread was just blankly observing the father and son's bickering.

"Uh, then I'll take this one with me."

Jerome, with an annoyed look on his face, didn't even bother to look in his direction and just waved his hand dismissively.

Aslan took hold of the hem of the robe of the prisoner, who had been standing still until then, and hurriedly left the shack.

35

The prisoner followed along obediently, as led by Aslan. He was so compliant that Aslan couldn't help but suspect he was planning an escape.

Aslan sneakily glanced at him, but the prisoner's face was so impassive that it was impossible to read any emotion. Not even a trace of relief for being alive or anxiety about what was to come could be found. He had been through the infamous heresy trial; perhaps that had affected his sanity.

"Hey, you should be grateful to be alive. Jerome usually doesn't spare greenhorns who come flowing in like you. He's a man full of suspicion, you see."

The prisoner gave him a sidelong glance before responding. "Well, thanks."

It seemed he was aware that Aslan had willingly taken on this burden for him.

But what's this unexpected sense of camaraderie?

"At least the worst part is over, so as long as you do as told, you won't die so easily. Anyway, let's introduce ourselves. I'm Aslan."

"Nei....."

Nei?

"They call me Bart."

Ah, it's an alias.

Clank clank

The sound of metal clashing echoed loudly each time he moved. The prisoner had thick shackles on both arms, connected by a chain that wasn't very long. It seemed to greatly hinder his movements.

"We're going to have to do something about this first to get anything started....."

Wondering if it would be alright to remove the shackles, Aslan soon shook his head. What good would it do if he escaped? Branded as a devil worshiper, the prisoner wouldn't be able to set foot anywhere on this continent.

Their destination was a blacksmith shop at the edge of the Weapon Village. It had a small furnace and a worn-out anvil. It was questionable whether it should be called a blacksmith shop, but that's what it was.

"I can't remove these." The blacksmith, Max, rubbed his reddened nose as he spoke. He had crawled out from a midday drinking session. "These aren't the kind of shackles made to be unlocked. They've been welded together with heated iron."

Looking at the smooth wrists of the prisoner, the blacksmith cocked his head, "There's no scar from the shackles. Interesting."

Aslan grimaced. Expecting him to walk around the treacherous western mountain range with a shackled man? Who are they trying to kill?

"How can this not be done? I need to send him to pick herbs in the mountains starting tomorrow."

"Well, we could try heating it up in the furnace and hammering it....." Max, holding up a bottle of liquor, shrugged his shoulders.

"And what, risk losing his hands?"

That's a problem. He had asked him to work, but if he lost the ability to work, it would indeed be an issue.

As Aslan pondered alternatives, Bart, the prisoner, was staring blankly at his own shackled wrists. "Who would've thought they'd resort to this....."

His tone suggested it was the first time he had properly noticed the shackles, despite having worn them all along.

His mental state really seemed unstable. The thought of having to manage him gave Aslan a headache unlike any he'd felt before.

For now, they decided to at least cut the chain connecting the shackles. Soon, Max picked up a hefty hammer from a corner of the blacksmith shop and began hammering the chain.

Bang, bang, bang

But the inebriated man's work was terribly clumsy. After nearly smashing the prisoner's hand a few times due to the hammer slipping, Aslan took the hammer away from him.

I'd better do it myself. I can't watch this nerve-racking scene any longer.

Bart, having calmly placed his hands on the anvil, watched their actions with a placid face. He was indeed a man without a sense of urgency.

Holding the hammer and aiming at the chain, Aslan concentrated. The chain wouldn't break with just a few hits, so even though he was a novice, he planned to use Aura to end it quickly. Although he hadn't received proper training and thus wasn't officially qualified, he could channel the Aura he had accumulated into his arm and weapon for a brief moment when he concentrated. Considering he had taught himself this, it was quite a commendable talent.

He took a deep breath and, with a swing at the moment of exhalation, he hit hard.

Screech A sound far different from Max's echoed in the blacksmith shop.

Screech, ding

After hitting it in the same manner a couple more times, one of the chain links shattered with a crackling sound.

Ho-ho. Max, who had taken a sip of his liquor in the meantime, swallowed and admired. "Did you use it?"

Aslan nodded. Max already knew about Aslan's unique talent, as he often had to repair his weapon when Aslan accidentally broke it while clumsily flowing Aura through it.

Surprisingly, Max wasn't the only one who noticed.

"I didn't expect to find an Aura user in a place like this." Bart stood up, rotated his wrist, and then turned to speak to Aslan. It was the first time he had looked directly at Aslan.

"I wouldn't go as far as to say I'm an Aura user," Aslan responded a little awkwardly, inadvertently thinking of Bart's strangely chilly eyes.

"Just hammering away, and you recognized that?" Max, the blacksmith, asked as if amazed, and Aslan silently nodded his head. "Remarkable. This kid pulls off these tricks once in a while, but you're the first one in this village who's realized what he's done."

Then he whispered to Aslan, "What did this guy do before?"

"He was a former priest and a devil worshipper, now an apothecary."

The blacksmith belatedly discovered the mark on the back of Bart's neck and clicked his tongue. "A divine punishment, I suppose. Your life won't be easy." He patted Bart's back as if to console him, shook his bottle, and disappeared into the forge.

From then on, the two wandered around the flower village. It was already too late to do anything else, and it was better to let Bart, who would be living with them from now on, get acquainted with the village structure.

It was also necessary to build some rapport with the villagers. As the village was made up of rough bandits, it was best to avoid the unfortunate incident of Bart being considered suspicious and getting stabbed while wandering around alone.

The villagers were gathered in groups, setting up drinking games or throwing daggers, and chattering. Some of them were also loudly bragging about their plans to raid the regular trade caravan soon.

Although they stared at Bart fiercely, as if to pick a fight as he passed by, they quickly lost interest and turned their heads upon seeing Aslan. This was because they were well aware that Jerome, the boss, appreciated the young boy's talent.

"Do you see the high cliff over there? That's the boundary of this village."

Aslan, who had been living alone since leaving Rohan, felt a little excited, even though explaining this and that was actually tedious.

Bart turned out to be a better conversation partner than expected. Although he did not show a strong reaction to Aslan's words, he had a unique atmosphere that gave the impression of listening carefully.

"If you follow the trail up there, you'll find abandoned fields. They say it used to be a farm just two years ago, but it was completely abandoned when Jerome and his gang settled here last year. I tried to use at least a part of it, but I couldn't dare to start a fire on the mountain alone. Oh, by the way, have you ever farmed before, Bart?"

Bart shook his head.

Well. Although there were black smudges here and there, he basically had a skin that seemed as if it had never seen sunlight before, clean. His hair was also messily growing out but strangely enough, it seemed to be well maintained, with a good texture.

An air of dignity, something that couldn't be completely concealed by his shabby robe, subtly seeped out, leading Aslan to speculate whether Bart, before being judged, might have been a high-ranking clergyman.

"Do you want to try farming?"

Right. Above all, his tone was quite heavy. Even though he didn't look that old.

Aslan shrugged his shoulders in response. "Well, more than that, I've been thinking that I want to live off something other than thievery. The truth is, this place is also precarious because the village is growing too large, and the frequency of the raids is decreasing. At some point, a suppression force will hit here too."

"....."

"But although I think so in my head, I don't actually know how to live that way. I don't know any other way to live because I've been with the band of thieves since I was a child. Still, when I was a child, I tried to do other things, like learning how to hunt and gathering herbs, but the more I learned, the more I got involved with the band of thieves."

"... I see."

"Also, I don't like robbing and killing. The people in the band of thieves said that it was too unfair that only we were being robbed, so we were giving back to the world. But if you think about it, the dead merchants didn't do anything wrong to us, right? So I think I feel guilty. Gustav always told me to live according to my conscience."

"....."

"Ah, Gustav is a priest I used to know. He got caught up in an extermination squad and died."

Thinking of Gustav made Aslan's nose tingle strangely. Aslan, rubbing the bridge of his nose, momentarily wondered why he was even sharing this story.

Meanwhile, Bart, who had been silently listening, looked a bit serious. "Even if you're not familiar with something, you tend to adapt once it hits. It seems there's not much time, so how about going down the mountain now?"

What? Time? Aslan cocked his head. "Well, it's not like I haven't thought about it, but as long as Jerome is here, it will be difficult. Some of the original villagers from this flower village ran down the mountain last year. Do you know what happened to them?"

"....."

"They were arrested by the guards of Flanders and immediately executed."

That's right. It is a difficult task for naive people who have only been digging the ground and living their whole lives to suddenly switch to being thieves at the command of the bandits who came from the outside. Eventually, a few who resisted led their families and secretly went down the mountain.

When Jerome heard the news of their escape, he showed no reaction. He just sneered.

Amazingly, as soon as they arrived near the village, they were arrested by the waiting guards and beheaded on the spot. The reason was that they were heinous criminals, and among them were children who were merely sucking their fingers.

They were not even given the chance to clarify their identity, let alone a moment to comment on the bandits occupying the flower village.

So, Aslan had been suspicious. He thought there might be someone in Flanders's guard who was in cahoots with Jerome. The fact that Jerome was boldly looting the upper echelon seemed plausible enough.

"Now it seems like we won't be able to get away forever. But since I came here, I haven't directly mingled with the looters. Jerome seems dissatisfied with that, but well, it's not like he's so desperate that he needs to borrow the hands of a kid like me. I'm good at hunting, you know."

"Is that so."

"Yes, it may be difficult to completely wash my hands, and I may someday die at the hands of the extermination squad. But while I'm alive, I want to live uprightly."

'Ahahaha. I'm saying all sorts of things to someone I've just met.'

Aslan, feeling somewhat embarrassed, scratched his head and looked up at Bart. He was taken aback for a moment when he saw this stern-faced prisoner looking at him with a slight smile.

Although it was somewhat faint, it was definitely something that could be called a smile.

"You have quite exceptional thoughts for your young age."

Subsequently, a hand lightly came up to Aslan's head.

Pat, pat.

"Uh....."

Aslan didn't know what to say. It felt like he was being treated like an ignorant kid, but it was a compliment, so it wasn't exactly unpleasant. Above all, when was the last time he was treated so purely like a child by an adult?

Aslan, for some reason, engrossed in strange feelings, let Bart's hand be.

And soon afterwards, he was hit in the forehead by the iron chain hanging from the handcuffs.

36

By the time Aslan and Bart had returned to the village square, it was already getting dark. Night comes quickly in the mountains.

"We need to start gathering herbs from the morning tomorrow. We should have at least some results to show to Jerome, so be prepared to hit the mountain early."

Bart was staring pensively toward the top of the mountain.

Good grief, what an emotionless man.

"So should we rest for now? While I find you a place to stay, you can stay in my cabin."

As Aslan, who was leading the way to his dwelling, stopped in his tracks, spotting a figure approaching them.

It was a thin woman with a staggered gait, her face not clearly visible due to the fading light. However, seeing her oddly twisted left arm, Aslan realized who she was.

Marta. Jerome's pitiful wife who suffered daily abuse.

Upon a closer look, she had a face that suggested she might have been extraordinarily beautiful in her youth, but her harsh life in the village and Jerome's violence had aged her beyond her years.

The dark circles under her eyes and her somber expression made her look like a long-term patient who had just recovered from an illness.

In a thin trembling voice, she asked Aslan, "Hey, Aslan. Have you seen my Kaien?"

"Ah, I'm sorry, Marta. I haven't seen him."

"He went out with Jerome. Didn't you hear anything when you came to our house today?"

Aslan seemed to understand why she was anxious. She must be thinking that Jerome has taken Kaien somewhere and is beating him again. Aslan didn't care what happened to the miscreant Kian, but he felt sorry for Marta, who was worried about her son. As he shook his head apologetically, she bit her lip as if about to cry and walked away from them, staggering.

Aslan, unable to take his eyes off her for a while, murmured, "Poor woman. She was brought here in her youth by Jerome and ended up living with him. She's been beaten her whole life. When Jerome loses his temper, it's really no joke. She can't even leave because of her son, her only child..."

However, Bart, who had been staring at the retreating figure of Marta for a while, made an inexplicable remark.

"She's not worried about her son."

"...?"

"You're in danger too, Aslan." Bart turned to him and threw an unexpected question. "Have you ever made an enemy of a boy named Kaien?"

"...What?"

Aslan blinked.

An enemy? Wasn't that guy just universally hated by everyone?

Come to think of it, didn't he always give Aslan a particularly nasty glare as he walked by?

"I'm not sure. Why do you ask all of a sudden...."

Aslan, who was asking in confusion, suddenly shut his mouth because of the chilling sensation that overcame him. It seemed as if Bart's eyes were emitting a strange glow in the darkness. His pupils, which he had thought were a clear gray, now flowed with a strange silvery metallic gleam.

"If you really need to go up that mountain tomorrow, you should be careful and avoid the usual routes."

"....."

There was not even the slightest intention for him to argue back, like asking, 'On what grounds do you, a newcomer to this village say such things?'

It was a strange sensation.

The spine-chilling feeling of standing in front of someone who seemed to see through everything about him. A nauseating feeling settled deep in his core, as though he'd received an order he could not possibly deny.

So the boy could only swallow and nod in agreement.

The next morning, the two of them woke up at the crack of dawn and set off for the mountain.

A little bothered by what Bart had said the day before, Aslan decided to explore beyond the abandoned fields, a place he usually didn't go. As he led Bart through the village square and up the trail to the fields, he felt unusually piercing stares.

".....?"

When the puzzled Aslan turned around, the men who had been staring at them turned their heads and pretended to be busy with their own work. Most of them were part of Jerome's bandit crew that had come from Rohan.

'...What's going on?'

Although they didn't say anything to them and were only staring, it felt suspicious, but he had no choice but to ignore it. Trying his best to ignore the uneasy premonition, Aslan quickened his pace. He needed to hustle to fill his gathering quota while exploring a new area.

As he climbed the unfamiliar mountain trail, Aslan was a bit worried. He had just started working with a new companion, and if his harvest was less than usual, Jerome might be angry enough to kill him to death.

However, that was merely an unfounded fear.

Bart was like a ghost when it came to finding herbs. Strangely, whenever he stared intently at a place, the vicinity would reveal a habitat of valuable medicinal herbs.

Did he have a good sense of smell, even the scent of herbs? Just like a hunting dog?

Aslan, who had been prepared to scour the whole mountain, gaped in disbelief.

The problem was that he was barely any help with the gathering itself. That's because whenever Bart tried to touch the herbs, his heavy shackles and iron chains crushed all the herbs nearby.

And it wasn't just the herbs that suffered. Any slight movement of Bart's hand would leave a deep bruise on his skin due to the thick cuffs. Looking at the quickly scratched marks and densely bruised wrists, Aslan clicked his tongue.

"I'll gather the herbs, you just sit over there."

At his words, Bart slumped down under the shadow of a tree with a gloomy look. It was a little funny to see someone who didn't even blink an eye when Jerome was killing people in front of him or when a blind hammer was flying around his hand, look so deflated.

'Anyway, how on earth his wrist was fine before?'

Fortunately, because the time to find the herbs had been significantly reduced, it seemed that Aslan could gather enough quantity even on his own. With a little more leisure, Aslan initiated a conversation with Bart while busying his hands.

"Bart, you mentioned before that you studied plagues, right? Did you belong to a certain school of thought?"

It was a story he had heard from an apothecary he knew before, Seymour. According to him, among pharmacists, there were some who were interested in the plague itself, so they formed a Plague Society and conducted activities.

The Plague Society had several traditional schools of thought, and the most radical one was said to have undergone a heresy controversy a few years ago, leading to the execution of all its members.

The Demon's Plague Society. Aslan speculated that Bart might have gotten that mark because he was associated with that radical school of thought.

"Were you part of the Demon's Plague Society?"

"Not the Demon's Plague Society, officially, it's full name is Kshantara Plague Society."

Bart replied in a nonchalant tone. He was staring blankly at something with his chin on his knee, but considering his lack of focus, it seemed more like he was lost in thought rather than observing something.

"The Society has always had its share of heretical controversies, but I don't think there's a single society that would get away after digging through all their plague research records in the first place. What brought them down was the internal rift among their members."

According to him, the decisive evidence presented at the trial came from research papers from within the society. it was not uncommon for radical debates to take place within the organization, and two members who had fallen out and had a grudge against each other accused each other.

Well, what a stupid turn of events.

"It was a society that did a lot of good work, and in the end, all the valuable research records were burned. It's a shame."

It seemed somewhat nostalgic, but apparently, he wasn't a member of that society.

"After that incident, most of the Plague Societies went underground. It would probably take quite some time for them to come back to the surface."

"Hmm, I see."

After that, they continued to exchange various stories. Mostly about the herbs they were gathering, and as Jerome expected, Bart was proven to be quite a valuable asset as an apothecary. Even Aslan, who thought he had learned properly from Seymour for a long time, felt that he paled in comparison to the knowledge Bart had about herbs.

"The first pharmacist I learned from was more of a traditionalist. He dedicated his life to revealing the effects and cultivation methods of herbs."

Bart explained in a quiet tone, "It seems that the apothecary who taught you was taught by the Adelheid school, which focuses more on connecting symptoms of the plague and the efficacy of medicine concisely, rather than the knowledge of herbs themselves."

He said that it's also a great school of thought, largely consisting of young apothecarists in the capital. Seymour must have been a better apothecary than he thought.

As the conversation drifted, and before he knew it, it turned into stories of Aslan's past.

Bart listened attentively to Aslan's monologue, especially interested in the story about deer traps commonly used in Rohan. He even murmured admiration at the story of how he'd taught himself to use aura after picking up the basics here and there.

Then, as Aslan was pouring out a tense situation where he was on the run from Rohan's suppression troops,

"Aslan."

Bart suddenly interrupted his speech and called his name.

"We need to return to the village now."

What? They hadn't gathered enough yet?

The midday sun hadn't even reached its zenith yet. However, Aslan quickly gathered his herbs and tools and stood up because Bart, who had gotten up and was looking towards the village, looked serious.

For some reason, there was an undeniable force in the words he said with a serious face.

Moreover, while immersed in the story and busying his hands without rest, they had gathered more than expected.

When they hurriedly moved and reached the village square, a fair number of people were gathered, buzzing.

They were gathered around something, muttering. As Aslan approached, they hardened their faces and glared at him.

"Aslan."

Jerome, who was standing in the middle of the square, called out to him.

"You returned sooner than usual. Did you happen to go near the waterfall today?"

Aslan swallowed hard. The waterfall to the east of the village was a place he often visited to collect silk butterfly grass. There were small traps set up nearby, so he likely should have checked there at some point today.

"I came back early because I needed to check the traps near the waterfall. Today, I wandered behind the fields in the north."

"I see."

As Jerome dryly replied and looked around, a few men nodded. Among them, Aslan could identify the faces of those who were particularly observant of him before they climbed the mountain this morning.

'What's this?'

An ominous feeling crept up on him.

Jerome, who had been scrutinizing Aslan's face, moved and issued orders to the men in the square.

"Scour the area around the falls for signs of the spies. Report back to me on any suspicious behavior today."

"Yes!"

"Yes, boss."

As the majority of the men in the square dispersed, Aslan could finally discern what they had been buzzing about.

It was a corpse. A conspicuously flamboyant member of Jerome's raiding party.

His name was Conrad, if he remembered correctly. He recalled the man boisterously declaring he would raid Asein's regular supplies just yesterday, heavily intoxicated. The man was dead, a dagger stuck in his back, his eyes wide open. One of his ankles was broken and twisted at a weird angle, and all his nails were missing, as if he had been tortur*d.

A spy.

Jerome had definitely said there was a spy.

His body shivered as if cold water had been poured down his spine. He stood in the square, trying to gather his thoughts, when Kaien, Jerome's son who hadn't yet left the scene, hobbled over to him. His usually fierce saembagan¹ eyes were exceptionally bright.

Step by step. Eventually, Kaien, who had hobbled right next to Aslan, twisted his mouth into a smirk, and whispered into Aslan's ear.

"...you're a sharp-eyed bast*rd."

T/N:

1. Sambaegan is a Korean term used to describe eyes that have the sclera (white area) visible on the left, right, and bottom. You may have heard eyes like this referred to by their Japanese name, sanpaku, in the past. Traditionally, sambaegan were thought to represent a physical, physiological, or spiritual unbalance. These days, however, they're recognized for what they are—mysterious, unique, and just as beautiful as any other. Eg: BTS's Taehyung. (cr. Koreaboo).

Martha could never forget the first time she locked eyes with the child.

The young one wrapped in a fur coat stared intently at her without shedding a tear. The child's obsidian eyes seemed so deep and dark, they were like mirrors reflecting not a glimmer of light, as if they were devouring her reflection from their glossy surface and even sucking in her soul.

For a moment, Martha barely restrained the impulse to throw the fur coat away.

"...you're one sharp-eyed bast*rd."

Aslan felt frozen, unable to move a muscle. Kaien's words carried a great deal of implication. He was the one who caused all this, and Aslan was his target.

Could his words be true? If so, how and why?

As Aslan's face hardened, Kaien sneered and walked past him, with a limping gait. Aslan could only watch, mouth shut, as Kaien moved further away from the square. Aslan and Bart were moved to Aslan's shack under the watchful eyes of several bandits. This indicated Jerome's suspicion had not yet cleared.

"We need to check the traps we set..."

"Are the traps the problem right now? Read the room, bast*rd."

At Aslan's words, one of the bandits spat out a glob of spit and locked the door from the outside. It was a clear sign of confinement. Well, it's fortunate that they weren't locked in the makeshift jail used as a village barn.

Drained of strength, Aslan slumped down, leaning against the wall and slid onto the floor of the shack.

"Bart."

Bart, who seemed deep in thought, turned to look at him.

"Did you ask Kaien yesterday if he harbored any resentment?"

"..."

"Do you think this could really all be Kaien's doing?"

Bart's eyes glistened with a strange silvery glow as he looked at Aslan in the dark shack.

"Don't let that kid's words sway you. It's all calculated provocation."

Calculated?

Staring blankly up at Bart, he began to explain in a calm voice.

"The first is to make you doubt him and work hard to clear your own suspicion. As for you, you don't know whether he's responsible or not, and there's no way to confirm it. But if you know someone is framing you, it's easy to fall into another trap by reacting rashly out of a sense of crisis."

"Ahh..."

Indeed. Aslan was contemplating whether Kaien was trying to frame him, and whether he should pursue Kaien out of the shack.

"The second reason is to observe your reaction and see to what extent you are aware of the situation, and whether avoiding major suspicion was pure luck or not."

"..."

What was Aslan's reaction then? Thanks to Bart's warning, he had a sense that something was about to happen, and thus had honestly responded to Kaien's insinuation.

Now, Kaien must be sure that Aslan knows something about the matter.

"...He's a smart kid. Perhaps he had this situation in mind when he persuaded you to take me."

What?

"Persuade... you say?"

As Aslan's eyes widened in surprise, Bart casually tilted his head and responded, "Didn't you say Jerome was a suspicious man? Even when you arrived, he had a stronger intention to kill me. It was the kid's insistence that changed his mind, wasn't it?"

...Was that so?

"Whether it's you or me, if one of us is suspected of being a spy, it works out for him."

Aslan realized that he knew nothing about Kaien.

How did he perceive him until now?

The son of Jerome and Martha. The boy who became a cripple from Jerome's abuse, pouring his rage onto the world. A boy who wanted to kill everyone in the world and who spewed hate at every opportunity. A boy whose existence was nothing but a nuisance to everyone.

But what if every aspect of that behavior was calculated?

"Eh, I mean.... Isn't that too far-fetched?"

Although he tried to brush it off with a hollow laugh, Aslan himself did not sound convinced. If Bart's words were true, then what was Kaien's purpose in behaving this way? No, could he gain anything from this behavior?

Aslan racked his brain for a moment but couldn't think of anything. After all, he couldn't fully comprehend Kaien's words, let alone guess his complicated intentions!

Arrrrrgh.

As Aslan was wildly tousling his hair, Bart glanced at him for a moment before walking over to one side of the shack. He leaned against the wall and closed his eyes.

"These things will sort themselves out with time. You'll be flustered soon, so it's best to rest and save your strength."

He did seem a bit tired.

Aslan instinctively sensed the aura around Bart, but it was still at the level of a dying patient. It was surprising that he had been able to move around the mountain with him since morning with that level of aura.

Ah, speaking of which.

"If there's time, should we treat the wounds first?"

Aslan hurriedly stood up and began gathering medicine bottles from the shelf. These were salves to prevent wounds from worsening and to help bruises heal faster. They were all made by Aslan himself, according to Seymour's special prescription.

Even just trying to move his hand, his wrist felt ragged. It might be better to put something on the inside of the handcuffs. He had just attempted to move his hand when he noticed his wrist had become chafed. Perhaps it would be best to pad something on the inside of the handcuffs.

At first, Bart didn't understand what was going on, merely observing Aslan's actions, but as Aslan approached with a medicine bottle and clean cloth, he finally seemed to understand what was happening.

"Ah, if it's about that...."

He tried to dissuade him belatedly, but Aslan was quicker, grabbing his handcuffs.

"....?"

Aslan, who had been absentmindedly fiddling with the cuffs, widened his eyes in surprise. Bart's wrists were smooth, as if they had never been bruised.

"What?"

He looked at Bart's face, then at his wrist, and then said again.

"What?"

Hmm. Bart averted Aslan's gaze and hid his hand beneath his long robe. "Didn't I mention that I was a priest before becoming an apothecary? It's natural for someone with divine power."

"But, Gustav didn't have this kind of ability?"

Despite being a lower-ranked priest, Gustav was quite a potent wielder of divine power. But even he couldn't recover so quickly without praying fervently and using his divine power. No, even then, it wouldn't have healed this cleanly in an instant.

Besides, hadn't you lost all your divine power while being judged for heresy?

The mark of a demon worshiper was not a regular mark.

A mark indicating that one has been stripped of all blessings from the Lord, and even lost the right to salvation for their soul. An eternal punishment from which one cannot escape, even in death. It was not called the worst punishment and extreme penalty for nothing.

"The Lord pities and takes care of even His lost young believers in such a way."

Aslan's face twisted.

Does that even make sense? Suddenly preaching heresy, you demon worshiper.

"Just to confirm, you aren't a spy disguised as a prisoner...right?"

"...I'm not a spy, but...."

"But?"

"...."

"Ah, seriously! What did I get myself into with Jerome!"

'Just like that. Maybe I should go and poke Jerome about all this.'

For a moment, Aslan glared at Bart with a scowl, then soon let out a sigh, and started wrapping the piece of cloth he brought around Bart's wrist. Bart quietly observed and let him do his thing as Aslan wrapped the cloth thickly around, layer by layer.

Finally, having meticulously tied the knot, Aslan tidied up the medicine bottle, grumbling, "It's better to heal quickly without leaving any scars. But it wouldn't look good to others either."

If someone witnessed a bruise disappearing so quickly, they'd immediately suspect him as a spy. It seemed Bart hadn't considered this, his eyes widening briefly before he nodded.

"Right, thank you."

Aslan suddenly felt strange. He had heard a similar expression of gratitude yesterday, but he felt a subtle difference in its warmth today.

"So...you really aren't a spy?"

"...No."

"The only one who could be a spy is that bast*rd, boss. No doubt about it." A rough-looking bandit growled, rolling up his sleeves.

"He's definitely the one who killed Conrad! If we just get rid of that demon worshiper, everything will be sorted out!"

"He only arrived yesterday. And one of the bodies we found has been dead for at least three days." Jerome waved his hand dismissively, looking annoyed.

"Damn it, why are you making this so complicated!"

"Right, boss. There's nothing wrong with killing a suspicious person in the first place, right?"

"It's weird that he suddenly showed up in the mountains. And it's also weird that he purposely came through the trading route that merchants rarely use, right?"

As his followers' agreement with the man began to increase, Jerome's gaze changed. "Or maybe someone wants to pin the blame on him and get rid of him? Or maybe there's a rat amongst us who needs to shut him up."

"....."

The atmosphere in the hut froze in an instant.

Jerome was a formidable leader. He was so competent that, prior to Rohan's punitive forces sweeping the mountains, he pre-empted by rallying his men and demonstrated his formidable power by migrating south. As a result, his men followed him without any hint of hesitation.

However, he was as suspicious as he was competent. And those who were even slightly suspected by him never lasted long in the band of bandits.

"...Could it be that damned Aslan's doing?"

A bandit, who had been keeping a wary eye, cautiously opened his mouth.

Two bodies had been discovered near flower village the previous night. After midnight, the search party returning to the village found the violently tortured bodies to the east of the village and reported it to Jerome. Those guys had been holed up in the brothel for days, drinking themselves into oblivion after robbing the upper echelons a few days ago, and the village hadn't even noticed their absence.

Jerome and the bandits thought of Aslan first when they saw the bodies. He was the only one who usually roamed the eastern mountain, hunting and gathering medicinal herbs as an excuse. And there had been ominous rumors lately that there were signs of organizing a punitive force from Asein, or that Asein had already sent spies before the punitive operation.

However, Jerome, who had been about to immediately catch and kill Aslan, hesitated due to a snide comment from Kaien, who was teasing from behind.

-Why would that bast*rd do it? Does he have the capability?

At his words, Jerome regained his composure and started to ponder. His habitual suspicions started to creep in.

Come to think of it, why would he do that? Was it something he did alone? If he was killed out of anger right now, wouldn't it leave them without any clues?

So Jerome ordered his men to keep an eye on Aslan's movements. If any decisive evidence or suspicious-looking guys appeared, they planned to take their time, catch the guy, and force all the concealed facts out of him. But today, a new body was found.

Apparently, a dead subordinate was found rolling near the waterfall where Aslan often went, with a dagger stuck in him. The bloodstains on his back were still not dried. However, at that moment, Aslan was seen wandering somewhere completely different. The case was now at a dead end.

"It's got to be him, hasn't it?"

"Didn't he also survive alone in the previous band of bandits? That's suspicious too. Maybe he's colluding with Rohan's punitive forces....."

Leaving the murmuring subordinates alone, Jerome sunk into thought.

Although he was too angry to think yesterday, he could not rule out the possibility that someone who knew where Aslan usually went tried to frame him.

If so, who could it be? Kaien, his son who disliked Aslan, came to mind first.

But yesterday, Kaien ended up dissuading Jerome from killing Aslan.....

Jerome's eyes turned towards Kaien, sitting with his fat face at the back.

Just then, the door of the hut was suddenly flung open.

"Boss! Boss! It's a disaster!"

One of the haggard-looking subordinates rushed towards Jerome and, panting heavily, began to spill out words hurriedly.

"From the cliff, Mrs Martha fell off the cliff, and her condition is....."

".....!"

Jerome sprung up from his seat with a stern face.

38

Martha hailed from a rural town in Rohan, known for producing high-quality grapes.

Her beauty was quite renowned in the area, and the townspeople even speculated that she might soon become the mistress of a lord and live a life of opulence. That was, until a band of bandits transformed her village into a desolate wasteland.

Martha became the woman of Jerome, the leader of the band of bandits.

Though she was unexpectedly forced into a marriage she hadn't chosen, she soon adapted to her new life. Whether laboring under the hot sun in the lord's vineyard or living as the wife of the gang's leader, there wasn't much difference in the hardship she had to endure.

Jerome, despite sometimes losing his temper and resorting to violence, generally cared for the beautiful Martha. However, another misfortune soon struck her. At a time when she was heavily pregnant, she was punched in the abdomen by a drunken Jerome. She collapsed, vomiting blood. She regained consciousness only a day later, but by then she had already miscarried.

Seeing her sitting in the cabin in a daze, Jerome awkwardly watched her. Not long after, he brought her a baby wrapped in a small blanket and dropped it in front of her. It was a handsome baby boy with soft red hair and obsidian-like black eyes.

Martha could never forget the moment her eyes first met the baby's.

The infant, swaddled in the blanket, stared at her without crying. His black eyes, deep and dark like they could reflect no light, seemed to consume the reflection of her own sorrowful state, even seeming to suck away her soul.

It was terrifying. So very terrifying.

Martha felt an immediate impulse to throw the baby away, but a vague fear that the child would retaliate somehow left her paralyzed.

"He's... beautiful," she managed to say, tears streaming down her face as she smiled. Jerome, failing to realize that her tears were born of fear, not joy, looked pleased.

The baby, named Kaien, grew rapidly.

The few women in the village envied Martha as they touched the pretty face of the child, who looked like a porcelain doll. Jerome, too, was satisfied with the quiet child who hardly cried.

The only one who felt uneasy was Martha, who spent most of her time near the child.

Whenever she couldn't feed him on time or catch him when he stumbled while playing, his black eyes would gaze at her emotionlessly, causing her heart to clench with extreme fear.

Whenever a drunken Jerome raised his hand towards Kaien, Martha would throw herself in front of the child, desperately trying to shield him from the blows. The fear of something terrible happening to her from the child if she failed to protect him filled her with baseless anxiety.

Was she going mad? She often questioned her sanity whenever she saw the innocent face of the sleeping child.

Was it because he wasn't her biological child that she couldn't love him enough? She wondered if she was unjustly hating and fearing the intelligent and observant Kaien, who had taken the place of her unborn baby.

However, her anxiety soon turned into reality.

One day, while she was away doing laundry with the other women, Jerome, who had returned home early and sober for once, unexpectedly struck the child. That day, Kaien was thrown against the hut's wall, severely twisting his left knee. Despite the severe injury, which made it impossible for him to walk properly again, Kaien silently stared at Martha as soon as he opened his eyes. His gaze was chilling to the bone.

The next day, a drunken Jerome came home and began to severely beat Martha. It was an unprecedented level of violence. Although his subordinates and the neighboring women eventually pulled him off her, Martha's left elbow was completely ruined that day.

It could have been a coincidence. But when she opened her swollen eyes, Martha came face-to-face with Kaien, who was smiling at her for the first time.

* * *

"I wonder how much he has figured out, huh, Mom?" Martha repeated Kaien's words in a daze.

"I thought that if I sent off an attractive lure, he'd naturally start searching from familiar places. What did I miss? Maybe I should have just left Dad alone as he suggested yesterday?"

Staggering. The path up the cliff was treacherous.

"But if he dies too soon, won't the suspicious Dad unnecessarily start poking around elsewhere? Killing Aslan so easily made me feel nauseous. So, I wanted to buy a day more, but I guess I was too greedy."

Tears flowed down her cheeks uncontrollably. Regardless of Martha's will, her feet faithfully moved towards the edge of the cliff.

"That's why I need you, Mom. If you do this right, everything will be resolved."

She had imagined that her difficult life would someday end, but never in this way...

"I guess you were useful at least once, Mom."

Remembering Kaien's face, smiling at her for the second time, was the last thing she did before her foot hit the edge of the cliff.

* * *

Bang.

Startled by the brusque opening of the door and the rough men barging in, Aslan, who had been dozing against the wall, quickly got up. Bart was already standing, watching the intruders.

Before he could even ask what was happening, one of them commanded with a stern face.

"Get ready. Someone fell off the cliff."

Fell off the cliff? The tall cliff to the west?

That couldn't possibly end well.

That was what Aslan thought, but the intensity in the atmosphere from the men who pushed their way in was far from normal. It seemed that the fallen one was quite important.

Quickly gathering a few trauma medicines, painkillers, and bandages, he headed out of the hut with Bart.

When they arrived at the bottom of the cliff, quite a number of people had already gathered around.

Before he even got to the patient, Aslan realized the person was beyond saving. The patient, whose limbs were twisted in all directions, lay immersed in a pool of their own blood. The smell of blood filled the air.

Only when he got closer did he recognize the person was Martha. Jerome, with his stern face, was quietly looking down at her who was laying there in such a horrific state.

Feeling the silent pressure, Aslan hurried to Martha's side and knelt down.

But no matter how hard he thought, there was nothing he could do. Her skull was shattered as if it had been crushed, she was still breathing, but it didn't seem like she would last long. Her pupils, already out of focus, were flickering randomly.

Bart, who had quietly come up next to him, handed him a small pouch from the herbs he had brought.

After looking at Bart's face once, Aslan took the pouch, struck the flint, and a small flame caught. The pouch filled with medicinal herbs began to burn slowly, emitting a heavy medicinal scent.

"...What is that?"

At Jerome's stifled voice, Aslan answered, "It's a herb with analgesic effects. It will help relieve the pain."

"....."

And they silently stayed by her side.

After some time, her breath completely stopped and her pupils dilated. Jerome closed Martha's eyes with his own hands and kept his hand on her eyes for a long time without saying anything. When he finally opened his mouth, his voice was utterly somber.

"...Who found her?"

"Hans from the search team. He was off duty today and was chopping wood..."

"Lock him up in the barn."

There was a gasp from the men. Hans, who was pale, rushed to Jerome and fell to his knees, trembling.

"Boss, I-I alerted everyone as soon as I found her! Why am I..."

"Then tell me, who pushed Martha off the cliff."

"...What?"

Ignoring the stunned Hans, Jerome spoke coldly, "If no one pushed her, then you're the culprit."

"That can't..."

"What the hell are you doing?"

He slowly stood up and scanned his men. Some of them, noticing his rage as if he was ready to kill someone, held Hans, still in shock, and hesitantly backed away. Jerome, who had been glaring at them, then looked down at Aslan, who was sitting by Martha's side. His gaze was so fierce that Aslan froze like a mouse in front of a snake.

"So-called healers are utterly useless."

Spitting out his words as if he was chewing them, Jerome turned and left his spot.

Those left at the bottom of the cliff were all at a loss, simply staring at each other's faces. Regardless of the truth of the accident, they were now unable to predict where the wrath of that filthy-tempered leader would strike next.

Aslan was also slowly pondering Jerome's last words, when suddenly the sound of someone weakly collapsing onto the ground echoed. It was Kaien. The boy was trembling all over, his face pale as if he had seen a ghost.

But considering his state in the face of his mother's death, Aslan simply thought, 'so that human waste did have a human side.' However, he soon realized that wasn't it. Kaien's gaze wasn't directed at Martha, but somewhere else.

More specifically, standing next to Aslan...

"Bart?"

Bart and Kaien were looking at each other.

When Aslan unintentionally glanced at him, he was so shocked that he momentarily held his breath. Bart's face was always cold, but now it looked utterly impassive. Yet, a fit of intense anger was vividly conveyed by him. Compared to Jerome's bravado, Bart's wrath brought a terrifying pressure that was on another level.

Perhaps it was due to his cold eyes. In those eyes, which reflected the afternoon sunlight in a peculiar silver light, lay a chilly coldness that seemed to freeze anyone just by being seen from the side. It was no wonder that Kaien, being on the receiving end of such a gaze, reacted the way he did.

After glaring at Kaien for a while with his sharp, blade-like eyes, Bart finally opened his mouth. His calm voice carried a supremely restrained rage, making Aslan shudder involuntarily.

"Was it your doing that the souls in the mountains ended up like this?"

"You... who are you...?"

"I thought I'd observe a little longer to see what kind of mishap would interfere and cause such actions, but this is ridiculous. What were you consuming? Do you understand the meaning of it?"

Consuming? What?

Confused by the nonsense, Aslan looked puzzled, but Kaien seemed to understand. His eyes widened in surprise, the whites glaringly evident, making him appear almost frightened.

"What, what... How do you...!"

Kaien began to retreat, sweating and faltering, still sitting down.

At that point, a few of the bandits finally noticed the odd atmosphere and intervened. They were the pillaging fellows who had been watching Aslan since morning. Rolling up their sleeves, they narrowed their encirclement with grim expressions. However, now that most of the bandits had left with Jerome, the remaining bandits, aside from the few looters, seemed confused about what to do with Aslan and Bart.

In the meantime, a wobbling Kaien managed to stand up and started to hobble away.

Now was their only chance. Aslan thought. Given Jerome's last mood, it didn't seem like he intended to keep Aslan and Bart safe any longer. And it seemed Bart was thinking the same way.

"Prepare yourself, Aslan. We have to leave this place now."

Thud. In an instant, Bart swung his arm and punched the guy standing right in front. No, it wasn't a punch... The guy's forehead was indented in the shape of a handcuff.

"...!"

"That bastard!"

"Kill him!"

The encircling bandits attacked all at once. And in no time, they were all knocked down by Bart, groaning on the ground.

Thud, thump.

It was truly a splendid blow.

It was hard to believe that a frail-looking man could knock down the bandits so effortlessly. He merely dodged the punches raining down like a storm, and sent a punch... no, a handcuff to their vital points along the shortest path.

What was surprising was that Bart did not seem to be using any aura at all. He was truly only swinging the heavy handcuffs and chains efficiently, smashing the bandits' heads. Soon, there were no bandits left standing at the bottom of the cliff. All were left with the mark of handcuffs imprinted on their heads like a stamp.

The power of the handcuffs, which could easily crush wrists, was indeed tremendous. Even Bart, the user, seemed surprised at the destructive power. He stared at his own wrist for a moment, then murmured in admiration.

"I thought it was just a bad joke, but this friend is much more prepared than I thought."

No, I don't know what you're thinking, but I don't think that's it, Bart.

39

Having escaped the cliff, they ran towards Aslan's hut. Regardless of their intention to flee, they reasoned it would be best to bring along basic weapons and food. Above all, since all the bandits they were with had been knocked out, it would take some time before news of their escape reached Jerome.

Food rations and flour, flintstones, and various medicinal herbs. Even as he stuffed a few traps and weapons into his bag, Aslan's mind was in turmoil. Sooner or later, Jerome's subordinates would probably block off all paths leading down the mountain. Since they are likely in collusion with the village guards, entering Flanders was not an option.

Should they head towards Carthago then? Despite the longer detour through the mountain path, if they could get across safely, it might be the best choice. However, if the checkpoint guards discovered that they had come from Flanders, they would be treated as spies. Although currently at peace, Carthago and Flanders are still at war.

'...Is Asein Republic the only choice after all?'

No, the immediate priority was to survive from Jerome. They would seek refuge deep within the western mountains, where the search teams wouldn't reach.

How long would it take for a gap to form in the guards? A week? A month? Or would they have to wait for an entire season?

As Aslan busied himself with preparations, Bart, who had been quietly observing, offered some advice.

"You won't need that much. No matter how you look at it, the escape won't take more than three days. It's best to keep ourselves as light as possible."

".....?"

Aslan paused and looked at Bart with a hardened expression. Thoughts began to resurface in his chaotic mind, particularly Bart's words that he had previously ignored.

– It seems like we don't have much time, how about descending the mountain now?

– ...you'll be flustered soon, so it's best to rest and save your strength.

Did he know in advance that this would happen?

Perceiving the doubt in Aslan's gaze, Bart added with a smirk while scanning the outside of the hut. "I may not know this place well, but judging from the current chaos, I can hazard a guess. It seems like a punitive force will be mobilized soon."

...What? Why would he suddenly say something like that?

However, without any further explanation, Bart left the hut saying, "We've wasted too much time. We need to leave now."

Aslan, after removing some grain sacks and the heavy traps, hurriedly tied up his bag and followed Bart.

Though they hadn't known each other for long, Bart's words hadn't been nonsense so far. It wouldn't be a bad idea to keep in mind the possibility of a punitive force and escape as far as possible.

However, when Bart mentioned the punitive force, a familiar face came to Aslan's mind. It was Max, the old blacksmith, with whom he had formed a shallow bond since coming here. Max was a quiet old man who drank and had a kind demeanor. Aslan wanted to save him, at least.

"I may not know much about Max's past, but here, he's just a blacksmith."

Would the impending punitive force take that into account?

Considering the innocent Seymour and Gustav, who were confined in the previous bandit group, were brutally killed by Rohan's punitive force, it was highly likely Max wouldn't survive if left here.

There were countless reasons why they couldn't take him.

Jerome might have already released his men into the mountains under the guise of catching spies. Given that situation, running away with an extra burden was practically impossible.

Max was slow and couldn't climb the rugged mountains. He was an old man who knew nothing but alcohol, and there was a chance he might already be drunk and fallen asleep in the blacksmith shop.

Jerome's men were in their prime, experts at fighting and pillaging.

On the other hand, what about their own side? A handicapped half-man and a prisoner shackled with heavy cuffs. Even though the prisoner turned out to be stronger than expected.

Instead of giving a response, Bart looked into Aslan's eyes and asked, "...Won't you regret it?"

"....."

Aslan hesitated. He knew that depending on his answer, both he and Bart could be in danger. Logically, he had basically declared that he was ready to die. But Aslan had developed an inexplicable trust in Bart. He had this strange belief that if he really wanted to, Bart would somehow help.

Moreover, if it was completely impossible, wouldn't Bart have told him so?

Aslan once told Bart that even if he were to die soon, he wanted to live honorably while he was alive. If they left an innocent, weak, and good-hearted old man and ran away, he would probably regret it for the rest of his life.

Looking straight into Bart's eyes, he nodded strongly, "Yes, I won't regret it."

For a moment, a faint smile appeared on Bart's face, as if recalling an old memory.

Thud. With a light tap on Aslan's head, Bart turned around without another word.

Unfortunately, when they hurriedly arrived at the blacksmith's workshop, old Max was completely drunk.

Hiccup. Seeing the old man, who couldn't even recognize his visitors with his eyes half-open, a look of defeat appeared on Aslan's face.

'...Was I wrong after all?'

However, Bart walked past him with long strides, and placed one hand on the swaying old man's head. Soon, a bright light seeped out from his hand, wrapping around old Max's entire body.

Whoosh.

"Uh... Mom?"

Old Max's eyes, which had been bloodshot, suddenly returned to normal, and widened in surprise.

"Huh? My hangover is suddenly gone? Huh? My back? My chronic knee arthritis?"

Ignoring the old man who was still confused, Bart started walking toward the path leading to the mountain. Aslan, who had been following him, quickly pulled on old Max's arm and spoke urgently.

"I'll explain later, for now, just follow us. We don't have much time."

"Hold on, let me grab my liquor bottle....."

Although the old man was flustered, Aslan ignored his words and pulled his arm strongly. This wasn't the time to accommodate the old man's drinking habits.

Fortunately, sensing the tense atmosphere, the old man seemed to realize the seriousness of the situation and followed them without any further objections. Seeing that his pace was not slow, it seemed his claims of no longer having chronic arthritis weren't unfounded.

Bart occasionally stopped to gaze at the empty air, then quickly determined a direction and walked briskly. His stride was unhesitant, unusual for someone who hadn't been in the flower village for very long. They managed to enter the deep forest without encountering any mountain bandits, making their way down a secluded path.

Beep!

The sound of a horn echoed from behind. It was the emergency horn, rung in the flower village whenever there was a major incident. It seemed their escape had been discovered.

Immediately, the entire village was in uproar.

Shouts. Murmurs. Another horn.

The group held their breath and moved away from the village at a fast pace. After some time walking along a small path, one of the search party members burst from the bushes with a sword. It was their first encounter with an enemy.

"Aha! You were here! But where..."

However, he couldn't finish his sentence. Bart, as if he knew of his arrival beforehand, swung his fist without even looking at him.

Thump. The bandit, with a clean hit to his nose, fell powerlessly and disappeared into the shrubs.

Bart stopped again and stared into the void. This time, he changed his course, walking down a path that wasn't really a path. It seemed as if he was gauging something as he moved forward, but Aslan couldn't fathom what he was seeing with those eyes.

Not long after, they encountered another search team consisting of two people. This time, the battle ended before the men could open their mouths. This was because Bart, who suddenly darted out, took them down with swift punches.

Thump, thwack. His movements were extremely efficient, not wasting a single moment.

Old Max's mouth fell open in shock.

"Eh? So, what did that guy used to do?"

Well, he used to be a priest and a demon worshipper, and also an apothecary, but I don't even know anymore.

Bart changed his direction once more.

From then on, they didn't encounter a single bandit and were able to climb the mountain until late in the evening. Considering that the search parties should have spread across the entire mountain, it was almost miraculous.

They tore through their rations and walked without rest. Occasionally, the tired old Max would start to drag his legs, but every time that happened, Bart would approach and pour his divine power into him, rejuvenating him.

"Oh! My old ailment, gout?"

The old man's face brightened instantly. His usually hunched back was now straightened.

Somehow, he seemed a bit younger. It must be my imagination, right?

Bart also shared his divine power with Aslan a few times, and Aslan felt the tension in his muscles relax and a surge of energy course through his body. Aslan broke into a cold sweat. Is this what divine power can do? There's no trade-off, it seems like a scam.

In the distance, they saw small torches moving around the foot of the mountain. The search had intensified with the setting of the sun. Fortunately, they had enough distance, and as soon as they crossed one mountain ridge, they couldn't see the torches anymore. Soon, everything was shrouded in darkness.

They walked a little more along the dark mountain path led by Bart. It was deep into the mountains, a place even Aslan had never been before. Just like a lie, a small cave appeared, and only then did Bart stop. His face was etched with unmistakable fatigue.

"We should rest here for today."

Aslan quickly prepared a camp. He gathered nearby leaves and dry moss, spread them out, and laid down the thin blanket they had brought. The three of them huddled on the blanket. The night in the mountains was chilly, but being pursued, they couldn't afford to light a fire.

Thankfully, thanks to the generously bestowed divine power, Aslan and old Max felt healthier than they had in a long time. Aslan didn't hesitate to wrap the only thick blanket they had around Bart. Bart seemed utterly exhausted despite having energetically beat up the bandits all day, and his exhausted body still looked frail. Without a word, he wrapped himself in the blanket and closed his eyes, quickly falling into a deep sleep.

"...What on earth is happening? And what's this about a punitive force all of a sudden?"

Just in case Bart might wake up, the old man lowered his voice and murmured. Aslan had followed Bart's words without much thought, and thus he had nothing particularly to say to him.

"I don't really know either. Hasn't there been a rumor lately that Archduke Asein is organizing a punitive force?"

However, old man Max tilted his head in confusion.

"Wasn't that just some nonsense Rodrigo was spouting off by himself initially? About a month ago, he was going around blabbering about the Asein's punitive force and spies or something, and then suddenly, everyone in the flower village started talking about it. But was there any truth to that rumor?"

Rodrigo started this talk?

Aslan furrowed his eyebrows and fell deep into thought at the unexpected words from the old man.

Rodrigo was a refugee from Ortana, and reportedly, he was one of the bandits who joined Jerome's gang after establishing himself in the flower village. He was more active than anyone else in wreaking havoc under Asein's rule recently, but why would such a person worry about a punitive force?

If Asein's punitive force was really just a baseless rumor, then where did the punitive force Bart mentioned come from?

Aslan turned to look at the person who might have all the answers, but he was sound asleep, not even making a sound with his breathing. The boy scratched his head.

"Well, do you think I know? Anyway, if we keep going this way, we should cross over to the Carthago border. I'm not sure if we'll be able to pass through the checkpoint, but if we succeed, we can completely break away from the bandits."

"...I see."

The old man nodded his head.

"So, we're finally leaving this place."

"....."

In the dark cave, Aslan couldn't see old Max's expression, but he felt a slight lump in his chest at the hint of regret in the old man's voice.

In order to conserve body heat, the boy and the old man sat a little closer together and soon fell asleep side by side.

40

The flower village, filled with bright torches burning late into the night, seemed as if a festival was being held. Except that the torchbearers were murderous bandits.

"We've divided into teams and spread out for the search, but their tracks remain elusive. Judging by their probable direction of movement, it seems they're heading towards the northern gate of Carthago, but we can't be certain."

"From the very beginning, it wasn't easy to track them as they deviated from the path..."

Jerome, with his cold face, was listening to the report and murmured out his words. "We've sent out all our search teams, and you're saying we've yet to encounter even one of them?"

"One of our search teams was attacked, boss. But not much time had passed since they fled, so they're likely far from that location by now."

"We also have a missing member from one of the search teams. We're suspecting he may have been attacked too..."

"It's hard to find traces in the dark. Even if we were to deploy trackers, it would have to be after the sun rises tomorrow."

Rodrigo was standing next to Jerome, listening to the report, then he glanced at a corner of the hut.

Compared to his usual demeanor, Kaien was quietly sitting there, holding his head. To anyone watching, he looked like a young son despondent over his mother's death. However, Rodrigo, who had known Kaien rather well, was aware that he was not the type to be so concerned with such matters.

For some reason, the boy's current state didn't seem normal. And his suspicion was accurate. Ever since Martha had died at the foot of the cliff earlier, Kaien was suffering from severe headaches. That suspicious devil-worshiper had done something to the boy.

'My head hurts...'

Kaien bit his lip.

He was simply trying to completely devour Martha's soul, which he had been feasting on for a long time, before she died. The soul of the dead didn't taste good, after all.

[Eeehhh, Kaien—]

[Why me! Why me! Why me!]

[Aslan, Aslan, Aslan, Aslan...]

Sounds of strange cries from beyond the mountains could be heard. Sounds only audible to Kaien in this place. Ordinarily, these fools' wailing was somewhat amusing to him, but now it was only intensifying his headache.

The scattered soul fragments strewn across the mountain were the remnants of his unfinished meals, poor things that had died before he could fully devour them. He had resolved not to waste such resources again, but an unexpected intruder had interfered.

'What was that thing...?'

He initially thought it was just an ordinary person, but the soul that faintly revealed itself in front of Kaien was shrouded in an extraordinary light. Kaien had never seen a light so brilliant and overwhelming.

And from the moment it revealed itself, Kaien was tormented by strange tinnitus and severe headaches. Even the attempt to interfere with another person's soul resulted in overwhelming nausea.

As the boy was groaning in a cold sweat, Rodrigo cautiously approached him. He was one of the souls Kaien had been voraciously devouring recently.

His weakened soul had already become a puppet, obediently following Kaien's orders. Unlike Martha, who was sensitive, Rodrigo was too dense to recognize this sense of incongruity himself.

"...Go to the Carthago gate, Rodrigo."

Kaien commanded without even looking at Rodrigo's face.

Regardless of their escape route, they would eventually have to pass through the gate of Carthago. With a booze-addicted old man amongst them, they wouldn't be able to hide in the mountains for long.

"Kill them all."

Rodrigo trembled involuntarily at the strange madness flowing in the boy's triclops. It was a fear that had been engraved deep into his soul without him even realizing.

"Kill them all, Rodrigo."

* * *

Aslan woke up early at dawn.

The reason was that he heard what seemed like a soft conversation next to him.

"...Yes, have they arrived? You must've struggled to keep up with the time. Let Enrique know the meeting point too."

"So, how's Morres doing?"

"That was a bit premature. Was there a need to rush?"

What are they talking about?

"That underground thing, I guess. Seeing that he tried to use it immediately after I left, it didn't seem like an important piece to him."

"...No, it's not that I intentionally avoided it..."

"...Sorry, I didn't run away because I didn't want to play chess."

Ah, this was Bart's voice. But he was not conversing, but rather, talking to himself.

"Alright, let's stick to this. For the time being, let's play chess twice a week..."

"...I mean, it's not that I don't want to..."

He really doesn't seem to want to. His voice was becoming more and more strained.

Aslan opened his eyes and inadvertently called him.

"...Bart?"

The sight of him sitting, leaning against the cave entrance was visible. He was undoubtedly alone, but who had he been talking to?

But with his sleep-riddled, blurred vision, something unusual caught his eye. There were two forms wavering in front of Bart, as faint as mist.

Ghosts? Pale pink and light blue shadows...

Aslan blinked, and suddenly those strange shadows had disappeared. Rubbing his eyes again and looking, there was only Bart at the entrance of the cave.

Had he seen something nonexistent due to fatigue?

But something captured Aslan's attention more than the ghosts he saw in his sleep-addled state, and it was Bart's face. The face of Bart, who was silently staring at him, seemed strangely unfamiliar.

Aslan hesitantly asked, "Uh, Bart. Was your hair always that color? It seems a bit darker..."

Even under the dim morning light, his hair, which Aslan had thought was dark brown, definitely seemed darker than yesterday.

His face also seemed slightly different. Before, his features were clear and handsome but gave a somewhat vague impression, but now, his features seemed more distinct and somehow better? Huh?

The only thing that hadn't changed was the silver-gray iris that occasionally shone with a strange gleam.

Bart, at Aslan's words, tugged his hair and examined it from side to side, then nodded. "I've been here for a while. I suppose my synchronization rate is gradually increasing."

Synchronization rate? What's he talking about?

As he blankly stared at him, old Max, who had been squirming behind him, opened his eyes and yawned. "Geez. Sleeping outside at this age. But somehow my back doesn't hurt in the morning, it's bearable."

He didn't seem to feel anything strange about Bart. Perhaps because the changes were too subtle?

Aslan shook his head on his own, Bart got up and dusted off his robe.

"It's a race against time now. They will eventually chase us to the Carthago portal, so our goal should be to get to the portal as fast as possible, without worrying about leaving traces."

So they had been mindful of their tracks until now. I thought we were just running away blindly?

When Aslan gaped at him, Bart lifted one corner of his mouth.

"If they try to track us by the book, they should get lost a bit."

Well, shall we get going?

Soon, a waterfall of divine power poured over the two men's heads, announcing the forced march ahead.

Surprisingly, they were able to reach the well-maintained passageway by midday. They had crossed the tough western mountain range in a single day, taking an old man with them. Of course, it was the end of a hellish march, chewing rations while walking, and constantly overlaying divine power.

Although their bodies kept recovering, they were still exhausted, and it was a schedule that greatly drained their mental strength.

In a few hours, following the passageway down, they would reach the Carthago portal. Relief crossed the faces of Aslan and Max.

"It's too early to relax. If they've been riding horses through the well-maintained passageway since yesterday, they could catch up."

Even Bart, who said this, looked pale.

Aslan looked at him with a somewhat worried expression. The body, which was still not activated by aura, was anxiety-inducing, never knowing when it could collapse, and the cloth beneath the handcuffs that had been swung around since yesterday was already soaked in blood here and there. Of course, if the cloth was untied, the actual arm would be just fine.

More than anything, was it okay to continuously pour out so much divine power like that?

Bart walked with a trudge along the roadside, and upon reaching a large rock, he sat and spoke, "We may be pressed for time, but we need to wait for our point of contact here."

"Point of contact?"

"Isn't it impossible to sneak out of the gate?"

Ah. Aslan and old Max's expressions grew grave.

The fact that they had been trying hard to ignore until now. Even if they safely arrived in Carthago, how would they, with their identities uncertain, get through the gate?

Fortunately, it seemed Bart had some kind of solution. With a nonchalant tone, he muttered into the air.

"This guy better not be too late....."

Just as he said that, someone suddenly swooped down in front of them. It was spooky how the person had appeared out of nowhere on the open thoroughfare.

He was a man clad in dark attire, and except for a long wound stretching from his lip to his chin, he looked like a demure young man similar to a scholar.

The man, after taking a quick glance at the retreating Aslan and old Max, approached Bart and knelt down on one knee.

"Your Majesty."

He seemed to know Bart.

Your Majesty? At this unexpected form of address, Aslan was frozen in place, but Bart cracked a faint smile.

"My senses have become dull, I didn't even know you had arrived, Enrique."

"It's No.21, Your Highness."

"....."

As the man responded bluntly, Bart, feeling something unusual, shut his mouth.

Sure enough, the man soon started pouring out his complaints in a hard tone.

"What the hell is going on here? Do you know how surprised I was to hear that you ordered me to investigate the top and the Flower Village, and then the next night you suddenly showed up at the Asein Branch? Why didn't you just wait there like you did before, and I'll take it upon myself to bring you news? What the hell was so urgent this time?"

"Well, sorry about that, Enrique. For some reason, I had a bad feeling about this....."

"It's 21, Your Majesty. Thanks to you, the central branch of the guild in the capital is now in complete chaos! You give a pile of complicated and difficult orders, then just disappear like that, how the heck do you expect the people working underneath you are supposed to do?"

"Well....."

"Is that all? What about your notice to rendezvous from across the border? Even the fastest messenger in the continent can't move like that! Even though I had to gallop my horse without proper sleep from Delcross to here for the last three days, do you know how much....."

The man trailed off. Despite his blunt and simple tone, there was a vividly felt, rising anger that was not fully suppressed within it. Aslan merely blinked, watching the two.

Bart, too, seemed to have picked up on his intense resentment. He tentatively reached out towards the man's forehead, and then a bright light emerged from his hand, making the man's tired eyes appear refreshed in an instant.

But what the man was focusing on was something else. He grabbed the handcuffs that had come close, then looked alternately at the blood-soaked bandages and Bart's face, asking.

"What is this?"

"When I woke up in Asein, it was like this. I was confused at first too, but it turns out to be quite useful for hitting people in emergencies."

The man's expression turned strange.

"Don't tell me this was filled to be used as a weapon?"

"...Hmm."

Bart's face visibly darkened.

"Tell the head of the Asein branch to express any complaints verbally."

"I'll try, but I'm not sure. Isn't this a complaint to come and listen in person since there are so many grievances?"

"....."

"Now that Your Majesty can't use an aura, who else could cut only the handcuffs with an aura blade, without cutting Your Majesty's arm in this area, other than him?"

At his blunt words, Bart, surprisingly, lifted his head with a slightly brighter face.

"I had been considering something. I felt sorry to ask that young boy, but....."

Then, Enrique, or 21, looked sharply at him.

"I can guess what you're thinking. Cut only the handcuffs, and the vein of the arm will naturally attach itself. Or, even if the arm falls off, it can be reattached. Is that what you're going to say? Sorry, but I can't cut this lump of iron with one strike."

"No, rather than that....."

"Don't tell me you want me to just cut off the arm. I won't do it."

"....."

Wow, the range of thoughts is indeed different when one has superhuman healing ability.

Listening to their conversation, Aslan, who had been watching from the side, unconsciously swallowed hard and thought so.

41

Enrique, or rather, the man who called himself No. 21, had already finished preparations for the group to pass through the Cartago gate.

He had hidden a small cart in the bushes a little distance from the rendezvous point, filled with various trade goods and provisions commonly carried by peddlers. Outfits for the group to change into, as well as official identification badges issued in Asein, were ready.

And, creepily enough, a coffin was placed in one corner of the cart.

As Aslan and old Max fumbled to change their clothes, No. 21 gestured silently towards the coffin for Bart, who was standing blankly.

"...Is that meant to be my place?"

"Do you think you can pass through a regular gate with the stigma of a devil worshiper, Your Majesty?"

Nathaniel: If you have a complaint, just say it. Why is everyone, Justin or you, acting like this lately?

Enrique: Aren't you good at pretending to be a corpse? Just hold your breath for a few hours.

The two squabbled for a while, but eventually Bart surrendered to No. 21, who was grinding his teeth and saying, 'wouldn't it have been nice if you had given me more time to prepare?'

Clickety-clack, clickety-clack. With a well-groomed mustache and the unique bread-shaped hat of Asein merchants, No. 21 began to drive the cart.

Aslan and old Max sat comfortably in the cargo hold of the cart, eating dried fruit and seasoned jerky from their bags, easing the fatigue of their long forced march. Only Bart, crouched silently within the open coffin, was gloomy, and for a while, the journey continued peacefully.

The change came when they were almost at the Cartago gate.

"...Something's wrong, Enrique."

Bart, who had been sitting quietly for a while, suddenly opened his mouth. He was still staring blankly into space, his chin resting on his knees, and at the sight of the eerie glow in his eyes, Aslan got up from his seat in alarm.

No. 21 must have noticed the strange gleam, too, because without a word of protest, this time from No. 21 himself, he halted the carriage.

"Turn the cart around."

No. 21's eyebrows raised slightly.

"We'll run into the pursuit team."

"I don't think they're likely to be too suspicious of us heading in the opposite direction, so I suggest we turn back and continue on our way to the gateway to Asein."

"....."

There was silence for a moment at his words. If taken literally, it was suggesting they turn back along the road nearly all the way back to Flower Village. It would take a whole day.

Just over that hill was the gate to Carthago. How did we get this far.....

"We are close to our destination, Your Majesty."

But Bart dismissed his opinion with one sentence.

"I have a bad feeling."

"....."

No. 21 chewed his lips for a moment, but soon obediently drove the cart onto a forest path beside the highway. It seemed he was trying to turn around on the narrow road by making a detour.

"Wait, what the hell is..."

Old Max, who didn't understand, tried to say something, but Aslan quickly silenced him. Judging from their experiences so far, he didn't think Bart would act unnecessarily. They soon left the rough forest path and returned to the highway. They began retracing the exact path they had come.

And not long after, they ran into a group of riders galloping towards them from a distance. It was the pursuit team from the Flower Village.

While they had considered the possibility of them galloping through the highway overnight, Aslan felt his heart sink because he hadn't expected the pursuit team to catch up so quickly. Aslan and old Max quickly pretended to be asleep, pulling their hats low. Their throats went dry in an instant.

There were seven in the pursuit team, and they were obviously in a hurry. One of them at the front glanced back at the cart as they passed by.

However, it seemed he could not even imagine that they would be in a peddler's cart full of foodstuffs, driven by an unfamiliar coachman, coming from the opposite side. They quickly turned their gaze away from the cart and spurred their horses towards the gate.

Clickety-clack, clickety-clack. The pursuit team quickly grew distant.

Phew. Aslan exhaled the breath he had been holding only after the pursuit team completely disappeared from sight. The tension that had been draining his blood gradually subsided.

Old Max murmured softly, "That was Rodrigo just now, wasn't it?"

Aslan nodded. It might have been a coincidence, but somehow it was unsettling to think that the person leading the pursuit team was the same one who had spread rumors about the Asein punitive forces.

"Enrique."

Bart, who hadn't even bothered to hide in the coffin because he had guessed the pursuit team wouldn't inspect the cart carefully, was still staring somewhere and commanded No. 21.

"Hide the cart and observe the pursuit team's movements."

Without a word, No. 21 turned the cart into the bushes by the roadside. As soon as they were far enough away from the highway, he stopped the cart and quickly disappeared from the driver's seat.

His movements, whether appearing or disappearing, were truly ghostly.

"Um, Bart... Your Majesty?"

Aslan spent a while observing before hesitantly calling out to Bart. It was the first time he'd directly called for him since No. 21 appeared, and he felt unusually nervous. If he didn't know any better, it wouldn't matter, but knowing that the other party wasn't of ordinary status, he couldn't help but be cautious.

Bart quietly turned his head towards him. His usual cold face showed no sign of discomfort. Aslan sighed in relief and asked him a question.

"I've wanted to ask since yesterday...but I had no chance. Did they really send a punitive force from Asein? How did you know that the punitive force was coming?"

From their conversation with No. 21, it was clear that Bart had a purpose in coming here, but it didn't seem like he knew about the situation in the Flower Village from the start. He nodded and responded obediently.

"I felt the gaze of surveillance from within the mountain occasionally. Professional trackers who do not easily reveal their traces; the search party from the Flower Village probably didn't detect them. Yesterday, several military messenger birds flew up from the base of the mountain. It was impossible not to realize that military action was imminent. It is not a battleground with Carthago, so if they gather an army, there can only be one purpose."

"Military messenger birds..."

Aslan hadn't noticed at all. When could he have seen that?

"If it weren't for the various chaotic situations like yesterday, someone in the Flower Village would have noticed it quickly."

Indeed, with the spy incident and Martha's death, the entire village was in chaos yesterday.

But at the base of the mountain?

"Could it be, are they Flanders' men?"

Weren't Jerome and Flanders's guard in a colluding relationship? Why are they attacking the Flower Village from there?

If that's true, why did the sudden rumors about Asein's punitive force and spies circulate?

However, Bart tilted his head slightly to the side and replied in an indifferent tone.

"The only place that seemed capable of organizing a punitive force was Flanders."

"Most of the places looted so far are Asein's territories, why would Flanders..."

"It's simple. If you know the corruption of the people of Archduke Asein, that rotten old man, it's easy to guess."

His explanation was roughly this. Archduke Asein had let his territory be looted for a long time, likely waiting for the damage to accumulate enough to demand a large amount of reparation. Trade with Asein cannot be cut off, so he waited until Flanders judged that the anticipated reparation was greater than the cost of organizing a punitive force right now.

They'd pocket most of the reparations instead out of the territory, and let others take on the costly bandit suppression. Then they wrap it up as diplomatic achievement and collect money from the territory again.

What is this, they're totally thieves.

"..."

Aslan, who was about to cry out 'thief', silently closed his mouth. There was still a lot he was curious about, but he couldn't ask rashly.

Why did you come to this Flower Village? What are those cryptic words you said to Kaien yesterday? Why are you bothersomely dragging me and old Max around?

He was slowly getting a grip on the identity of this suspicious royalty.

The dignity inherent in his body and the natural way he treats people lower in status. The man who could blatantly call that Archduke Asein a rotten old man. The one who has the vast divine power he has never seen before.

Above all, there was only one person on this continent who could be called His Majesty.

No. 21 returned to the carriage after quite some time had passed. His already taciturn expression seemed to have turned more serious, so Aslan felt that something unusual must have happened.

"The bandits were in collusion with Carthago."

His Majesty Bart listened to the report without any particular disturbance. The only ones utterly surprised were Aslan and old Max. As they looked at No. 21 with wide eyes, he continued with a grave face.

"It was unclear whether the entire gang of bandits was involved, or only a portion of them. However, the individual leading the pursuit team seemed to have been in contact with them for quite a long time.

It appeared as if he had passed on information about His Majesty and his party through secret letters long ago."

Rodrigo.

Suddenly, Aslan felt a chill creeping up his spine.

Max whispered hoarsely next to him, "Then if we had proceeded straight to the gate...."

He couldn't finish his sentence, but everyone could guess the outcome.

They would have most likely been executed on the spot, just like the Hwa family that was killed in Flanders last year.

Agent No. 21 quickly knelt in front of the gate and bowed his head. "We have failed in our investigation. This is a failure of the guild. We apologize, Your Majesty."

"We simply didn't have time to investigate. I know well the hard work the guild does. Would the guild have had any business in the western mountains if it hadn't been for that child?"

"But..."

"I already had some suspicion that there were traitors from Carthago lurking in the background. Don't worry too much about it."

King Bart showed great magnanimity and dignity, dismissing the minor mistake that could have put his life at risk with a nod of his head.

Of course, he was still crouching inside the cart.

Afterwards, they quickly drove the carriage away. Although they had once passed by the Carthago gate unnoticed, if their party did not arrive, the pursuit team would inevitably start to suspect the carriage they had once passed by.

They took minimum rest to ensure the horses didn't tire out, but they planned to keep as much distance as possible from the pursuit team until they reached the official road.

"Um... I can't help but be curious. Who exactly is that gentleman?"

Max, who was taking turns driving the carriage with Agent No. 21, quietly asked him. No. 21 glanced back at His Majesty, who was half-burying his head in his knees with his eyes closed.

After hesitating for a moment, Agent No. 21 finally shrugged his shoulders and opened his mouth.

"Well, it won't matter. You two have already become targets of intensive management by the guild because you're too deeply involved in His Majesty's affairs. I trust you won't be loose-lipped."

Aslan and Max perked up their ears and focused on No. 21's voice.

"That gentleman is His Majesty Nataniel, the sovereign of Delcross and the greatest ruler of the continent. Henceforth, there must be no lacking in your treatment of him."

Max dropped his jaw.

The... what? That gentleman wearing iron chains marked with the brand of devil worshipers?

"No, then what about that brand...."

Aslan, who had an inkling of his identity, was also curious. How could the most noble cleric on the continent, His Holiness, have the brand of cursed devil worshipers on his back?

"Well, His Majesty is, of course, not a devil worshiper. Due to circumstances, he disguised himself as a prisoner..."

"So you're saying that he branded that damned mark on his own body? No, what kind of horrendous act is that!"

Max shivered.

"Of course, it wasn't branded on His Majesty's real body!"

"What do you mean by that? If it's not his real body, then who is that gentleman?"

Hmm. No. 21 furrowed his brows. The more he tried to explain, the more it felt like he was losing control of the information.

He glanced at King Bart and sighed, "His Majesty's real body cannot leave the cathedral under normal circumstances. That body is an artificial body, or a homunculus, which His Majesty's soul inhabits when it needs to move far..."

Aslan and Max turned as pale as death at the mention of the word 'homunculus'.

Even they, simple country folks, had heard rumors about the devil worshipers of Delcross who shook the continent a few years ago. A heretic group that denied the authority of the deity and sought to explore the truth of the world, they created a cursed life form with the help of the devil's power, a homunculus.

Fortunately, it was exposed by inquisitors before it was completed, leading to a large-scale purge where all those involved were burned at the stake.

But did that mean that the cursed life form still existed? Moreover, the act of transferring the soul into that artificial life form, which was even abandoned by God, was it not an act that only devil worshipers would commit?

Max muttered with a trembling voice. "So, so does that mean that His Majesty, the representative of God, is actually a demon...."

"...is not a demon worshiper."

Agent No. 21 ran a hand over his face in fatigue.

42

One day before the Inquisitors raided the headquarters of the Cornsheim family.

The guild, having caught wind of this in advance, carried out the task of smuggling out some of the scholars and research records as instructed by the Holy Emperor.

In the midst of this, the Holy Emperor's eyes lit up upon seeing the artificial lifeforms lined up in one corner of the laboratory.

"They seem useful. Smuggle out a few."

The guild executives all looked at the Holy Emperor in utter shock. After all, wasn't the decisive reason the Cornsheims were labeled as devil worshippers precisely because of this artificial lifeform research?

Yet he spoke incomprehensible words with a calm face.

"This has nothing to do with those so-called demon races or whatnot. It is a technology that belongs to the rules of the material world."

During the period of the great purge, most of the artificial lifeforms—homunculi—were burned, but in the end, the guild succeeded in secretly smuggling out three dolls without the Inquisitors' knowledge.

"These are just empty dolls in human form."

"When a soul enters, they will move properly. That's how they are structured."

Then how do you put the soul in?

While everyone was puzzled, the Holy Emperor began testing this and that by directly transferring his own soul into the dolls.

The very act of a soul freely entering and exiting was not something ordinary people could do, but well, since it was something His Majesty the Holy Emperor was doing, everyone in the guild accepted it. They simply wondered at first what the human-shaped dolls would be used for.

Soon, the guild members unwittingly witnessed moments when a doll that had been lying still suddenly opened its eyes or got up and walked around.

As the Holy Emperor said, the moment a soul entered, the doll truly began to move like a human, and showed the wondrous sight of slowly transforming into the Holy Emperor's appearance, synchronizing with the entered soul.

However, the Holy Emperor's trial run of the homunculi encountered an unexpected obstacle. Forcibly synchronizing a soul with an artificial lifeform consumed too much mental energy in the process of entering and exiting. So once he entered a doll, he couldn't easily move his soul as he did when using his original body.

His senses were also greatly dulled, and the Holy Emperor had to struggle for a while to adapt to this.

Above all, the biggest problem was that the dolls, which existed outside the rules of this world, couldn't accept aura at all.

Needless to say, the Holy Emperor, who wielded aura as easily as breathing, was extremely inconvenienced. Aura was the fundamental force of life. Lacking it meant becoming listless like a dying person.

Fortunately, there were no restrictions on using sacred power, probably because it belonged together with his soul, the Holy Emperor explained.

So what are you going to use that for?

The guild executives were puzzled to see the Holy Emperor, who could shatter the guild building with a single light gesture, staggering around like an invalid inside a doll.

The Holy Emperor seemed a bit dissatisfied, but in any case, after finishing the experiments, he assigned the dolls to each of the guild's major branches far from the capital.

And in fact, the Holy Emperor demonstrated the true value of that doll on the southern front two years ago. The southern front, which had been at a disadvantage, instantly recovered with the participation of a single priest with infinite sacred power.

With the additional feat of the First Prince Owen rampaging like a madman at the front lines, the front continued to move southward until it settled at its current position.

During that period, the Holy Emperor in the capital was engaged in seclusion prayer, and no one doubted that it was the care of the gods answering the prayers.

Well, that was the whole story.

How was he supposed to explain this to the boy and old man who were shocked before his eyes? Twenty-one was at a loss.

What saved him was the calm voice that suddenly came from beside him.

"The gods have purified the wicked and made them instruments of the divine to care for the continent."

Huh? The eyes of the three simultaneously turned towards the coffin.

The Holy Emperor had already raised his head and was looking at them. And in that moment, they clearly saw it. The extremely sacred aura that permeated the Holy Emperor's body.

Enveloped in a subtle, iridescent light, he continued speaking in a gently resounding voice as if making a prophecy.

"This is proof that nothing in this world can ever escape the will of the gods. Even the trivial struggles of devil worshippers are thus under His will."

Ah, it was truly a divine sight!

Although the subject was crouched inside a coffin wearing shackles, that fact did not detract in the slightest from the supremely noble majesty and the subtle, spreading sacredness.

...Probably.

Old man Max, who had experienced the divine miracles bestowed by the Holy Emperor several times over the past two days, had tears welling up in his eyes, moved by emotion.

"Forgive me... Forgive me. My ignorant self, with eyes so darkened, committed the great sin of doubting the representative of the gods."

"How can one blame a sin born of ignorance? You are forgiven."

"Ah..."

The old man was greatly enlightened and almost let go of the reins of the cart.

Aslan made a subtle expression but seemed to roughly accept it, and only Twenty-one stared at the Holy Emperor with narrowed eyes.

Where do you get your scripts from?

If you're going to explain, do it properly. You're still clumsy, Enrique.

Half-listening to the search team's report, Jerome was heavily drunk for the first time in a long while. Martha's wretched final moments kept flashing before his eyes, and he couldn't bear to be in his right mind.

"Boss. The movements of Flandor's border guards seem a bit strange. Since we sent all the search teams up the mountain, the news is a bit late, but the search team returning from the Asein checkpoint says they spotted a situation where troops seem to be concentrating at Flandor's border guards."

"Rodrigo headed towards the Carthago checkpoint. We'll have news soon, so how about reducing the search personnel a bit and paying attention to Flandor's side as well?"

However, Jerome gave no response. From the beginning, the Viscount of Carthago, who had been in collusion with Rodrigo, had infiltrated Flandor's checkpoint guards. If there were any suspicious movements, he would have certainly received word from him.

Moreover, for some reason, someone's voice kept echoing in Jerome's head.

[You've already lost Martha. All you have left are these stupid subordinates. If the Grand Duke of Asein ends up sending a subjugation force, you'll have nothing left.]

[Catch Asein's spy.]

[Asein's spy comes first.]

"Asein's spy comes first. Find that bastard."

"But Boss..."

"I won't say it twice. Catch Aslan and that prisoner."

When Jerome glared fiercely with reddened eyes, the bandits flinched in surprise and avoided his gaze. The subordinates, who had been watching his mood, soon disappeared one by one, and eventually, Jerome was left alone in the hut. He continued to silently tip back glasses of strong liquor late into the night and until dawn.

"Martha..."

Now that there was no one to hear, the name he rarely called flowed out so easily.

Ever since he first saw her over a decade ago, the beautiful Martha naturally belonged to Jerome. Even without specifically calling her name, she was by his side and breathed only in his grasp. Until yesterday, Jerome had no doubt that her every move, and even her life, was in his hands.

Could that be called love? Even Jerome didn't know.

However, because Martha had been so perfectly subordinate to him until now, Jerome could no longer imagine a life without her.

Stubbornly downing more alcohol, Jerome eventually collapsed on the table and began snoring when morning was almost upon them. Someone carefully approached his side—none other than his adopted son, Kaien.

Having waited a long time for Jerome to pass out, he quietly walked beside the table and clicked his tongue.

Jerome was a rare human with a strong defensive wall around his soul. Unless he was dead drunk or passed out like this, it wasn't easy for Kaien to directly interfere with him.

He couldn't even muster the courage to nibble at his soul, and could only give a few suggestions to the heavily intoxicated Jerome. Moreover, the alcohol was so strong.

Thinking back to his childhood when he thoughtlessly touched Jerome's soul like he did with Martha and was thrown against the wall, it still gave him chills. It was the first day he confirmed that his ability was not omnipotent.

The next day, he succeeded in taking revenge by inciting the soul of Jerome, whose defenses had become noticeably weaker due to alcohol, to use violence against Martha. Even Jerome himself didn't seem to know, but his soul was always looking only at Martha. The day after he assaulted Martha, his soul would take on a bruised color and noticeably lose energy all day long.

Kaien didn't understand Jerome's feelings at all, but he could at least tell that Martha's misery was the most effective punishment for Jerome.

It was the same this time. Jerome's soul, whose defenses had become markedly weaker since yesterday, was wailing in agony.

[Martha Martha Martha Martha]

Fortunately, the headache and tinnitus that had been tormenting Kaien were now gradually subsiding. He approached the drunken

Jerome and snatched his soul with one hand.

Just as kind souls had a fresh and sweet taste, strong and sinful souls also had their own deep and rich flavors. And Jerome's soul, which he had nibbled on bit by bit whenever he had the chance, was quite palatable as he recalled.

Kaien tore off one of the limp soul's arms and raised the corner of his mouth crookedly.

Until his soul was completely devoured and he died, Jerome would never know what his soul had been gazing at all his life.

It couldn't be more amusing.

Aslan's group diligently traveled through the night. Except for briefly stopping the cart at dawn to rest the horses and catch some sleep, they drove the cart nonstop along the thoroughfare.

Here, His Majesty Bart's terrifying ability shone once again, as whenever the horses were about to collapse, an exceptionally powerful sacred power would unfailingly pour over them.

The forcibly invigorated horses had to pull the cart again in bewilderment. Seeing the deep light of confusion rising in the round, gentle eyes of the beasts, Aslan felt a bit sorry for them.

However, by midday, they had to abandon the cart and move on foot because the search teams were densely patrolling near the slash-and-burn village. At this rate, they would likely encounter search teams frequently all the way to the fork in the Asein highway.

It was impossible for their group, whose faces were well-known, to pretend to be merchants, and it seemed better to avoid the search teams while moving. Carrying simple provisions, they hid the cart in the bushes and began walking along the thoroughfare.

Still, having comfortably sat and traveled while taking turns sleeping through the night, the group's stamina was high. Unfortunately, with the exception of His Majesty Bart.

Even though he seemed to be recovering from fatigue with his immense sacred power, a body that couldn't move aura looked extremely precarious.

"Shall I carry you on my back?"

When Twenty-one said that, unable to bear it any longer, His Majesty smirked and patted his back. He must have thought it was a joke.

The journey on foot proceeded more smoothly than expected. Twenty-one was truly a ghostly fellow. On a quiet road with no one around, he would suddenly signal the group to hide by the roadside, and without fail, a search team would pass by shortly after.

Aslan inwardly wondered what kind of organization this guild was that such a person belonged to.

However, not long after noon, something strange happened to His Majesty Bart.

"Mores..."

Suddenly stopping in the middle of the road, he muttered to himself, his complexion turning extremely pale as he blankly stared into the air. Twenty-one, who had been walking ahead, glanced back and hurried back to him in surprise.

"Your Majesty?"

And Aslan saw it.

Ah, those eyes again. Eyes that had become purely mechanical, reflecting everything.

If the image formed by the light of this world was not captured, what was reflected in those eyes, and where did it exist?

His Majesty stared into the air like that for a long time, as if glaring, then finally closed his eyes and heaved a deep sigh.

"...I told him not to cause trouble."

"...?"

The group approached him in puzzlement.

"Enrique."

"...It's Twenty-one."

Although he habitually responded, concern was evident on Twenty-one's face.

His Majesty quietly looked around at the group surrounding him, not understanding the situation, then placed his hand on each person's forehead and shared his sacred power. It felt like he was preparing for something bad in advance, making Aslan very anxious.

"An urgent matter has come up. It seems I'll have to be away for a bit, so Enrique, I'll leave everything to you. It will be a bit tough, but I believe you can do it."

At the sudden words, Twenty-one's face stiffened. His Majesty grabbed his arm and continued speaking as if entrusting him with a task.

"Remember. Your first priority is to get those two people beyond the Asein checkpoint."

"But Your Majesty..."

Twenty-one's lips quivered as if he wanted to argue, but His Majesty's voice was resolute as he looked directly into his eyes.

"That comes first. Understand? If it's not feasible, abandon the homunculus. It will most likely come to that."

"..."

"Leave the rest to me."

And the moment those words ended.

His Majesty's body literally crumpled to the ground like a doll with its strings cut.

43

"Leave the rest to me."

With those final words, His Majesty's body suddenly collapsed, devoid of strength.

"...!"

21 quickly caught him, standing nearby. At a glance, his sudden loss of consciousness and limp form appeared gravely critical.

A moment later, Aslan rushed to his side, and out of apothecary's habit, checked his pulse. The boy's face quickly turned ashen.

"His pulse...!"

Aslan felt dizzy at the unbelievable reality.

"Bart... His Majesty's pu-, pulse has stopped?"

This wasn't mere unconsciousness, but dea...

Aslan's hands trembled violently.

21 also seemed momentarily flustered but soon reassured the group with a composed voice.

"His soul has merely departed somewhere for a while. There is no need to worry."

"What has happened to His Majesty Bart?"

"Did I not tell you? This is not his true body. It's alright."

He is rather skilled at gallivanting about as a mere soul and playing with corpses, 21 inwardly added. Having hastily adjusted His Majesty's disguise, he lightly hoisted the body onto his back and rose to his feet. Aslan anxiously offered to share the burden, but 21 shook his head.

"A homunculus is very light, unlike a human body."

True to his word, even while carrying His Majesty Bart, 21's movements remained largely unchanged. Under his lead, the group once more hastened their steps toward the junction of the state highway.

However, the problems arising from His Majesty's absence began from that point onward. Before long, Old Man Max's pace noticeably slowed, clearly exhausted.

To make matters worse, encounters with search parties roaming the mountain's base steadily increased in frequency. After narrowly evading their eyes for a time, misfortune finally struck—they were spotted by a pair of searchers before managing to hide.

21 swooped in like the wind, slashing one man's carotid artery with a dagger, but the other stumbled back and put an emergency horn to his lips.

Piiiiiii-

With the shrill blast of the horn, a shortsword soon plunged into the bandit's chest, felling him. But from here on out, their flight would become a desperate race against time. A look of dismay flickered across the group's faces.

They urgently sought to depart, but upon noticing Old Man Max's condition, sharply inhaled. He had already turned deathly pale, perspiration pouring down his face.

"Haah! I... can't run anymore. It's over now. Hah! Leave me behind."

Glancing back and forth between Old Man Max and His Majesty, 21 briefly wavered. But soon, as if having made a decision, he bit his lip with a resolute expression.

"This won't do. I will carry you, old man. Let's leave His Majesty here and depart as quickly as possible."

What? Aslan cried out in shock.

"Then what about His Majesty? I'll, I'll carry His Majesty!"

"That won't work either. From here on, we'll be running at full speed to the Asein Gate. We can't do that while carrying baggage."

"But..."

"Speed alone won't suffice. We need something to hold their attention."

The group gasped. Not only would they abandon His Majesty, but now he suggested tossing him to the bandits as bait?

"To some extent, he likely anticipated this possibility as well. His mentioning to abandon him wasn't a mere request."

He said there was a high probability it would come to this.

"In any case, as this is not his true body, it's not dangerous."

"But, but even if there's no immediate danger, won't he eventually return to this body?"

Aslan wanted to cry.

Why had things turned out this way? Where had it all gone wrong?

Was it his fault for not knowing beforehand, as an insider, that the bandits were colluding with Carthago? Or was it his fault for stubbornly insisting on bringing Old Man Max despite their desperate circumstances?

No, perhaps the root of it all was surviving in Rohan and coming to this damned slash-and-burn village. Ah, everything was his fault.

His Majesty Bart had asked if he would regret it. Aslan now knew the answer.

He was in the midst of regretting every single thing he had done.

In the meantime, 21 carefully leaned His Majesty against a roadside boulder and approached Aslan, who still stood there sobbing, at a loss for what to do. Gripping the boy's shoulder tightly, he spoke through gritted teeth, emphasizing each and every word.

"Listen carefully."

"The most useless thing in this world is worrying about that man's safety. Do you understand?"

Yet those words sounded so desperate, as if 21 was talking not to Aslan but to himself, trying to steel his own resolve. Aslan could only meekly nod, eyes brimming with tears.

Hoisting the dejected Old Man Max onto his back, 21 tersely spat out,

"Let's go."

Even then, the group glanced back at His Majesty several times, only hastening their heavy steps upon hearing the hurried approach of footsteps from all directions.

Meanwhile, blissfully unaware of the group's desperate pace, Nate freely set off, having casually tossed aside the homunculus.

Using a bit too much energy to break free had left him quite fatigued. Still, it felt far more comfortable than being trapped inside the doll, slowly drowning without any outlet.

As Nate gradually regained his strength, his speed also steadily increased. However, despite shooting forward like a beam of light, he grew anxious as the presence of the barrier he had created grew fainter and fainter. Just how far did that fearless kid intend to go?

[Emperor Daddy!]

A tiny blue light, like a bead, suddenly popped into existence and rapidly circled around Nate. It was Herna, always one step ahead.

[Morres killed that Diggory brat's bug! But I had no idea he would get sucked into the opened channel. I'm sorry!]

[It was something no one could have predicted. You have nothing to apologize for.]

And in that Diggory brat's eyes, you're the brat, Herna.

[Daddy His Majesty! The Knights of St. Marcias are coming.]

A small pink bead appeared next, gently settling upon Nate's soul. It was Gades, always one step behind.

[That Durand brat is dead set on entangling Morres this time around. He's all fired up.]

[If it's that matter, I've already told Francis... By the way, child. No matter how you look at it, Sir Durand is hardly a brat, is he?]

He already has a grandchild as big as you, Gades.

The twins never seemed to pay any mind to respecting their elders.

[The Puppeteer is still in the capital. He's hanging around with that greasy guy from Rohan.]

[He has no connection to the Diggory brat, but just in case, I told Bremen to keep an eye on him.]

Herna and Gades followed along, circling Nate as if out for a stroll.

Among Nate's children, only these two could open channels. Thus, compared to the other children, they shared relatively more information with him.

[Emperor Daddy, this is as far as we go.]

[Daddy His Majesty, you must return safely.]

But as they were still young children, they couldn't maintain the channeling for long.

Glimpsing the twinkling light of the small twins bidding him farewell at the edge of the planetary system, Nate sped up and plunged into the outer nebula.

The presence of the barrier had grown so faint that it was nearly undetectable without extreme focus.

Passing through the five melodies flowing between nebulae, at one point, a round, sparkling gray bead-like object attached itself to Nate's side. Its clear, transparent gray also resembled someone's eyes.

[Your Majesty.]

Cornsheim.

Nate furrowed his brow. Of all times for this detestable fellow to show up.

[You must remain in your rightful place. Cease being swayed by the schemes of wicked beings.]

The thought waves emitted by the Cornsheim's leader carried an exceedingly dry timbre. Just hearing it, Nate was greatly displeased as that stiff face and inhuman voice came to mind.

Increasing his speed even further, he spat out a curt thought.

[Piss off.]

[...Your Majesty must not forget his true role.]

At the same time, gray beads began to multiply one by one around Nate. The clan members were attempting to connect simultaneously.

[Your Majesty, Your Majesty, Your Majesty...]

[Your Majesty, Your Majesty...]

Soon, dozens of round beads surrounded Nate. They flickered their light in unison, like blinking eyes. Blink, blink, blink.

Your Majesty, Your Majesty, Your Majesty.

Without clearly stating their intentions, they continued to call out to Nate as if demanding something from him. They remained as sinister as ever.

[Don't pry as you please. Close the channel, Cornsheim.]

Whoosh. Responding to his will, a powerful wave swept through the surroundings, centered on his soul. The small beads collectively ceased their flickering, shocked by the impact.

It was already difficult to maintain composure in soul form, unlike when in one's true body. No, it was closer to deliberately refraining from controlling emotional shifts. Even now, as he began to feel displeasure, an ominous aura started to radiate from his soul.

The small beads, seemingly frightened, observed Nate's mood for a moment before beginning to wink out one by one. Now, only the leader of the group that had first appeared remained.

[Your Majesty. All things must flow according to the natural order. You must cease clinging to that which has already departed.]

Light began to gather in Nate's right hand, soon forming the shape of a long rod. It was the manifestation of his sword, Nutcracker.

There would be no further warning. Clearly understanding Nate's intentions, the Cornsheim's leader faded away, leaving behind a small lament.

[Please do not blindly trust your premonitions...]

With his disappearance, Nate was left alone in the vast outer space.

Once more straining his senses to the utmost, he could no longer detect any trace of the barrier's presence. While wasting time with the Cornsheim bunch, his son's soul had already drifted immeasurably far away.

In any case, to disrupt him so needlessly, it would have been better to just leave them for the Inquisitors to sweep away.

With no other choice, Nate began to advance aimlessly in the direction he had last sensed the presence.

He felt somewhat uneasy but not entirely without hope. If his son were to call for him even once, Nate would never miss that voice.

How much time had passed?

Advancing outward, ever outward without any fixed destination, Nate began to grow impatient. Even though the sense of time was vague in this place, it still felt like a considerable while since he had lost track of his son's presence.

[Where in the world are you and what are you doing...]

He simply couldn't understand that child. In this situation, shouldn't he call for his father at least once?

Was the child fiercely independent or just thoughtless?

It was precisely that moment.

-Father, Your Majesty Holy Emperor...

It was a fleeting, faint thought, as if brushing past.

Rather than a proper call, it was merely a momentary recollection, but...

For Nate, that was enough. He shot forth in the direction the thought wave had come from.

The place he discovered his son was nearly at the boundary between dimensions. Unaware of just how terrifying a place the Ye was or perhaps not caring, the brat was floating about in the darkness with a serene face, embracing a single fragment of a soul.

Nate felt the back of his head throb, an sensation that should have been impossible for a soul.

[But then why is the god who oversees this dimension just watching as those fellows lie in wait for an opportunity?]

In the cold that seemed as though it would instantly freeze and shatter a mere lowly soul, that was the extent of what he had to say.

Nate was a bit dumbfounded.

This kid always said he was curious about many things, yet he never seemed to have any intention of actually studying.

[That is because the chief god who oversees Delcross is not a personal god, my son.]

If you had properly read even just Chapter 1 of the Introduction to Theology, no, even just the preface, you wouldn't be saying such things. Always shirking your duties at every turn, just what do you plan to become when you grow up?

Of course, his son also thought of the Holy Emperor as a fellow who avoided work and slacked off, but Nate was blissfully unaware of that. Well, even if he knew, what could he do? Forcing upon one's child the things one couldn't do oneself was the so-called parental privilege.

As he enveloped his wide-eyed son, who was staring this way, in light, Nate finished his preparations to launch into a scolding session.

T/N:

Herna and Gades are calling their dad with a mixed up of titles and informal calling of Father here. So, they ended up calling their dad like, "Imperial Dad" or "Holy Dad".

For those who forgot who is Diggory, he's the guy who nurtured the worms in the basement and I believe have been feeding them humans for them to grow.

[Didn't I tell you not to get into trouble like this? Just where do you think your sense of danger has gone, acting so recklessly...]

[No, Father, Your Majesty. Although I suddenly died like this, I still protected Delcross from the threat of the demon realm!]

The brat even pouted as if he'd been wronged. He hadn't even finished half of what he wanted to say, but now that he'd grown a bit, he knew how to argue against his father's scolding.

As Nate opened his mouth to say more, a certain scene suddenly flashed through his mind.

It was the sight of the outskirts of the Delcross capital, shrouded in black smoke. Part of the residential area was completely shattered, and casualties could be seen here and there. The Knights of St. Gracia were visible, carrying out rescue operations.

On one side, the Knights of St. Marcias and St. Aurelion were together battling against giant moth-like monsters. The odds were in their favor, but the damage to the knights was no trifle either.

And far in the sky, an ominous hole wrapped in a black whirlwind could be seen. From that huge open black hole, an immense number of moths kept flying in.

The vision ended in a fleeting moment.

This was the brief illusion created by Nate's premonition. The catastrophe that surely would have occurred had his son not intervened.

Once aware of the anomaly, Nate would have returned and shut that gate, but the damage that would have occurred in the meantime was not something even he could ignore.

In the end, he had no choice but to say with a disgruntled face,

[That... you did well.]

Hmph. Seeing his son's face instantly turn confident, Nate realized he had completely missed the timing to scold him.

Feeling somewhat deflated, his eyes fell upon the small soul his son was holding. Now reduced to a trivial appearance, that ominous red-flickering thing was undoubtedly one of the wicked beings that deserved a thrashing. It was likely the very thing that had dragged his son into this mess.

However, as he had done initially, Nate decided to ignore that irksome thing this time as well.

When his son, who had been ill with a fever not long ago, entered the audience chamber, the moment Nate first saw him, he could sense it. That worthless thing would remain by his son's side even in the distant future.

—I pray you do not blindly trust your premonitions.

The man, Cornsheim had said that, but that old man would never understand.

Some of those premonitions were not mere foresight, but an inevitable future that must come to pass. That child's path would continue to embrace wicked beings alongside him.

[Can you tell me what my soul looks like now? How did you know I suddenly died?]

Unaware of Nate's tangled thoughts, the brat threw out difficult questions with an innocent face, chirping away. This clueless thing.

Moreover, it seemed they had lingered too long at the dimensional boundary. Suddenly, an unpleasantly sticky gaze sweeping over them could be felt, so Nate swiftly added another layer of barrier to his son's soul.

It appeared they had caught the attention of one of the unsavory beings that occasionally coveted this place from the outer realms.

After the two connected primal worlds separated and the dimensional wall weakened, those things would sometimes gaze this way with eyes full of greed, as if looking at an exceedingly appetizing meal. However, the fiends who seemed ready to charge at any moment would poke around the boundary a few times before meekly returning.

Perhaps they were simply waiting for Nate, who stood guard against them, to die. Their concept of time was difficult for him, a human, to fathom.

In any case, he had to send his son back first.

[Go now. Don't make Masain worry too much.]

Surely that boy was blaming himself this time as well. That stubborn fiend shouldn't be too shocked.

Nate once more impressed the designated location for his son to return to upon his soul.

[Return, [Morres].]

And you brat, let yourself get hit just once. There's a limit to making people worry.

He flicked his son's forehead, imbuing it with his own feelings.

Thwack.

Guh. The brat's soul vanished in an instant, heading toward Delcross.

After watching the direction the child had flown off for a moment, Nate soon drew out Nutcracker in his right hand and quietly waited. Because among the sticky gazes sent from afar, multiplying one by one, one fiend was flying toward the boundary at rapid speed.

The pressure bearing down upon his soul grew heavier and heavier.

Before long, a black smoke-like substance began rising around Nate's soul. No, with its sticky and heavy texture, it was closer to mud than smoke. It steadily increased in volume, then soon began pouring out as if to fill the empty boundary.

Grooooooan.

Following that, an eerie resonance, perhaps a moan or a sigh, began to shake the boundary. Whatever its confidence, the fiend was directly gracing this place with its presence, even pulling along part of the hell it belonged to.

Nate spread the light enveloping his soul a bit further, pushing away the surrounding mud. Then, as if finding it ridiculous, a phlegmy laugh rang out. Hahahaha.

In an instant, the scenery before his eyes changed. The surroundings had become a vast and deep cavity enclosed by black walls.

In that immense space of unknowable end, Nate's soul appeared as nothing more than a single shining dot.

The black walls were covered in finely wriggling protrusions that looked like cilia, but upon closer inspection, each one was a soul, starved to the point of being hideously emaciated. It was part of the hell the fiend had dragged along.

The fiend was a vassal of [Famine].

Soon, part of the wall before Nate split open, and a giant black octopus-like being covered in tumors revealed itself. It was wriggling its thousands of deformed legs, a gruesome shape that dealt a blow to the soul just by looking directly at it.

Hahahaha. As the deformed octopus laughed once more, the tumors densely covering its body trembled.

[Are you the king of this place? I was always curious, as He had His eye on you. But though you possess the caliber of a king, are you not still human?]

Indeed, upon examination, it seemed to think it was quite worth a try. The laws of cause and effect were also ambiguous at the dimensional boundary, so it could pull up its main body without burden. That was why it had excitedly rushed over with its original form, not just its spiritual body.

He was a bit tired from fitting his soul under the rules of the primary world for the past few days, then escaping from there again. However, he wouldn't be looked down upon by the likes of this fiend.

Nate smirked and gripped the Nutcracker. But the fiend's next words caused his face to stiffen instantly.

[And what was that soul just now? What a pity, sending it away in such a hurry. Was that not also a young soul that looked extremely delicious?]

Slurp. The sound of the fiend licking its lips greedily was conveyed without filter.

Nate's eyes grew cold. He was involuntarily reminded of Kaien, left behind in the western mountains.

He had intended to lightly greet the guest who barged into someone else's home, but now the thought of sending it off nicely had vanished.

As he aimed his sword straight, the fiend let out a scoff in disbelief. Of course, at that light laugh, the walls of hell shook and the bound souls screamed, "Groooooan," but...

[To think you would charge at me with a mere spiritual body, not even your original form! Moreover, that spirit has yet to shed the lowly human habit of wielding a lump of metal! How utterly ridiculous!]

The octopus fiend spread hundreds of its thousands of legs to the walls, dragging its massive body outward while sneering.

As the fiend said, without his original body, Nate's greatest weapon, aura, was tricky to use.

Of course, if he put his mind to it, pulling aura all the way here wasn't entirely impossible, but he was currently too far from Delcross. If he drew power here, the entire continent would instantly fall into an aura-depleted state.

However, by leaving his body behind, Nate also gained other options.

This was the boundary between dimensions. Even if he borrowed some unfamiliar power and caused a bit of a ruckus, the impact on the primary world would be extremely minimal.

Once his decision was made, execution was simple. A small red dot appeared at the tip of his sword, gradually growing and beginning to envelop the Nutcracker. It became an ominously glowing red blade, extending its length until it reached dozens of meters.

[...!?!]

The being did not know.

To Nate, swordsmanship was not some inescapable human limitation, but merely the most efficient way to move power.

Swish. The quietly swung Nutcracker drew a red line in the air. A long line that sliced through many of the fiend's legs, including one side of the hell's wall it had opened.

Kwaaang!

And the aftershock surged forth. The fiend's severed legs flew everywhere, and souls were pushed away up to dozens of meters on either side of the line, temporarily creating an empty space in the wall of hell.

[Wh-What?]

The octopus fiend looked at its severed tentacle legs in bewilderment. It seemed it never imagined there would be a power that could so easily ignore the caliber of its main body and penetrate it.

Seeing the dumbfounded fiend's appearance, Nate suddenly recalled the reaction of Balthazar, the commander of the Imperial Guard, when he first demonstrated this technique with aura. The stern old man's eyes had grown as wide as saucers as he stuttered. Nate involuntarily grinned at the memory.

Back then, the knights, who had only focused on increasing the intensity and range of cutting, were astonished to the point of fainting at the idea of launching the aura blade and detonating the aura as is. In a sense, aura explosion also signified a lack of proficiency in aura manipulation.

Now, even Masain could imitate it to some extent, so it had become a familiar technique in the palace.

However, just now was excessively wasteful. Perhaps because the nature of this power itself had a destructive tendency, it seemed fine to conserve strength a bit more compared to when using an aura blade. Should he further reduce the width?

Swish. The subsequently swung red light had thinned to nearly finger-width. Instead, its length was far greater than before, reaching hundreds of meters.

Kwaaang!

A long gash appeared on the fiend's body, and the hideous tumors on its wounds all burst open at once. To the extent that one side of the hell's wall had been sliced through, creating a gap.

Through that open gap, emaciated souls began flowing out, screaming, "Aaaaaaah."

The deformed octopus finally seemed to realize the gravity of the situation. It swiftly extended its remaining legs toward Nate and shouted,

[Why? Why do you wield the [Calamity] of the vanished world?]

[I borrowed it for a bit.]

I had the authority because there's a necessary task. Separating dimensions can't be done barehanded.

Hundreds of legs with terrifying strength were swung at Nate. It was an overwhelming force that would instantly crush any ordinary soul with a mere graze, but to him, it was an extremely inefficient and self-destructive attack.

In fact, the fiend's legs were smashing the very hell it had summoned. To the point that there were far more souls being crushed and vanishing after being struck by the fiend than by Nate's attacks.

If each of those legs had been wielded like the sword of a trained swordsman, even Nate would not have been able to face the fiend so easily.

Anyhow, since the other side was wasting strength, this side should conserve a bit more. Let's try drawing it out as thin as thread.

A [Calamity] line, so fine it was nearly invisible, came into being. This time, it was of tremendous length, reaching hundreds of meters.

Its power would not be very satisfactory if detonated as is, but there was no form more efficient for holding and swinging it. Nate swung that slender and long sword to his heart's content. The fiend's approaching legs were all severed, and the walls of hell began to shatter along the sword's trajectory.

Before long, the deformed octopus completely lost its strength and slumped down. The passage of hell it had summoned was already largely destroyed, mostly resummoned, and only fragments of the walls remained, supporting its body.

The starving souls clinging to the walls of hell were directly exposed to the chill of the dimensional boundary, unable to endure the bitter cold, and began freezing and crumbling one by one.

The octopus's appearance was truly wretched. Most of its legs had been sliced off, and the tumors on its surface had all burst, oozing pus. It seemed like a rotten, collapsing pumpkin settling down. What was thought to be a large tumor blinked like an eyelid, shedding pus-like tears.

Should he finish it off? Nate gripped Nutcracker and pondered for a moment.

However, what made him hesitate were the multiple gazes observing them from beyond. Particularly the gaze of [Famine], who had sent its vassal for amusement and was quietly spectating.

Eyes waiting for something to happen. Was it perhaps hoping he would draw more of the [Calamity] and lose balance? Or was another trap hidden?

Right then, a scene flashed before Nate's eyes.

A blood-red sky and a black earth covered in mud. Amid thousands of tentacles pouring down like rain, a sudden upsurge of dark red flames.

Within the storm of terrifying power sweeping away everything around it, the steadily growing flames eventually transformed into the shape of a giant sword, and the blade exploded as is.

The deformed octopus's legs and countless tumors burst, unable to withstand the scorching heat.

This time, even Nate was truly astonished.

The one to completely finish off this fiend someday was not Nate himself.

45

[Ha ha ha.]

As Nate lifted his sword and suddenly stopped, beginning to laugh quietly, the octopus-like creature stared at him in confusion. Its swollen, crumpled eyes swaying in apparent unease.

Nate shattered his Nutcracker and slowly approached the deformed octopus. His laid-back demeanor was as though he was taking a stroll, yet it appeared more oppressive than when he was swinging [Calamity], making the octopus shiver unconsciously.

[Speak.]

He extended his hand, gently touching the creature's eyeball. The octopus couldn't dare to lower its eyelids, and only retched a sob in response.

[Why did your king use you as a scapegoat?]

Why couldn't he, himself, have choked the life out of this creature?

Why should he let this creature go?

Nate speculated it was likely related to the schemes of [Famine], who sent the octopus here.

Upon hearing this, the deformed octopus, forgetting its position, retorted loudly:

[Scapegoat?! This body, this body received the [blessing] bestowed personally by the Lord of [Famine]. How dare you distort his profound intentions!]

From its overly sensitive reaction, it seemed this creature had begun to subtly question its king's intent as well.

Regardless, Nate thought of a possibility from the creature's words.

[Blessing.]

Yes, blessing.

Nate's gaze slowly swept across its soul. Upon meeting his gaze, the deformed octopus was taken aback, noticeably shrinking in fear.

Nate's spiritual insight discovered a blessing engraved on a corner of the octopus's soul. A small phrase that was so subtly marked, it would be hard to recognize under normal circumstances.

—"I cherish you greatly, your enemy is my enemy, and whoever harms you will never escape my revenge."

Nate clicked his tongue.

"Such superficial..."

It looked like a simple blessing, but it was a decree from a dimensional king. In the boundary of the dimension, its effects would be preserved in full.

Right now, it might not harm Nate, but the karma of unescapable revenge remained and would eventually allow [Famine] to exert some power in Delcross's dimension. It could have caused a lot of trouble.

Meanwhile, the octopus, caught in Nate's gaze, could only sweat cold beads in silence.

Why had it regard him as just a human soul of slightly higher rank? This man, who effortlessly subdued him, the closest servant of the great ruler [Famine] and a monarch of a hell dimension, truly embodied the power befitting of a king.

Seeing his golden crown up close was too dazzling to stare directly at. On top of that, those frightening eyes seemed to pierce through the monarch himself. He must have been out of his mind. He regretted heedlessly running out at the playful words of the king, suggesting he would establish a stronghold.

However, the octopus's tribulations did not end there. It could feel the horrifying flow of karma slowly wrapping around it.

"What... what is this!"

Panicking, the octopus rolled its eyes around, but froze the moment it met Nate's cold gaze. A command that cannot be refused, a powerful blessing that could even manipulate the fate of a Demon King, was binding its body.

"Even though you're only at the boundary, you've entered my territory, so I shall also bestow a [Blessing] upon you."

Is this thing can be even be called a human?

As the octopus was slowly consumed by an unprecedented extreme fear, it thought blankly.

And then, a solemn declaration fell upon its soul.

—If you step into my domain again, you will forever suffer in the hellfire that incinerates even souls. Your king will end up being devoured by the one he intended to devour, without leaving a trace, not even a name.

With the pain of seemingly burning away, the letters of light were engraved on one side of the octopus's soul. Nate, touching the shaking creature's eyeball, spoke in a seemingly affectionate tone.

"Do you understand?"

Forced to face Nate's gaze with no way to avoid it, the creature's eyeball trembled in extreme terror. It was so white it seemed as if the creature's dark skin had turned pale.

"I will let you live. But if you ever return here, you will certainly die."

Once he gave his permission, the octopus was immediately freed from its terrible confinement. With a whooshing sound, its huge body started to be sucked away as if through a tiny hole.

The fragments of hell's wall, the frozen souls, and even the remaining parts of the creature's body disappeared without a trace.

Tsk. Nate, clicked his tongue, averting his gaze.

There were still eyes observing his soul from afar, but now, none seemed to rashly approach anymore. After a momentary stare towards them, Nate began preparations to transfer his soul back to Delcross.

It was time to return to the homonculus's body..

Bang bang bang!

Jerome was roused from his sleep by the frantic sound of his subordinates searching for him. Whether due to a hangover or not, his body felt devoid of energy, and his mind seemed foggy.

'Have I been sleeping this long?'

Rubbing his rough face, Jerome got up from his spot and went outside. The sun was already halfway across the sky, indicating it was already afternoon. He felt strange. He fully woke up when his waiting subordinates reported their search results.

The prisoner, suspected of being a spy for Asein, had been found. However, they reported, he was already dead.

"An internal strife?"

Jerome asked, striding briskly towards the village square.

"We don't know. At least there were no visible external injuries."

"Wasn't he a heretic who received judgement? His health must have been abnormal since he got here. Died while trying to escape, didn't he? And was discarded?"

Reaching the square, Jerome found his men huddled around a small cart, murmuring amongst themselves. On the cart lay the body of the prisoner.

The prisoner appeared to be asleep. Touching the body to confirm, there was indeed no pulse as his men had reported. It indeed seemed like he was dead.

"Since when has he been like this?"

"Well... when we found him near the road intersection, he was already like this."

Jerome narrowed his eyes, glaring at his subordinate.

The distance from there to slash-and-burn village was not short. It would have taken at least a few hours to get here, so was that possible?

The body of the prisoner did not look pale at all. Even touching it, there was no coldness typical of a corpse. He was just lying quietly with his eyes closed, not even showing signs of rigor mortis.

While examining the stiff joints and body of the prisoner, Jerome suddenly seemed to notice something, quickly brushing the hair from his face and feeling the contours.

"Did he... always look like this?" he tilted his head.

He didn't notice when he first saw him, but why does his face seem familiar with his eyes closed?

Jerome grabbed the prisoner's chin and examined his face thoroughly. Feeling like he was missing something important, he couldn't easily pull his hands away from the man's face. As the murmurs of his subordinates grew louder behind him, Jerome, unable to find any distinctive features, finally gave up and stepped back from the cart.

"It might not be death. Put him in the barn for now and keep an eye on him."

Upon the order, his subordinates immediately swarmed the cart.

Jerome, still in a daze, left the square, rubbing his face with one hand.

"Uh?"

One of the bandits, who was pulling out the corpse of the prisoner, paused momentarily.

"Why? What's wrong?"

"It's strange. He... why is he so light?"

His comrade, who was pushing the cart to the side of the square, responded nonchalantly.

"What's so strange about that? Those priests or apothecaries are often skinny, aren't they?"

"No, it's not that..."

He couldn't explain this strange sensation. No matter how light a person is, there should be a weight corresponding to the volume of bones and flesh in the body. But this prisoner felt different somehow. The material of the body felt subtly different, it felt like he was touching something empty, not human, which sent chills down his spine.

"Is it just my imagination..."

Ignoring the eerie feeling, he carried the corpse towards the barn.

Meanwhile, one of his men stopped Jerome, who was stumbling towards the shabby hut.

"Boss."

He was a burly man with a carelessly grown stiff beard, an old subordinate who had been with him since Rohan.

"I... Martha's case really didn't work out. I've ordered the funeral preparations to be done properly, so don't worry too much."

He hadn't dared to speak up yesterday due to the unusual atmosphere, but seeing his dispirited leader, he felt he should say something comforting. However, Jerome's reaction was somewhat strange.

"Martha?"

Jerome blinked his eyes in confusion.

Who was that again? Martha...

Furrowing his brows in thought for a moment, Jerome successfully recalled his wife, who had only died yesterday.

"Ah, Martha! Yes, that's right... You handle it as you see fit. You're doing great."

"...Boss?"

One of his subordinates, who knew about his deep affection for his wife, called out with a puzzled expression. Jerome, however, merely waved his hand dismissively at him and resumed his staggered walk toward the dilapidated shack.

If his subordinate could have seen Jerome's soul, he would have been shocked. His soul was in a terrible state, as if his entire head had been ripped off, leaving only half a body to float aimlessly.

Returning home, Jerome habitually shut the door and stared blankly around the shack.

Was he still drunk? His behavior today was unusually strange, even to him.

Why did everything feel so unfamiliar and numb? When he tried to think, his head felt heavy and foggy, and when he tried to recall past memories, they were faint.

His gaze fell on Kaien, who was sitting in a corner of the shack, eyes closed, dozing off. As long as Kaien didn't show his gruesome white-eyed eyes, he was just a tidy and pretty boy.

Suddenly, Jerome's body began to tremble as if he'd been struck by lightning.

That face...!

"Ahh...!"

Jerome fell to the floor, letting out a groan that sounded like a scream. Perhaps due to his paralyzed soul, he wasn't working properly. His realization did not materialize into thoughts or words, instead all he did was leaking out guttural sound while dragging his body backward.

"Huh...!"

Awoken by the noise, Kaien rubbed his eyes with a sleep-filled face. He soon spotted Jerome, shaking violently on the floor of the shack, and scowled.

"Why is he behaving like this? He's suddenly acting strange."

Even though all I did was rip off his head.

Kaien yawned and rose from his spot.

"You've been so noisy, crying 'Martha, Martha' and disrupted my sleep. Seems like I was a bit hasty. Who would have thought you'd turn out this way?"

Well, it doesn't matter anymore.

It was about time to leave; this place was nearing its end too.

Kaien approached the trembling Jerome, withdrawing the remaining fragments of his soul. At the same time, Jerome's eyes rolled back and he fell over, dead as a doornail.

It was merely days ago that Jerome, annoyed by the whining of prisoners whose tongues had been cut off, had beaten one to death with a single punch. But now, he'd ended up just like them. The irony was almost too much to bear.

Chewing on the ripped-out soul fragments, Kaien started to casually pack up his disguise. Rodrigo had yet to return from his trip to the gate, but there was no more time to wait for him. After all, he had the new identity card Rodrigo had prepared, so he should be able to manage on his own.

But the strong lingering thoughts of Jerome's soul left a clear piece of information in Kaien's head. It was a common occurrence when consuming souls, but the revelation was enough to stop him in his tracks.

'That suspicious demon worshipper is in slash-and-burn village now?'

* * *

As soon as Nate regained consciousness, he was surrounded by a group of hideous bandits and became dejected.

'Did I get left behind after all...?'

He had told Enrique to abandon him when needed, but the man really did abandon him without hesitation.

At Nate's awakening, the bandits initially jumped in surprise, as if seeing a ghost. But soon, they approached him with grotesque grins.

"The boss was right. You were alive after all."

He tried to move, but his wrists were tied behind him with ropes, making it impossible to free himself.

These guys are quite cautious; they tied me up even when I appeared dead.

Furthermore, there were clear signs of injury on each of the bandits surrounding him. A cut on the forehead, a bandage soaked in blood on the head, a swollen, twisted nose. So, they all harbored deep resentment towards him, Nate.

"Trying to run away, you bastard? Hurry up and spill it! Who's backing you! You scum, are you really an Asein spy?"

One of the brigands grabbed his collar and his body was helplessly yanked up.

"There's an inside man here, right? If you don't talk soon, you'll never see a good end, you piece of shit!"

The group member tapped a sharp dagger against his cheek, making threats. Nate quietly sighed with a gloomy face.

If only he had asked Enrique to cut off his arm earlier.

46

Let's briefly discuss the past.

During the period when young Nate was fully immersed in his culinary travels, there was a time when he was particularly focused on seafood dishes. While staying for a few days in a port city famous for its shrimp dishes, he encountered an old man with dark circles extending down to his chin.

He introduced himself as the guardian of Delcross and was currently in the midst of being worked to the bone fighting against a danger that had befallen the dimension he protected.

-Oh my...

Even then, the boy, who possessed innate spirit sight and exceptional divinity, could immediately tell the old man's words were not mere bluster. Sincerely hoping his sympathetic thoughts would be conveyed to him, Nate chewed on a crispy fried shrimp.

-Then help me out a bit! Don't just pretend to care with words!

-Oh my...

-You rotten bastard! Do you think I'm doing this for my own benefit? I'm telling you, the dimension you live in is on the verge of destruction!

The important thing was not whether it would be destroyed, but when.

-So the crisis is imminent. In a hundred years, no, at least within a few decades, a terrible calamity will befall this world!

A hundred years to a few decades. That was outside his range of consideration.

Nate nodded.

-Please continue to stay healthy and work for the sake of the world.

-What?

A distinct vein popped out on the old man's forehead.

-You're the only one I can ask for help on this continent. You merely need to occasionally exercise my authority when needed!

-It's not like you can freely exercise your authority just because you want to, right?

-I'm not asking that much of you, a human! Literally, just assist me a bit, okay? Just lend a hand. At this rate, forget the dimension, I'll die first!

-Well, you see, I'm also scheduled to die within a few years, so...

Krahhhh! The old man looked as if he would breathe fire from his mouth at any moment.

However, not many years later, the guardian of Delcross was dumbfounded to see Nate, who had come running to him on his own two feet with a deathly pale face.

-Sir, when is the crisis of that world? What should I do?

It was just before Melody's childbirth, right after he had received news from the information guild that he had become the father of three other children.

* * *

'Is this not retribution from back then, old man?.'

Being violently shaken by a bandit, Nate sorrowfully thought this to himself.

It would have been better if he had helped the weary old man a bit earlier. If he had taken a proactive stance and supported him from the start, he wouldn't have been aimlessly wandering around, recklessly falling in love here and there.

Then again, if that were the case, he wouldn't have met these children. A world without the children he had already met was now an unthinkable concept for him.

"You little brat! You got some nerve, huh? Planning to keep your mouth shut till the end?"

The man shaking him by the scruff of his neck lost his temper and swung his fist. Reflexively, Nate twisted his upper body slightly, narrowly avoiding the punch, and continued with his thought process.

By the way, what on earth could that kid Kaien be thinking?

The child seemed to have been born with spiritual eyes, just like him, but he never expected him to come up with the idea of devouring souls.

Was it because of his early childhood memories of starvation? Was his personality twisted because he was abused by Jerome? Or did he suffer a severe head injury when he was young that he could no longer think normally?

When he first learned that the child was doing such a thing, he was furious to the core, but when he thought about it, wasn't it all his fault for not finding and looking after the child in time?

"Huh? Did this brat just dodge?"

The bandit lifted his other fist, but Nate spun his body around the grabbed collar, wrapping his legs around the bandit's neck. He didn't have enough weight to bring the man down, but luckily the bandit lost his grip on Nate's robe and scrambled to support himself on the ground.

During that brief moment, Nate, who had quickly rolled to his side and gotten up, tripped the other bandit still standing there in shock, and with that momentum, spun and delivered a kick to the jaw of another bandit standing nearby.

Choke! Cough! The bandits staggered, but they didn't completely fall.

Homunculus's body was overly light and he could not replenish his strength with aura, resulting in a disaster. It would have been better if he could wield handcuffs as before.

"That bastard? He's not just an ordinary prisoner, he was professionally trained!"

"Let's all rush him! Kill him!"

Aaaargh! The bandits rushed towards him one after another, but Nate was still lost in his own thoughts.

Let's just be glad I found him now.

It was fortunate that he had a bad premonition and hurriedly came here; if he had been waiting for the guild's investigation, he might have lost track of the child completely in the scorched village swept through by the punitive force.

For now, it seems I should find Kaien and have a little chat. I've already put a barrier on the child's soul at the bottom of the cliff, so now I can locate the child anytime.

Swoosh. As the bandit's fist swung wildly with terrifying momentum, he ducked to avoid it and simultaneously spun his leg behind, slamming the bandit's neck onto the ground. Crack!

Seeing another man rush from behind, he swirled his body, grazing past him. Using that momentum, he spun once more and kicked the bandit's jaw. Thump!

Spinning around was a bit tedious, but he gathered his strength and launched his attack, and this time he felt a solid hit.

He moved sluggishly towards the next guy.

"...This crazy guy!"

"How can he still move like that while stumbling so much?"

Indeed, a body without aura was in such a state that it could barely muster enough strength to land a solid hit, but fortunately, after landing a hit, the divine power recovered his body enough to land another.

In other words, Nate would not fall during the fight. It's just that the process was extremely strenuous.

He ran towards the bandit at the entrance. Using the momentum of his run, he leapt and kicked the guy's chin. Cough!

Unfortunately, he was a bit short on strength this time. The guy wobbled but didn't fall, blocking the entrance while the guys behind rushed towards him.

Nate promptly jumped back and headbutted the nearest guy's chin. If one strike doesn't work, hit multiple times.

* * *

"I never imagined that this would happen....."

When Kaien arrived at the empty barn, all the bandits inside were already down.

Nate had cut the ropes with the dagger used to threaten him and was considering cutting off his arm as well. He hesitated because the dagger was too short to cut off an arm without aura, and the heavy handcuffs were somewhat helpful in combat with the homunculus's body.

The boy who was quietly observing the barn opened the door in surprise at the unexpected scene, Nate called him quietly.

"Kaien."

The boy crumpled his face in displeasure and twisted his lips.

"What? How do you know my name? Who are you to call me?"

"....."

"What the hell is this mess? Did you do all this?"

His black fierce eyes flickered.

"Are you really a spy from Asein?"

"We need to talk."

".....?"

Kaien examined Nate's face for a moment. It was hard to read any meaningful emotion from his face, which never changed. As the boy looked at Nate's emotionless face, his own expression gradually ebbed away like a low tide.

His severely furrowed eyebrows relaxed, and his exaggeratedly curving lips straightened. He decided there was no point in consciously mimicking the faces of the bandits, and that it was unnecessary.

Soon, the two of them, looking at each other, wore similarly bland expressions on their faces, as if looking at a mirror.

Kaien glanced at the bandits sprawled inside the barn with an expressionless face. Seeing the newly stamped handcuffed guys showing no signs of regaining consciousness, he staggered inside and locked the door. Then, he slowly turned to look at Nate and asked.

"...What do you want to talk about?"

This was the first time Kaien had met someone like him who could see souls. There was some time until the punitive force arrived, and there was no need to refuse when the other party wanted to talk.

He also needed to figure out what the guy had done to him a while ago.

"Why do you eat souls? Since when have you been doing this?"

"Why do I have to tell you that?"

The boy seemed to ask out of pure curiosity, rather than in an accusatory tone.

"It depends on your answer how I should stop you."

"Like what you did last time?"

"Just like last time."

Upon Nate's nod, the boy's eyebrows furrowed this time.

That could be a problem.

"If that's the case, then our conversation is over. If you're intent on hindering me somehow, is there any point in talking to you?" The boy turned to leave as he spoke, but he stopped at the exit upon hearing Nate's next words.

"Have you ever examined your own soul?"

"...?"

"Do you really not understand the impact that consuming souls has on your own soul?"

It seemed to imply that it was having a negative effect on him.

Kaien quietly inspected his own soul. It didn't look much different from his usual physical body.

If there was a difference, it would be that the numerous souls he had gorged on for the past few days hadn't been properly digested, and they were poking out from various parts of his body.

[You want to kill Aslan, don't you? Why me? Huh? Why me?]

From his stomach, Conrad's face, stained with bloody tears, popped out. He was the one Kaien killed a few days ago by the waterfall, ripping out his nails with Rodrigo.

From his back, one of Rodrigo's legs was sticking out, and from his neck, Martha's right arm was dangling.

And Jerome's face, whom he had just finished consuming, was poking out from his side and howling.

[Argh! Martha, Martha, Martha!]

"Well, it's a bit of a mess."

This usually didn't happen, but it seemed that consuming too many souls in a short period of time caused the previously eaten souls to also pop out.

His casual reply caused Nate's expression to become slightly perplexed. He cocked his head and asked, "Do you not feel the pain that your soul is experiencing? The dark emotions of the souls you've consumed pouring into you simultaneously and unfiltered, is surely not something an ordinary human can endure..."

"My soul is in pain?"

Kaien cocked his head. It was something he didn't understand.

Since he was an infant, he had been an emotionless human. As he grew up, he gradually realized he was a bit different from others, but the clever boy quickly began to mimic the expressions of other bandits and slowly eliminate the discomfort others felt.

It wasn't difficult. Most of the bandits were always angry.

By frowning, screaming, and cursing, the bandits believed him to be one of them. That had been his way of life up to this point.

Maybe his soul was capable of feeling emotions like other people. After all, he could not see his own facial expression and hence had no way to confirm.

But, as long as he wasn't suffering now, wasn't that okay regardless of his soul's state?

Upon Kaien's words, Nate shook his head.

"Do you think your body will be fine while your soul is being ruined? You'll have to deal with it one way or another eventually."

"Um....."

That reminded him—Jerome, whose soul was torn apart, had half his body disappear in an instant.

Just until yesterday, the boy had scoffed at Jerome's idiocy for not understanding what his soul truly wanted as he tore Jerome's soul apart. But was he no different from that fool?

"Well, let's put that aside for now. So, why are you trying to stop me? The guys I ate had nothing to do with you, right? If there's a problem, it's my problem. What does it have to do with you?"

Nate then quietly locked eyes with the boy. "It's not that it doesn't concern me. Your every mistake will ultimately be my responsibility, and the problems you encounter will also become mine."

"What? Why would that be?"

The boy asked with a dumbfounded face, but upon hearing Nate's next words, even Kaien, the notorious Kaien, was left with his mouth hanging open.

"Because I'm your father."

Huh? What?

For a moment, silence flowed between the two.

"You are? My?"

When Nate nodded, Kaien made a strange face.

"How old are you exactly? At what age did you have me?"

"....."

Nate subtly avoided eye contact.

How could this seemingly young-looking person be my father?

How did he even find me?

Are you really a devil worshipper? Just when I thought I'd gotten out of the bandit's group, am I now a family member of a criminal?

Although he seemed a bit flustered and threw out these various questions, the boy seemed to accept the fact easier than expected. For the first time, he had met someone who could see souls like him, and it seemed very convincing when this person said they were family.

Moreover, Kaien would have started to notice more and more similarities between the two. Their overall impressions were quite different because of his intense red hair and the large whites of his eyes, but upon close examination, their facial contours looked quite similar.

"So, what is your name?"

"I'm Nathaniel Klein."

Suddenly, a very famous human name came out of his mouth, so it took Kaien a while to recognize his identity.

...The Holy Emperor? My biological father is the Holy Emperor?

The boy's mouth hung open.

"So, the Holy Emperor who is famous for being unruly in this generation is....."

"....."

"So that's why your soul looked so different because you're a representative of God. But why don't you look like that now? Are you usually hiding your power?"

"...It's similar to that."

"I see, so I was the prince of Delcross."

That's not bad. Kaien's face brightened a bit.

Nate explained to the boy in a quiet tone.

His mother was a noblewoman of Rohan, whom he had met briefly in his youth and then parted. She gave birth to Kaien and met a group of bandits on her way back to Rohan, where everyone except Kaien was killed.

The Holy Emperor, who had learned of his existence late through the Information Guild, had disguised himself as a prisoner and came here to find him.

"Why go through all that trouble?"

The boy couldn't understand at all. Isn't it okay not to care whether he exists or not?

Just as he didn't seem to resent the fact that he was raised in a bandits' group, he didn't seem grateful that his father had personally come a long way to find his son. It just seemed like a useless and inefficient thing to do.

Nate gazed at Kaien's face for a while and then asked in a calm tone, "Will you come with me to the imperial palace of Delcross?"

It was a question as if there was a choice.

"What if I go?"

"You'll receive all the benefits that you can get as the 4th Prince of Delcross and my fifth child. The Blue Rose Palace, the palace of the princes, will be your home, and all the educational opportunities that a prince should enjoy will be provided. You can formally participate in the succession battle to become the future Holy Emperor, and based on the power and connections that others can't even imagine, you can try to pioneer something new."

"....."

"You can also build a bond with your kin. There are many of your siblings in the imperial palace."

Kaien grimaced a bit. It all sounded good but when he thought about it, but on reflection, they were not very appealing.

"What if I don't go?"

"I'll give you the fortress of Klanos. All supports will be provided excluding the authority of the royal family. You can travel the continent freely and settle wherever you want. The informants of the guild will visit you regularly to ensure that you're not inconvenienced. You will have no glorious authority, but at the same time, there will be no heavy duty."

"Hmm....."

"However, you must not commit crimes such as capturing souls or violating social norms."

The boy gave a sly smile.

"Can't you just pretend you didn't see me and leave me alone?"

"That would be impossible."

Nate firmly shook his head.

Kaien stroked his chin and pondered for a moment. Then the boy who opened his mouth had calm eyes.

"I've been trying everything to get out of Jerome's hands until now. I thought I couldn't get completely out of here unless I wiped out this damned thieves' group entirely."

The bandits, who must not reveal their den, never leave a betrayer alone. If anyone tries to escape, they either muster their strength to catch and kill them, or hand over the betrayer's information to the guards who are informed in advance for execution.

Unless Kaien wiped out all the bandits who knew his face at once, he would never be free from the risk of being a fugitive for life.

In Rohan, a still young Kaien failed to properly control information, inadvertently giving Jerome the opportunity to escape first. So this time, he went to great lengths to delay Flanders's punitive forces from realizing what was happening as much as possible.

"But after we get rid of the king of the bandtis, you're telling me that now the emperor of Delcross is my father? What's the difference? No, if I were to join the new pack you're ruling over, could I ever break free from you?"

"..."

"I'm not going to Delcross. Father."

Nate, after catching his breath for a while, slowly nodded his head.

"...Alright."

The two then exchanged various stories. Curiously, Kaien, who seemed to be constantly on guard and hostile, was more cooperative in the conversation with Nate than expected.

Of course, it was only because he found it pointless to resist once he realized that this man who appeared as his real father could control Kaien's abilities and beat down all the bandits.

Apart from the occasional hijinks of Nate tossing handcuffs at the stirring bandits, time passed relatively smoothly.

When asked why he held a grudge against Aslan, Kaien's face stiffened.

"Huh? Ah, that guy. He interfered a lot whenever I tried to plan something."

Didn't I try to plant more spies in the Flower Village in addition to Rodrigo? And I even hired an assassin to kill Jerome.

The boy grumbled.

"Since Aslan was extremely good at detecting all the aura users, I kept failing. Thanks to him, I had Rodrigo provoke the punitive forces to come faster, making him plunder the top of Asein like crazy, do you know how long it took to see the result, Father?"

It wasn't an unwarranted grudge for him. He candidly confessed that it was his doing that led to the death of Martha, the foster mother who raised him.

"After all, Martha would have been killed by the punitive force, right? It's better to make use of her until she's no longer needed rather than dying meaninglessly."

Kaien was firm.

Nate's heart felt a little heavier because the only soul he was able to save in its original form here was hers. Even though they were a band of bandit who ate robbery and murder for breakfast, it was certainly not a fair punishment to have even the soul ripped and devoured after death.

With a serious face, he once again warned his son.

"Keep this in mind. Your soul is at its limit now. If you try to consume another soul rashly, I can't guarantee what will happen."

But upon hearing these words, Kaien looked straight at Nate.

"You're not telling me that it's bad, are you?"

'Martha used to say that whatever I did was bad', the boy added.

"I didn't know you wanted such nagging."

"You were furious when you first saw me, weren't you? Saying I devoured Martha's soul."

Nate silently stared at the boy for a moment. The boy couldn't tell if those eyes, occasionally emitting a peculiar silver glow, were looking at Kaien's face or his soul. Maybe both.

"Do you know why that's a bad thing?"

"No?"

From the start, Kaien didn't understand the standards of good and bad.

"If I explain, do you think you can understand their pain?"

"Not at all?"

You think I would know others' pain when I don't even know the pain of my own soul.

"Then there's no need to say it, is there?"

"...You're weird..." Kaien scratched his cheek with his finger. "But it's strange. I find it very easy to talk to you. I think it's the first time I've had a conversation like this with anyone. I think I might miss seeing you more often in the future."

"..."

"Well, I should go. It's already late. The Flanders punitive force will be here soon. It's hard to run away when everything's in chaos, so it would be better for you to leave before it's too late, right?"

"I will send a spy from the guild later."

"To watch over me... Well, got it."

Kaien staggered toward the entrance of the barn. As he was opening the locked barn door, Nate called him.

"Kaien."

"Hmm?"

"You don't need to pretend in front of me."

"..."

From the first time Nate saw Kaien, he knew. He knew that Kaien's left leg was perfectly normal, with Aura functioning as it should.

For a moment, Kaien's face hardened, but then he slowly shook his head. "...Wow. Even Jerome, who is full of suspicion, was fooled for almost 10 years. You really are not an ordinary person."

Firstly, he pretended to limp to spite Martha, who had failed to protect him properly. Next, he did it to guilt Jerome into not striking him down too easily. And most recently, to completely leave the life of the bandits and gain a brand new life, the boy had continued the act of limping.

That long pretense would end today.

The boy, who opened the barn door and stretched his left foot out which had been pretending to be lame, suddenly paused and looked back at Nate.

"It seems like not knowing the state of your own soul is as good as being ignorant, so should I teach you something too, Father?"

"....."

"Do you know how your soul looked when you were talking about life inside and outside the palace to me?"

With one corner of his mouth tugged upwards, Kaien gave a mean-spirited smirk.

"Father, you really hate being in the palace, don't you?"

The boy waved at him briefly, then disappeared outside the barn.

* * *

The day was gradually darkening.

The Flower Village was in turmoil after they belatedly discovered Jerome lying dead in their lodging.

The leader has been killed, there's a spy, we're under attack! In the confusion, all the bandits out for search were summoned to the public square.

During this process, when they belatedly learned that Flanders' army was heading this way, they panicked and began to arm themselves and escape. However, the punitive force had already laid a siege and was closing in on the village.

Just before the siege closed in, Nate, who had barely managed to escape the village, was slowly going down the mountain with a blank expression. The problem was that even if he headed towards the Asein Gate as he was now, it was impossible for a criminal like him who had received capital punishment to pass through alone.

"Ah, Enrique."

Fortunately, he was able to meet Enrique, who was hastily coming up the mountain on a narrow path.

"Your Majesty!"

At the relieved shout, Nate momentarily gazed at his face. It was because Enrique's face, which found Nate, showed an obvious sign of relief.

Nate already knew that Enrique sometimes looked at him with a very uncomfortable gaze. In fact, even Francis tried to kill him.

But in times like this, he couldn't quite tell if Enrique wanted to kill him or was worried about him.

Passing by the rigid Enrique who had forgotten to make a proper greeting, Nate patted his back. Of course, he didn't forget to pour out his divine power either. After all, he was aware that he had been too harsh on people today.

"The siege has already been completed. You would have had a hard time if we had passed each other."

Only then did Enrique quickly compose his expression and bowed his head to report.

"I safely handed over the two people to the guild members at the gate."

"You didn't have to rush back, but good work."

"....."

As he passed him and went down the mountain path again, Nate became lost in thought.

Kaien had said that Nate was a person he could talk to, which was natural. Nate knew very well of another person who showed the same symptoms as that boy.

That person also couldn't feel emotions from the beginning. He couldn't empathize at all with why others were suffering or sad, so even if those emotions were explained to him, he couldn't understand them.

Perhaps more than that is due to physical problems. Because that person's soul also reacted to sad things by crying and happy things by getting excited, just like others.

The pain felt by their souls is not unfelt. They simply don't know why it's painful.

Therefore, their faces often show a radical contrast, smiling while their souls are wailing.

The reason he didn't realize this when he first met Kaien was because both Kaien's face and his soul were glaring at him with a pouty face full of discontent.

That child left the world with a gleeful face for the first time, but his soul now.....

His train of thought was interrupted because Enrique, who had been following behind, asked out of the blue.

"Would you like me to carry you, Your Majesty?"

Nate thought, the man before him sure is making strange jokes today.

However, Enrique asked again hesitantly.

"...Are you okay?"

"...?"

What could possibly be wrong?

The sun was setting.

However, as the twilight spread and the sky darkened, the western sky suddenly brightened like never before. A massive flame rose, covering the entire valley that turned from the mountain ridge to the northeast. It was Flower Village.

Enrique glanced back with interest.

"It seems like it has started."

Nate silently gazed at the sight. His eyes were fixed on the transparent souls rising and moving gracefully through the air above the blazing mountain.

Souls. They were souls rising up towards the fiery mountain, moving as if dancing in the sky.

Perhaps some of them were struggling in agonizing death, while others were resisting leaving behind the regrets of their lives. Yet, to those watching from afar, they all seemed to be dancing carefreely.

Soon, the two of them turned around and hastened their steps along the path.

When they approached the Asein Gate, a familiar coffin came into view.

Enrique subtly looked at Nate, but Nate calmly entered the coffin without a word. Even if it was a grave waiting for him, he would have gone inside because he was so exhausted he felt close to death.

Swoosh. As the lid closed, his consciousness immediately faded away.

By the time they arrived at the guild branch, it was already pitch dark outside.

Supporting Nate with a dazed mind, Enrique entered the building. Aslan and old Max were waiting anxiously with worried expressions. The color of their faces had turned paler than ever. Even Aslan had ran up to him and grabbed the hem of his robe and began to cry. Even the old man, with whom Nate hasn't had much of a relationship, cared so much for him, whom he's only known for a few days.

What a kind boy, Nate thought.

As they were sharing a touching moment, a loud laughter echoed from inside the lobby.

"Huhuhahaha! You're a slow poke, have you finally arrived now?"

A tall and muscular man with well-developed muscles walked out of the lobby, laughing heartily. He was Justin Asteros, the guild's powerhouse and one of the few Sword Masters in the continent.

"Kukuku, Your Majesty. I heard you had a hard time this time. Little Aslan says you're a total....."

The man was finding something amusing, laughing with a chuckle as he approached them. However, he suddenly stopped mid-sentence when Nate quietly extended his arms towards him.

The man's eyes widened as he saw the blood-soaked bandages wrapped around Nate's wrists. The previously lively atmosphere in the lobby cooled down instantly.

"Justin." In a calm tone, Nate called his name.

The man flinched and trembled.

"If you play this prank one more time, I'll impose a 30% tariff on all your goods in the future. Understand?"

"What?" Justin's eyes opened wide. "30% tariff... Hey! That's straight up robbery, isn't it? Even Asein wouldn't do such things! And why would you impose a tariff on what I import, huh?"

"You are importing, aren't you? The latest fad from Brittany."

"What...."

Justin's jaw dropped.

Are fashion trends considered imports too? Huh? Well, that's good! In return, I'll raise the prices! I'll raise them sharply! Do you know who our store's most important customer is? It's your wife!

The man, who had been grumbling for a while, soon took out his Aura Blade and cut off the handcuffs.

Clank, clank.

Watching the handcuffs fall neatly to the floor, Aslan let out a sigh of admiration. Wow.

The man, who seemed quite rough, was actually an incredibly skilled individual.

Nate, with his wrists finally freed after a few days, rotated them here and there. As Nate did so, Justin, who had been watching him closely, asked hesitantly,

"...Hey, are you okay?"

"...?"

"This guy, and that guy, why are they acting like this today. If they were going to ask if I'm okay, shouldn't they have refrained from playing tricks from the start?"

Before returning to Delcross, Nate received a brief report on the current situation of the Asein branch and the direction of handling this incident. Among them was the issue of the whereabouts of the two people he had rescued from the Flower Village.

Max, who has no family or ties, decided to live by helping with odd jobs in the guild.

He was beaming with the thought that he had finally escaped from the bandit group he had been tied to for half his life. He didn't even seek his favorite alcohol, and it seemed that the cascade of holy power that poured in succession had suppressed even his alcohol withdrawal symptoms.

For Aslan, the range of choices was wider.

"This kid is talented. He's flawless as an alchemist, and even has an extraordinary talent to awaken his aura alone."

The child had been crawling in the bandit group since his childhood but was a rare child with a correct mind. The boy's face shone with joy at Nate's calm praise.

"Follow the child's wishes and help as much as possible. It would be good to continue studying as an assistant to a famous alchemist, or to write a letter of introduction as a squire to a promising knight."

But upon hearing that, the head of the Asein branch smiled quietly and made a strange gesture towards Aslan.

"Hmm, while waiting for you, I heard some interesting stories from this little one."

Suspicious of what trick was going on, Nate glanced at Justin, and Aslan stepped forward with a tense face. The boy walked up to Nate and cautiously knelt on one knee and bowed his head. He seemed to be imitating what Enrique does, and although the bow was awkward, it was quite serious.

The boy who had given a bow made an appeal to Nate with a slightly trembling voice.

"Bart... no, Your Majesty the Holy Emperor. I wish to be one of Your Majesty's person from now on."

A sigh could be heard from Enrique at his side.

"Another naive individual....."

Whether or not there was a noise from the side, Aslan looked up at Nate and spoke earnestly.

"I'm going to build up my sword skills and go to Delcross. I'm going to take the imperial knight exam next year and become a knight of the royal guard protecting you, always serving you by your side. I will do my best to make it so."

"....."

Nate was inwardly surprised by Aslan's unexpected words. It hasn't been a day since he'd escaped from the bandits group, but has already making plans for his life too quickly. Besides, isn't the process strangely specific?

Sure enough, there was someone who had stirred things up at his side.

"Hmm, I've promised to watch over his swordsmanship. The knight's examination? This great Justin will make sure he passes it through easily!"

Ha ha ha ha! After a glance at the proud and confident branch head, Nate met the gaze of the boy looking up at him with sparkling eyes.

"Aslan, you're still young. You don't need to set everything in advance. Childhood is shorter than you think. There's hardly enough time to try and enjoy things you've never done or enjoyed before, why don't you spend some more time thinking carefully?"

However, Aslan shook his head.

"If it weren't for Your Majesty, I would have surely lost my life to the hunting party today. My life now is as if it was given by Your Majesty. Then, isn't it right that the rest of my life should be dedicated to you, Your Majesty?"

He had been crawling desperately in the bandits group alone since childhood. He barely adapted, then the punitive force attacked, and he even crossed the border of Flanders on his own. Although he lived hard, the days were extremely lonely for a young boy.

But in the past few days following Nate, Aslan was able to feel an unprecedented sense of stability. He was able to firmly believe, rely on, and follow someone even in the tense situation of chasing and being chased. The boy didn't want to lose that newfound sense of stability and bonding again.

"Aslan."

Nate opened his mouth to once again dissuade the boy.

But for a moment, the face of a grown young man overlapped with the face of the boy looking up at him. Nate immediately knew that it was Aslan in a few years.

The well-grown young man was wearing the uniform of the royal guard knights as he promised in his childhood, but it was torn and soaked with blood, presumably in the middle of a tough battle. Other royal guard knights who seemed to have cooled down around him could be seen.

He was standing with his sword pointed strenuously at the dark grey sky. He shouted loudly, staring at his unknown opponent.

—If I had known it would be like this, if that was the case, I would never.....!

That scene disappeared very quickly. However, the tone of desperation in the young man's shout made Nate ask the boy the same question again.

"...won't you regret it?"

However, the boy's eyes full of conviction were as upright as ever.

"Yes, there will never be such a thing."

"....."

"...Is it not possible?"

What could he say in front of those desperate eyes?

"...I look forward to the day when Delcross greets another excellent royal guard knight."

Nate could barely reply, clearing his choking throat.

Ripple, ripple.

Listening to the faint sound of water lapping, Nate opened his eyes. It was the small artificial pond in the heart of the imperial palace.

He hoisted himself from the pond's surface and slowly walked out. His thoroughly soaked robes were clinging heavy, dragging his body down to the pond floor.

A middle-aged woman with a gentle face approached him, holding a clean blanket. She was the commander of the always reliable and faithful Saint Aurelion Paladin Order.

"Your heart had stopped twice. Your Majesty."

That seemed to be the reason her face looked a little pale. She must have been under a lot of stress for the past few days. Francis, who always worried terribly about his commander, would have something more to scold him about later.

"You've worked hard, Katrina."

"Not at all. Did you find the prince?"

Before Nate could step out of the pond, he halted. He stared at the droplets falling from his hair and the hem of his clothes for a moment, then nodded.

"Yes, I found the child. He decided to live outside the empire as another Klanos."

"...I see."

Knowing the character of the Holy Emperor, she thought he would immediately bring the child back, but it seemed something did not go as smoothly as expected. As expected, Nate, standing still in his place, covered his face with one hand, sighing and making an unexpected remark.

"If I had known this would happen, I wouldn't have hated Solomon, that bastard so much....."

Katrina gasped unadvertently. It was the first time the Emperor had mentioned the former Emperor first.

Solomon Klein. The 16th Emperor of Delcross, a cool-headed ruler who had tightly ensnared the theological academy and the council in political weaknesses.

A man who merely frowned, sipping his wine while his young son vomited blood in front of him.

As a child, Nate had thought of such things absentmindedly as he watched his predecessor celebrate. After all, he and his mother's unhappiness stemmed from the man and if he could just kill him, wouldn't everything be resolved?

But when he received the same gaze from his own child, memories of his childhood came back to him with new meanings.

Even though his own son seemed to obediently converse in the end, a faint hostility toward him was occasionally conveyed from Kaien. The child probably thought that it would be better to seize the opportunity, kill him, and completely escape rather than living under the surveillance of the continent's greatest authority.

His own child hadn't done so for one reason only; he hadn't been able to find Nate's opening.

Worst of all, during his conversation with Kaien, the eerie malice transmitted from the boy's soul filled with black cracks was still vivid in his mind. The boy's soul shed black tears and relentlessly spilled out curses at him.

—I curse you! I curse you! All my pain is because of you!

—I'm going to eat your soul! Tear it to shreds with a hook and eat it all up!

Kaien, who could hear other souls but couldn't hear his own, would never realize his true feelings.

"Katrina, at first... I thought I would give the child freedom to speak."

The thoughtful commander silently listened to his words.

"But now I can't help but wonder. I'm afraid I might end up cutting the child with my own hands."

Nate didn't believe Kaien would always be docile, but he was not prepared to inscribe the spell of restraint, risking damaging the child's soul.

Could the deteriorating soul of a child ever recover? What if it's already beyond the tipping point and collapses? What should he do if it completely transforms into something wrong?

"I vowed never to raise my sword against my child again....."

Katrina looked at the droplets of water trickling down his chin for a moment, then quietly wrapped him in the blanket she had been holding.

"Your Majesty."

"....."

"Even if such a thing happens, it will never happen."

Her voice was filled with a gentle yet firm conviction.

"Your Majesty, you have given the prince what you wanted most."

Even though she was saying something contrary to his premonition, her voice remained firm, making him want to believe her.

"...Yes."

And that's why he always wished to be a person like this paladin commander for his children.

49

The day when the larvae of Bantra Moss nearly opened a gate in the capital.

Seongjin, who had literally been brought back from the brink of death, was immediately taken to the Pearl Palace and spent the entire afternoon surrounded and pestered by an assembly of physicians.

After undergoing all kinds of examination, including the rolling of his eyes and sticking out of his tongue, the chaos finally ended when he had undergone a holy power baptism by a priest summoned on short notice. Seongjin, after receiving a stern warning from Physician Ninnias to rest, was left sprawled on his bed.

Although he felt completely recovered, Masain standing next to the bed would glare at him whenever he tried to move even a bit. Not only that, but everyone in the Pearl Palace showed an exaggerated response to Seongjin's every move.

They didn't even let him hold a glass of water on his own, trying to spoon-feed him as if he was incapable.

Well, according to Sir Kurt, he was in cardiac arrest for over 30 minutes, so their concern wasn't unfounded.

But if it was that serious, didn't he completely pass the golden time for brain damage? Wouldn't that dumb Morres guy lose more brain cells than he already has?

To Seongjin's concerns, Francis, that foul-tempered paladin, scoffed.

"Don't make a baseless excuse. I arrived early and continuously poured holy power into you. If you feel your intelligence has decreased a bit, blame it on your natural brain capacity."

Wow, who is this guy? To be able to throw such harsh words without any hesitation at the prince of the Holy Empire.

Seongjin looked at this tall paladin with renewed interest.

Francis Agen.

One of the few paladins who had permission to step into the Pearl Palace, which was off-limits to regular knights altogether.

He was the lieutenant of the Paladin Order of Saint Aurelion and was responsible for all kinds of religious and legal issues of Prince Morres, acting in place of the current commander, Dame Katrina.

Minor royals' outings should always be reported to a legal representative. The lieutenant, who is also managing the Paladin Order in place of the commander, heard about the outing late and had to ride hard to catch up with Seongjin's group.

"Why did you have to pick a place designated as a 'caution area' by His Majesty the Holy Emperor for a social gathering? You, who hardly ever go out, why did you choose such a place?"

Caution area? Because of that larvae?

When Seongjin looked at Sir Masain, the man quietly shook his head.

How was he supposed to know and avoid a top-secret situation that even the knight commander of the Imperial Guard didn't know?

Anyway, when they arrived at the villa, the ground was shaking as if an earthquake had occurred, and when he arrived in the basement, Masain had just begun a rib-breaking procedure disguised as CPR.

Why does the commander of the Paladin Order, not the First Empress, become the legal representative when the Holy Emperor is absent? And why is the First Empress, who would have rushed in one step normally, nowhere to be seen now?

Seongjin momentarily had such questions, but he soon pushed them out of his mind. Francis was starting to scold Masain, who was still showing a dumbfounded face.

"Pull yourself together, Masain! Do you think His Majesty attached you to the prince just to be a mere swordsmanship teacher? Especially at times like this, you should be able to hold off the Inquisitors and the Orthodox Church!"

Masain, who is of the same age and had known the man for a long time.

"Anyhow, whatever you do, you're clumsy."

...It seems their relationship wasn't that friendly.

However, as he said, there seemed to be something wrong with Masain right now. His vacant face was like a person who lost a screw somewhere. His usual puppy-like demeanor was now intimidatingly oppressive due to his lack of expression.

Of course, it's not a common thing for the prince of the Empire to come back from the dead, but was it shocking enough to affect him that much?

"Don't worry Masain too much. Go now."

The words he had heard from the Holy Emperor during his near-death experience came to mind.

[Hey, people are coming.]

The demon king, who seemed to have been resting quietly for a while, suddenly spoke to Seongin. Seongjin himself was feeling an uneasy air at that moment.

Masain and Francis also seemed to have noticed the anomaly, as their faces hardened for a moment. Francis quickly approached the window and drew back the curtain.

Click, click, click.

A group of paladin knights in armor was quickly approaching the Pearl Palace from afar. As they arrived at the front gate, they spread out in a line and soon surrounded the Pearl Palace in a circle.

Silver gleaming light armor on top of the white robes of the Paladin Order. The golden chains and the pattern of the jet-black sword engraved on their clothes were symbols of the Paladin Order of St. Marcius, which Seongjin had seen earlier at the Diggory's mansion.

A few resident knights of the Pearl Palace came out late to block the entrance, but their demeanor seemed rather intimidating due to their numerical inferiority.

Meanwhile, Durand, the paladin leading the group, strutted into the gate and shouted arrogantly.

"The Inquisitor court hereby summons a witness! Hand over Prince Morres's whereabouts immediately!"

"These bastards really..."

Sir Masain grumbled under his breath. His distorted face looked eerily devilish as if he was about to rush out and start a fight at any moment. Seeing the usually soft commander turn into something akin to an unpinned grenade, Seongjin became anxious.

Thump, thump.

At that moment, Francis patted Masain's shoulder.

"Hey, pull yourself together. First, reorganize the knights you have and secure the entrance to the palace. Meanwhile, I will deal with this guy."

He pushed his glasses up and smirked. He looked more like a mastermind of an evil organization than a paladin.

Yes, fortunately for them, they had a dog, authorized by the Holy Emperor, who enjoyed exercising his power.

Durand, confidently leaning back and standing tall, frowned as a tall paladin walked out of the palace.

This guy again.

Francis intentionally walked right up to the old paladin. This forced the shorter paladin to look up at him, allowing Francis to look down on him at will.

And so, a second battle between the two men unfolded at the Diggory mansion.

"Did I not mention that I have all powers surpassing the investigation and prosecution rights of the Heretic Inquisitors? Who dares to summon the prince at will?"

"It's just an inquiry investigation for Kenneth Diggory's case. There are no accusations against the prince now! He will not be harmed, so just hand him over!"

"There is none [now], but are you implying that in this process of investigation, charges could be placed?"

"Please refrain from baseless speculation! Of course, if a crime that we didn't know about is revealed during the investigation, that's a different story, but...."

"I see. Understanding that you are fully capable of doing so, as a religious and legal representative of the prince, I refuse to accompany you."

Sir Durand exploded in anger.

"Do you realize what you're doing right now? We need to be investigating the case, not wasting time! Quickly hand over Prince Morres' body right now!"

"Oh! I see. You hurriedly mobilized before the case was even reported because you couldn't waste time, right?"

"What, what did you say...."

As the old paladin stuttered in confusion, Francis stretched up one corner of his mouth.

"I might have chased after Prince Morres because I had a mission, but how was it possible for the Paladin Order of St. Marcias able to deploy even before the incident was known? You arrived almost simultaneously with me."

"No, that's because...we received reports that the mansion was suspicious, and we were on alert...."

"Ah, so you were aware of the abnormalities but deliberately ignored them and waited for the situation to escalate, endangering the life of a member of the royal family..."

"What! We waited on purpose? What kind of nonsense is that!"

Sir Durand seethed in anger.

"Is that not the case? Then you're saying you were watching the mansion despite receiving suspicious reports and yet didn't know of the danger in advance. Isn't that a major blunder threatening the safety of the capital? I will formally accuse the person in charge and make sure they receive a fitting punishment."

The old paladin stared at Francis for a long time, his face flushed, then stormed off huffily.

Even after he left, the encirclement of paladins remained. Sir Masain, who had gathered the resident knights, blocked the front entrance, and the tension in the standoff intensified.

And shortly after, the dean of the Theology Academy, who was advising on this case, appeared. He was a well-groomed man with a shiny goatee, wearing a splendid robe.

"Prince Morres was present at the scene with the demon. All matters related to demons must be strictly handled. Our advisory council formally requests Prince Morres to appear before the heresy tribunal!"

Francis nodded seriously.

"That's true. You're absolutely right. But how do you, the dean, who wasn't even at the scene, know that this is related to a demon?"

"What?"

"How do you know it's a demon seed? Do you have any evidence?"

"No, just by looking at it...."

"As a paladin, I feel it's somewhat different from the aura of a demon. I didn't feel any magical energy. Ah, does the academy interpret the concept of a demon, as defined by the Lord, differently? So, are you suggesting a scholarly perspective rather than a religious one?"

The wrong answer could lead to a religious trial. The dean's face turned pale blue.

"Even if it's not a demonic species, it's undoubtedly wrong! So, if it happens to be a new threat from another world, for the sake of Delcross, the prince's testimony would be...."

"And how would you prove that it is a threat from another world?"

"That's why, I'm suggesting we should start investigating now!"

"An investigation? Can I ask what you will base your investigation on? Ah, are you suggesting to refer to forbidden texts like the [Otherworldly Apocalypse] from the Holy Empire...."

"You heretic! This man is speaking recklessly!"

The dean disappeared quietly, his hands trembling.

And the last to visit the Pearl Palace in the late evening was the stern old man who had previously encountered the saint at the main imperial palace.

"I didn't expect the Archbishop Benitus to visit personally."

"In a critical situation threatening the safety of the Holy Empire, who else but the head of the heresy tribunal, the Inquisitor, should step forward?"

The Archbishop glared with cold eyes, but Francis didn't blink.

"Your Eminence's efforts are greatly appreciated. But what brings you here?"

"Obviously, it's to request the presence of the prince. I heard you sent Sir Durand away. So, reluctantly, I had to step in."

"Why don't you interrogate the grandson of Archbishop Diggory first, considering the incident happened at his villa?"

The Archbishop sighed. "He suffered a severe injury to the back of his head. He's unconscious now, isn't he?"

"So, shouldn't we wait for him to wake up? Depending on his testimony, I, Francis Agen, will decide whether to allow the prince being summoned as a witness or otherwise."

"Are you saying we should wait for him to wake up without knowing when?"

"That's strange. With so many high-ranking clergies here, why hasn't he regained consciousness? Unless you're intentionally delaying the treatment or hiding the fact that he's awake..."

"What? You're not supposed to say that!" Archbishop Benitus trembled pitifully with his already frail body.

But Francis calmly threw another question, "Did you receive the official document sent from the Administration Office? His Holiness the Holy Emperor has been telling you, to be quiet. Ah, I'm merely quoting His Majesty's words verbatim. 'Don't go too far,' is the real content of the official document."

Archbishop's eyes were twitching.

"I, ah, haven't received it yet."

"Did Archbishop Diggory say that? The head of the administration office will turn a blind eye for a while? Delay his grandson's interrogation? So this is, what, a collusion between the Inquisitors court and the Administration Office?"

"No, you really... There are things that can be said and things that shouldn't be said!"

The Archbishop's eyes seemed to burst into flames. Against him, the clever Paladin added one more thing.

"Ah, by the way, Your Eminence. You do know that the Pearl Palace is a region where only authorized clergymen are allowed by His Holiness the Holy Emperor, don't you?"

The Archbishop soon left the Pearl Palace after glaring at Francis for a while. He was trembling so much that it was worrying that he might faint due to high blood pressure.

Wow. Ultimate combat power indeed. Seongjin was genuinely impressed.

But that was not the end.

"Emergency duty for all resident Knights today! Masain, what are you doing standing there all blank!? Can't you arrange a proper shift for the guards?"

He yelled at Sir Masain, who still seemed out of his mind.

"Why are you just rolling your eyes? If you're feeling a little better, you should start moving. Are your ribs still hurting?"

He looked down at Seongjin with a sardonic expression, hinting at him.

So, in other words, the dog barks not only outside but also inside.

Such a stormy day passed.

People in the Pearl Palace fell asleep in shifts, amid a tense atmosphere. They were worried about a possible armed conflict at any moment, especially with the Paladin Order of St. Marcias maintaining a threatening stance all night.

But the next morning brought a sudden turnaround. The Paladin Order of St. Marcias had completely retreated from the Pearl Palace as if nothing had happened.

News had spread throughout the imperial palace.

The Holy Emperor's closed-door prayer had finally ended.

50

The imperial palace was bustling with people summoned since the morning. They were the five archbishops, who are the leaders of each faction, and the five commanders of the paladin knight orders.

The young Holy Emperor sat crookedly on his jade throne, supporting his chin with one hand, and gazing down at them with an impassive face. The archbishops and commanders were quick to realize.

'He's in a bad mood.'

The Holy Emperor's calm voice echoed in the tranquil palace.

"I can imagine that my long absence has caused everyone a great deal of concern. I believe that the Holy Empire's current prosperity is due to the hard work of loyal subjects like you all. How could I not appreciate it?"

"....."

None of them were ignorant of the fact that they were not summoned for praises.

"Furthermore, I heard there is even someone who does not only perform his own duties excellently but also takes the initiative to help others. Such an attitude, what a truly admirable attitude for a paladin to have"

What's more, the Holy Emperor, who usually prefers to be succinct, is being unusually verbose today. He's clearly in a very bad mood!

Sir Durand, the Commander of the Paladin Order of St. Marcias who had sent his knights to monitor an area outside his jurisdiction, was silently breaking out in cold sweat.

"Dame Agnes."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

An elderly woman, with her white hair neatly coiled up and dressed in the violet uniform of the Holy Knights, bowed in a rigid posture. It was Agnes Mayer, the commander of the St. Gracia Order, a long-standing spiritual pillar.

"I heard you requested to borrow some of the Imperial Guard knights this time. Are you planning to send the Fourth Missionary Unit to the southern front again?"

The sudden mention of the southern front caught the old paladin off guard, but she obediently responded.

"Yes, Your Majesty. The southern front has somewhat stabilized, but there are still some disturbances occurring. Regrettably, during the large-scale heresy uprising two years ago, we lost a significant number of our young knights. The newly supplemented young knights lack experience, so we thought we might need some help from the Imperial Guards for this missionary journey."

It was a fitting move for the St. Gracia Order, who always rushed to the most difficult front without sparing thoughts for their own wellbeing, following the path of their own saint, Gracia, also known as Saint of Servitude.

"There should be no need for the Imperial Guard for that matter. Don't we have plenty of seasoned and excellent knights who have the leisure to help others?"

Ah. Then the archbishops and commanders, who had finally understood the Holy Emperor's intent, turned their eyes in unison to Commander Durand.

The Emperor continued, directing his words to the anxious old knight, "Extending a hand of gospel to the heretics is one of the important tasks bestowed upon us by the God, but delivering a hammer blow to the heresy that threatens the empire is equally necessary. Neither of these tasks should be overdone or neglected."

He specifically meant that the St. Marcias Order should dispatch as many of their own to the southern front as much as St. Gracia Order have had.

"If your efforts continue, perhaps one day, the God's glory will also reach the barren south."

He was also implying that they should continue to dispatch forces consistently, taking care of their own bodies.

Almost involuntarily, Commander Durand cried out to the Holy Emperor, "Your Majesty! But if so, there will be a gap in the Inquisitors' duties...!"

The Holy Emperor didn't even glance at him but turned his head towards a stern-faced man standing on the right side of the throne.

A middle-aged man dressed in a deep gray uniform, nearly black. He was Sir Leandros, the commander of the Paladin Order of St. Terbacchia, and also the supreme head of all the inquisitors.

Due to the nature of his order, there were many times when his duties overlapped with those of the inquisitors.

When he caught the Holy Emperor's gaze, he glanced sideways at Sir Durand with a blank expression and bowed his head.

"I will do my best to ensure that the gap in the inquisitors' duties is not noticeable."

At this point, there was nothing left to say. Sir Durand licked his lips, then bowed his head at the sight of the Emperor's cold gaze.

"I will... make sure there are no shortages."

"Good."

The Holy Emperor nodded with a weary face. "Let's get to the main issue. The morning council is likely to be unusually long due to my prolonged absence, so I want to sort out the important agenda with you first."

There it was. Tension immediately spread across the faces of those summoned.

The most heated topic to come up in the morning meeting, perhaps.

"Let's talk about the anomaly that appeared on the outskirts of the capital. Dame Katrina."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

Katrina, the commander of the St. Aurelion Order, bowed with her usual grace and took a step forward.

"Yesterday at noon, there was a confirmed movement of an anomaly at a villa on the outskirts of the capital. The villa was a vacant property under the name of Edward Diggory, the second son of Archbishop Diggory, but it has been used as a place for theological academy students, who support student Kenneth Diggory, to hold a social gathering called 'The Black Prophets' for the past two years."

Following that, Sir Leandros continued the explanation. His scratchy voice echoed throughout the audience room.

"We've had our Terbacchia inquisitors watching the place for the past year. Something suspicious was found in the basement of the mansion, but it was deemed not to be a demon species, so..."

The commander then cast a quick glance at Archbishop Diggory.

"...because those involved were students from the theological academy and children of high-ranking clergy, instead of taking the case directly to the heresy tribunal, we were keeping a close watch. This was a top secret known only to Your Majesty and the St. Aurelion Order."

Afterward, he coldly glared at Sir Durand and continued.

"Therefore His Excellency (Durand) will certainly need to report the process of acquiring that information in detail before His Majesty."

As Sir Durand subtly averted his gaze and furrowed his brows, Dame Katrina, who had been watching him, concluded her report, "The anomaly suddenly became unstable, causing a disturbance and damaging the basement and part of the villa. However, Prince Morres, who [just] happened to be at the scene, rescued Kenneth Diggory with two of his own royal guard and personally eliminated the anomaly, saving the capital from threat."

Hmm-hmm.

Archbishop Diggory coughed uncomfortably. Although the Prince had saved his grandson, it was also Prince Morres who had inflicted a severe injury on the back of his grandson's head.

Next, the sharp voice of Archbishop Benitus rang out.

"Ha! You say he happened to be there, but this is like closing your eyes and shouting. And it's a mockery to say he saved the capital from threat. We still aren't certain who summoned that anomaly in the first place, are we?"

The other archbishops' eyes widened.

Is he boldly doubting the prince in front of the Holy Emperor? This old man has lost his nerve.

The Holy Emperor looked at Archboshop Benitus for a moment before opening his mouth calmly.

"I can see how you want to handle this. From now on, the heresy tribunal will cease its independent investigation and wait for the convocation of the Holy Council. Depending on the results of that council, I command that the trial will proceed."

Everyone nodded except for Archbishop Benitus. The Holy Emperor's command made sense.

Many of the members of the Holy Council, who oversee the Sacred Laws, are professors currently employed at the theological academy. They would be the ideal choice to decide the fate of the young students.

However, the obstinate old man seemed to have a different idea. He faced the Holy Emperor with fiery eyes and argued fiercely.

"That is not possible, Your Majesty! The investigation and punishment of heresy is the exclusive right of our heresy tribunal! Do you expect those soft people from the academy to make a proper judgement? The divine judgement upon the sinner should be stern, and the hammer against him should be merciless! Please revoke the command to halt the investigation!"

"So let me ask you this," the Holy Emperor asked the indignant old man. "Heresy trials are carried out based on the interpretation of the divine will by the Holy Council in accordance to the Sacred Laws. The analysis of the anomaly and the interpretation of the scriptures haven't even begun yet. On what grounds do you plan to judge these children without any relations to Sacred Law?"

"That...that is..." The elderly man hesitated for a moment, stammered. "Of course, based on the previous precedents...."

"Are you trying to fit the Sacred Law to the precedents? Interpreting the will of God at your discretion is also a grave sin. It's a shortcut to becoming a heretic."

"...."

Unconsciously, the other archbishops swallowed their saliva. The young Holy Emperor was so casually suggesting that the head of the heresy tribunal himself should be subjected to a heresy trial.

"Archbishop Benitus."

Towards the pale archbishop, the Holy Emperor commanded, "Leave the affairs of the Theology Academy to the Academy. My command not to interfere still stands."

"...."

As the elderly men closed his mouths in silence, it seemed that the matter was temporarily resolved.

"But, Your Majesty."

Suddenly, a thin voice interjected. It was Archbishop Diggory, the head of the administration. He was a short, chubby man, who kept wiping his forehead with a handkerchief and rolling his eyes nervously.

"I apologize for my impudence, but the incident involves not only the students of the Theology Academy."

The Holy Emperor quietly shifted his gaze towards him, giving a slight nod. He was asking him to continue.

"At the scene of the incident, well... Prince Morres was also present...."

"...."

"I think it is too hasty to simply leave this to the judgment of the Holy Council. So... There might be the possibility that this was not led by the students, but there might be an instigator from outside...."

As Archbishop Diggory continued to speak, perspiration flowing down his face, the expression of the Holy Emperor observing him was utterly blank. However, everyone present felt the temperature of the real world drop by a degree.

Standing next to the throne, Dame Katrina glanced at the Holy Emperor and spoke on his behalf.

"My deputy, Sir Francis, has already provided me with a comprehensive report on this matter. I understand that the prince went to the villa in response to an invitation from the student Kenneth Diggory. To my knowledge, it was their first encounter."

"But, but! There were reports that Prince Morres has been consistently sending money to the group known as [The Black Prophets]. Maybe he's been leading this group from the beginning... Of course, it's just a possibility...."

"...."

"Shouldn't we thoroughly investigate that relationship first? Even if he's a member of the imperial family, in front of God's law, everyone is equal."

Ah. Katrina sighed internally. He's crossed the line.

Having served the Holy Emperor for a long time, she knew the man very well. Though her master's face remained cool as usual, the Holy Emperor was rarely but genuinely enraged.

The case of Archbishop Benitus was a bit different because he truly suspected Prince Morres. But Diggory was merely attempting to link Prince Morres in a desperate attempt to lighten his grandson's crime.

And the Holy Emperor never forgives such people.

"That's a fair point."

At the coldly uttered response, Diggory looked up in a half-hopeful, half-fearful manner. He soon turned pale because the Holy Emperor was faintly smiling. From experience, that was definitely not a good sign.

"Louis."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

Suddenly, the air became so chilling that the chief chamberlain shivered in response.

"Immediately summon Dorian to investigate Kenneth Diggory's personal funds and their sources in detail. His grandfather personally reported that the Imperial Palace's funds had flowed into his grandson's hands, so isn't this extremely credible information?"

"What, no, what are you saying..."

Archbishop Diggory's eyes bulged.

In a flash, his grandson was not only being accused of heresy but also of embezzling the Holy Empire's national treasury, a major crime.

"If the investigation reveals that it's not the Imperial Palace's funds, then it would be right to consider foreign power involvement next. If an external instigator is indeed involved, then it would undoubtedly be the work of those threatening the Holy Empire, so also bear in mind the possibility that Kenneth Diggory could be a pawn of a foreign country during the investigation."

"No, Your Majesty..."

"As soon as the Holy Council's disposition is decided, hand him over to the court immediately. The charges are embezzlement of the national treasury and suspicion of treason."

Diggory's hands were trembling. Now, whether the allegations were true or not was not the issue.

If suspected of treason, during that investigation process, his grandson would no longer be living.

"Of course, thoroughly investigate the allocation of the budget scheduled for Morres as well. Shouldn't all investigation processes be fair? Perhaps..." Stopping there, the Holy Emperor smirked, one corner of his mouth curling up. "Perhaps there might be some hidden expenditures I'm unaware of."

"Ahh..."

Thud. Diggory collapsed powerlessly to the floor.

Only then did he realize that the Holy Emperor had already finished investigating the areas of concern.

What have I done? I only wanted to lessen my grandson's crime in the eyes of the public because I was afraid, but now, the innocent boy is doomed to meet a cruel end.

As Diggory, perspiring cold sweat, blankly stared at the floor, the Holy Emperor briefly looked at him with a frosty gaze. The smile vanished from his face in an instant, returning to his usual stern expression.

"Surely, such an innocent young student wouldn't do such a thing. It was a joke. I believe his grandfather must have made some mistake."

However, no one in that place could laugh at that joke.

Kenneth Diggory had truly just escaped death.

51

The Holy Emperor soon left the audience room. Before the morning's official meeting, he had to meet with Empress Tatiana, who had been acting in his stead, to receive the reports during his absence.

He was expected to be extremely busy for a while.

As other archbishops and knights' commanders attending the official meeting began to leave one by one, only Archbishop Diggory remained, sitting on the ground in a daze. It felt as though he had briefly fallen into hell and been ejected out again; he was utterly drained.

"Archbishop Diggory."

Katrina approached and called out to him.

When Diggory looked up, he saw that Katrina, who usually had a gentle expression, now had a cold, stern face.

"You should consider yourself fortunate that His Majesty showed leniency towards children of your lineage. Do not forget that he overlooked your reckless words, worrying that they might affect that young Kenneth boy. Don't you realize that he protected the young students from the heresy tribunal because they were involved in the first place?"

"....."

"Suppose it wasn't academy students but someone else who dared to lure Prince Morres and put his life in danger. What do you think would have happened? That person would have been beheaded on the spot without a trial."

Diggory painfully realized that there was no exaggeration in her words.

"During the morning official meeting, bear this in mind and be cautious of your words."

Having said this, Katrina also left the place.

Diggory remained, staring blankly at the exit where everyone had left. After what seemed like an eternity, he shakily rose from his seat.

That morning's meeting, despite the Holy Emperor's long absence, proceeded without a hitch. The Empress, a competent woman, had managed the state affairs smoothly in his stead.

The preparations for the upcoming birthday banquet were discussed with minor modifications. The expected major topic, the incident at the Diggory residence, was simply concluded by summoning the Holy Council, which was hardly worth mentioning.

* * *

A peaceful morning returned to Pearl Palace.

Sir Masain looked much better than the previous day, and Edith, who had been restless by his side, seemed to have regained her composure.

Just the night before, there had been a tense standoff among the heavily armed knights. It was astonishing how the atmosphere changed in a single day.

Seongjin wondered to himself if he should be amazed by the Holy Emperor's immense power or shocked by Morres's lack of influence.

"Should I train...?"

He mumbled this as he was having breakfast when Masain and Francis looked at him as if he was absurd, clearly thinking, 'How can he be so carefree?'

"Who could be this relaxed?"

"...I didn't expect you to voice that out, Sir Francis."

It felt like the gratitude for guarding Pearl Palace all night was being halved.

Seongjin decided to focus on what he could do. If he couldn't come up with a brilliant strategy to elevate Morres's standing in the palace, wouldn't it be better to learn the Banahas dual magic technique a little faster?

As he was firming up this resolution, an unexpected interruption occurred.

"Morres..."

Queen Lizabeth entered the room, her eyes filled with tears.

As always, she looked graceful and dazzling. Seongjin's expression stiffened.

No matter how many times he saw her, she was never easy to deal with.

"Mother..."

"Are you well? I heard you were involved in a significant incident."

"Yes, I'm fine."

"Oh, I was so worried yesterday. I couldn't come to Pearl Palace fearing misunderstandings. It was agonizing just waiting."

"...?"

What misunderstanding?

Seongjin was puzzled when suddenly, a fierce aura emanated from beside him. It was Sir Masain.

With a hardened face, Masain shot a brief glare at the Queen, then swiftly turned and left the room. His demeanor suggested not just a lack of respect but outright displeasure.

Francis, looking bewildered, quickly paid his respects to the Queen and hurried after Masain.

What kind of atmosphere is this?

Why is the stern captain of the elite guard, who always valued etiquette, behaving this way towards the Queen?

However, Queen Elizabeth's reaction was unexpected.

The woman, who usually grabbed those beneath her like catching a mouse with her authoritative attitude, just quietly wiped away her tears while looking at Seongjin without retaliating against the knight captain's rudeness.

Caught in an eerie foreboding, the Demon King commented, noticing Seongjin's unease.

[The queen has always had a peculiar reaction. It's as if she's trying to hide something from you.]

'...Hide? What?'

[I don't know.... I didn't really investigate at the time because I was busy gathering other more important information].

What kind of standard of importance is this guy talking about?

[But it was really weird. Ever since you arrived here and lost your memories, she always keep saying to herself, 'Is that true? Ah, it's a relief. A relief.']

Relieved that I lost my memory?

Seongjin's doubts only deepened. That woman, not long ago, even tried to test if he remembered his fiancées.

– Letting go of the past brings happiness to everyone.

Could it be that Empress Tatiana's words were aimed at Queen Elizabeth? With that thought, the woman with the sharp eyes before him looked slightly different.

The sight of her wiping away tears was both tragically beautiful and suspicious. Was every movement calculated? Even her handkerchief matched her dress, with the embroidery strategically placed.

Although Seongjin wasn't familiar with noblewomen's nuances, doubting her made all of her actions seem contrived.

"Always take care. Watching my child die in front of my eyes is hell itself," she said.

Unaware of Seongjin's complex feelings, the queen clutched his arm, her deep eyes looking up at him, "Morres, my child. I never want to experience that again."

At least the concern in her eyes seemed sincere. Seongjin awkwardly nodded with a smile.

Ah, this is uncomfortable.

Soon after, Seongjin rushed to the training grounds, practicing his swordsmanship intensely.

With his aura restrained, he demonstrated the Royal Knight's standard swordsmanship from the first to the fifth form. It was an impulsive move.

After some time, a contented Seongjin wiped the sweat off his brow.

"Ah, refreshing! There's nothing like practice to clear one's head!"

[Such a simple human.]

"Shut up!"

After cooling down, the energized Seongjin moved his aura more actively within his body.

"Hey, while you were gone, guess how much I've improved in controlling my aura? I might be a genius."

The Demon King chuckled as if amused.

[Doubtful.]

But when Seongjin skillfully executed the first form of Banahas quite plausibly, the Demon King's expression changed.

[Huh?]

"How's that? Impressive, right?"

[...]

The Demon King, caught off guard by the praise, remained silent. Even in Seongjin's opinion, he personally thought he executed the first form quite impressively.

"Wow..."

It wasn't just the Demon King who was surprised. The knights, including Haven, who were present at the training ground, stared at Seongjin in awe.

"Your Highness, what happened? How could you improve so much in just a day?"

"The first form is almost perfect. You could even move on to the second form now!"

"Uh, erm. Really?"

Seongjin smiled awkwardly. Upon reflection, after yesterday's battle, moving aura as per Banahas way felt smoother.

He had instinctively used what he had learned during the battle against the worm. The integration of these actions in combat resulted in better harmony between aura movement and physical action.

'Am I finally moving on to the second form...?'

The problem was that the instructor, who was supposed to teach him, was nowhere to be seen.

After yesterday's incident, Sir Masain, who didn't leave Seongjin's side, had disappeared after seeing the queen and hadn't returned since. With him, the student ready, wasn't the swordsmanship teacher slacking off right now?

Seongjin paused his practice and looked up at the sky, pondering.

'The strike Masain showed yesterday, was truly incredible.'

A long golden sword made of aura and its silent, precise strike.

Followed by a massive shockwave that downed the worm of Bantra Moss.

What technique was that?

While Seongjin understood the part where the man's aura turned into the shape of a sword, why did the aura-infused attack explode? Did he intentionally cause the aura to go berserk?

Seongjin let his aura flow into the wooden sword he held, as he once did with the demonic energy, just enhancing the weapon.

The technique flowing within his body wasn't significantly different, so he wondered if the method to infuse the weapon might feel similar. He had wielded this technique with his sword while fighting against the bugs, and it hadn't caused any issues, so it would probably be alright.

Ziing. The wooden sword quivered slightly.

Unlike the demonic creature's pincer, the wooden sword was not as durable, and the flow of power running through it wasn't refined either.

"Still, it can handle this much power, at least."

Noticing the unusual energy, Haven, who was nearby, looked at Seongjin with wide eyes.

"Now, since I've infused the aura, if I vibrate it like this..."

Whirr. The wooden sword shook intensely.

"No, that's not it."

Seongjin stabilized the aura within the wooden sword, thinking that recklessly twisting the aura inside might only damage the weapon, without producing a powerful explosion at the desired location.

I'd have to stabilize it and let the aura run wild at the exact moment I struck.

Whoosh.

While swinging the aura-infused wooden sword horizontally, Seongjin tried to get the timing right.

After the swing... No, it's too late. By the time the aura starts moving, the target would have already been struck.

Whoosh.

So, I need to initiate the explosion the moment I make contact. Ah, that's a bit late. How can I make it go wild almost instantaneously?

Whoosh.

Again, the timing is a bit off.

The wooden sword vibrated vigorously and returned to its position.

Good, this time a little faster, swing at the same time...

Bang!

Suddenly, something did explode, for real.

Namely, the wooden sword.

Sharp wooden splinters flew in every direction, with some even hitting Seongjin.

"Your Highness!"

The guards in the drill hall rushed towards him.

[Eeek?]

Inside his head, the demon king was panicking.

What? Why?

Seongjin, without thinking, asked the demon king and immediately felt a sharp pain, looking at his right hand.

"Oh..."

The palm of his hand was bleeding profusely.

His vision reddened, likely because of the blood dripping from his forehead into his eyes. On inspection, splinters were embedded in various parts of his face and body.

[Eeek!]

'Hey, calm down. Why are you so startled?'

[Do you even realize how you look right now? What on earth did you do?]

Seeing the reactions of the surrounding knights, Seongjin's condition seemed dire. Haven shouted in panic.

"Your Highness! Your Highness! Are you alright? No, clearly you're not, what am I saying!"

"Summon the physician! No, get the priest!"

"For now, please lie down here! You're bleeding profusely. Please lower yourself!"

"Find Sir Masain!"

Ah, I shouldn't have done that. I'm going to get scolded by Masain again.

I had a near-death experience yesterday and made a scene at the Pearl Palace, and here I am again, just one day later.

Feeling guilty, Seongjin obediently lay down on the ground.

"First, remove the splinters, stop the bleeding..."

"Wait for the physician! Can you even see anything with all this blood? What if you accidentally push the splinter further in?"

"Where's the priest? Still not here?"

The knights were running around in confusion.

[Ahhh, Ahhhhhhhh!]

With the demon king causing a ruckus inside his head, Seongjin was disoriented.

"Ah! Sir Masain!"

Hearing one of the knights exclaim, he turned his head and saw Masain and Francis rushing towards him from a distance.

Oh, Sir Masain. He's looking a bit scary, running with that stern face...

Seeing Seongjin's condition, Masain's face went pale as if he himself was bleeding.

"Where's the physician? Did you call for the physician? Francis! Infuse him with divine energy for now!"

However, Francis, who was observing Seongjin calmly, shook his head with a stern face.

"There are too many embedded splinters. If I pour divine energy now, the wounds will heal with the splinters inside. Even if the physician treats him, that hand's injury seems too deep and might leave after-effects."

"So..."

In response to the desperate Masain, Francis spoke firmly.

"We need to see His Majesty immediately."

Seongjin was startled.

What? Excuse me? Wait a minute! I'm not ready for this!

Thus, this situation unfolded.

After finishing the morning administrative meeting and leaving the main palace's meeting room, the Holy Emperor came face to face with Seongjin, who was bleeding and being carried on a stretcher.

"..."

With Seongjin sheepishly avoiding eye contact, the Holy Emperor sighed deeply after a moment of silence.

"I told you not to be so reckless."

Uh, erm, I'm sorry...

52

Divine power.

It was a blessing that God granted to this world and the most compelling evidence of God's existence.

However, it couldn't just be broadly defined as a sacred divine power of God.

The power of [Healing] that heals wounds and overcomes illness.

The power of [Blessing] that wards off bad luck and beckons good fortune.

The power of [Exorcism] discerns and eradicates evil.

Those who possessed divine power exhibited all these three characteristics. However, the degree to which one exhibited each varied among individuals. Typically, while one might excel in one aspect, the other two would be almost negligible.

For instance, the paladins of St. Terbacchia, who specialized in exorcism, primarily showcased the power of exorcism. In contrast, the paladins of St. Gracia, who dedicated themselves to service and sacrifice, often had many members skilled in healing and blessing.

Of course, high-ranking priests or archbishops possessed such immense divine power that they often exhibited strength in all three aspects. When they reached this level, they could perform feats that bordered on miracles, especially in their specialized areas.

But the spectacle unfolding here now was unparalleled in its resemblance to a [Miracle].

A dazzling white light enveloped Prince Morres, and shards of wood expelled from his wounds in an instant, giving way to new skin growth. His hand, which had torn skin and ripped muscles, regenerated smoothly with new muscle tissue and soft, pristine skin.

All those numerous wounds vanished without a trace. Even the slightly sunburnt face from rolling all day in the training ground for the past few days brightened up.

It was as if an immense life force was poured into a single individual.

This was the scene of a [Miracle] as seen by ordinary people.

However, the clergies saw something slightly different.

The multicolored radiant aura surrounded the Holy Emperor and the prince. The faint scent of sanctity spread outwards. The occasional bright golden halo glimpsed around the Holy Emperor.

Who could dare doubt the representative of God after witnessing this scene?

The higher one's clerical position or the stronger the divine power one possessed, the more intense and emotionally overwhelming this scene was.

"Ooh..."

"O' Lord..."

Look at the high priests, completely overwhelmed, kneeling and making the sign of the cross.

Archbishop Diggory was sobbing uncontrollably, face flushed with emotion. Even the quirky Archbishop Benitus moistened his eyes while making the sign of the cross.

Of course, Seongjin, who didn't possess any divine power and felt nothing, was just bewildered. He was puzzled when everyone in the meeting room suddenly rushed out, knelt down, and started crying.

Eventually, as the wounds healed and the pain completely subsided, Seongjin stood up from the mat and looked at his perfectly healed right hand in awe.

'Wow, so this is divine power...'

Even to the ignorant Seongjin, the Holy Emperor's ability was beyond ordinary. It was on a completely different level compared to the healing power Francis showed him a few times yesterday. Not only did the wounds heal without a trace, but even the blood loss seemed to have been fully restored, as he felt no signs of anemia.

The Holy Emperor withdrew his hand from Seongjin's forehead and spoke, almost as if he was exhaling,

"Didn't I tell you to just focus on your training?"

But Seongjin felt it was unjust.

"But, Father, I was training as you instructed? I even obeyed your orders..."

However, he couldn't finish. A sudden flick from the Holy Emperor's eyebrow stopped him, and a light smack came out of nowhere.

Thwack.

"Ugh!"

Seongjin rolled on the mat, clutching his forehead. Why did it feel more painful than getting hit by a wooden sword?

In any case, the Holy Emperor stood up, walked over to Masain, who was kneeling beside the mat with a downcast expression, and said, "Your Majesty..."

"Why do you blame yourself for that boy's antics, Masain? I sent you as a swordsmanship teacher, not a nanny."

Masain's face contorted, a mix of a smile and a grimace. The Holy Emperor patted his shoulder and turned his head.

"Louis."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"What's the schedule for this afternoon?"

The faithful chief chamberlain looked somewhat troubled. By date, it should be the day for the official audience with Prince Morres, but the backlog of official tasks was quite substantial.

"Your Majesty, I think..."

As the chief chamberlain trailed off, the Holy Emperor nodded and asked, "Is lunch ready?"

But Your Majesty. I thought you skipped breakfast...

The Holy Emperor waved off the chief chamberlain, who was struggling for words, and coldly looked down at Seongjin, who was still clutching his forehead in pain.

"Let's have a talk for a moment, son."

Gulp.

For some reason, an involuntary gulp escaped Seongjin's throat.

Seongjin was obediently led to the Holy Emperor's office. Although he was covered in blood from head to toe, neither of them paid any mind to it.

Following behind the Holy Emperor, who walked briskly with his robe fluttering, Seongjin occasionally sneaked glances at the back of the Holy Emperor's head. Somehow, the gentleman in front of him seemed a bit tired. Was it just his imagination?

Upon reaching the office and dismissing his attendants, the Holy Emperor sat down at his desk and pointed to the sofa opposite him with a nod.

"Sit."

"Yes."

"Explain."

"Yes!"

Seongjin diligently explained why he had let aura flow into his wooden sword and why he tried to make the aura in the sword go berserk.

He began with the spectacular strike that Masain demonstrated when slaying a bug, which naturally led to a brief description of the battle at the Diggory mansion. Since it was brought up, he also casually mentioned how much progress he'd made with the aura manipulation technique recently and how his proficiency had suddenly increased after the battle.

Perhaps subconsciously, he even thought this to himself: 'Since the Holy Emperor seems busy, I might as well talk as much as possible to kill time, that way he'll have less time to scold me.'

Surprisingly, the Holy Emperor, who seemed ready to reprimand him, just quietly listened.

"So, I was trying to time the aura's rampage when the wooden sword suddenly exploded, and well, that happened."

"..."

After Seongjin finished his lengthy explanation and discreetly tried to gauge the Holy Emperor's mood, the Holy Emperor, after a moment of contemplation, glanced at the wall clock and spoke.

"The technique Masain used is called 'Aura Explosion'."

Oh. It seems he's given up on scolding.

"It's called various absurd names among the imperial knights, like 'Storm Slash' or 'Sky-splitting Crescent', but you can ignore those. It's not unreasonable that it looked like an aura rampage to you, but the principle of the actual technique is a bit different."

The Holy Emperor briefly explained the essence of the technique.

The key wasn't letting aura to flow continuously into the weapon, but instead creating a thin layer of aura to be materialized externally, hence shaping the blade's surface. Therefore, one can only attempt this technique after reliably creating an aura blade.

What appears as an aura rampage is, in fact, sending the aura blade to resonate at a specific frequency, meaning, it's not about making the aura sway randomly but amplifying its destructive power through extremely controlled vibrations.

In conclusion, Seongjin wasn't ready to imitate it yet, and he should focus on building up his aura layer.

"The idea was interesting, but testing it on a weapon is extremely risky. Understand?"

"Yes..."

It was indeed too ambitious for a novice who had just started learning about auras.

While Seongjin was scratching his face out of embarrassment, a light knock sounded from outside the office. It was the chief chamberlain.

"Your Majesty, it's time for your meal."

The Holy Emperor sighed softly and got up.

"Well, even with my explanation, if you come up with something new, you'll want to try it again, won't you?"

"Um..."

Seongjin couldn't deny it, being well-aware of his own weakness for curiosity.

Moving towards the office entrance, the Holy Emperor reached for the sword hilt at his waist. With a metallic sound, a long blade was drawn. Silently, he extended it towards Seongjin.

"...?"

Instinctively taking it, Seongjin felt the weight of the real sword in his hands.

"From now on, you'll play with that instead of a wooden sword. No matter what prank you try, it won't easily break."

"Uh... Thank you?"

He had braced himself for a thorough scolding, yet he received a sword.

The Holy Emperor's lips curved up faintly in what could almost be called a semblance of a smile, which was a first for Seongjin. Then, the Holy Emperor gently patted Seongjin's head a few times and turned away.

Stepping out of the office, the Holy Emperor left with one final piece of advice.

"Morres."

"Yes?"

"Don't tell Masain that you tried to mimic him and caused an accident."

He was referring to the Knight Commander, who had been particularly guilt-ridden since yesterday.

With a stiff face, Seongjin nodded.

"Nutcracker?"

Outside the palace, Masain, who had been waiting for Seongjin to come out, saw the sword strapped to his waist and exclaimed with widened eyes.

Nutcracker? What's that?

Hearing his words, including Haven, the resident knights of the Pearl Palace rushed over.

"Eh? Nutcracker?"

"The Holy Emperor's beloved weapon? Is it really that Nutcracker?"

It looks ordinary, but seems like its a famous sword.

The Holy Emperor's Favorite, is it some kind of legendary weapon?
What's with the name?

Seongjin took a closer look at the sword.

The sword looked ordinary, like any other long sword without any particular decorations. However, its blade was thin and a bit shorter, but the hilt was long, making it easy to swing with both hands. It seemed more suitable for a boy of Morres's age rather than a grown adult.

The blade was made of a unique gray metal that had lost its luster. The blade wasn't particularly sharp either. It couldn't be considered a well-maintained weapon.

Isn't it too plain for a Holy Emperor?

However, the resident knights thought otherwise.

"So this is the famous sword that's so hard that it can't be sharpened with a whetstone!"

"Even when the blacksmith tried to forge it, it wouldn't heat up properly!"

"That legendary sword, supposedly made by a dragon to crack open walnuts in the distant past...."

Wait a minute. Are there dragons in this world?

But why would a dragon make a sword to crack walnuts?

Moreover, for a legendary sword, its name... Nutcracker? It doesn't evoke anything intimidating.

And...

It feels like it would be more effective at cracking human heads than walnuts...

Sure enough, Haven glanced around and whispered, as if sharing a secret.

"I've heard that when His Majesty was active on the battlefield in his younger days, thousands and thousands had their heads split open by that sword."

Seriously?

As Seongjin looked astounded, other knights began to add their own stories.

"Yes. That's right. There were so many crushed skulls that they could form a mountain."

"And the blood from that mountain formed a massive river..."

"Even now, it's said that in that place, headless spirits wail and wander every night."

"....."

What the hell did this man give me?

Even Francis, who was typically unshakable, seemed quite shocked this time. He furrowed his brow and looked at Seongjin.

"He's never been without that sword all this time. What did His Majesty say to give that sword to Your Highness?"

Seongjin tilted his head.

"He just said, while training, my wooden sword broke, so I should play with this instead. He said this one won't easily break."

Masain's pupils were shaking, as if deeply shocked.

"... As a substitute for a wooden sword... to play with?"

Tsk. Francis clicked his tongue.

"Masain. Isn't it time you let go of that unrealistic fantasy? That means it's not the legendary weapon you're thinking of."

Sir Masain seemed to have had an admiration for the Nutcracker.

"But still, that sword..."

"I should have known since the time when the Holy Emperor used to crack walnuts from the mountain with it during his younger days."

Ah, so it's really used for cracking walnuts after all.

53

Seongjin was squatting down, staring into the campfire.

Crackle. Crackle.

From the foggy view and the strangely pale landscapes, even the red flames seemed to have their heat diminished. It was like watching scenes from an old film.

This must be a dream, Seongjin thought blankly.

- "What are you grilling now, hyungnim (brother)?"

He asked someone in a small child's voice. Then, a kind man's voice answered.

- "Freshwater crayfish."

- "Freshwater crayfish?"

- "Yes. I was dragged into the mountains for survival training a while ago and starved for several days. I'm grilling these because I remembered the taste of the crayfish I ate then."

- "Hmmm."

Seongjin, no, the child, then poked at the small crustaceans wriggling above the campfire with a stick in his hand, seemingly curious.

- "Where did you get these from?"

- "I asked the gardener to get some in exchange for money. It feels like I've been ripped off."

Haha.

A bashful laugh followed.

Seongjin couldn't see the man's face, but he thought the voice sounded strangely familiar.

And then, the two waited silently for the crayfish to cook.

Crackle. Crackle.

The savory smell was probably spreading all around. Seongjin couldn't smell anything, but he knew that the child in the dream was looking forward to tasting the crayfish.

Is this really a dream, or just someone else's memory?

The child patiently waited for the man to peel a crayfish for him, and finally, he was able to take a bite.

Hmm, how should I put it? It's more bland and mushy than I expected.

Seongjin couldn't taste it, but he could vividly feel the disappointment the child felt.

The child spoke a bit sulkily.

-"Hmm... Brother, this doesn't seem to taste good."

The man, who was also chewing on crayfish meat next to the child, laughed and scratched his head. A glint of bright golden hair seemed to show.

-"Yes. Actually, I just thought the same thing."

Chirp, chirp, chirp.

The birds of the Pearl Palace were chirping, flying in at the same time as always. Seongjin opened his eyes and blankly stared at the canopy above him.

'It's been a long time since I've had a dream.....'

Seongjin usually didn't dream often. In his previous world, he was too busy fighting monsters in his sleep, and even after his soul inhabited Morres's body, he hadn't dreamt until now.

Moreover, the dream felt more like glimpsing into past memories than a simple dream, making him feel strange. He vaguely realized that the dream was of Morres's childhood.

[Why? What did you dream about?]

The demon king's soul asked in a clueless voice. It felt like he was stretching after a nap.

[Why? You didn't think souls need sleep?]

Is that so?

While Seongjin was surprised, the demon king grumbled.

[No, what do you want me to do then? I can't stay away from you, and I don't have anyone to talk to while you're sleeping. What else can I do but sleep?]

'Well... but...'

Isn't sleep for the brain to recover?

[Souls also need time to recover from fatigue!]

That seems plausible.

Anyway, Seongjin explained everything to the demon king. He had a hunch that the scene from his dream actually happened inside the palace, and he felt as though the child's perspective in the dream was that of Morres.

[Hmm.]

The demon king affirmed the possibility.

[You already know this place's language, which we assumed was because we're using Morres's brain. Then, there's no reason why you couldn't recall the memories of Morres stored in that brain.]

'So, it's like that?'

[If it's only this one time, I wouldn't worry, but if this continues, you might end up recalling all of Morres's memories.]

That didn't sound too favorable. Isn't it better to recall more memories?

But the demon king was considering a more serious assumption.

[Don't underestimate memory. Remember the time when you once mistook the language of Delcross for that of Sigurd-34 planet?]

That's right. To be honest, it still feels like Korean unless I consciously think otherwise.

[So, wouldn't it be the same with memory? At first, you might feel you can distinguish yourself apart from Morres. But if you continue to mistake his feelings for yours, his knowledge for yours, wouldn't there eventually be times when you overlap yourself with Morres?]

That seems plausible.

Lately, the demon king's eloquence seemed to be improving.

[Do you get it? To preserve your identity as [Lee Seongjin], you might need to come up with some special measures.]

Seongjin nodded seriously.

'Hmm, for now....'

[For now?]

"I need to train."

Training is the best for headache-inducing matters.

[Wow, what a simpleton.]

The demon king stuck out his tongue in disdain.

Having quickly consumed his breakfast, Seongjin rushed to the training ground, beginning his meditation with great focus. His aura energy was noticeably increasing. He felt satisfied, thinking he might soon attempt the fifth level of aura.

And from Sir Masain, he finally learned how to weave Banahas 2nd Form.

"So, this is the Nutcracker..."

During lunchtime, Amelia, who had come to visit the Pearl Palace, curiously inspected the sword. She had come holding a new fairy tale book to lend to Seongjin.

Having been scolded severely by the Holy Emperor for not studying during his near-death experience, Seongjin passionately read the new book aloud.

"Listen. The representative... of God. The weak Dr, agon said..."

"Listen. The representative of God. The wicked dragon said."

"If my request... is rejected... soon, the spark of, disaster, will spread... in this land?"

"If my request is rejected, the spark of calamity will soon spread across this land."

Amelia, who had read the book to the point of memorizing it during her childhood, corrected Seongjin's reading without even looking at the book.

The book she brought was a famous fairy tale that reportedly contained the tales of the first emperor. The story was about the representative of God who overcame the temptations of a wicked dragon and eventually established an empire called Delcross, bringing peace and prosperity to the continent.

Indeed, dragons appear in fairy tales. But when he asked Amelia if she had ever seen a dragon, she looked at Seongjin with the kind of smile a mother might give when asked about Santa by a child.

Ugh, it seems that in this world, dragons are merely creatures of legend.

And if you were to pinpoint the most malicious aspect of the dragon, the antagonist in this story, it would undeniably be the way it speaks.

Why is it using such an overly pompous and archaic tone? It's hard to read.

Having recently read books where cats meowed and dogs barked, the vocabulary difficulty suddenly increased too much. At this rate, he wondered when he would be able to read books on theology or philosophy.

As he was browsing through the poorly illustrated book with a deep sigh, Amelia was mumbling something incoherent while inspecting the nutcracker.

"I distinctly remember that in the past, Father, His Majesty, having this until the very end, but what changed that this ended up with you?"

What's she talking about?

"Well, unexpected occurrences might be a good sign. It must be!"

Amelia seemed to have convinced herself of something and nodded.

Right, this sister is living somewhere in fourth dimension. Sometimes I can't even keep with her conversation.

Amelia looked pleased as she examined and swung the Nutcracker from different angles.

She always talks about the satisfaction of revenge, but watching her like this, I'm wondering if she actually enjoys learning martial arts.

Just as Seongjin had predicted a while ago, she had been making significant progress in accumulating aura lately. Even as a beginner in aura initiation, he could sense that the aura around Amelia was becoming more active.

She had her struggles, especially with the initial stages of aura cultivation, as she had started just a few days ago and the introductory initiation method was that notorious Weilo.

Wondering if there was a way to help, a brilliant idea occurred to Seongjin.

"Sister, the royal audience is soon, right?"

Considering that the Holy Emperor had returned from seclusion and was frantically dealing with official tasks, there probably wouldn't be any delays in the royal audience. Amelia nodded.

"Yes, why?"

"How about asking Father for help? It's amazing how that nobleman handles Aura."

Seongjin shared a story he'd heard from Masain with Amelia.

The impressive tale of how, for the sake of a nephew who struggled with aura, he had personally infused his own body with aura daily.

If it's Holy Emperor, perhaps he could easily do something similar? After all, he's the person who even blocked the otherworldly passage with aura.

Amelia admired and nodded her head.

"I didn't know that about Masain orabeoni (brother). Given how young he became the commander of the knights, I thought he was just a prodigy."

Orabeoni (brother)?

Seongjin tilted his head at the somewhat unusual term.

"..so Imperial Father is capable of such things. Amazing. I should ask him to teach me like he taught orabeoni (brother)."

Filled with ambition, Amelia's eyes began to sparkle like stars.

Hmm? I feel like this conversation is going off track.

"So, why don't you start by asking if that's possible? I am thinking of asking you to tell me the story about Sir Masain's uncle..."

"Yes, from Imperial Father... huh?"

Only then did she seem to realize that their conversation had gotten off track.

"Who else but Imperial Father could be brother Masain's uncle?"

Huh?

Seongjin's mouth gaped open.

"You... didn't know? I wondered why you kept mentioning brother Masain's uncle specifically."

Amelia smiled.

"I know you don't remember the past, but haven't you been frequently hanging out with orabeoni (brother) lately? I thought he would've told you. It's like him to keep silent on the matter."

Sir Masain's uncle is the Holy Emperor?

Seongjin had always imagined an elder master, not someone close in age. The revelation was a shock.

She patiently explained to the still-shocked Seongjin. The Holy Emperor was originally the 3rd prince of the previous emperor. Above him were two older princes and a princess.

Sir Masain is the second son of the eldest prince, Cameron. That makes him a cousin to Morres.

Although now bearing the name Klanos instead of Klein, and having lost the right to the throne, he's still quietly treated as a member of the imperial family.

"Wait..."

That reminded Seongjin of the twins he met previously. They clearly greeted Masain as...

"Hello, Masain orabeoni."

"Hello, Masain hyungnim."

The way they said hello... huh?

W-Why didn't you tell me something so important, Sir Masain?

Amelia began, "Honestly, him and you Morres were somewhat distant before." She glanced at Seongjin and hesitated, "...In fact, you were the only one who didn't call brother Masain 'brother'."

While Amelia stopped there, Seongjin inferred more from her hesitancy.

Morres, you jerk! You've been mean and disrespectful to Sir Masain, haven't you?

A headache crept on Seongjin, and the demon king quickly spoke.

[Whoa, your blood pressure is rising. Relax! Relax!]

Does it look like I can stay calm?

How am I supposed to treat Sir Masain now?

Yet, the afternoon lesson time inevitably arrived.

Distracted, unlike his attentive morning self, Seongjin caught Sir Masain's curious gaze. Still, Sir Masain refrained from reprimanding him, probably because Seongjin usually had a good attitude.

As the sun set over the training ground, Masain, who had finished his meditation, looked at Seongjin who seemed like had something to say. As Seongjin tried to play it off, Masain, looking determined, bowed his head.

"I have a request. Please."

"Uh... Yes? A request?"

"Yes, could you lend me the Nutcracker for a moment?"

Masain's face was uncharacteristically serious. Without realizing, Seongjin nodded and handed over the Nutcracker.

54

The Nutcracker.

The first time Masain saw the sword was about a decade ago from today.

At that time, Delcross was showing signs of civil unrest. Prince Brayden, the second prince, rapidly grew in power after absorbing the influence of the first princess. As a result, he seized the imperial palace, forcing the faction of the first prince to retreat to the northern gate of the capital to regroup.

Then suddenly, the 16th Holy Emperor passed away.

"That despicable Brayden! It's clear that he did harm to Imperial Father!"

First Prince Cameron ground his teeth with his eyes aflame.

Masain looked at his father Cameron with an uneasy face.

At the time, Masain, who was living in the imperial academy dormitory, was hastily brought here by the imperial guards who found him when the first prince's faction retreated from the capital.

His older brother Jayden and mother, the princess consort, could not flee and ended up dying during a clash with the guards during the retreat.

"That cursed Brayden! He's so blinded by the throne that he summoned the demon! I won't rest until he's torn to pieces!"

After losing his wife and eldest son abruptly, the first prince occasionally acted like a madman, venting his anger on his subordinates at random or spewing insults, believing groundless suspicious as facts.

"A demon has infiltrated the imperial court, this holy Delcross royal court! Can't you see even with your eyes open! The millennia-old holy empire of Delcross is now at its end! Damn it! Damn it!"

Every chance he got, he fiercely glared at the direction of the imperial palace and ranted. Sometimes, he even brandished his sword into the air, eager to storm into the capital as soon as his forces were replenished.

Just when it seemed like an all-out war between these two factions was inevitable, a mediator appeared. This was a man named Richelieu, who had been sent from the royal family of Brittany and had temporarily visited the capital with the archbishop.

Even in his young mind, Masain found this strange.

The two brothers had drawn their swords against each other for the throne. They had already seen the blood of the princess consort and the royal grandson.

From now on, if one side wins, the other side will be annihilated. Where in this situation was there room for mediation?

However, for some reason, Cameron took Richelieu's suggestion of mediation quite seriously. The strategists of the first prince's faction held meeting after meeting, argued for and against, and eventually set up a small negotiation team.

The unfolding situation made Masain increasingly anxious. It seemed like a negotiation that had no chance of succeeding.

Especially with this man named Richelieu. Although half of his face hidden behind a mask, this man who occasionally gave a gloomy smile was not a comfortable presence.

As feared, the ominous premonition soon became reality. Cameron's party, who left to negotiate, never returned.

Only one of the blood-soaked escort knights barely managed to return, mumbling like a madman.

"The, the prince's words... all of them, they were true. There's a... there's a demon in the imperial palace! Gah!"

After he spat out these words, he suddenly spat blood from his mouth and died.

"It's a curse....." The priest who was by the side of the escort to treat him, drenched in blood, cried out with a trembling voice. "I can feel the energy of a curse. Everyone must escape from here!"

Soon, screams began to echo here and there from the first prince's camp. People started spewing blood and falling.

With only a few imperial guards, priests, and servants, Masain barely managed to escape from that hellish scene.

In just a few days, he had lost his parents and brother, but Masain didn't have the chance to fully comprehend his loss. He felt that the ambiguous and extremely ominous danger that had swallowed them all at once was approaching him swiftly.

Something bizarre was happening in the capital, beyond their ability to handle, and the demonic curse was still chasing Masain's party.

The remnants of the first prince's faction took Masain, the only remaining imperial heir, and locked themselves in the northern gate fortress. Then, unbelievable news began to flow from the capital.

"There is a demon in the imperial palace. The second prince was a demon worshipper and has been punished by the first prince."

"No, actually, the first prince was deceived and killed by the second prince."

"The third prince, who had gone missing long ago, returned. He's a notorious troublemaker, but he's unprecedentedly powerful."

"He swept away the demons in the imperial palace leading the paladins. He eventually became the new Holy Emperor."

Every piece of news was shocking, and it was impossible to tell what was true and what was false.

And the demonic curse, which had chased them from the capital, eventually swallowed the entire fortress.

Despite the prayers of the paladins and priests, it was only a matter of time before the people of the first prince's faction started vomiting blood from their bodies and dying. It was a terror too great to bear in a sober mind.

"Please take care of yourself. The only rightful heir to the throne is you, Your Highness Masain."

After the loyal knight commander, who reiterated this fact till the end fell down and spewed blood from his eyes, Masain was inevitably left alone in the tightly locked fortress.

The boy, sensing a lonely end, quietly sat in a corner and awaited death. He was in a numb state where not even tears could come out, possibly due to the intense exertion over the past few days.

It was only through his constitution unique to the imperial bloodline, which was highly resistant to magic, that he was able to endure alone amidst the cursed bodies of the demon race and a multitude of corpses for two more days.

Then, on the third day.

From morning, there had been an uproar outside the fortress, followed by a sudden silence. Then someone effortlessly cut through the tightly locked iron door and entered.

"They said everyone was dead, but look at these tricksters. There's a child still alive."

Bang!

A tall man revealed himself from behind the dust-stirring fallen iron door.

As the boy, Masain, instinctively squinted his eyes at the sudden rush of light, the man, sword in hand, strode towards him.

"Do I see a little bit of your childhood face? Are you Jayden, or Masain?"

For some reason, the man seemed to know him, even though they had never met.

"... I am... Masain."

Perhaps it was because of the peculiar aura surrounding the man, Masain involuntarily spoke to him in a respectful manner.

"I see. Masain."

The man grimaced as he looked around the blood-filled fortress interior. Then, without warning, he extended his hand towards Masain's forehead. Before Masain could flinch, a light emanated from the man's hand and engulfed him.

"Huh?"

It felt warm. The minor injuries disappeared instantly, and vitality began to sprout throughout his body. His body, devoid of energy due to days of starvation, was suddenly overflowing with life.

Above all, the curse that had been clinging to him since the beginning was completely gone without a trace. It was a curse so powerful that even Masain, who was not a priest, could feel its malignant nature. But the fact that it vanished so easily was nothing short of a miracle.

He had survived.

Masain instinctively realized that he was completely freed from that horrific curse.

The moment he recognized this, his whole body began to tremble as if shaken by a wind. His body, which had not been greatly affected even as the people of the fortress died, started shaking as if it had just woken up.

The man tilted his head.

"Your body should be fine now, why are you shaking more than before? Is there still discomfort somewhere?"

Then, a waterfall of light poured over Masain once more. The bright light felt like a symbol promising absolute safety, which caused a sudden swell of emotions and made him choke up.

Seeing the boy quietly weeping while hugging his knees, the man who realized it was not a physical issue stepped back. He slowly leaned against the door and quietly waited for the boy to calm down.

Masain was not unaware of how pathetic he looked right now. However, his tears wouldn't stop as the tension that had been stretched to its limit during those hellish days suddenly loosened.

How long he cried for, he didn't know, but the man sitting opposite of him suddenly jumped up and looked outside the fortress with cool eyes.

Then he approached Masain and extended his hand.

"Can you stand? We need to leave here now."

Masain nodded, grabbed the man's hand and stood up. Despite sitting motionless for several days, moving wasn't particularly hard, thanks to the man's divine power.

As he wiped his tears and looked up, he finally got a good look at the man's face.

He had assumed that the man would be much older, but he was a young man who still had the look of a boy. In fact, he didn't seem much older than Masain himself.

His neat black hair and clear grey eyes felt both foreign and strangely familiar, leaving him with a peculiar feeling.

The man glanced outside once more and then turned to look at Masain.

"Just follow behind me. Don't be too surprised if something suddenly appears."

Masain nodded, and the man smirked before turning around and walking out of the fortress.

They moved in silence for a while along the outer wall of the fortress, which had been devastated. The commotion from outside had been going on for a while now, and it seemed to have reached its peak.

Masain followed diligently behind the man, twirling the scroll he had received from him.

As the man strode ahead, he mumbled to himself, as if speaking into the void.

"Were you planning on burying it all if I hadn't found it?"

"That's my business to take care of, isn't it? Not something for you guys to worry about."

"I no longer trust any of you. The conversation is over. Close the channel, Cornsheim."

From his actions alone, he seemed mad, but his calm voice and clear eyes didn't feel strange at all. Masain merely thought that he must be handling some important task that he didn't know about.

It was a wonder that he came to trust a man he barely knew so deeply.

Suddenly, he drew a sword from his waist. It was a blunt gray sword without any particular decoration.

Soon, the sword was covered in a dazzling white light, and a pure white blade, half an inch longer than the sword, revealed itself. It was an extremely clean manifestation of external energy.

'An aura blade?'

Masain involuntarily swallowed.

A Sword Master? Such a young man?

Without a word, the man swung his arm lightly forward.

Boom!

In an instant, one side of the distant fortress wall exploded.

As Masain flinched in surprise, the man swung his sword again with apparent indifference.

Rumble! Crash! The building that seemed like a warehouse on his left crumbled down.

"...?"

What on earth is happening?

While Masain was startled, the man suddenly turned around and swung his sword in a long diagonal motion.

Crash—

With a terrifyingly loud noise, the fortress building where Masain had been hiding just moments ago collapsed in an instant.

Masain's jaw dropped without him realizing.

Just how far is it from here to there...!

But then, Masain saw something strange. Beyond the collapsing fortress, he saw dark objects scurrying away.

At a glance, he thought they were black wild dogs, but on closer inspection, they were dark starfish-shaped creatures. One of its five legs was raised like a head, the remaining four legs moved like a quadruped, and it was hopping around.

'Demon fiend...!'

Only then did Masain realize what the man had been swinging his sword at all this time.

The man's sword had been causing such brilliant explosions that he hadn't noticed, but upon closer inspection, there were devilish creatures the size of wild dogs hiding here and there in the fortress, observing them.

"It seems the capital has turned into quite a comical sight during the few years I've been away."

The man sighed and turned back in the direction of the palace, resuming his walk. Perhaps due to the might he had displayed, the demonic creatures didn't dare approach too closely, instead following them from a considerable distance.

Every so often, when it seemed like those miscreants were closing the gap, Whoosh! Bang!

The man's sword would swing again, promptly followed by another dazzling explosion.

Masain would probably never forget the overwhelming sights the man showed that day.

The modest grey sword, and above it, the brilliantly shining clean aura blade. It seemed like he was swinging it casually, but each motion was efficient, so precise it was even beautiful. A destructive force beyond imagination, so immense it could only be described as terrifying.

Each of these things was etched vividly into the boy's mind.

55

It didn't take long for Masain and the man to arrive at the temporary campsite of the army stationed near the northern gate.

The hastily set up camp seemed to be bustling with imperial guards, close guards, and various paladins in their respective uniforms. Yet, it was astounding to see that, amidst the chaos, everything operated seamlessly without any visible confusion in the chain of command.

A knight with a rugged face, who was shouting commands at the soldiers, noticed the newcomers. He walked over with a stern expression. With his tall stature, half-graying hair, and shining eyes, he was a familiar figure to Masain.

The knight was Balthazar, arguably one of the most renowned knights on the continent, if not in Delcross.

It was a mystery when he had returned from the southern frontline.

He approached briskly, as if he was about to chastise them, but unexpectedly stopped in front of the man, saluted by placing his hand on his chest.

"Your Majesty."

Your Majesty? Masain looked up at the man in surprise.

Facing Balthazar, the man looked somewhat displeased.

"Why are you here and not at the imperial palace?"

"I'll return your question back to you. Why are you here instead of the imperial palace? What happened to your scouts, and why are you wandering around alone?"

"Why wait for scouts? It's faster if I just have a look myself."

"Hmm..."

Balthazar's forehead veins bulged, but before he could say anything else, the man swiftly changed the topic.

"Nevertheless, it was a success. I've managed to rescue Masain from the fortress. He managed to hang on even in such tough circumstances."

Only then did the paladin notice Masain standing behind the man. His expression subtly changed, somewhat questioning, as if to say 'Why him?' or 'Why of all people?'

He quickly recomposed himself, giving Masain an awkward smile.

"It's fortunate that you're safe, Masain-nim."

It didn't seem like he genuinely felt that way.

Balthazar turned his full attention back to the man.

"The imperial palace is securely defended by the 3rd Imperial Guard Knights and the Paladin Order of St. Aurelion. We've set up a makeshift barrack for you, Your Majesty, so please rest without concerns."

"Alright. I'll leave the cleaning up of the gate fortress to you."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

Balthazar saluted and left, not even sparing a glance at Masain.

It was a stark contrast to the treatment he received just a few days ago. The man seemed to sense this subtle shift in atmosphere and clicked his tongue lightly.

But for Masain, a more pressing question arose. By now, it was clear who the man in front of him was.

"Excuse me, are you perhaps my uncle, Prince Nathaniel?"

Although it had been a long time, Masain had vague memories. A boy who, among the bright blonde-haired royal family members, uniquely had black hair. While he never conversed with him, he remembered him as someone frail-looking.

The man blinked a few times at Masain's question.

"I didn't think you'd recognize me from the few brief encounters when we were young."

So it was him.

The man nodded at Masain.

"Yes, I am Nathaniel Klein. Although my coronation is still pending, I'm the current 17th Holy Emperor and, indeed, your uncle."

Finally, Masain understood the subtle reaction shown by the knight commander earlier. The sudden appearance of the one who had disappeared and should've inherited the throne would have been quite uncomfortable for him, knowing that Masain, a close associate of the first Prince, also an enemy to them, was in fact still alive.

His thoughts were abruptly cut off. A stern-faced knight in a dark uniform approached.

"Your Majesty."

"Sir Leandros."

Leandros, the knight commander of the St. Terbacchia Paladin Order and the leader of all inquisitors.

He had always kept his distance in the fight for the throne, yet when did they begin serving this man as their emperor?

"The fortress was deserted. The [Puppeteer] was already gone."

"Do you believe that person was the [Puppeteer]?"

They held a quiet, cryptic conversation.

"There couldn't be two with such a presence. I'm sure of it."

"Understood, Your Majesty. Then I will pursue him to Brittany."

After nodding, Sir Leandros respectfully bowed and withdrew. Of course, he didn't even glance at Masain.

"Hmm..."

The man frowned briefly, but Masain knew there was nothing he could do about it.

Before they could move a few steps towards the tent, another figure approached them.

It was a politely handsome middle-aged man, Archbishop Caplan, who was the real power of the current council and rumored to be the youngest to ascend to an archbishop.

"Your Majesty."

Noticing Masain, his face changed noticeably, an unabashed expression of incredulity spreading across his features.

"Wasn't this... wasn't this not planned, Your Majesty? What in the world..."

At that face outright asking why he was still alive, Masain was momentarily speechless.

A savvy politician like him wouldn't usually make such a mistake. But Archbishop Caplan briefly revealed his true colors, and the man's eyebrows twitched as the atmosphere suddenly turned cold.

"Archbishop Caplan."

Caplan trembled. The man was smiling faintly at him, and for the first time, Masain realized a person's smile could be as cold as a blade.

"Tatiana Caplan will become the Empress, and Klanos Castle will be handed over to Masain. What else are you dissatisfied with?"

"Your Majesty..."

"That's enough." The man cut off the Archbishop's words. "One should know when to be content. You never know when my mind might change." He smirked, and showed a sliver of tooth. "I might feel like overturning the board you've set."

The Archbishop's face turned pale. He glared at Masain for a moment before quickly regaining his composure and respectfully bowing.

"I apologize for my rudeness, Masain-nim."

Without paying any mind to the Archbishop, the man headed towards the tent. Masain hurriedly followed, acutely aware of the sharp gaze piercing them from behind.

"Caplan seems respectful, but he's rather ominous. I was going to eat here, but that might have been a mistake. We should be careful about eating or anything for a while."

The man clucked his tongue, and made a small gesture to Masain.

"Follow me. Let's start by cracking some walnuts."

Finally, they arrived at the tent. Despite its hasty construction as a military tent, it was quite cozy since it was to be used by the Holy Emperor.

He sat Masain on one side of the bed and rummaged around, pulling out a small bag of walnuts.

Unsheathing his sword, he slid a walnut into the gap between the sheath and guard. The sheath, the end of which was finished with metal, had a curvature perfectly suited to holding a walnut.

Click. The guard descended, cleanly splitting the walnut into edible pieces. It seemed like he often used his sword this way. Masain could only watch in amazement as the split walnuts piled up in front of him.

"The name of this sword is Nutcracker. Isn't it a name that suits its purpose perfectly?"

Wasn't it an Aura Blade?

"But why a nut, of all things?"

"Through years of experience. It's not an easy task to play a prank on a nut without cracking its shell."

Is it a metaphor? Somehow, it feels melancholic.

Masain thought as he held a nut to his mouth.

In that way, Masain, the son of the first prince and second in line for the throne at the time, was able to come under the protection of the Holy Emperor by receiving the fortress of Klanos and abandoning the throne.

The Holy Emperor put forth Archbishop Benitus as his guardian, and Archbishop Caplan did not openly attempt to threaten him, perhaps because of the Holy Emperor's gaze. Soon, Masain was able to return to the imperial academy as if nothing had happened.

"Is it true, you're troubled because you're not making progress with Aura Blade?"

"Yes, Your Majesty."

Masain had come to the imperial palace for the holiday. He quickly finished a semester back at the academy, but now he had to formally ask the Holy Emperor about his future course.

He originally lived in the Blue Rose Palace, but now the current Holy Emperor's sons were the new masters of the palace. It was natural that he, who had become a Klanos, could no longer stay in the imperial palace.

But as they talked about his life at the academy, he found himself discussing his troubles with Aura Blade. Why am I talking about this? Masain was momentarily confused.

The Holy Emperor was seriously listening to his story.

The two were sitting in the reception room of the Blue Rose Palace, not the main palace office, because the Holy Emperor, was living in the Blue Rose Palace for some reason, and had also decorated the place as his office.

Although they hadn't met many times, from Masain's point of view, his uncle was a very fascinating person. Despite only a five-year age gap, he somehow felt like he was talking to someone much older.

Perhaps it was something like the maturity of a father. At the young age of 21, he was already the father of five children.

The son of the Empress, Logan, the son of the 1st Queen, Morres, the twins living in the capital's mansion, and Sisle, the daughter of the 2nd Queen, who was born not long ago.

Not only the safety of the Holy Empire, but also the lives of five children were on his shoulders.

Suddenly, the innocent laughter of a child came from outside. One of the princes, Masain was thinking absentmindedly, became startled, when the Holy Emperor suddenly stood up from his seat and dashed out of the office.

As Masain inadvertently turned his head towards the open terrace where the man had run out, he was momentarily stunned. Because a little one was perilously climbing over the railing of the balcony on the second floor across the room. It was a little boy with golden hair that had a faint grey hue.

The child looked around for a moment, swinging, and then fearlessly jumped down.

"Kyah! Prince!"

"Prince Morres!"

The screams of the servants were heard belatedly.

"It's dangerous...!"

Masain also startled, stood up from his seat. He could vividly imagine the sight of the child covered in blood, writhing on the ground.

Fortunately, that was just a figment of his imagination.

Whoosh—

A gust of wind from somewhere enveloped the child, and for a moment it seemed as if he would float away. In no time, the child arrived below the balcony and was embraced by the Holy Emperor, his radiant smile shining brightly. With slightly upturned eyes and a mischievous expression, he was truly a charming little boy.

"Morres! How many times have I told you not to jump from anywhere?"

"Dad[1]! This time do the 'whoosh!' 'Whoosh!'"

"...This kid..."

The Holy Emperor momentarily made a baffled face but soon indulged the child, playfully tossing him into the air.

Whooooosh!

The child soared upwards in one swift motion and then, enveloped by the wind, slowly descended back into the Holy Emperor's arms.

"Dad! Again! Again!"

With a faint sigh, the child took flight once more. Kyahaha!

It was utter chaos.

"I apologize for startling you, brother Masain."

Suddenly, a voice came from the side. Looking down, there stood a young boy with black hair, reminiscent of the Holy Emperor's aura, stretching his hand towards Masain. The little fellow was offering a handshake.

"Nice to meet you. I heard from Imperial Father that you'd be visiting. I am Logan, the eldest.[2]"

This kid was peculiar in his own right. Was he three, or perhaps four?

He seemed just a few months apart from the little one who was flying around in the Holy Emperor's arms, yet he spoke with an uncanny maturity.

"Lately, Morres is obsessed with jumping from high places. The moment you take your eyes off him, he jumps."

No matter how closely the servants watched, if given a slight chance, he would jump. One day, in the middle of the night, he even opened a locked balcony and jumped out. The Holy Emperor had to rush over and use his divine power to heal a gash on his forehead.

They couldn't just lock the door and confine the child all day. The Holy Emperor's recent confinement in the Blue Rose Palace seemed to be due to this reason.

"In short, kids cause accidents if you're not watching."

The black-haired little boy remarked, shaking his head.

Masain was baffled. Even this kid...

The Holy Emperor seemed resigned to the situation.

"If he had been creature that understood scoldings, perhaps Lizabeth wouldn't have run away."

Ah, the 1st Queen went on a prolonged trip to the Asein Republic suddenly. It was all because of Morres.

The Holy Emperor sighed lightly and tapped the young child's forehead.

"Won't you stop causing trouble and greet brother Masain properly?"

"Brother Masain?"

The little one turned to Masain and smiled, extending his arms. He wanted to be held.

Before he knew it, Masain took the child from the Holy Emperor. The warmth of the child's weight brought a peculiar emotion surging within him.

After unexpectedly losing his parents and brother last semester and losing all his subordinates in the fortress to a curse, he had felt a void. He seemed to have adjusted, but Masain himself felt that something was off.

Right now, something was filling that emptiness.

"Hello, brother Masain?"

"...Hello, Morres."

Masain replied in a subdued voice.

"Dad said so. Starting today, you will always be with us."

"I... see."

"Yeah, so you'll also do the 'whoosh' for me, right?"

"....."

The kid had a peculiar charm.

Throughout his vacation, Masain found himself involuntarily rolling around with the kids in the Blue Rose Palace. Startled by Morres' unpredictable actions and occasionally reprimanded by the old-soul Logan.

And sometimes, they'd sit in the office, picking up walnuts the Holy Emperor cracked open, while the man offered unsolicited advice on following one's heart.

Those were the unforgettable days that would never return.

T/N:

1. He's calling Nate, appa-mama here
2. Not sure why he's called the oldest here, but maybe because he's the Empress's son

56

Upon turning 18, Masain graduated from the academy.

His initiation into aura took longer than most, leading to some struggles. Fortunately, he barely managed to succeed just before graduation, enabling him to pass the imperial knight selection exam.

Part of the reason for his late success was due to the Holy Emperor's interference. Under the pretext of helping his nephew, the Holy Emperor had merely provided nebulous explanations for a while.

– "Before perceiving the aura, one must first understand the vast void of this world."

– "It is upon this void that intent stands, and thereafter the aura appears. This signifies that the aura goes where the mind wishes."

– "It's not about moving with the heart infused in the aura. If the intent materializes as a mental image, the aura will naturally follow."

There was a limit to such nonsensical explanations.

At one point, the usually calm Masain lost his temper.

– "Uncle, please never consider teaching anyone again!"

– "....."

The Holy Emperor looked noticeably dejected.

Luckily, he was eventually able to provide critical assistance to his nephew's training. After much contemplation, he came up with the groundbreaking idea of letting the aura flow directly into Masain's body, allowing him to understand its movement.

Surprisingly, this method was incredibly effective. It catapulted

Masain to a level difficult for even those who had trained with the aura for years to reach.

Though his initiation was late, once he got the hang of the aura, his proficiency in its use skyrocketed. As his original sword skills were already excellent, he quickly became one of the top contenders among the new knights.

Dressed in the imperial guard's uniform for the first time, Masain entered the Blue Rose Palace with a shy expression.

"Wow! Brother! You really came to work here starting today?"

Morres, running around the garden with a red cloth draped over him, rushed over when he spotted Masain.

The boy had stopped jumping from heights as before, but he had recently become obsessed with a red tapestry.

It was an old decorative cloth stored in a corner of the warehouse, depicting the battle between the first king and the demon race. It was an antique piece, though somewhat damaged and hideous now.

Morres had taken to wearing that tapestry like a cloak. He never took it off, not even during sleep, making it impossible for anyone to intervene or even wash it.

Queen Lizabeth was disgusted, but even her hysterics couldn't overcome the boy's stubbornness.

"Your Highness, Prince Morres."

When Masain greeted him formally, Morres looked puzzled.

"Why are you speaking like that all of a sudden?"

"Since I've become an official knight serving the imperial family, I want to remain conscious of my duties."

"Hmm?"

Morres tilted his head, finding the explanation a bit complex for his young age. However, assuming Masain would continue acting like a knight from now on, he accepted it and chuckled, clutching Masain's sleeve.

"So you won't be going to the academy anymore and will stay with us here?"

"Yes, that's correct."

While Morres beamed and clung to his arm, another child slowly emerged from within the Blue Coral Labyrinth.

"Congratulations on your official appointment, brother."

It was 1st Prince Logan, who, despite not yet being six years old, already had a mature demeanor.

"Thank you, Prince Logan."

"Eh....."

Logan seemed momentarily taken aback by Masain's response but soon gave a faint smile. Sometimes, due to his slightly droopy eyelashes, his smile seemed a tad sorrowful.

"So we'll see you in the palace every day now?"

"As long as there are no official duties with the knight squadron, yes."

"That's great. Imperial Father will be delighted."

Logan smiled warmly, but his eyes widened upon spotting the unfamiliar sword hanging by Masain's side.

"...A sword?"

Ah. Masain glanced at his new sword and smiled awkwardly.

"It's a gift from His Majesty. A bit extravagant for a graduation present."

On the day of his academy graduation, the Holy Emperor had sent Masain a sword through his chief chamberlain.

Though categorized as a long sword, it was longer and thicker than usual and slightly heavier. But it perfectly fit Masain, who was tall and sturdy. And the sword's design felt familiar to him.

The new sword's design, for some reason, reminded him of a well-known royal treasure.

The treasured sword, Mithtratis.

A sword of [Oath] handed down from crown prince to crown prince.

The famed blade, which was said to remain sharp even after severing a thousand necks, was in the possession of the first Prince Cameron during the reign of the former Holy Emperor. Now, after his death, it is carefully stored back in the imperial warehouse.

Masain had seen that sword his father carried several times, and remembered it as a brilliant and gorgeous sword with delicate golden reliefs engraved on it.

This sword was somewhat similar in shape to the Mithtratis. However, unlike the royal treasure sword, it had no particular decorations, and the guard and pommel were generally modest.

[T/N: Sword guard and pommel, is the hilt part of a sword]

Nevertheless, it looked quite luxurious with an overall subtle golden glow. Masain guessed it might be a practical sword made to imitate the excellent balance of the treasure sword.

However, Logan, who had been staring blankly at the sword, made a strange remark.

"Seems like Imperial Father really cherishes you, brother."

".....?"

Looking at Logan with a slightly cryptic smile, Masain blinked in confusion, not knowing what he meant.

Of course, if Masain knew what was happening in the Holy Emperor's office now, he would never have comfortably carried that sword.

"Why not just give him the Mithratis instead?!"

The situation was explosive, with Archbishop Benitus clutching the back of his neck and Armand, the dean of the Theology Academy screaming as if having a fit.

The Holy Emperor responded with a slightly plump-looking face.

"The Mithratis symbolizes targeting the Crown Prince. I have no intention of making the child who barely saved his life after becoming a Klanos a target again."

"But even so! That doesn't mean.....!"

"And where would you use a sword so laden with decorations."

"Then at least give him one of the other practical treasure swords.....!"

"Well, you should use good stuff if you have it. They're all going to wear out and break someday, it's a waste not to use them before that."

At this, Dean Armand fell backward, foaming at the mouth, and Archbishop Benitus clutched his forehead and cried out in a scream-like voice.

"Your Majesty! What do you think sacred artifacts are?!"

That's right.

The sword Masain received was the treasure sword Mithra, which could be said to be the origin of Mithratis. It was the Sword of [Oath] and at the same time, it was one of the few weapons recognized as a sacred artifact in the Holy Empire.

It was incomparable to the Mithratis in importance.

But even the Holy Emperor who graciously gave the treasure sword away, hadn't anticipated it at the time.

That his nephew would seal that sword in the warehouse before long, and would not pick it up for more than a decade afterward.

A decade later, the once awkward young knight became a dignified Knight Commander of the Imperial Guards. The current Masain was older than his uncle who had taken him from the gate fortress for the first time.

And now, he was standing, holding the sword he had admired since then.

"The name of this sword is Nutcracker. Isn't it a name that suits its purpose perfectly?"

Back then, he should have told his uncle how terrible his naming sense was.

Masain chuckled and held the slightly lighter and thinner handle compared to the sword he usually used.

Woong.

As he injected aura into it, a sword cry that was slightly different from his own sword resonated softly. A clean and calm vibration, much like its usual owner. Masain enjoyed the sword cry, pushing the aura slowly until enough golden outer aura formed on the blade.

And then he started to swing the sword.

Seongjin watched silently from the corner of the training ground.

For the first time, he saw the Imperial Knight's standard swordsmanship seamlessly flow from the first to the eighth stance. A pristine swordplay, unfolded with aura, based on the Banahas's fluid techniques.

In the training ground, where twilight had passed and the surroundings were darkening, only the Nutcracker infused with aura faintly glowed in gold.

"Something... seems different?"

Without realizing, Seongjin muttered.

Although it was the same swordsmanship he had always seen in the training ground, what Masain now demonstrated felt different. It was different from the swords shown by the resident knights during practice, and even different from Seongjin's own.

They were the same movements but executed differently, the same flow of the sword, yet it felt distinct.

He couldn't understand where such differences stemmed from, even though they all practiced the same swordsmanship.

Unbeknownst to both Seongjin and Masain, Masain's sword moves resembled those of his uncle's swordplay of the past.

The sword trajectory that he always kept in mind during practice.

The trajectory of that beautiful sword he always aspired to emulate.

Soon, a clear golden aura began to stream from the Nutcracker.

The aura blade that shone as bright as gold. It was the same technique that effortlessly defeated Bantra's larvae.

Although he hadn't fully reached the realm of the Swordmaster and couldn't maintain the sword for long, a short moment was enough for him to display the technique he had always admired and practiced.

Swoosh. A long golden line appeared in the void.

This time, Seongjin could more clearly witness the essence of this technique. The afterimage of gold, detaching from the sword and drawing a long tail against the dark sky as it flew swiftly.

A moment later, a loud "bang" echoed in the air, followed by a fierce wind that enveloped the training ground.

Whoosh—

Facing the gust, Seongjin unconsciously mumbled, "...A crescent that splits the sky."

Although the Holy Emperor once remarked that it was a name that could be ignored, the technique that Masain displayed indeed looked like a faint moonlight splitting the void.

Ending with that technique, Masain halted his movements and stood still for a moment, looking up at the sky.

Although it was an aura released without a specific target, it was still a slightly weak strike. He hasn't yet reached the heights of his uncle's skill.

The aura gradually diminished from the Nutcracker. The ringing sound of the sword also faded, soon falling silent.

After standing in the training ground for a while with his sword firmly gripped, Masain eventually turned to face Seongjin.

"It certainly doesn't seem like the legendary sword made by a dragon. But seeing that it shows no strain even when imbued with a strong aura, the Holy Emperor's words about its sturdiness must be true."

Masain smirked and offered the sword to Seongjin.

"It's well-balanced, but it doesn't quite suit my preference for weight."

When Seongjin took the sword, Masain hesitated as if he wanted to say something. However, he soon stiffened his expression, placed a hand on his chest, and bowed respectfully.

"Thank you for lending me the sword, Your Highness."

His demeanor was as respectful as when they first met.

Seongjin moistened his lips for a moment, then simply nodded without uttering a word.

He had many questions, but he couldn't bring himself to voice them. Right then, it suddenly occurred to him that, perhaps not only Queen Elizabeth wanted to forget the past.

The next morning, Masain headed to the imperial palace for the first time in a long while, seeking out the Holy Emperor's office.

"I wish to relinquish my position as the Knight Commander of the Imperial Guards, Your Majesty."

Although the statement was abrupt, the Holy Emperor didn't seem to be greatly disturbed. With his usual cold face, he quietly gazed at Masain without saying a word, then slowly nodded his head.

The one who changed over the past decade or so wasn't just Masain. Even before, the Holy Emperor had been a near-poker face, but after that incident, it became harder to find anything that could be called emotion on his face.

Occasionally, an odd glint like a curious light would appear in his gray eyes, and each time, Masain would feel greatly uneasy, as if his uncle was becoming something other than human.

For a moment, the Holy Emperor's gaze landed on the golden sword at Masain's hip, then met his eyes again. Masain awkwardly smiled and scratched his head.

"Well, I think there's no sword as comfortable to wield as this one."

"I see."

The treasured sword Mithra.

There must have been a great deal of torment before his nephew decided to draw that sword again after such a long time. However, neither of them would ever discuss it, not now nor in the future.

"Masain."

Just as he was about to leave the office, the Holy Emperor stopped him. When he turned around, the Holy Emperor spoke in a seemingly indifferent yet serious tone.

"Take good care of that child."

There was still no warmth to be found in his gaze towards Masain. However, having known his uncle for a long time, Masain could detect a faint hint of concern in his voice.

This time, Masain was able to respond with a genuine smile.

"Yes, Your Majesty."

And that morning, Masain sought Seongjin to inform him of his new appointment as the Head of Security at the Pearl Palace.

The faces of the resident knights who saw him carrying all his luggage turned pale. It goes without saying that they weren't exactly pleased.[1]

T/N:

1. Lol. The military-esque style drill training

Ever since Sir Masain became the head of security and began to live with him in the Pearl Palace, Seongjin's training progressed at an increasingly rapid pace.

First, since Masain's ease of commuting gave the man more free time, Seongjin's swordsmanship lesson hours significantly increased.

No, is the lesson time important? We're always in the same palace, aren't we?

Whether it's morning or night, whenever a problem arises, I can always find him and ask him questions.

Modern employees would instantly consider quitting if they heard about such a lifestyle, Seongjin thought to himself as he chuckled slyly. Each day couldn't help but be fulfilling.

[Your father is quite strange, too.]

Today, too, as he was wielding his Nutcracker sword till his palms were raw, he suddenly spoke at Demon King's question, who usually used to sing out of boredom.

'What's strange?'

[No matter how bad your reputation might be, you're still the prince. What could he be trusting to leave you so unattended?]

Seongjin paused and wiped the sweat dripping down his forehead.

'Um...'

Indeed, the term 'unattended' seems appropriate.

After all, his old man did provide him with high-quality meals and just left him at the training ground.

'Maybe he's grateful just because I stopped messing around.'

At Seongjin's response, the Demon King snorted.

[Alright. Let's say that's the case. But what's strange is that you're the same. How long are you going to keep training? Now that you've got a new body, don't you want to do something else?]

'What's wrong with training? It's just fun.'

[If you have no complaints, it's none of my business, but still, put your hand on your heart and think about your recent lifestyle. Sleep, wake up, training ground. Eat, training ground. Isn't this a completely voluntary hermit lifestyle?]

Well, if you say it's a hermit's life, I can't argue with that, but the word 'voluntary' is very important here.

Plus, what Seongjin was concerned about was something a bit different.

'It's nice to swing the sword all day, but...'

Isn't this like a student without any academic pressure? It feels like everyone around me is cheering even if I don't study and only pursue my hobbies.

'...Is this really okay?'

When you think about it, as a prince, there should be some basic duties and etiquette I should learn...

Yeah, like royal education, something like that.

Besides, everyone knows Morres doesn't fully remember, right? Shouldn't they make him study even more in that case?

Queen Lizabeth, who even built a personal library, would definitely urge him to study hard, but she seemed cautious towards Seongjin and seemed to be waiting for the holy emperor's opinion.

'But is Pearl Palace totally abandoned? That's not true either.'

Without even him asking, the number of servants recently increased, which in itself a proof.

The number of resident knights had increased by about 30%, and the number of servants had more than doubled from before. It wasn't the emperor's intention to isolate Pearl Palace from the imperial palace in the first place, Morres just misbehaved a lot.

Thanks to one more maid who was good at making tea, Edith's face brightened as if she'd gotten rid of a decade-old constipation.

'...Well, it probably doesn't matter?'

In any case, Seongjin was satisfied with his current life.

The swordsmanship lessons were fun, and the number of his aura techniques increased rapidly. He's now tying the third Banahas technique after finishing the basic training. He was able to progress quickly as he had perfectly completed the first and second techniques.

He didn't know how long this peaceful life would last. However, since he was given this free time to solely focus on swordsmanship, it might be good to use it to its fullest.

Seongjin thought so, but most people seemed to think differently.

"Prince Morres, aren't you spending too much time in the training ground these days?"

Haven grumbled as he finished his morning training. Recently, due to a significant increase in the number of guards, a resident knight always followed Seongjin for personal protection.

Especially Haven, who became familiar with Seongjin, was a friendly person who comfortably approached Seongjin openly.

"What's wrong with training? It's good, isn't it?"

"But, aren't you still in your prime? You should go out, make friends, and attend social gatherings. It seems like you're getting a lot of invitations to social events these days, aren't you?"

Shall I talk about my first social gathering, sir Haven?

Well, a monster suddenly appeared in the basement, and all the members who attended were detained by the court. Still, do you want me to go again?

"And you should also date someone. You've lost weight and now you're glowing. Don't you have a young lady sending flowers every day? With just a little smile, noble ladies would line up, but you're wasting that face training all day. It's so frustrating!"

Oh, those flashy bouquets, sir Haven?

Actually, it's a show by a clever 12-year-old girl named Chloe. That kid is pondering when it's most profitable to dump me.

Haven's lips protruded like a duck in response to Seongjin's nonchalant attitude.

"Well, at least go out and get some fresh air. It'll improve your mood, won't it be nice?"

This guy, isn't he just frustrated because he has to be tied to the training ground during duty hours? If it's that much of a bother, he could apply to cancel the dispatch and return to the 3rd Cavalry Division.

When he was told that, Haven shouted in shock, "No way, Your Highness! Isn't that too harsh between us? I'm saying all this out of consideration for you. It's really disappointing that you say it like that, you know?"

What does he mean 'between us'?

Ignoring Haven, Seongjin frowned and started swinging his sword again, but Haven, once attached, was tenacious.

"Come on, don't be like that and confide in me. You want to go somewhere, have a refreshing drink, meet pretty women! If you say so, I, Haven, will follow you to the end!"

"...."

"Your Highness? Do you really have nothing you want to do?"

Thanks to him, something he wanted to do had just come up.

To shut that noisy mouth of his.

Hee-EEK.

Feeling something ominous in Seongjin's expression, Haven flinched and retreated. He really had incredible instincts.

'...Geez, why am I bothering with all this?'

Seongjin grumbled to himself, clutching his Nutcracker.

All because the nation is too peaceful.

If gates were opening here and there, monsters pouring out, causing chaos, people would realize how precious this trivial daily life is.

However, that evening.

Only when he met Edith, who cautiously asked if he was not going to meet his friend at the townhouse, did Seongjin realize that those around him were quite worried about his condition.

* * *

"I don't understand why everyone is anxious to send me out when I'm fine."

So, oddly enough, Seongjin found himself complaining in front of the Holy Emperor.

"It's ridiculous after finishing evening training. Everyone's looking at me like I'm some strange creature."

"...."

"Is it so strange to train all day? Thanks to that, my skills are improving fast, I don't understand what the problem is...."

Today was the first time Seongjin had had a consultation with the Holy Emperor since receiving the Nutcracker.

The Holy Emperor, who had been busy with piled-up national affairs, had managed to finish his work quickly and resumed the consultation. Probably thanks to his subordinates who worked like clockwork at the right time and place.

In any case, as he met with the Holy Emperor and explained about his training, he naturally started talking about the reactions of the people around him that have been bothering him recently.

The Holy Emperor, who had been listening silently for a while, nodded his head.

"I see. That's quite something. You haven't been practicing for long, but you're already close to the 5th level."

"Haha, you recognized it right away, didn't you?"

Seongjin scratched his head awkwardly and laughed.

As the Holy Emperor had said, his own aura circuit was almost approaching the 5th level.

After the fourth level, the process's resistance increased dramatically, taking longer than expected, but he was confident he would complete the fifth level within a few days. At this rate, he would be at the level of a squire just entering the ranks of a knight order.

According to Sir Masain, on average, it takes over 3 years to reach the fourth level and nearly 7 years to complete the fifth level.

Of course, most start training at a young age, not knowing much. However, the speed at which Seongjin progressed, completing all these steps in just a few weeks, was astoundingly fast.

The looks on the faces of Sir Masain and the resident knights of Pearl Palace were utterly priceless.

– Why hadn't someone so talented been discovered until now?

Even the young knight, who always scowled at Seongjin, was stunned momentarily. As expected, Hunter Lee Seongjin wasn't someone to be taken lightly.

While proudly sipping his tea, the Holy Emperor suddenly commented, "It's fortunate that you seem capable enough to present to the public."

Why is he still treating me like a child learning to walk?

He thought he was doing quite well, but this man knows how to kill one's spirit.

The Holy Emperor, looking at Seongjin's dismayed face, continued, "There's no need to be in such a hurry. Those who care about you aren't just saying empty words. Recently, you've seemed restless."

"Uh..."

Seongjin's eyes widened, and he was momentarily at a loss for words. Did even his father think he was too anxious?

Of course, it was true that he had increased his training time considerably after his near-death experience, but still...

"...Shouldn't I become stronger as quickly as possible? What I mean is..."

The high-level demons are coveting this dimension. You know this too, right?

Soon, famine, plague, war, and death will invade Delcross. The gates will open!

There was so much he wanted to argue, but Seongjin closed his mouth.

Perhaps it was because the Holy Emperor's gaze seemed much heavier than usual.

"Morres."

"Yes."

"Do you know where and what your brothers and sisters are doing right now?"

".....?"

Seongjin blinked.

Of course, he had heard about the whereabouts of his siblings. The Holy Emperor officially had seven children, and he heard that three of them had left the Imperial Palace for various duties.

However, he didn't have much interest or detailed knowledge about the whereabouts of the other princes and princesses, other than the twins and Amelia, whom he frequently interacted with.

Noticing Seongjin's puzzled look, the Holy Emperor began explaining calmly.

About First Prince Owen, who had been active on the southern front for years.

About the Second Prince Logan, leading the paladins in sea expeditions.

About the Third Princess Sisle, who was anointed a holy maiden and was on a long pilgrimage.

This was the first time the Holy Emperor had spoken directly about the other princes and princesses. After listening for a while, Seongjin asked with a hint of suspicion.

"So, you're saying I should stop my training and, like my other siblings, fulfill the [Noblesse Oblige]?"

He had thought it was a reprimand for neglecting his duties and lazing around in the palace. However, the Holy Emperor slowly shook his head.

"You're already training hard enough. Haven't I told you to take things a bit more relaxed? You're too young to be tied down by the stuffy duties of the imperial family."

"But..."

"Just remember, you have many family members around you."

"....."

"Now, let's talk about something different."

The Holy Emperor looked down, seemingly lost in thought. Then, he asked Seongjin an unexpected question.

"There are many countries on this continent, not just Delcross. How much do you know about them?"

"....."

Regarding the countries that dominate the continental political situation, Seongjin had some knowledge.

The Brittany Kingdom, which leads the food and clothing culture, Rohan, which has recently risen as an emerging power starting from the liquor industry, and the Asein Empire, which is slowly building power based on a merchants' alliance.

All of this was self-studied, even mastering the spelling without any proper lessons.

Since Delcross, virtually the strongest empire on the continent, has almost all the countries except the southern pagans under its control, there wasn't much to call a political situation other than interfering in other countries.

However, the explanation added by the Holy Emperor after hearing Seongjin's answer was unexpected.

Carthago Republic in the west, famous for wool fabrics, cheese, and bards.

Thriving maritime cities based on exceptional long-distance navigation and fishing skills.

And while it is now divided due to foreign interventions, the high-quality literature of the eastern Ortana, which once flourished as a splendid republic.

"... Are you suggesting that I should focus more on politics and diplomacy as a prince, rather than just swordsmanship lessons?"

He did nag about studying during the temporary experience. Is he hoping for the resumed lessons that Morres stopped before?

Apart from having a swordsmanship teacher, he thought it was enough to just gain common knowledge.

However, the Holy Emperor denied his guess again.

"It's just to say that there are many places worth taking interest in, besides Delcross."

"....."

Seongjin was now confused.

What does he really want to say?

Most of the time during the audience, the man who only listened to Seongjin's words was unusually talkative today. But maybe it's the mood, it feels like he's beating around the bush.

Looking closely at the Holy Emperor, Seongjin soon discovered a faint ripple of emotion in one of his cold eyes and was slightly shocked.

Anxiety or worry.

Has he been looking at him like this all this time?

"Do you understand? Morres."

The Holy Emperor spoke to the dumbfounded Seongjin.

"I may have some idea of what you saw and why you're so anxious. But remember that it's something you, still young, can't and don't need to handle."

""

"You just need to live like any other child, doing what you want."

"... Like a child?"

"Yes, like a child."

The person who probably knows better than anyone that Seongjin is not an ordinary child said so in a calm voice.

Prince Leonard of Rohan was carousing the taverns of the capital again tonight.

His normally handsome face was particularly gloomy today. Drinking and playing around wasn't just a one or two-day affair; when on earth would he have to kill time so pointlessly?

He briskly pushed away the woman who followed him out of the tavern, and with a leisurely shake of his liquor bottle, Leonard headed to the meeting place with Romaine.

"F*ck you, Holy Emperor...."

The person who provided the reason for his idle time. The Holy Emperor made it so expensive to meet face-to-face that even with Leonard's desperate requests, he hardly agreed to it.

What the hell is the problem?

He had suggested meeting with the Princess of Delcross as an alternative plan, but Romaine ignored it and kept his mind on something absurd.

So, he's wandering the streets like a drunkard, tempting others.

"...Romaine?"

In the dimly lit street, Leonard spotted the familiar long silver hair of a person who was pulling a staggering drunkard.

What on earth is he doing?

The drunkard looked rather disheveled, not a good sight. With his arm firmly wrapped around the man, Romaine was whispering something into his ear.

Soon, the two disappeared side by side into a deep alley.

Standing dumbfounded for a moment, Leonard took a sip of liquor and followed them into the alley.

He found the two after only a few steps. The drunkard was sitting on the ground with a vacant expression, and Romaine was piercing his chest with a sharp metal rod.

A small trickle of blood spurted out.

Soon, Romaine's soft voice, whispering to the drunkard, reached Leonard's ears.

"Now, forget everything that just happened. Sleep well at home for a few days, and everything will be better."

It was a husky and slender but definite male voice. Yet the strange resonance made it sound like a young woman.

Sure enough, the drunkard with glazed eyes looked at Romaine as if he were the most beautiful woman in the world, even as his forehead was soaked with blood.

"Now go home."

The drunkard nodded and staggered past Leonard and out of the alley.

After watching the poor man's retreating figure for a moment, Leonard turned and asked Romaine,

"You've been doing this a lot lately. Does it mean anything?"

"All results start with diligently sowing seeds."

Romaine replied, wiping the blood-soaked rod with a rag.

He had been planting strange things in people's chests with that rod for some time now, like a real farmer sowing seeds.

"You talk like you've become a priest of the real [Sowing] Cult."

It was a jab at Romaine acting like the remnants of the Sowing Cult. Romaine shrugged.

"At least I sow something more meaningful than they do."

"When are you going to see the results from planting one by one?"

"I've already found some collaborators. They'll do their best."

A few more people going around stabbing others with metal rods doesn't change much. Leonard scoffed.

"So, is it over? It might be faster to summon a demon instead."

When Leonard spoke jokingly, Romaine looked straight at him. Although his face was hidden behind a half-mask, his tightly closed lips looked very serious.

"Don't you know? As long as the current Holy Emperor is there, moving a demon race in Delcross's capital is impossible. Those with magic cannot endure even for a moment. Delcross is the place where demons cannot step in unless they borrow a human body or directly contract with a human."

"Yeah, you said that."

Leonard grasped the bottle of liquor, a fake smile on his face.

He had heard the same story from Romaine several times.

About a monstrous character who suddenly appeared in Delcross, the capital that was once nearly occupied by the demon race. In a flash, he wiped out the demons and claimed the 17th royal throne for himself.

After coming to power, he discreetly dried up the seeds of four factions known as the Dark Church, successfully uniting them.

The result was considered relatively good in cases where remnants of sects like the [Sowing] Church or [Repentance] Church remained hidden in the corners of the continent. The Church of [Rest], on the other hand, was said to have been completely annihilated, leaving not even a corpse or bone fragment behind.

What could they possibly do against such a terrifying being?

From time to time, Leonard was overcome with a sense of hopelessness, wondering if they were hitting a sheer cliff with eggs.

"But the current guardian of Delcross is still human after all," Romaine said, looking up at the distant sky. "It's curious how he's maintaining his balance up to now, but it's undoubtedly a precarious tightrope walk."

Leonard could not fully understand his words. Romaine always avoided going into details about that balance.

Yet, whenever the story came up, Romaine's voice was filled with conviction.

"Such balance tends to collapse from a very small crack."

Leonard turned his head, following Romaine's gaze.

Off in the distance, in the direction where the royal palace of Delcross lay – where the Holy Emperor undoubtedly was.

"The limit will come someday. It must."

* * *

That night.

Because he couldn't concentrate, Seongjin ended his meditation earlier than usual and walked out to the balcony instead of lying down. He flung open the window, feeling frustrated as the words he'd heard from the Holy Emperor during the day continued to surface in his mind.

'...To live as a child, doing what you want?'

It seemed absurd the more he thought about it.

Morres was a full 15 years old. In this world, it's an age where you can join a knight order or take adult responsibilities like the debutante's ball.

Some of the resident knights of the Pearl Palace at his age would flock to bars or linger around the red-light district. What's with this man treating him like a child still?

'Besides, I'm already doing what I want, right? I'm comfortably eating and sleeping while freely training....'

Hearing Seongjin grumbling to himself as he breathed in the cool night air, the Demon King quietly spoke.

[What's on your mind? You're not acting like yourself.]

'What do you mean, not like myself?'

He was a contemplative person, as far as he knew.

However, the Demon King's next words were an undeniable truth.

[Whenever something bothers you, you put everything aside and just train.]

'...Did I?'

It seemed like that was the case. Recently, focusing solely on training, he had pushed aside many unresolved issues that surrounded Morres.

Queen Elizabeth, who was hiding something from him.

The mysterious organizations that Morres allegedly sponsored.

And Jonathan McAlpin, whom he met to gather information only to get caught in a demon accident and end up incarcerated in the tribunal.

'I could dig into it if I wanted to, but...'

What use would that be?

After all, Seongjin was not Morres.

He had realized something when he experienced a near-death situation recently. He was merely possessing Morres' body haphazardly, not truly living as Morres.

The emperor had said so. The soul maintains its appearance in life because it continues to be influenced by the physical body until death.

But even when he was swept away by an aura storm to Gehenna, or when the Demon King's summon pulled him to the edge of the Void, Seongjin's soul remained unaltered, just as it was during his Hunter days.

'In the end, this body doesn't interact with my soul even a little.'

He was breathing and moving in Morres' body, but it was an unstable attachment where the body and soul were not in harmony. A precarious state where a slight trigger could send him flying far away, possibly never to return.

Can this really be called a living state?

Because swordsmanship training is quite fun at the moment.

So, with a carefree attitude, I lived by practicing as much as I wanted, and when the crisis of a dimensional invasion approached, I thought about lending a hand.

The Holy Emperor must have seen through that.

– You have so many blood relatives around you.

– Even if it's not Delcross, there are many places worth looking at with interest.

As Seongjin pondered over time, he seemed to understand what the man wanted to say.

The Holy Emperor wanted him, Lee Seongjin, to live a proper life as Morres, bonding with his siblings and becoming attached to this world.

'...Yeah, when I think about it, the biggest unresolved problem is the Holy Emperor.'

What the hell does he want to do, that guy?

A man who knew Seongjin's current situation better than anyone else. A man who could come and go across the vast boundaries of dimensions to find a single soul.

Why doesn't he think about finding his real son, but takes care of pitiful Seongjin as if he were his child?

"Hmm..."

After a moment of contemplation, Seongjin soon shook his head and slammed the window shut.

One way or another, the answer is one. Thinking about it alone won't solve the problem now.

It's annoying to waste energy on unnecessary things.

'I can't sleep, so maybe I'll meditate one more time.'

[...So that's how it is. I thought you were unusually worried for a long time. Don't you ever grow?]

Ignoring the Demon King's dejected voice, Seongjin spent enough time meditating until he fell asleep.

So life seemed to go on without any changes.

However, that day, the conversation with the Holy Emperor certainly left an impact on Seongjin. When he meditated or wielded the Nutcracker, the man's words continued to slip into his mind whenever he seemed relaxed.

After receiving a call from Madame Justine about the fitting of a previously ordered dress, Seongjin's decision to visit Salon de Merci was also for that reason.

"Wow, I don't know how many days it's been since I left the Pearl Palace!"

As Seongjin climbed onto the carriage, knight Dame Claudia exclaimed in excitement. She had obviously been stuck in the Pearl Palace too long lately.

Accompanying Seongjin on his outing that day were also senior knight Dame Maria and junior knight Dame Claudia.

Unfortunately, Haven, who would have been most delighted to go out, was off duty that day.

"He took a few days off. He will probably spend the entire vacation in the liquor bottle. Even though the liquor isn't that strong, he really goes all out drinking it."

Although Dame Maria spoke disdainfully, everyone knew that she was the biggest drinker among the resident knights.

"Will that not cost a fortune? Aura users don't get drunk easily, do they?"

Could the aura circulating actively inside the body accelerate the decomposition of alcohol? Aura users seemed to sober up very quickly.

Most of the resident knights in the Pearl Palace were rumored to have come on assignment to earn liquor money.

In response to Seongjin's question, Maria shrugged.

"That's his funny point. He loves liquor so much, but since he can't afford it, he cuts off his aura and drinks. Thanks to that, he has been picked on by local bullies who didn't recognize him as an aura user countless times."

"That much?"

"Yes. The fact that his talent is mediocre but he is a master at using aura is because he practiced while drinking."

That's surprisingly a hidden benefit of drinking.

Destete Street, which he visited after a long time, was busier than before.

The Emperor's birthday celebration was approaching, and it was time for all the officials of the Empire to flock to Destete Street, where all the dressmakers were gathered. During the festival period, large and small banquets were held without a break, so it would not be enough to just tailor one or two new party dresses.

[Humph! Humans indeed love to waste energy on unnecessary things. What's all this fuss over such a trivial event?]

'...'

Although the demon king feigned indifference, Seongjin felt differently. The excitement was palpably transmitted.

Thinking about it, this is the first time the demon king has come to a busy street, isn't it? He might have really lived an unwanted secluded life. It feels a bit sad.

[...What? I suddenly feel really bad for some reason.]

What a quick-witted guy.

As the carriage wove through the crowds, stopping and starting, they finally arrived at Salon de Merci. The employees who had been waiting in advance lined up to greet Seongjin.

"Glorious light upon the noble Imperial family! We greet His Brilliant Highness, Prince Mores!"

Truly a splendid feast of pink.

Among them, Madame Justine[1], wearing an unrivaled shade of pink fur, was fluttering his fan and making a fuss.

"Oh my, Your Highness! Kyaa! You've become even more dazzling since the last time I saw you!"

It seems like he's as boisterous as ever. If Masain had been here, he would've thrown a tantrum on the spot[2].

Both Dame Maria and Dame Claudia, who were seeing the man for the first time, widened in astonishment.

Well, for the most renowned designer in the capital, he indeed had a rather unconventional character.

What was surprising was the significant curiosity the Demon King showed towards him.

[Hmm. A very, very peculiar individual.]

'People can be a bit noisy.'

[No, it's not the appearance that's the issue. Truly a fascinating human. Where on earth did this character spring from?]

'...?'

While saying this, in the meantime, Madame Justine, with intimidating muscles that surprisingly looked delicate, walked over with light steps, circled Seongjin, inspecting him, and then pulled up his red-stained lips.

"Oh my! Your body size has changed quite a bit since I last saw you! You've become slimmer and more firm! You seem to have grown a bit taller too. Goodness gracious! What would have happened if we had gone straight to Gabon? Now, now, shall we go to the special room?"

A foreboding feeling came over Seongjin.

"Could it be...?"

Madame Justine's eyes turned into mischievous crescents as he caught Seongjin's uneasy expression.

"Yes. As you guessed, we will inevitably have to measure your size from scratch again! Ohohohohoho!"

Damn it all.

T/N:

1. 1st appearance in Chp.23

2. Lol. Masain def try wearing the same expression as he did back then.

59

To conclude, Madame Justine was a decent designer, deserving of his reputation.

Seongjin, who had tried on the tailored outfit after a bit of alteration following the size measurement, was a little surprised. The completed dress looked quite plausible.

With the material scattering rainbow-colored lights, large butterfly patterns, and the embroidered extravagant gemstones, all the strange elements were gathered, but instead of looking like a space shaman as Seongjin had anticipated, the finished product appeared surprisingly elegant, causing him to stand agape.

Madame Justine covered his mouth with a folding fan and chuckled softly.

"Ho ho ho. Because your highness has a face that it can fully support such a bold design."

Is the completion of fashion ultimately the face?

While Seongjin was marveling anew, Madame stealthily approached, fumbling with the pins stuck here and there in the dress, and continued speaking.

"Perhaps it's indeed fortunate that your highness hasn't ordered the party dress yet. It would have had to be entirely recut anyway."

"... Party dress?"

There's already a bunch of clothes in Morres' room, yet another order?

"Yes. You'll need at least 5 new outfits for the birthday celebration.

Some prestigious household members order over 10. They sweep away all the latest seasonal designs."

"10 outfits...."

"That's still modest compared to the royal events of other countries. The imperial family usually prefers elegant and neat designs, so there's not much overlap, and they don't order too many."

If one were to wear something similar to the imperial party dress, they would be accused of ignorance and finger-pointed for a long time.

"That's why some places prepare dozens of preliminary designs. In case the reserved dress overlaps with the imperial family's design, all the dresses under production get discarded."

So it is considered virtuous for the imperial family, who are hosts of the party, to decide on their party dresses as soon as possible.

"The birthday celebration is less than a month and a half away. It's already quite late, so it would be best to get all the party dresses tailored while you're here."

Thump, thump. Madame Justine forcefully straightened the lapel of the dress, then scanned Seongjin from top to bottom, his nostrils flaring with satisfaction.

"Hmm, doesn't the dress look different now that I've personally tailored it? No matter how well the staff at the Pearl Palace are good at their job, they can't do a satisfactory job like this."

"If it's so bad, why don't you come to the Pearl Palace?"

"I can't enter the Imperial Palace, that's why."

"...?"

Before he could ask anything further, Madame Justine placed his hand on Seongjin's shoulder and smiled. "Now, shall we take a look at the tailoring on the back?" Then, he lightly pushed him to turn him towards the mirror.

"...!"

A chill ran through Seongjin's body.

What's this?

Why does it feel so unpleasant?

It's like touching something void, something he shouldn't have touched.

Suddenly stiffening, Seongjin's unease was detected by Madame, who immediately withdrew his hand with a shock. His previously ingratiating smile was gone.

"..."

Seongjin, too, remained silent, glaring at Madame Justine. He had a strong feeling that something was wrong, but couldn't figure out what.

But looking into the dim eyes of the Madame, he was certain that the man knew why.

A chilling silence.

Dame Claudia, standing at the door, was disturbed by the heavy air and called out to him.

"...Your Highness?"

How long had they been glaring at each other?

Finally, Madame Justine broke the silence with his voice, now weak and somewhat hollow.

"...Your senses... are extremely keen."

"..."

"Indeed, the imperial bloodline is different in every way..." He seemed to want to say more but bit his lip, holding back. "...I will bring the design sketches."

With a cold look, Madame turned his eyes from Seongjin and gave a slight bow. Then he turned and left the special chamber, still with his light gait.

"Your Highness? What suddenly happened?"

Dame Claudia asked again, confused, but Seongjin was deep in conversation with the Demon King in his mind, leaving no time to answer her.

'...Hey.'

[Huh?]

"Didn't you say that guy was peculiar earlier? What's so peculiar about him, exactly?"

At Seongjin's question, the Demon King hesitated for a moment, then said,

[Hmm, I'm not quite sure how to put it. Uh... it's hard to pinpoint exactly what it is, but his body seems a bit off somehow? Like it's not moving properly. A feeling like it doesn't quite match with his soul? Like it's lacking in vitality?]

'...What's that supposed to mean?'

[I told you it's hard to explain. Anyway, he feels very different from the people of this world.]

'Different from the people of this world?'

[Yeah. I don't know why, but he smells of another world. Like, where is it... Ah, that's right!]

The Demon King, who had been mumbling, suddenly exclaimed with a bright expression as if he had realized something.

[Regular World! It feels exactly like a human from Regular World!]

Seongjin was taken aback by the unexpected answer.

Regular World.

A place referred to as a dimension higher than Sigurt-34 or Gehenna, known as the Imaginary World.

Following a giant flow that transcends dimensions, it maintains extreme stability.

According to the Demon King, these regular worlds often show a stereotyped appearance. It's because all the laws of the world are constrained by the same flow.

Thus, these worlds have a narrow range of change, and their stability is incomparable to the imaginary worlds. It's almost impossible to forcibly open a gate and invade from another dimension.

In other words, things belonging to the regular worlds cannot easily appear in the imaginary worlds or the main worlds.

But how can a person from such a dimension be here in Delcross?

"It's not like he's entirely a human from the regular world either. Souls from regular worlds are a bit unique and can be recognized at a glance. But that guy's soul doesn't differ much from the souls of Delcross."

That's why the Demon King found it hard to explain.

"But his body is different. Like other things from the regular worlds, I feel a single giant flow governing that body. That's why it doesn't blend well with this world, and I keep feeling a sense of discomfort."

On the surface, there may be no significant difference.

But since the substances that make up the body and the laws governing them are different, some differences are bound to manifest.

For example, the mass might be different.

He might be slightly heavier or lighter than other humans.

"Ah, so that's why.....!"

Seongjin finally understood the nature of the discomfort he felt.

The unpleasant feeling he sensed earlier was nothing else but his well-developed senses picking up on an oddly inappropriate load applied to his body with a slight exertion of force.

A human from the main world with a body from the regular world. In that case...

"Could that guy be undergoing possession like me?"

Seongjin, a human from imaginary world, became Morres of a main world.

Although it was a slightly different case, they shared the commonality of being souls who have entered the bodies of people from other worlds.

Could investigating Madame Justine reveal clues about Seongjin's current state?

"It makes sense to think so, but....."

But why does he feel so reluctant?

He feels like just covering it up.

[So, what are you going to do now? Want to confront that guy while we're at it?]

The Demon King asked, but Seongjin shook his head after some thought.

There were escort knights beside Seongjin now. It's not the time to suddenly apprehend the Madame and question him about other dimensions and whatnot.

Furthermore, it was the twins who first introduced Salon de Merci. It's highly likely they already knew about Madame.

If the twins know, then doesn't the Holy Emperor likely know as well? Is there a need for him to intervene and create confusion?

More than anything, Seongjin was caught in a strange feeling, not wanting to delve too deeply into his current state. Perhaps it was some sort of intuition, an unexplainable sensation.

[Really? If you say so, whatever.]

The Demon King trembled his soul once, like stretching, and then spoke once again.

[But you know, you seem to think a lot more now that you've become the Holy Emperor's son. If you had been as usual, you would have just turned everything upside down without pondering.]

'...Huh?'

[You can't resist your curiosity, can you?]

'.....'

Exactly, that's how it is.

Ah, it's uncomfortable. I want to go back to the Pearl Palace and swing around Nutcracker.

Madam Justine, who had left his seat as if to avoid him, returned to the special room a moment later, his face expressionless, carrying an enormous number of design books.

He then spread them out everywhere and passionately began to explain the design concepts, of course, maintaining an appropriate distance from Seongjin.

"Now, Your Highness. What do you think of this design? The sharp descending lines blending with the angular traditional patterns, doesn't it look very dignified? I named it 'Blade's Sovereign!'"

"Look here, Your Highness. This design is 'Moonlight's Glory.' It's motivated by the fairy tale of the moon fairy who announced the improvement of the first emperor. The shining silver jewels are beautiful, aren't they?"

To Seongjin, they were doodles, and he had no idea what to appreciate about them.

With a blank face, he was giving half-hearted responses when, unexpectedly, someone began to engage passionately.

"A design with improvement as the theme for hosting foreign guests might be..."

"Ah, here the shade needs to be a bit darker..."

"This is good! The restraint in mise-en-scène radiates dignity..."

Dame Claudia. Did she like this sort of thing?

"Dame Claudia, you say? Finally, someone who understands me! How can there be such a fashionable person among knights?"

"Hehe! Even though I look like this, I studied Britannian culture when I planned to study abroad as a child."

"Oh, really! That explains it."

"Hehe."

After a heated discussion that went perfectly, five banquet outfits were quickly decided. Seongjin had no chance to intervene.

Lastly, waving his hands in a manner that meant they should do as they like, Seongjin left it to them.

Clothes are clothes; what's there to choose?

Thanks to Dame Claudia, time is saved, so let's hurry back and train.

Thinking this, Seongjin got up from his seat without delay.

"Your Highness."

Madam Justine, who had followed him to the entrance of Salon de Merci to see him off, cautiously approached and spoke, "It is difficult to explain in detail here, but I can assure you of this." Lowering himself slightly, Madam Justine whispered softly into Seongjin's ear, "Your Highness, I have been working for His Majesty for a long time.

You can at least trust me on that."

"....."

Seongjin stared at Madam Justine.

[His heartbeat is steady? It doesn't seem like he's lying.]

The Demon King quietly hinted at his side. True to his words, to Seongjin's eyes, Madam Justine's more serious than usual demeanor appeared sincere.

However.....

"Do you take it that my father's wish is the reason you cannot enter the Imperial Palace?"

"....."

"Yes. I'll at least believe that you are in my father's hands."

Crack. A crack appeared on Madam Justine's robust smile that had been covering his face.

After briefly staring at the man's stern face, Seongjin snorted inwardly and climbed into the carriage.

Right. It wasn't as simple as believing just because he acted obediently.

Seongjin's intuition, which had been alert since he first saw Madam Justine, was still sounding a warning against him.

Claudia Bowling was thrilled to bits.

Indeed, it had been a long time since she had left the palace and come into the city. With the recent increase in training and strengthening of the palace's defenses, she had been busy even on her days off.

Moreover, the high-quality designs she saw at Salon de Merci perfectly satisfied her lustful desires that she had been ignoring.

Dresses reflecting her tastes for the banquet. How splendid it would be if Prince Mores wore them!

Maria, a knight by her side, subtly signaled her, but Claudia couldn't help but let out a frivolous laugh now and then.

"Hehehe."

Had other seniors knights heard it, they might have been shocked, but Claudia, who had not been a resident knight for long, did not dislike the third prince she was serving.

Regardless of previous rumors, the prince she saw was a rare genius in swordsmanship and diligent to boot. He lost weight in no time and became as handsome as a prince from a fairy tale.

'Sometimes he exudes an odd atmosphere not matching his age....'

The young prince, unaware of her thoughts, merely stared out of the window with his usual plump expression.

Meanwhile, the carriage seemed to make no progress, stopping and starting repeatedly. The crowds on the street had increased because it was late in the afternoon.

"It seems it will take quite some time to reach Pearl Palace. It looks like it will only get a little quieter after dinner," said Maria, looking outside worriedly.

Then the prince unexpectedly suggested, "Then, since we'll be late anyway, shall we just eat and then go home?"

"Eh?"

"If we have our meal first and go back after it gets quieter, we'll save a lot of time. What do you two want to eat?"

Images of famous restaurants flashed in Claudia's mind, even high-end ones she couldn't normally afford on a lower knight's salary.

"Will... expensive ones be alright, Your Highness?"

The prince nodded obediently, "Go anywhere you want to eat. I'll pay for anything."

Wow! The prince is the best!

But Claudia's excitement didn't last long.

The problem was a group of people from Brittany who came into the restaurant where they were sitting. They began to speak loudly in Brittania, uttering very unpleasant words.

"... Imperial family ... piglets ... fools ..."

"... shame ... Delcross ... ridiculous ..."

Claudia, who had once prepared to study in Brittany, understood some of it. They were clearly slandering Prince Morres, known as the fool!

Claudia glanced nervously, but the prince seemed undisturbed, just nibbling on a small piece of grilled meat.

'Well, His Highness wouldn't know the Brittania language anyway....'

Fortunately, or unfortunately, Claudia was uncomfortably nibbling her meal alone when it happened.

"... woman ... lowly origin ..."

"... vulgar ... low-class ..."

"... prostitute ..."

Those scoundrels were now targeting even Princess Amelia!

Claudia's face turned pale with these outrageous slanders when—

Swoosh.

Suddenly, Prince Morres pushed back his chair and stood up. Looking up at his face in astonishment, Claudia was taken aback.

The prince was smiling with his teeth bared, his face more ferocious than ever!

Then, striding over to the group of Briattanian citizens, Prince Morres said, in fluent Brittania,

"Come on. Bark your nonsense again, you bastards."

'...Did I come out for no reason?'

Pushed around by the crowd and stuck in a carriage for tens of minutes, Seongjin was feeling a bit regretful.

The two escort knights were anxious as if the congestion was their fault. Particularly, Dame Claudia had been fidgeting in her seat, stealing glances at Seongjin and looking somewhat uncomfortable.

Why is she like that? Is she hungry?

Seongjin pondered for a moment before speaking.

"Then, since we'll be late anyway, shall we just eat and then go home?"

That way, he could skip dinner and find some time for training.

"Will... expensive ones be alright, Your Highness?"

"Go anywhere you want to eat. I'll pay for everything."

Suddenly, Dame Claudia's eyes began to sparkle.

She must have been starving.

"This is a hugely famous restaurant on Destete Street. It's one of the few places where you can taste genuine Flanders-style meat pies!"

The place Claudia had led them to was a rather large and reputable-looking restaurant.

Even though it wasn't yet dinner time, it was already bustling with people, proving that it was indeed a popular place.

"...Is it alright to bring the Crown Prince to such an common place?"

Dame Maria looked around, bewildered. It was clearly not an upscale restaurant with private rooms for distinguished guests.

But Dame Claudia was adamant.

"What use is formality before absolute gourmet? We don't need any elaborate course meals. Freshly cooked, piping hot food is always the tastiest!"

Her argument was quite persuasive.

So they selected an available table.

"Here, you must try the traditional Flanders-style pork pie! The crispy pie filled with a thick layer of juicy pork is just incredible!"

"Is, is that so?"

"Yes. And you must have it with cheese. Flanders-style cheese has a unique charm different from that of Carthago!"

"....."

Dame Claudia, it seems, have a genuine passion for clothing and food.

He had seen many unexpected sides of her today.

The dish she highly recommended was definitely worth it.

"Wow....."

Dame Maria, who couldn't hide her discomfort while waiting for the food, was mesmerized the moment she took a bite of the pie. It was that delicious, a true Flanders-style meat pie.

"Hehehe. How is it? It's amazing, right?" Claudia asked, looking pleased, her freckled nose wrinkling with delight as she took a big bite of pie.

So Seongjin decided to see the outing in a more positive light. Maybe this was the leisure that the Holy Emperor had mentioned.

As they were about halfway through their meal, the restaurant suddenly filled with customers. It was nearing dinner time.

With the national festival approaching and many foreigners arriving, he spotted people in exotic attire.

Next to Seongjin's table, a group of foreigners dressed in flashy, snug clothes, adorned with glittering decorative buttons, took their seats. They were men from Brittany.

Wait? Their outfits looked familiar.

"They seem to be people from Brittany."

Claudia muttered with food in her mouth.

Ah, it was the style he'd seen at the Salon de Merci. The latest trend on the continent.

Seongjin observed them with curiosity.

They all had a strong aura of magic. The flashy yet shallow swords each of them wore indicated they were likely knights escorting some high-ranking person.

Their surly expressions were strange, with smoothly shaved chins and flushed cheeks.

Is this what fashion has come to? In a few years, will all the people of Delcross look like that?

Seongjin shuddered at the thought of the pearl-decorated imperial knights with painted cheeks.

While he was pondering this, the Brittany men began to order their food with an arrogant attitude, soon starting to talk loudly among themselves.

"The crude food here, no matter how hard I try, I can't get used to it. These imperial bumpkins don't know how to cook."

"That's true. Tender sparrow dishes with Rohan's red wine would be the perfect match."

"Ah! Since the first day in the imperial capital, I've been homesick!"

They were openly insulting Delcross in the middle of the capital.

Their gall was astounding.

"How odd that they can gain weight eating this kind of food."

"Ahaha! You mean that famous pig from the imperial family? The one that's notoriously insane..."

"Right. Look at the one who calls him a Prince. Even the Delcross fools are laughable when you see them."

Suddenly, Claudia looked at Seongjin with a start, fearing that the prince, unable to control his temper, might do something rash again.

Seongjin smirked and quietly put a piece of pork into his mouth.

People talk ill even of their king when he is not around. Why would I get angry at them one by one when they don't even know who I am? This is all because of that bastard Morres.

Speaking of which, that jerk Mores, how badly must he have messed up to be cursed at by foreigners?

At that moment, the Demon King, who had been quiet until now, suddenly asked Seongjin,

[Can you hear what they're saying?]

'Of course, they're making such a loud racket. How could I not hear?'

[...You can hear that?]

'.....?'

What is he talking about?

As Seongjin was puzzled, the gossip at the next table was entering a new phase.

"By the way, I heard a lot of young royals who have just come of age are coming to this year's coronation party?"

"It would be nice if our Prince Charles finds a good match this time."

"Yes. If he can snag one of the princesses of Delcros. Then he would become the son-in-law of the Holy Emperor!"

"Rumor has it that the first princess, Amelia, is quite beautiful?"

Seongjin unconsciously furrowed his brows, and one of the men, with a bowl-cut hairstyle, began to talk nonsense, waving his hand.

"Beauty? What's the use of that when she's of low birth?"

"Low birth?"

"No, she's the princess of the imperial family....."

Shh. The bowl-cut haired man lowered his voice as if sharing a big secret.

"Actually, the first prince and first princess of Delcross can hardly be considered proper imperial family members. Because they were raised improperly, they only came into the palace under the name of being the Holy Emperor's children. Everyone who presents themselves before the Holy Emperor's face won't say anything."

"Really?"

"Of course. Those so-called royals rolled around in the dirt with commoners most of their childhood, quite unworthy to be treated as royalty. That's the truth."

"Ha ha, that's true. No matter how beautiful a woman is, if she's of low birth, it's a different story."

The more these bastards talk, the more they seem to have no limits to their words.

Clang. Seongjin slowly placed his utensils down on the plate, feeling something boiling up inside.

"And that's not all. Do you think that princess is really the Holy Emperor's biological daughter?"

"What? What are you talking about?"

As if enjoying the shocked reactions of those around him, the bowl-cut haired man grinned.

"You know? There's a rumor that the first princess's mother was actually a prostitute. If that's true, who in the world can assert that her father is really the Holy Emperor?"

Clatter.

Seongjin was on his feet before he even realized it. They say that when a person gets too angry, they become calm, and that was exactly Seongjin's condition.

His whole body felt hot as if blood was boiling, but his heart rate slowed down, and his mind settled.

"Watch what you say! Someone might hear something that could cause trouble!"

"No, no. There's a point to it. Considering her mother never received an official investiture, it's not an outrageous story, is it?"

"Oh, I heard the current Holy Emperor was quite a playboy. Indeed, something like that....."

Thump, thump.

Seongjin started to walk towards the bowl-cut haired man.

Startled, Maria and Claudia, who were with him, belatedly stood up to follow Seongjin.

[Hey, hey. Calm down, okay? Hey, Seongjin!]

The Demon King began to panic, his voice urgent.

[Just bear with it a little. Huh? I know you're angry, but if you mess up now, you'll end up in an irrecoverable situation!]

What nonsense. Who says I'm going to mess up?

I'm just going to 'politely' protest their rudeness.

[Ah! His eyes have gone mad again. Are you planning to kill them all?]

...What does he think of me?

Seongjin snorted and stopped in front of the bowl-cut haired man.

The bowl-cut haired man, who had been blabbering nonsense, blinked up at the sudden approach of the young boy.

"...What can I do for you?"

Looking at the boy's fierce eyes and sullen expression, it seemed that the matter was not particularly good, but nonetheless, he asked courteously. The boy's attire and demeanor seemed like that of a noble's child.

More than anything, there was an undeniable intimidation or a kind of dignity about this boy that subtly emanated from him.

And Seongjin kindly responded to his question, welcoming the boy's visit to Delkros with a gesture of goodwill.

"Come on. Bark your nonsense again, you bastards."

At that moment.

Those who were seated at the table, the Brittanians, and even the escort knights behind Seongjin, all looked at him, their eyes wide in disbelief.

".....!"

"Brittania language.....!"

"Could he have heard everything we said.....?"

Even Dame Claudia stammered.

"How, Your Highness! How did you speak Britannia like that.....?"

What's all this noise about?

Noticing the odd reactions around him, Seongjin slightly raised an eyebrow, and the Demon King explained with a sigh.

[You just spoke in that strange foreign language.]

...What?

[You spoke in the language of Britannia. Understanding is one thing, but how could you speak it so naturally?]

It wasn't the Empire's common language?

He was sure that's what he heard.

As Seongjin narrowed his eyes and looked around, the Brittanians, who had been frozen until then, began to speak one by one.

"Are you from the empire? But I don't detect a Delcross accent at all."

"I've never seen a foreigner pronounce Arrhc so naturally."

"Could this man be a Britannian native?"

'Uh.....?'

Seongjin blinked in confusion.

These weird, muffled sounds. It was a foreign language he had never heard before?

[Tsk. So you were unaware. Well, that explains it.]

The Demon King clicked his tongue.

Out of curiosity, Seongjin turned to the bartender and spoke again.

"I am not a Brittanian. I am a proper imperial citizen. How dare you utter such nonsense within the Empire's capital, are you out of your minds?"

Oh, it worked.

Maybe that Morres guy was surprisingly proficient in foreign languages?

Given the sudden unexpected dialect, he became quite curious about how this mechanism worked.

But Seongjin had previously used the Empire's common language as naturally as Korean, even though he had never learned it. Adding a language or two more didn't make much difference.

Right now, he had more pressing matters to attend to.

With a tense face, Seongjin slowly met the eyes of each of the Bretonians, looking at him and spoke slowly.

"You just blasphemed the Holy Emperor, His Majesty, by calling him a wastrel. This can be seen as an insult to the Lord and a challenge to the authority of the Empire."

Admitting that the young Emperor had lived a bit recklessly in his youth was one thing. But he was not someone who should be called a wastrel by riffraff like you! Huh?

Caring for his children even in his busy life isn't something just anyone can do!

That gentleman is my father, and I respect him!

"And you dared to wag your filthy mouth about the most noble princess of the Empire. Do not think that this insolence towards the Imperial Family can be easily overlooked!"

Even I want to immediately bow down to praise my sister who has descended to this world, but what are these pathetic beings saying now? Lowly? Falls short?"

It would be good to engrave this clearly in their pathetic head.
Understand?

Our Sister Amelia is an angel!

[...You're surprisingly obstinate, aren't you?]

Why is this guy picking a fight again?

At Seongjin's words, the Brittanians' attitude clearly turned hostile. They all stood up from their seats, each reaching for their swords at their waists.

Seongjin could feel their aura intensify as they prepared to unsheath their weapons. Comparing them with the knights residing in Pearl Palace, they seemed to be roughly at the level of an intermediate knight.

Maria and Claudia were about to step forward and draw their swords too, but Seongjin quickly raised his hand to stop them.

It would be problematic if their side was the first to draw a weapon.

"What's this? A fight?"

"...Seems like they're about to draw their swords?"

"City Guards! Contact the guards quickly!"

At this point, the other patrons in the restaurant couldn't ignore the conflict between the Brittanians and Seongjin's party. With guests hastily avoiding the scene and staff running around trying to manage the situation, the restaurant quickly became chaotic.

"I would have spared you if you'd just prostrated and begged, but you're making a big deal out of this."

"Why? Getting cold feet now? You were the one who started this."

"You really intend to draw swords in a public place? It'll become troublesome when the city guards arrive."

"The one who will be troubled is you. We are the escort knights protecting the honorable Marquis Rabijuri's son. What a diplomatic outrage towards a foreign guest!"

"To mention diplomatic outrage after publicly insulting the Imperial Family..."

Seongjin's frustration turned into a hollow laugh, and the bowl-headed man smirked.

"That's just your claim. Can you prove it to the guards? Is there a witness here cultured enough to understand such a refined language as Brittania, you Delcross bumpkin?"

These bastards?

They're running their mouths thinking no one can understand?

"Now that you understand your situation, leave before the guards come. If you close your mouth and leave quietly, I will forgive your rudeness thus far."

So that's what he meant.

Seongjin smiled smugly at the bowl-headed man.

"Ah, is that so? I must have misunderstood. I'm sorry about that. You guys were just gossiping about the young lord, and it seems I've misunderstood, right?"

"Gossip... What?"

"That's how it was. You're saying that such injustices have been publicly committed at Marquis Rabijuri's place! Treating the knights harshly and skimping on their wages? Anyway, the higher-ups are even more stingy."

The smug smile vanished from the bowl-headed man's face.

"What, what nonsense are you talking about!"

"When the city guards arrive, I'll 'properly' testify. These poor fellows were just airing a bit of their grievances about their own lord's tyranny. I'm the one who misunderstood their complaints, and that's what caused this trouble. Right?"

The Brittanian men stood agape.

What's this guy going on about?

61

The abrupt words from Seongjin left the people from Brittany utterly flustered.

"What are you blabbering now...?"

"Ah, ah. Even if you have a lot of complaints, you should have at least maintained a certain level of decorum when gossiping. Saying that the Marquis is XXX or slandering young master Ravioli as an XXX—these are things too disgraceful to even utter from my own lips."

"What is this guy spouting off about...?"

It was obviously a bunch of bullsh*t. But then...

What would happen if this lunatic actually goes and blabbers all this to the guards?

The helmet-styled guy quickly put his thoughts together.

A disturbance involving a foreigner. Certainly, to avoid petty squabbles, all details investigated by Delcross's guards would be relayed to Brittany without exception, including this baseless talk.

And those reports would first reach their employer, Marquis Ravioli.

If the boy outright states that they insulted the royal family, this could escalate into a major diplomatic issue.

Therefore, the Marquis might actually try to prevent the issue from going public. He would claim that the boy falsely accused innocent people, and he wouldn't hesitate to use his influence and money to support this.

But what if the boy simply claims he heard 'gossip about the Marquis

Ravioli?'

It wouldn't turn into a diplomatic crisis, and his claims would ironically gain credibility since it could be seen as a minor event that could happen to anyone. The young heir of Ravioli might just send them back to Brittany without hearing their excuses.

And they would have to face a furious Marquis, angry that they had insulted him right in the heart of the empire.

'No way...'

The helmet-styled guy looked at the boy in front of him with suspicious eyes.

'Is he saying that rather than waiting for the Marquis to cover this up, he'd minimize the issue but make sure we get what we deserve? Don't tell me... Surely not, is it?'

Such a young boy wouldn't have thought that far, surely.

But looking at that face...

'His expression...'

A slight twist in his lips, the boy wore an unsettling smile.

—I'm ready to make you all pay, no matter what it takes.

An impending sense of crisis overwhelmed him as if the boy would resort to anything if provoked!

The helmet-styled guy opened his mouth with a slightly trembling voice.

"Do you think the guards will believe such nonsense? Anyone can see that this is an outrageous false accusation!"

"A false accusation..."

Seongjin grinned, pulling up the corners of his mouth into a malevolent smile.

"That's your claim. But do you have any proof? Can you show evidence to the guards that you didn't say those things? If you have a third-party here who understands this backwoods Brittany language, bring them out. You XX."

"Eeeek!"

The faces of the men from Brittany flushed redder than beetroot.

Meanwhile, Seongjin, who was lightly scratching the surface while applying medication, was also going through similar thoughts.

'I hate to do it, but there's no other way. Best to keep the details under wraps.'

If he had known from the beginning that they were speaking in Brittany's language, he would have considered different options rather than confronting them in public.

'I have the moral high ground. But given that the birthday celebration is soon, it's in the best interest of both Delcross and Brittany to keep this quiet.'

Brittany wouldn't publicly admit their knights openly insulted the imperial family. They're already under a lot of pressure from the empire; admitting to more diplomatic issues wouldn't be beneficial.

The same goes for Delcross. Publicly filing a complaint with Brittany won't gain them anything tangible, but the rumor will tarnish the imperial family's reputation.

'Also, escalating this with physical violence isn't a good picture either.'

Causing a ruckus in a civilian restaurant would already be subject to public scrutiny. If the instigator turns out to be the disgraceful prince of the imperial family, it would be a humiliation that could reverberate across the entire continent.

—"That loser actually drew his sword on a foreigner who visited for the birthday celebration? To think this is called a thousand-year-old kingdom. The level of hospitality is truly remarkable."

At this point, the question of who was right or wrong in the altercation might be meaningless.

'I wish they would just draw their swords first. They're more cautious than I thought...'

Seongjin narrowed his eyes and examined the men with shaven heads in front of him.

In reality, he had been purposely provoking these men while keeping his Aura bound and at a low active level. With their numerical advantage, he thought if he showed even a hint of weakness, they might impulsively attack.

Despite rising as if they were about to charge, they hesitated, gripping their swords but not unsheathing them.

The hesitation stemmed from various practical considerations. Starting a bloody altercation would be a headache for both sides.

In that case,

'Maybe I should just wait like this and then go to the guard post...'

Seongjin quietly considered his options as he kept an eye on the men from Brittany.

Just then, there was a commotion at the entrance, and a group of armed knights and guards swiftly entered the restaurant.

Considering how quickly they responded, it was an impressively fast deployment.

"Halt right there! This is the Capital's Guard!"

"Remove your hands from your weapons immediately!"

The presence of the guards was overpowering, and the men from Brittany reluctantly raised their hands. Although they had been stubbornly confronting Seongjin, their faces showed signs of defeat when faced with the Capital's Guard.

"See? It would've been better if you had just apologized in the first place."

Seongjin also removed his hand from the hilt of his sword and flashed a wry smile at the men.

"I commend you for not drawing your sword to the end. Had you done so, there would have been no excuse for your immediate execution for attempted regicide. But from now on, you should be careful with your words."

"Regicide, what are you talking—"

"Ah, didn't you know?"

Seongjin tilted his head and then broke into a rare, bright smile.

"I am precisely the piglet of the Imperial Family you were talking about."

The faces of the Brittany men went from puzzled to horrified.

* * *

It turned out that the person arrested for causing the disturbance in the restaurant was none other than Prince Seongjin of Morres.

The Capital's Guard was understandably not pleased.

Regrettably, the knights who were accompanying him were of no help. Maria, who didn't speak Brittany, was still puzzled about what the issue had been.

"Please cooperate with the investigation, Your Highness. Stop beating around the bush."

"I've been cooperating since the beginning. As I said, it was just a minor misunderstanding."

"What was the misunderstanding?"

"Do we need to talk about it now that the misunderstanding has been resolved? I can't go into details since it involves the honor of the Marquis of Ravioli. We merely had a gentlemanly, polite argument."

"Oh, please, stop the nonsense."

"But Your Highness, witnesses say you were ready to draw your sword—"

"That's also a misunderstanding. We were conversing in Brittany, which may have given off the wrong impression. You know how guttural and harsh Brittany can sound, right?"

"Eh?"

"To the untrained ear, it might sound like an elegant language, but it feels like it was specifically designed for cursing."

"...What?"

The knight writing the report glanced at the Brittanians standing to one side with puzzled expressions.

The Brittanians, too, were individuals who could speak the imperial common language to some extent. Naturally, they understood most of what Seongjin was saying, but they only occasionally blushed, unable to offer much in reply.

This was understandable. They had freely gossiped about the royals in front of the prince of the imperial family. Moreover, they had been in a tense standoff in public view for a while, so they would have had no room to argue even if they were immediately executed for blasphemy.

They were simply anxious that the prince, who was leaving hastily, might blurt out something ridiculous in front of the guards.

A moment later, the person responsible for the detained Brittanian knights hurriedly visited the guard post after hearing the news.

Young heir of Ravioli, Charles.

He looked even younger than a boy representing his family; a small boy younger than Morres himself.

Like the detained knights, the young master had neatly combed hair and was wearing a forehead ribbon. Fortunately, his youthful face naturally had a youthful blush, reducing the discomfort to Seongjin's eyes.

'Should I suggest to my father a cultural isolation policy? Or at least a ban on forehead ribbons...'

Upon facing him, Seongjin seriously thought so.

"I sincerely apologize if our knights have committed a great impropriety, Your Highness," Charles, the marquis's young heir, paid his respects in the somewhat awkward pronunciation of the imperial common language.

"This is all due to my immaturity. On this joyful day when the birth year celebration is not far away, they made a mistake out of excitement, so I ask for your generous forgiveness."

"Hmm..."

Seongjin's eyebrows slightly raised.

He starts off with an apology before even getting into the details?

"Huh? But we haven't even begun to listen to the circumstances of your lordship's knights?"

The knight appeared puzzled, but young marquis Charles quietly shook his head.

"An unfortunate incident. Could it not simply be that my ill-informed knights have unwittingly shown disrespect to Your Highness?"

"No, but..."

"I am truly sorry to Your Highness."

"..."

Seeing a young noble from a fairly reputable foreign noble family speak so humbly, the knight seemed at a loss for words.

It's even more awkward because the one in question is a child.

In this situation, it becomes uncomfortable to explain the details of who is right or wrong.

"Well. If his lordship Ravioli apologizes to this extent, detaining them further would tarnish our honor. What do you say? Let's consider this water under the bridge and move on amicably?"

The knight who was drafting the document shot a glaring look as if incredulous.

"How can we just consider this a non-issue when an armed conflict has broken out right in the middle of the imperial city, and there is a formal report about it, Your Highness?"

"It was a misunderstanding, I tell you."

"What nonsense. There is a restaurant that clearly suffered damage, and there are witnesses who fled in the middle of their meal. How can you say such a thing...?"

Then, Charles, who had been listening from the side, looked at the knight with wide eyes in disbelief.

"Even so, I have already ordered compensation for the restaurant where the incident occurred, more than three times their loss of business. However, there is no one who was 'actually' damaged or 'really' hurt."

"What? But..."

Feeling the hesitation from the knight, Seongjin added,

"If you're hesitant to decide on your own, can you call your superior here? I can personally explain everything in detail to him. If needed, I can even arrange a meeting to report 'directly' to my father."

"..."

The knight's face turned sour.

He had been bothered by the prince late into the evening, and now he might even have to face the Emperor. Who will his stressed-out superior vent his frustrations on?

"...Alright, let's consider it water under the bridge..."

"I have no doubt that your decision today will contribute greatly to the friendship between Delcross and Brittany."

Seongjin patted the knight's shoulder with a full-faced smile.

As they left the guard post, the sun had almost set, and the surroundings were getting dark.

The streets, once bustling with crowds, had also become somewhat deserted, with carriages and carts moving aimlessly.

'So much for training today.'

He had tried to save some time for training but what a waste it turned out to be.

As he waited for Maria, who had gone to find a carriage, Seongjin grumbled internally. Charles quietly approached him.

"Are you sure it's okay for us not to accompany you to the palace, Your Highness?"

"....."

Seongjin silently looked down at the boy.

Charles was looking up at him with an innocent, childlike face.

It was annoying enough to have unnecessary expenditures due to involvement with the notorious prince, but one couldn't find any emotion other than extreme goodwill on that face.

For that reason, Seongjin thought to himself,

'Somehow, he's a suspicious little guy....'

However, he couldn't spit in the face of someone approaching him with a smile.

"Today, you've done me a favor, Lord Charles."

Thanks to the boy's rather mature handling of the situation, a potential big conflict was quietly resolved. Aside from his inscrutable inner thoughts, Seongjin had to admit that he got along quite well with him.

Upon hearing Seongjin's words, the young marquis Charles jumped up, clapping his hands.

"How outrageous! We should be the ones grateful for Your Highness's generous treatment."

"As for being generous..."

"No, I have a fair idea of what kind of rudeness my knights may have shown to Your Highness. When I return, I plan to punish them severely. Please let go of your anger, Your Highness."

"..."

"Even if they are severely punished for their irreverence, it won't be satisfying. To show such magnanimity for the sake of diplomatic relations between our nations! I can only feel apologetic to Your Highness."

Just look at this guy.

He's subtly polite but obviously afraid of the detailed story leaking from Sungjin's mouth. He's even gently placating by promising to punish the involved knights.

It means he already knows what kind of talk his knights usually engage in.

In that case,

Seongjin looked down at Charles and gave him a mocking smile.

"I don't need an escort to the palace, but if it's alright with you, your excellency, would you care to converse with me until the carriage arrives?"

"Wow. To speak Britannian so fluently...!"

Charles's eyes began to shine even more brightly as he looked up at Seongjin.

Afterward, Seongjin and Charles exchanged light banter in Britannian.

Their conversation had no major theme. It was just a variety of minor stories about recent trends in Brittany or the wellbeing of the imperial family.

Only the knights, who were huddled behind Charles, tensed up each time Seongjin opened his mouth.

In the midst of it all, it went without saying that their young marquis repeatedly exclaimed in admiration at Seongjin's proficiency in Britannian.

"You are truly remarkable, Your Highness! I've never seen a foreigner pronounce 'Arrhc' so smoothly!"

So what exactly is this 'Arrhc' anyway?

62

By the time Seongjin and his entourage arrived at the Pearl Palace, the sun had already set completely.

Masain, who had been restlessly waiting as they returned late, hurriedly came out to greet them before the carriage had even stopped.

"What in the world happened, Your Highness! What did you do to get detained by the Capital Guards?"

So even if you try to keep things quiet, if you are a former Knight Commander, news still leaks out.

Seongjin waved his hand in a tired expression.

"There was a minor misunderstanding with some foreigners. It's been resolved, so ask Dame Maria for details."

"...Eh? Your Highness, I know nothing about..."

Dame Maria, who had been detained by Masain, looked at Seongjin with a gloomy expression.

Sorry, Dame Maria.

Since you don't know well, you have to shoulder it. Just gloss the incident adequately.

Perhaps due to the training, his usually sagging shoulders felt heavier as he walked, when he heard a cautious voice from behind.

"Why did you do that, Your Highness?"

"...Huh?"

"Why didn't you just tell the truth?"

Turning back, he found Dame Claudia looking at him with a face full of complex emotions.

She had been quiet all the way, lost in thought. So she was wrestling with such concerns.

"Come to think of it, you said you studied Britannian? Were you preparing for overseas studies?"

"Yes, Your Highness."

Claudia had been silent because she couldn't interject into the prince's conversation, but she had found his actions utterly incomprehensible and was extremely frustrated.

In her opinion, Prince Morres actions; standing up to protect the honor of the imperial family was unquestionably commendable.

Why not just lay bare what those Brittany fools blabbered to the Capital Guards? Then there would be no scathing looks, as if saying, 'That troublemaker made another mess.'

Moreover, one could severely punish those arrogant Brittanians for contempt of the imperial family.

"Is that so? Then you more or less understood."

Seongjin scratched his head for a moment.

"Well, how should I explain? Even if I had said that, the chances of them facing appropriate punishment would not have been high."

"What? Why?"

"It would have ended up like that. Sure, both Delcross and Brittany would have been noisy for a while, but those guys would have been safely extradited back to their homeland under Brittany's protection. The punishment, if any, would have been swept under the rug."

If that had happened, the innocent victim Amelia would be the one suffering from wounds.

"Rather, I thought it's better to quietly bury this matter and reap some other benefits."

"...Benefits?"

Yes. He hadn't wasted his time engaging in futile conversation with young marquis Charles for nothing.

Seongjin flashed a bitter smile and spoke to Claudia.

"More than anything,"

Claudia shuddered for a moment. The prince's subdued eyes, as he looked straight at her, emitted an unusual pressure that shouldn't be coming from a boy of his age.

"What those guys said about Amelia-noonim should never again reach anyone's lips. I want not a word, not a letter of it to even remain in documents."

He didn't want the scribe to record it or the officials to report it.

He didn't want this to become the talk of the whole Guard.

He didn't want it documented and sent all the way to Brittany.

This matter must be as if it never happened.

"Understand? So forget about today's events, Dame."

Ah. Everything is all for Her Highness the Princess.

Claudia suddenly realized.

'His Highness wants to avoid having Princess Amelia become the talk of the town, even if it means he himself has to face criticism!'

Though Claudia may not have been entirely convinced by the prince's explanation concerning the reaction from Brittany, she at least clearly understood his determination to prevent any further criticism of the princess.

Come to think of it, Prince Morres didn't react at all when those people were calling him a piglet. He only demanded a formal apology for the derogatory comments made against the Holy Emperor and the slander against Princess Amelia.

What selfless familial love this is!

"Your Highness..."

Claudia clasped her two hands together and looked at Seongjin with tearful eyes.

'How could he be so thoughtful! The sense of gravity he occasionally shows, which seems beyond his age, was not a misunderstanding after all!'

The more I know him, the more rewarding it is to serve him!

I should devote myself to serving him for a long time to come and lay my bones in Pearl Palace.

Claudia internally made this resolve.

Of course, Seongjin, having no way to know what she was thinking, simply thought this:

'...Why is she looking at me with such burdensome eyes? Is she hungry all of sudden?'

[Seongjin, be honest with me. You have no intention of letting them go safely, do you? What;s your ulterior motive?]

Back in his room preparing for meditation, the Demon King, who had been silent until now, suspiciously started speaking.

'Ulterior motive? What do you take me for? There's nothing like that.'

Seongjin felt awkward but feigned ignorance toward the Demon King.

[...Really? You definitely won't just let it go, will you? Ah! Are you going to have them assassinated? Making them let their guard down only to strike them silently from behind?]

'Are you nuts? If something happens to those guys in Delcross, who do you think will be the first suspect? Huh?'

If he's going to backstab them, it'll be after the festival, it would be when the delegation leaves Delcross!

[So you will do it eventually?]

'Hmm, well... I didn't have plans initially.'

Seongjin shrugged.

But there are likely candidates who would want to do the deed.

I wonder if there'll be any backstabbing left to do later on.

* * *

A mansion in the royal capital townhouse.

The luxurious mansion, where the young marquis Charles is temporarily staying during the festival period, felt unusually icy.

Before Charles, who had a stern face, the knights with their heads bowed all knelt down in unison.

"We have committed a crime worthy of death, your grace, Lord Charles."

"Please forgive us..."

"Ha!"

Coldly smirking, Charles's expression was nowhere near the childlike one that had been visible when he was with the capital's guard force.

"Do you think today's events will be forgotten if you lot die?"

At his icy retort, which was like a biting wind, the helmeted leader hesitantly responded.

"Uh, the compensation you paid at the restaurant today, we will... definitely repay it..."

"Fine. Let's see how much of that loss can be covered by your insignificant salaries. But what's truly important isn't that."

Charles's voice was now quivering with anger.

"How dare you, make Ravioli owe a debt to the Imperial Family?"

"A debt, you say? That, that is..."

"If it's not a debt, then what is it!"

Charles, who had suddenly risen from his seat, yelled loudly in a sharp voice.

"How dare you humiliate the Imperial Family in the middle of the empire! Humiliate the princess? When every prominent figure on this continent is trying to bring the princess to their nation through marriage! What will happen if you insult the princess! What will happen to the position of our Brittany!"

Unable to control his anger, Charles even began kicking the knights who were on their knees.

"If the emperor uses this as an excuse to refuse a marriage proposal from our country, then who will be responsible? If the princess really becomes the queen of Brittany, what will become of Ravioli's standing! Unless you lot truly intend to throw Ravioli's honor into the mud!"

The faces of the kicked knights turned pale as death.

"It was me who covered up the incident for you! If that's not a debt, then what is it!"

With one last kick to a knight's shoulder, Charles took a moment to catch his breath. In the meantime, the helmet-styled leader quickly attempted to justify himself.

"Your Grace! This is all a misunderstanding! Didn't the prince say so earlier?"

"A misunderstanding? What misunderstanding?"

"Thus, the prince misunderstood our jokes among ourselves..."

"Do you really think Prince Morres' understanding of the Britannian language would allow him to misunderstand? What could he possibly have misunderstood?"

"..."

"Did you think I was unaware of your careless and disrespectful conduct all this while?"

Charles's eyes turned even colder as he looked down at the knights, whose words had failed them.

He ordered his butler who was respectfully standing behind him.

"Jean Jacques, send these men back to Brittany immediately."

"...Your Grace!"

"And report every one of their sins to my father. Confiscate their assets and either lock them in an underground prison or sell them off to work in the mines of Carthago. Make sure they pay for their sins accordingly."

The faces of the bowing knights lost all color.

Having served the ducal House of Ravioli for a long time, they knew well that Charle's words were not mere threats.

"Your Grace, please..."

"Just once, give us a chance to redeem ourselves!"

Though the knights pleaded and clung to him, they were soon seized by the hands of other knights, upon the butler's signal, and were dragged out of the room.

"Your Grace!"

Charles didn't even spare them a glance and issued his next order to the butler.

"Prepare gifts to be sent to the imperial palace, Jean Jacques. For the emperor, Princess Amelia, and Prince Mores! Prepare the most sincere and valuable things possible!"

"Yes, Your Grace."

"And immediately inform all members of our party to exercise caution. While we are staying in Delcross, it's imperative to keep tight-lipped about the Empire or the Imperial Family. Make sure everyone understands what kind of punishment awaits those who talk carelessly."

"Yes, I'll see to it," responded the butler, Jean Jacques, as he respectfully bowed his head before exiting the room.

Eventually, only Charles and a single knight were left in the spacious room.

Finally sitting on the sofa, Charles took a deep breath. The rage that had stretched to the tips of his hair began to gradually subside.

"I can only hope that he's satisfied with this..."

He sighed deeply, rubbing his temples, which had been throbbing painfully.

One of the spies he had sent to observe the situation in the Imperial Court happened to witness the altercation between the knights and Prince Mores from the beginning and reported the details to Charles.

Thanks to that, he was able to quickly settle matters at the dining hall and locate the security team.

From the perspective of the knights who were punished, it was unfortunate.

They had merely been gossiping as they usually did, unaware that a person proficient in Brittanian happened to be nearby!

However, it was fortunate for Charles that the incident had not been made public. The Ravioli family's reputation could have been severely compromised, as negotiations for a secret peacemaking alliance with the Imperial Princess were underway.

Prince Morres' quick wits were both a blessing and a curse for Charles in that regard.

He had understood the situation and tactfully retreated, but not without effectively pressuring Charles.

When asked about the imperial family's well-being in a diplomatic way, such a blatant reply was returned:

—"Is there a reason you're worrying about us in Brittany? I find it interesting that I'm hearing news about the royal family from an outsider."

His review of a currently popular play in Brittany was also noteworthy:

—"A tragedy results when a family can't control themselves properly. It's a story you commonly see, isn't it? It seems the writer has tapped into the public sentiment well."

When Ravioli praised a musician for his excellent fugue compositions, this was the reply:

—"Repeating the same theme can get tiresome. I don't particularly enjoy listening to the same thing over and over. I'd rather just get rid of the musician. How about you?"

Given the hints, Charles couldn't miss the messages behind these comments.

'I know all the nonsense being said about the Imperial Family. Deal with your internal matters before I intervene. Or else, I'll personally get rid of you all.'

Third Prince Morres Klein.

Setting aside his quick judgment and fluency in Brittany language, he already stood out solely for his uncommon, age-inappropriate aura. Why then, was such a prince receiving negative reviews from the imperial family?

"...He must have been hiding his true self all this time."

If that was true, then he was a truly frightening individual.

Charles' eyes became dark with silence.

From now on, he would ignore all baseless rumors about Prince Morres and focus on establishing a close relationship until the line of succession in the empire was secured.

Charles had made up his mind.

Thus, a new friendship was forming, albeit unintentionally and possibly based on misunderstandings, between the two.

Late night. The Heretic Tribunal.

A young priest, who was just about to clock out, discovered a brightly lit prayer room.

Curious, he opened the door and found a familiar face, praying in a dignified posture.

"...Brother Hayes?"

The young priest approached him and asked, "Are you praying at this hour?"

The middle-aged man named Hayes got up and looked at the young priest with tired eyes.

He was a man of few words, despite having served in the Heretic Tribunal for a long time, hardly interacting with anyone.

The young priest had only been dispatched a few days ago and hadn't really had a chance to converse with Hayes before.

"What brings you here at this late hour?"

"I happened to be running late on my way home."

"Is that so?"

Hayes' gaze briefly touched the elongated stick the young priest was carrying and then shifted away.

"Ah, you're the new Brother of the [Seed] I've heard about."

"..."

The young priest's face stiffened.

Because he hadn't received any specific information about Hayes from the other brothers, he scrutinized Hayes with a suspicious look for a moment before bowing his head and reciting an old religious chant from a now-forgotten sect.

He tightly grasped the hilt of the dagger hidden within his robe.

"Bethella."

"Bethella."

As the calm reply came from Brother Hayes, the young priest relaxed his face and smiled.

"So you're a Brother of the forgotten sect. I am Clemence, recently summoned to the Heretic Tribunal. I haven't heard about you, are you a member of [Seed]?"

"Although we're from the same old sect, consider me as good as dead. I'm not a member of [Seed]. You probably haven't heard of me because I can't influence the tasks you're involved in."

"Ah..."

The young priest, Clemence, bowed his head with a somewhat awkward expression.

"So you already know about the mission. Would you like to join us? The Bishop said the season of great harvest is coming."

However, Hayes slowly shook his head.

"Didn't I tell you? I'm as good as dead. All I can do is pray."

"You can still share in the joy of the harvest with us."

"Thank you for the kind offer. However, my prayers have already been answered."

Clemence couldn't hide his sadness. It was as if he were watching a tree slowly wither and die before his eyes.

Yet Hayes himself looked almost relieved as he smiled.

"Now, I am simply waiting quietly for Him to come and command me."

63

After experiencing a series of disturbances in the downtown area, Seongjin's mindset had somewhat changed.

While he still spent most of his time dedicated to training as usual, he now felt a slight inclination to actively keep tabs on the current situation of himself, or in other words, of current Morres.

He still had a sense of discomfort about living as someone else; as Morres.

However, when he listened to the gossip of the Holy Emperor and Amelia, and impulsively acted without thinking about the consequences, it seemed that he had inadvertently developed some affection for this world.

The issue was, given his identity as Morres, it was not easy for him to move about freely.

"If only I had someone capable to act as my hands and feet..." he pondered.

If he were to choose someone close to him, there was Sir Masain.

However, Masain was a former paladin and a member of the imperial family. He was far too prestigious to run errands for him.

On top of that, the man was somewhat inflexible and lacked adaptability.

Even the palace guards in Pearl Palace were tightly scheduled with their duties for palace security and escort missions.

"Maybe I should make more active use of Edith..." he thought.

Recently, as the number of maids and support staff had increased,

Edith had become increasingly idle.

She also had the advantage of being a high-level aura user, so he had no concerns about her wandering around alone.

"... But she's a bit slow and lacks social skills."

So far, there was no improvement in the taste of the tea she made, and her occasional nervous glances made her service less than satisfactory.

Even if he discreetly asked her to investigate something, he would consider himself lucky if she didn't blatantly advertise what she was doing.

"Let's start by sending her on various errands. Her skills will naturally improve with experience," he concluded.

So, Seongjin assigned a simple messenger task to Edith.

"Contact Herna and Gades and tell them we should meet soon."

At that, Edith responded with a somewhat puzzled expression.

"Yes, Your Highness. When would be the meeting? Or would you prefer I go to them directly myself?"

"..."

"Shall I ask them to come to Pearl Palace, or would you prefer to visit them yourself?"

"... Send a letter. Tell them to drop by in the next few days."

"Yes, Your Highness."

Watching Edith obediently leave the room, Seongjin thought,

"Hmm. This feels somewhat inefficient. She seems really cumbersome to utilize..."

[If it's the twins, it's them? The ones you were talking about before?]

The Demon King, who had been listening, perked up at their conversation.

Ah, come to think of it, this guy had never actually seen the twins, had he?

The Demon King had become very curious about them ever since Seongjin told him the twins seemed to know something about him.

-Even Holy Dad, probably wouldn't know either.

- If His Majesty doesn't know, we wouldn't either.

The twins had said so. Therefore, it could be assumed that what the Holy Emperor knew, the twins likely knew as well.

At this point, if he were to investigate someone, targeting these two would be the most efficient. There were also questions to ask about Madame Justine.

Well, whether those cunning kids would readily spill information was another matter.

[Leave all the investigations to me!]

The Demon King boasted unknowingly.

[I can unravel whether they're lying or not, or if they have any secrets, in no time at all!]

"You can't even detect souls anymore, can you? How are you going to discern the truth from those snakes?"

The words were meant to discourage wasting effort, but the demon king flared up.

[I can still detect changes in blood pressure or pulse to some extent and discern lies! I am incredibly useful! I even identified those weird humans from another dimension, didn't I?]

'.....'

The former demon king argued for his usefulness as a lie detector.

It's a bit sad.

There was more to figure out.

Before, the situation was such that they glossed over it, but how on earth could Lee Seongjin speak Brittanian as if it was his mother tongue?

Even after sampling a few Brittanian language books from the Pearl Palace library, he couldn't understand a single word.

When he asked both Masain and Edith, they claimed they had never heard of Morres studying Brittanian before.

At this rate, the basic premise that Lee Seongjin can speak the language because he's using Morres's brain starts to wobble.

[This is truly an unusual case.]

Even the demon king expressed his wonder.

[I, as a high-level soul, can understand any language. But speaking it fluently is another matter.]

The demon king can understand all languages because he reads the thoughts forming in the mind before they're spoken. So, it's more accurate to say he reads thoughts rather than understanding the language.

[It's not difficult for me to have a direct conversation with someone. I read and transmit thoughts. But making vocal cords work like a real human to produce sound or sing is a different story.]

In the previous world, the demon king candidly admitted that he couldn't understand the radio communications between hunter squads.

So understanding and speaking a language he hasn't learned, with just the sound devoid of thoughts, is impossible.

'So what now...?'

How should they investigate this?

Even if they tried to figure out whether Morres had some degree of foreign language skills, not even Edith, his personal maid, knew for sure.

[First, it seems necessary to expose ourselves to other languages of this world.]

The demon king who had been pondering, gave his opinion.

[Even if we assume that Morres secretly studied foreign languages, there would be limits. Let's try listening to all the languages of the continent. If you can understand all of them, then the issue lies with your soul, not Morres's body.]

That sounds reasonable.

'So now we just have to find someone who can rattle off foreign languages in front of us for testing?'

He thought so, but it was surprisingly hard to find people skilled in foreign languages.

A millennium after the empire dominated the continent as a victor.

At present, when almost every nation uses the imperial language as their first language, the imperial citizens didn't pay much attention to learning foreign languages.

Even people working in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs barely knew a few phrases of Brittanian, a high-level language, just to show off their education. That's it.

Is this okay, Delcross Ministry of Foreign Affairs?

Feeling frustrated, Seongjin set aside the issue of the Brittanian language for the time being.

However, clues for resolution are sometimes found in unexpected places.

* * *

It was lunchtime like any other.

"Lady Chloe really sends flowers regularly these days. I'd like to meet her and see what she's like."

Amelia looked and admired the brilliant vase of red and pink flowers.

The flower bouquets that were delivered daily were usually set up by Edith for table decoration. Thanks to that, Amelia, who almost daily visited the Pearl Palace for lunch, was always caught by their sight.

"Wow, she really makes thoughtful choices every time. She must really like you."

Seongjin chuckled.

Like who, exactly?

"Well, it's certainly something to send different flowers every day."

It seemed that Chloe had decided to further solidify her position as a fiancée. Ever since the last tea time, she had been sending a bouquet of flowers with a small card daily.

There were no special words on the cards.

The flowers in the garden are in full bloom, so I wonder how the beautiful palace garden's flowers look.

The weather is quite good today, so it would be a good day to row a boat on the palace pond.

Well, such inconsequential matters.

Today's letter was the same.

"Have you heard about the new play that's the talk of the town on Bertrand Street? They say it has been translated from a script that was very popular in Brittany. I'm a little intrigued due to all the talk."

Seongjin was content with checking his growing vocabulary by reading those cards daily.

But then, having heard the explanation, Amelia cocked her head.

"Isn't that her asking you to invite her to the imperial palace? She also wants to watch a play together and is asking for your opinion."

"Haha, no way. She is going to dump me as soon as she makes her debut."

"How could she..."

Amelia, who looked at Seongjin in disbelief, soon asked with a serious expression.

"This flower is a Ranunculus (Buttercup flower), Morres. It's not a casually chosen flower. Do you know its flower language?"

"Is that important?"

"..."

While Amelia was lost for words, Edith, who was clearing the table, shook her head in disbelief.

"That's why I've been telling you, Your Highness, to at least send a one-line reply. Ignoring the feelings of this poor young lady is tactless, to say the least."

Seongjin unconsciously opened his mouth in surprise.

I never thought I'd hear from Edith that I was tactless!

"People often hide their true feelings in the language of flowers or formalities. But most of the time, they're actually hoping that the other person would naturally understand," Amelia said, gently touching the ranunculus petals.

"She's showing so much care. So, you should also invite her to the palace and treat her respectfully. That's basic courtesy."

"Exactly, Your Highness. Chloe is virtually flawless. From a good family, cute, and intelligent."

Edith chimed in with agreement.

Seongjin felt incredulous.

Do you even remember that I fed Chloe gallbladder juice not long ago?

Even if you forget, that clever kid will never forget until she dies.

Amelia's clear gray eyes sparkled at Edith's words.

"Oh really? Cute and smart as well, you say, Edith?"

"Yes, Your Highness. I heard she's quite distinguished among the children of the Valois family. She's the youngest, yet the most proficient in foreign languages."

For a moment, Seongjin doubted his own ears.

Wait, Edith. What did you say?

"...Chloe is good at foreign languages?"

"Yes, Your Highness."

Edith answered with an unperturbed face, showing no realization of her mistake.

"The Valois family is renowned, you know? They are fluent in the empire's official language and Brittany language. Direct descendants basically know at least three languages."

"...Then why didn't you tell me earlier?"

While I was searching high and low for someone proficient in foreign languages, what were you doing?

"That's because you asked if there was anyone in the palace who is proficient in foreign languages, Your Highness. But the Valois family aren't one of the palace's people, are they?"

What do you mean by that?

Edith, still oblivious, merely tilted her head and repeated the question.

Seongjin subconsciously grabbed the back of his neck.

Ah, my blood pressure's going up.

"...Send a letter to Chloe right away. Tell her to come over if she has time."

"Yes, Your Highness!"

Her enthusiasm in running off to carry out the task was nothing short of remarkable.

I can't tell if I'm ordering a person around or a puppy at this point.

So the next afternoon.

Lady Chloe, adorned with flowers, sat brightly in the reception room of Pearl Palace.

Her curly hair was decorated chaotically with yellow flowers, complementing her light yellow dress.

She must have loaded her personality with all sorts of flower meanings, but to Seongjin, she just looked like a small, yellow chick.

"How could you not send a single reply until now, even if you say you don't feel responsible? That's too much, Your Highness."

Facing the resentful eyes of the petite lady, Seongjin suddenly felt guilty.

"Uh... I apologize for my indifference. Fearing that you'd be talked about, I ended up ignoring your sincerity."

Chloe's eyes narrowed.

"Hmm, is that so? And?"

"I heard from my sister. A lot of meaning and care went into the bouquets you've sent. As you know, my memory isn't perfect, so I didn't understand your intelligent intentions. It's embarrassing."

"And?"

"...The yellow dress really suits you."

"Hehehe. Fine, Your Highness. No need to say things you don't mean."

Chloe spoke as if she was sulking, but the face she made while chewing on snacks seemed to soften.

Of course, she didn't forget to sneak a taste of the tea before sipping.

Upon realizing the tea tasted normal, her face visibly relaxed.

"So, why have you invited me? Surely not just to see my face?"

"Thank you for coming. Actually, I need to ask for your skills."

Being asked a favor after a grand invitation might have made her unhappy, but that was Seongjin's mistake.

Her face lit up the moment he mentioned the need for her language skills.

Seongjin didn't know, but Chloe had a strong desire to be recognized by others.

"Hehehe. You've come to the right person, Your Highness. When it comes to foreign language consultation, none can match the Valois family!"

Rooted in Brittany, the pride the Valois family had in their lineage was immense. They even employed a considerable number of Brittany people as servants, having spent a significant amount on them.

It's even said that everyone in the household formally has to speak

Brittanian.

So Seongjin felt at ease and opened up to her about his problem.

"I think I secretly studied foreign languages before I lost my memory. I need to find out how much I know."

"You studied languages in secret? Including Brittany language?"

Chloe looked at Seongjin with a skeptical face.

"It's not an easy language to study secretly. Plus, generally, you start learning a foreign language by reading textbooks. How can you not recognize the characters at all?"

So, Seongjin gave her a demonstration.

"I don't understand it either, but it's true. I can speak it fluently, but I can't read. Maybe I developed some kind of dyslexia after having a fever. I can't gauge how much I know just by having books, so I would like someone who actually speaks the languages to test me."

And by the time he finished speaking, Chloe was looking at him as if completely enchanted.

"Oh, my! How can you be so..."

".....?"

"Your speech flows so smoothly, yet it's compelling, almost like the eloquence of Arrhc!"

...Why does everyone keep going on about Arrhc? What even is that?

Anyway, thanks to Chloe's sudden increase in affinity, Seongjin was able to directly listen to the languages of various countries across the continent.

In reality, the languages she could speak fluently were limited to the Imperial Common language, Britannian, Orthonese, and Cypriot—just four languages.

However, if simple greetings were included, she could speak as many as nine languages, including those of pagan tribes.

This was surely a talent that was nine times greater than any salary thief in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

And the result of the test.

Astonishingly, Seongjin was able to understand all nine languages that she spoke!

"Wow... this is really unexpected."

After randomly testing phrases in nine different languages, Chloe now looked at Seongjin as if she was looking at a mysterious dragon hiding its true form.

"I'm okay since I just learned foreign phrases to cool my head. But when did you learn so many languages? If you weren't sick with fever..."

She was under a huge misconception.

She thought that Morres, originally proficient in nine languages, had lost most of his abilities due to illness.

Seongjin shook his head.

"Don't tell me... you probably just learned some basic greetings like Chloe (me), right? You can't really speak the languages, can you?"

Exactly as she said. While he could understand the languages, Seongjin was unable to speak them fluently.

He could only speak freely in three languages: the Empire's common language, Brittanian, and the language of Volanta, one of the major tribes among the pagans.

'Furthermore, it seems like I'm not actually "understanding" the [languages], per se...'

He understood what was said, but he couldn't understand the sounds' meanings themselves.

Seongjin was gradually realizing the difference the Demon King had explained.

'I guess the only languages I can really say I understand are those three.'

Though he couldn't test it here, he was certain that unless a person spoke directly in front of him, he wouldn't be able to understand any language other than those three through phone or radio.

In other words, the mechanism by which Seongjin understood languages other than those three was the same as the Demon King understanding thoughts.

'This makes it even more confusing, doesn't it?'

[Hmm....]

Even the Demon King seemed to ponder, holding back words.

Yes, if he could speak and listen in all languages, he would have thought something was happening at the soul level.

However, being able to speak only three languages makes it ambiguous.

Whether it was a phenomenon triggered by Seongjin's soul using some kind of thoughts, or whether it was actually languages Morres had acquired.

Even though learning three languages secretly is plausible, why did Morres study the language of a southern pagan? This leaves a lingering question.

And if it's a phenomenon happening at the soul level, picking and choosing only three languages to understand and speak is very strange.

"If you understand the languages, then it won't be too hard to practice speaking them, Your Highness," Chloe said, misinterpreting Seongjin's stiff expression as disappointment.

According to her, the languages on the continent had many similarities, with similar etymologies and spelling. With appropriate guidance, he could regain his original skills quickly.

Chloe, who is famous as a linguistic prodigy in Valois, might be a little biased, but she felt that 'willpower' and 'effort' could make one proficient in several languages in a short period.

"Um, so, Your Highness..."

"Hm?"

After a moment's hesitation, Chloe's face turned slightly red and she spoke in a soft voice.

"If it's okay with you, may I... help you with your Brittanian studies, just a little?"

"Brittanian?"

"Yes. You speak so fluently that with a little refinement in reading and writing, you'll be perfect!"

"Huh? Well, sure?"

Seongjin wasn't particularly interested in studying the language of such a distant country.

"And after Brittanian, Orthonese would be the next priority. There are many precious literary works in Orthona, you see. I can also help you with that..."

Well, it won't hurt to know, but most of the continent speaks the Empire's common language, so why bother?

Noticing Seongjin's lukewarm response, Chloe's voice rose a notch.

"I can even help you with Cypriot!"

"Um..."

"I know I still have a lot to improve. I will strive to help you with other languages as soon as possible!"

Chloe was completely mistaken.

She thought Seongjin would want to regain his proficiency in nine languages as soon as possible.

But honestly, he didn't need all that.

No, rather than that, are you planning to study more foreign languages now?

"Meeting Your Highness today has been a huge inspiration."

Little Chloe spoke shyly, stroking her flushed cheeks.

"I've been too complacent. When there are people who speak nine languages, I've been showing off with just four. It's really embarrassing."

"....."

She seemed ready to master nine languages immediately.

Seongjin was slightly impressed.

For a mere 12-year-old to have such a desire for self-improvement.

Compared to the bishops who are satisfied with uttering a few phrases in poorly-pronounced Britannian, children like her should be leading the country's diplomatic efforts in the future.

"The more I see Lady Chloe, the more exceptional you seem."

"Hehehe, are those Your Highness's words? But even if it's flattery, it feels good to hear."

Thanks to Chloe's enthusiastic spirit that day, Seongjin reluctantly promised to have a weekly foreign language study session with her.

"What a strange matter. Truly a strange matter....."

Louis, the chief chamberlain, received the report and sank into thought, stroking his chin.

"How could Prince Morres speak languages of foreign countries he's never encountered?"

When he heard about the recent trouble with the Marquis Ravioli's family, he had been skeptical.

The third prince can speak Brittanian like a native? How could that be possible?

"A few years ago, Albert de Valois was briefly in charge of teaching the prince Brittanian," added the young steward.

Indeed, Queen Lizabeth nagged so much that for a while, a Brittanian teacher was assigned to Prince Morres.

However, Louis soon shook his head.

"The second to be expelled after the theology teacher was Albert de Valois."

Every lesson, the prince was so disruptive that the earnest and straight-laced young teacher couldn't bear it for more than a few weeks and ran away.

Considering that the prince skipped so many classes, the actual number of days lessons occurred were few.

"And how did he know the language of the southern heretics? The Volanta tribe?"

Since the young emperor took power, Louis had been involved in all matters, big and small, in the imperial palace.

As far as he knew, not once had anyone who spoke Varsha made contact with the Third Prince Morres.

'What is happening to the prince right now.....'

Although he showed a different demeanor after recovering from a fever, Louis had thought the prince was just maturing.

Recently, between the knights who praise his rapidly improving swordsmanship, and now foreign languages he shouldn't even be familiar with.

'What on Earth is Prince Morres.....'

Suddenly, he remembered the voice of someone he had heard a long time ago.

The voice of Archbishop Benitus, who had been vehemently speaking at the Hall of Reality.

—Your Majesty, how can you stand by and watch this! Listen, chief chamberlain! What possesses Prince Morres is certainly.....

'...Huh!'

Startled, Louis forcefully shook his head.

'No, no! Everything is within His Majesty's will, what blasphemous thoughts am I having!'

He wiped the cold sweat from his forehead with a handkerchief and tried to calm his uneasy heart.

'...Yes, nothing in the world escapes His Majesty's sight.'

So, let's hurry and report to His Majesty. Surely, He will provide some answer.

With that thought, Louis straightened his attire and rushed to Holy Emperor's office.

And a moment later,

The Holy Emperor who actually heard the report simply responded like this:

"Okay."

"....."

The chamberlain found himself at a loss for words.

Despite the seriousness of the report, the Emperor didn't even look up from the documents he was reading. Louis, finding the Emperor's indifference stifling, silently shifted his gaze around.

In the meantime, a few unique documents caught his eye.

They were yellowed papers mixed in with the reviewed documents. Intricate drawings and seemingly disorganized characters indicated that they were documents translated from the script used in the remote South, which primarily uses ideograms.

It appeared that the exorcists had once again brought back something suspicious from deep within the continent.

'...Come to think of it!'

A sudden realization pierced the chamberlain's thoughts, and he opened his mouth in astonishment.

'Isn't it not just Prince Morres?'

Has His Majesty ever personally requested translations of documents before?

He had often seen clerks produce translations for convenience, but he couldn't recall a time those translations had been presented to the Emperor himself.

How about when receiving an envoy from a distant region that doesn't use the empire's common language?

Interpreters might translate His Majesty's words for the envoys, but translating the envoys' words for the Emperor?

Never.

From the Pomeranian language in the far north of the continent to the Varsha language in the far south.

From the ideograms of the deep wilderness to the long-lost ancient scripts.

Someone who understands all that he has not learned was right here!

That means,

"So, Prince Morres is also an Oracle of....."

The chamberlain found himself muttering unconsciously.

Pause.

Only then did the Holy Emperor look up from his papers, quietly staring at Louis.

While his expression was unreadable as always, Louis felt a tinge of reprimand in that gaze and quickly bowed his head.

"I have misspoken. I apologize, Your Majesty."

"....."

The Holy Emperor sighed softly and put down the documents.

"Louis."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"The child only knows what he needs to know. Just leave him be."

Feeling awkward, Louis bowed his head even more deeply.

'I was worried for no reason. Prince Morres is simply His Majesty's son. That's all there is to it.'

The old chamberlain felt an unparalleled sense of relief as he came to that conclusion.

* * *

That evening.

"So, you've decided to study together? That's really wonderful, Morres."

Amelia, who came out of curiosity about Chloe's visit, chuckled as if finding the unexpected outcome amusing.

"Is this really a good thing? I'm not sure if I'm just wasting time on something pointless."

Seongjin grumbled with a round face, to which Amelia spoke seriously,

"It's not like that, Morres. It's quite important to study the languages of the allied nations properly."

While it's recommended to use a common language on formal occasions for convenience, the Holy Emperor's stance is that understanding and preserving the cultures of each nation should be based on their respective languages.

That's why even Prince Logan, the second imperial prince, is said to be highly proficient in Orthonese.

Amelia herself can speak a bit of Brittanian and Rohanian.

"In the case of Owen, your older brother, you might not know well since he left for the southern front shortly after arriving at the palace..."

He probably has a decent command of Varsha, the language used by the heretics, if nothing else.

But what's going on? If even the imperial family studies like this, why are the people of the foreign ministry so lacking?

"Initially, His Majesty, our father, made considerable efforts for the foreign language education of priests and bureaucrats. At that time, the plans were fairly radical and there were frequent conflicts with the Orthodox Church."

The Orthodox Church, which has deeply ingrained ideas about realizing God's kingdom on Earth, probably saw the Emperor's policy as a violation of God's will.

Unfortunately, most of those radical plans were not implemented.

Amelia explained that they probably faced several realistic barriers.

"Actually, if the Imperials don't make an effort to learn deliberately, it's difficult to pick up local languages. Everyone uses the imperial common language in official settings, so there's hardly any opportunity to even encounter local languages."

Amelia was like that as well.

She went to Rohan as a bride, but only learned to speak Rohanian after going through a long, difficult time.

"And that's why Delcross's bishops often suffer disadvantages in diplomatic negotiations."

Seongjin tilted his head.

"Uh? Why is that?"

At his question, Amelia gave a somewhat bitter smile.

Everyone uses the imperial common language in formal diplomatic negotiations.

However, in a sensitive setting where unofficial negotiations are continuously held under the surface, everyone whispers in local languages. The only people left out in such a situation are the bishops of Delcross.

"If people intend to hide something, they usually assume that the other party will notice. Naturally, they should detect it, and if not, they will pay a heavy price."

Amelia's eyes were lost in the far past, seemingly reminiscing.

She thought about how foolish she was back then when noblewomen, grinning sweetly, said incomprehensible things, and she stood there grinning like a fool.

"But you are different," Amelia spoke, looking into the eyes of her younger sibling who resembled her, as if making a wish.

Yes, Morres is different from her.

For some reason, she felt like she was catching a glimpse of the countless possibilities sleeping inside him.

Unlike her, this child would surely easily see through all the deceptions around him, and would eventually overcome any hurdles with his own power.

"You'll certainly become a trustworthy crown prince, Morres."

"Uh...."

Taken aback by her sudden words, Seongjin blinked.

What? A crown prince?

Seongjin had never even thought that he would become something like that.

However, instead of arguing or asking anything, he closed his mouth after a brief moment of hesitation. Because Amelia's smiling face looked somewhat desolate.

That day, the two of them chatted late into the evening in the reception room of Pearl Palace Palace.

And Amelia taught Seongjin a simple sentence in Britannian that she had made up to practice.

"A deep, deep forest, a humble hut built with sincerity, when a small angel descends, that place will be my church."

"What is this? Is it from scriptures or a poem?"

It's a sentence that doesn't make much sense.

As Seongjin repeated the sentence and tilted his head, Amelia burst into a clear laughter.

"Isn't it fun? The word 'Arrhc' appears four times in one sentence!"

65

The Holy Empire of Delcross is a nation governed by the principle of theocracy.

This has resulted in a unique and bizarre structure of governance, distinct from any other nation on the continent. Unlike other nations with separate legislative and judicial branches, Delcross operates quite differently.

[The Holy Council] interprets sacred texts and establishes divine laws.

[The Assembly] discusses national affairs and administers imperial laws.

[The Heresy Tribunal] identifies heretics and condemns devil worshipers.

[The Judiciary] adjudicates and enforces crimes according to imperial law.

Generally, these branches function independently without conflict.

However, occasional clashes occur, such as when something permissible under imperial law is prohibited by the Holy Council. Absurd incidents have happened, like a single crime being prosecuted by both the Heretical Tribunal and Judiciary, leading to double jeopardy.

This system was established when the millennium-old Holy Empire of Delcross was founded. Due to the first Holy Emperor's rule lasting for over 300 years, this system had solidified institutionally.

Despite its shortcomings, Delcross remains a powerful empire thanks to its strong corps of clerics centered around the Holy Emperor, considered the proxy of the divine. Their lifespan may have shortened over generations, but still, no country could challenge Delcross. Thus, Delcross managed to remain the most powerful empire despite having the most inefficient governmental structure.

The reason for this lengthy explanation is because Seongjin is currently summoned to the Theological Academy, strangely enough, as a witness for the case involving [The Black Prophets]. He is accompanied by Katrina, the head of the Paladin Order of St. Aurelion, serving as his legal and religious representative.

Students like Kenneth Digory, initially meant to face the Heretical Tribunal, are now under investigation by the Holy Council due to the absence of appropriate divine laws. The Council's decisions can take anywhere from one to several months due to scriptural interpretation and debate.

Moreover, the upcoming birth celebration, the empire's largest event, is likely to push any formal legal proceedings by at least six months.

For now, lacking sufficient grounds for prosecution, the students are absurdly held in the Judiciary's prison for breaking and entering and property damage.

The investigation itself is happening haphazardly, carried out by an inspector moving between the Judiciary and the Academy.

Seongjin couldn't help but marvel at the absurdity of how the empire had been functioning all this while as he faced the investigator.

"So, Your Highness, you went to the mansion because you received an invitation?"

"Yes, the letter has already been submitted as evidence."

"Did you have any previous acquaintance with these students?"

"Well, as I've already testified, I have no memories from before my illness."

The inspector glanced at Katrina standing behind Seongjin before cautiously asking, "Do you... happen to know anything about the strange entity?"

"The strange entity?"

"Yes, according to Kenneth Digory and other students, it seemed as if you knew something about its nature."

Seongjin feigned innocence.

"I saw it as an obvious demonic being. Why are you calling it a 'strange entity'?"

The investigator made a troubled face, sensing that this audacious prince was feigning ignorance despite possibly knowing something.

Yet, behind the prince stood the knight commander, staring at them, which was intimidating.

After a moment's thought, the investigator sighed and tidied up the papers.

"Well, the investigation ends here. There's not much discrepancy between your statements and those of the students. Thank you for your cooperation, Prince Morres."

Had this been the Heretical Tribunal, things wouldn't have ended so easily. Seongjin stood up, slightly uneasy.

Is this really all right? The judicial system of the Holy Empire?

"Good work, Prince Morres."

Exiting the academy, Katrina, the commander of the Paladin Order of St. Aurelion, spoke to Seongjin with a gentle expression.

Katrina Belphein, the right hand of the Holy Emperor and the person he trusts the most, has been serving him since his youth according to Masain.

The seemingly gentle middle-aged woman with fiery red hair twisted up and wearing silver light armor was somewhat familiar to Seongjin.

When the Emperor collapsed after sealing the passage and destroying the support structure, I remember seeing her next to him, infusing him with divine power.

"As for the matter of Bantra Moss's larva..."

"Yes, don't worry about that. I have already reported to His Imperial Majesty, and the Knights of Saint Terbacchia are conducting an internal investigation."

Seongjin had explained to her about Bantra Moss before coming to the academy. He was worried that if another like him appeared and opened a gate in the capital, it would be problematic.

Of course, if she asked where he got that information, it would be a bit awkward. But Katrina simply listened to Seongjin's explanation and even ordered the investigators to act ignorant.

Could it be because she's the Emperor's right-hand?

Seongjin noticed that she didn't ask him any questions, much like the Holy Emperor.

Whether it was her way of quietly listening or pressuring investigators, she reminded him of the Emperor in many ways.

When they had this conversation, Katrina laughed out loud.

"It seems we think alike. When speaking with His Highness, I always feel that you greatly resemble His Imperial Majesty."

Really? In what way?

When Seongjin looked at her with widened eyes, the corners of her eyes curved beautifully.

"His Majesty was also calm and intelligent in his youth."

"..."

Quietly following her, Francis suddenly coughed.

Yes, I get it, Sir Francis.

Stop with that asthmatic cough!

On their way back to Pearl Palace by carriage, Seongjin told Katrina that he wanted to visit the tribunal. He wanted to meet Jonathan McAlpin, who was imprisoned.

He had more questions about Morres' past actions and the funds said to be provided by [The Black Prophets].

"Hmm..."

After a brief moment of contemplation, Katrina nodded.

"Well, if it's the tribunal, it should be fine. They are entirely separate from the Heretical Tribunal. They are simply holding the students for convenience and have no interest in this case."

Just then, the carriage arrived at the palace.

She opened the door and turned to her aide.

"I have to report to His Imperial Majesty, so I'll take my leave here. Captain Francis, could you look after His Highness?"

"Yes, Commander. Don't worry! I will take responsibility for His Highness until the end!"

The tall knight responded with an unspoken smile.

Seongjin was puzzled.

Francis. You're like a guard dog ready to bite anyone but when it comes to the commander, you're entirely different. Why?

"As always, you're dependable, Captain Francis."

Turning towards Seongjin, Katrina continued, "An inquisitor from Saint Terbacchia will visit Pearl Palace soon. Don't worry, they just want some advice. If you provide them with information about the 'mamul' (monsters), it will greatly assist their work."

Here, "monsters" is the term that Seongjin used as opposed to the official terms like 'foreign entities' or 'abomination'.

The unconditional trust she was showing in his words puzzled him.

Unable to guess the reason for this unequivocal trust, Seongjin wore a tentative expression. She gracefully bowed, still wearing a friendly smile.

"Then, I shall take my leave now, Your Highness."

The door of the carriage closed, and her figure disappeared beyond the window.

Francis's face, which had been softly smiling, suddenly changed. His already sharp eyes turned stern, and his lips tightened as if he had become a completely different person in an instant.

What is this guy? Is he bipolar?

"No, shouldn't you go back to Pearl Palace right now to undergo life-or-death training? Why are you suddenly going to the courthouse, huh?"

Hmm, such audacity in his words, even in the presence of the prince.

Francis as usual, I see.

"I need to meet Jonathan McAlpin."

"Then why do you need to meet that man? We've already subtly defused the issue about the sponsorship funds. Is there really a need to visit the courthouse and acknowledge your prior relationship?"

I can't say I'm not worried about that part, but the important thing is that I've already secured Jonathan McAlpin's testimony.

Even previously, Sir Masain searched everywhere from Pearl Palace to the main palace's ledger, but couldn't find any sponsorship records. There's absolutely no evidence to implicate Mores.

So, before the trial starts, wouldn't it be better to gather as much information as possible from Jonathan McAlpin? It'd be good to make him talk if possible.

But Francis's complaints did not cease.

"Ah, seriously! Do you know how long I counted the days to see the respected Commander again during my last leave?"

"....."

"And now that she, Commander, has finally appeared, what is this? I'm flooded with piled-up work, and she, the Commander, are still sticking by His Majesty with unnecessary worries!"

Is this guy really whining about the Emperor stealing the Commander from him?

Seongjin put on a calm smile.

I tried to be patient, but he's really too noisy.

"Francis, I didn't want to go this far but."

Francis's eyes narrowed sharply over his glasses.

However, Seongjin had an ace up his sleeve.

"I'll tattle."

".....?"

"I'll tell Dame Katrina that Sir Francis has been nagging me on the way."

".....!"

Francis unknowingly opened his mouth wide and dumbfoundedly stared at Seongjin.

Why? You don't think I can do it?

Even if you don't know, wouldn't Commander Katrina take my side?

[Wow, you're so childish. I've never seen anyone like you in all my years.]

The Demon King, who usually keeps his mouth shut when a clergyman is around, finally said something.

What? Why? What? As long as it works, it's fine, isn't it?

Indeed, the 'I'll tattle' strategy worked wonders.

Francis looked dumbfounded for a moment before clamping his mouth shut like a clam.

How's that? I've found this barking dog's weak point!

Seongjin was exuberant, but the Demon King just sighed.

"Who's stranger here? The guy who threatens to tattle, or the guy who's influenced by it?"

The carriage moved on, rattling towards the courthouse in silence.

Upon arriving at the court, everything went smoothly. After stating the purpose of their visit and confirming their identities, they were immediately guided to the prison.

They said they didn't care much about students or minor offenders; indeed, the visitation process was lax.

But once Seongjin visited the prison, he swallowed a gasp at the unexpected sight. The imprisoned students were sitting on the cold stone floor, wrapping their heads and flipping through books—a bizarre scene.

It would take at least six months after the Council's meeting for the trial to commence.

Many of the Council members were also professors at the Academy, and they couldn't stand the sight of students enjoying a leisurely incarceration without studying for several months.

To make matters worse, the Council was convened during the Academy's midterm exam period.

The professors thought this:

—"You all have to submit assignments and take exams, right?"

So, an absurd situation unfolded where all the [Black Prophets] were writing reports in prison.

"Um..."

Kenneth Diggory, who had a fractured occipital bone, was fortunately awake after receiving treatment from the priests. Being in his graduation year, he had to write a thesis and was engrossed in thick textbooks, looking rather pale.

Aside from him, the others showed minor bruises on their faces. It seemed they had undergone fairly severe interrogation while initially incarcerated in the heretical tribunal.

It was just one day until they were transferred to the tribunal, and the young students, whose charges were not even confirmed yet, had been beaten up. It seemed the heretical tribunal was a terrifying place indeed.

Among them, Ashley Betcher, who seemed moody, and Jonathan McAlpin, who lacked the backing of a high-ranking clergy, appeared to be in worse shape. They were moaning in agony in a corner of the cell without even opening a book.

Did they get beaten up a lot?

"Why are those two like that? Is it okay to leave them like this?"

When he asked the guard, he shrugged.

"Well, there wasn't anything particularly strange when they came in yesterday?"

What do you mean by that? They are dying.

"Sir Francis."

At his call, Francis led the guard and opened the prison door.

They were students personally protected by the Holy Emperor himself. If they were to fall critically ill during their time in the heretical tribunal, it would create a significant issue.

The Prophets, who were busy writing their reports, only then moved aside to make room.

Francis knelt and cautiously examined the two individuals. For a moment, he touched their foreheads with his divinely enveloped hands and even lifted their clothes here and there.

After some time, Francis, who looked a little serious, said to Seongjin,

"Your Highness, we need to isolate the students and call the doctors."

Is their condition that bad?

However, the following words from him not only made the students but also the guards turn pale.

"It seems to be a plague."

66

An outbreak of a mysterious plague has occurred among the prisoners transferred from the Heretic Tribunal!

– If they were held with other prisoners in the Heretic Tribunal's jail...

– Most of those prisoners are demon worshipers! It might be a disease brought by the demons!

The Tribunal was thrown into chaos in no time.

"Summon the Kumah priests, sprinkle the holy water!" The guards, who were in a frenzy, were only pacified after Francis, the Paladin, repeatedly explained that he didn't sense any [Magi], the sign of a demon.

Somehow, Ashley Betcher and Jonathan McAlpin ended up quarantined in an isolated, empty cell.

The fact that the other students with them weren't indiscriminately isolated was thanks to their connections with high-ranking priests.

Seongjin was promptly expelled from the Tribunal premises.

Francis, who had unceremoniously shoved him out of the building before he even knew what was going on, drove the final nail in the coffin.

"I have contacted the Pearl Palace. Masain will be coming to pick you up soon. For now, stay put!"

Adding that he would remain inside the building as a precaution against the possible spread of the plague until the arrival of medical experts, Francis slammed the door shut.

'Ah, suddenly things have gotten complicated...'

Seongjin broke into a cold sweat.

Did he make a mistake coming to the Tribunal and getting Francis involved? After all, he was the first to closely examine the patients. What if the disease spreads?

[Should I go in and take a closer look?]

Before Seongjin could answer, the presence of the Demon King disappeared with a 'poof'. It was as if he was thrilled about something.

"Umm..."

Seongjin looked at the Tribunal's closed gates for a moment, then staggered over to the nearby garden and slumped down dejectedly.

The Emperor had warned him not to cause trouble.

Well, it's not his fault, of course.

But still, will Sir Masain not be furious?

...It's a bit depressing.

Seongjin buried his head between his knees and closed his eyes.

After a while, the guards at the entrance of the Tribunal glanced over at the crouching prince. They felt a strange sensation as if the grass around the prince was shaking even though there was no wind.

Is it an illusion?

As they tilted their heads, the distant sound of horse hooves approached rapidly.

The sound quickly closed the distance, and they saw a burly knight charging toward the Tribunal at a storm-like pace.

"Sir Masain!"

The guards stood at attention, tensing their bodies.

But before his horse even came to a stop, Masain leapt down and almost ignored their salutes. He immediately walked over to the slumped Prince Morres.

His face looked as if he was about to explode with fury.

However, as he took each step closer to the prince, his expression changed bizarrely, eventually settling into one of incredulity.

Finally, Masain stood in front of him and spoke.

"...Are you meditating in a situation like this?"

"Ah, Sir Masain."

Seongjin, who had been lost in thought, finally looked up at Masain.

"I just created a fifth floor in my mental state."

"..."

"Turns out, when you have the will, even negative emotions can serve as a catalyst for growth."

Masain furrowed his brows.

"What is that supposed to mean?"

What do you mean? It means that when you're feeling down, training is the best cure.

Masain shook his head in disbelief.

"Anyway, Your Highness has a real knack for getting caught up in incidents. Has it been that long since you left Pearl Palace, and now it's a plague, a plague! One can't take their eyes off you for a moment."

What does this guy see me as?

I'm not the one who spread the plague.

"Isn't it better that we found out quickly thanks to me? If it weren't for me, you would've only realized it after the plague had spread throughout the court."

"Yes, yes. How could you not know better? Are you feeling okay? You didn't go near any patients, did you?"

His initial ominous demeanor had faded significantly.

So Sir Masain loses his temper quickly but cools down just as fast. Good to know.

Seongjin dusted off his clothes and stood up, just as a group of people in strange attire were seen approaching the court.

They wore thick ecclesiastical garments dyed in a deep bronze, long leather gloves extending to the elbows, and thick leather masks completely covering their noses and mouths.

It seemed a bit makeshift, but they did look properly equipped.

With synchronized footsteps, they approached, each holding some kind of spray device.

"These are the plague doctors of Lyora," said Masain, following Seongjin's gaze.

"The only sect formally recognized as non-heretical by the Delcross Church."

Most sects following the teachings of various schools were not free from the controversies of heresy, largely because they openly challenged the Church's stance that plagues were either divine punishment or demonic curses.

However, the Lyora sect was more religiously friendly, arguing that plagues are impurities that need to be purified and cured.

Their treatment methods included the use of incense and perfumes to dispel the foul smell from patients and bloodletting to purify them. This approach was highly in line with the Church's preference.

As a result, the Lyora sect had the most freedom to operate within Delcross, even having a small department set up for them within the administration.

If a plague broke out in the capital, this department would immediately dispatch the plague doctors.

As the bronze-colored plague doctors got closer, Seongjin instinctively covered his nose due to the strong smell of medicinal herbs and perfumes.

One of the doctors, a petite figure likely female, approached Seongjin's party. Her face mostly concealed by a large hat and leather mask, her round eyes peeked out as she spoke through her muffling mask.

"We will spray some scent for plague prevention."

Before they could comprehend her words, she aimed a large spray device at Seongjin and Masain, releasing an overpowering rose fragrance.

Even a good smell can be too much. Seongjin barely held back a retch.

"Plagues spread through smells. Removing foul odors can prevent the disease."

"...Thank you."

Frowning, Masain replied. The plague doctor nodded briefly and returned to the court.

"I really want to wash this off. I want to go back to Pearl Palace."

Knowing Earth's medical knowledge, Seongjin was aware that fragrances wouldn't drive away diseases. Masain seemed to share the sentiment, nodding in agreement.

"Medical staff and priests are on standby at Pearl Palace. A carriage will arrive soon, so please get examined there first."

Francis, who had also been doused in perfume, walked out from the court a little later, his expression just as disgruntled.

"I never knew lavender could smell so repulsive."

It seems that if it can drive away foul odors, the type of scent doesn't matter. Each plague doctor appears to carry their preferred perfume.

"How are Ashley and Jonathan?"

Francis shrugged his shoulders.

"The situation doesn't look good. The body temperature keeps dropping, and there's no consciousness. Moreover, the plague doctors have arrived. It seems like there's little hope left."

What? Isn't it usually the opposite? Shouldn't the prognosis be more positive with doctors present?

"They plan to drain all the 'bad blood' from those patients. Their condition is already critical, and this will result in massive blood loss."

"Um..."

Wait. Shouldn't we stop this?

"Francis, don't scare us unnecessarily. These people have extensive experience in treating patients; they will know the limits."

Noticing Seongjin's expression changing, Masain cautioned him. It seemed like he was worried Seongjin might barge in right away.

However, Francis scoffed.

"Even in the manpower-starved southern front, the only people unwelcome are those Lyora Plague Doctors. They are known as the doctors of death."

"Doctors of death? That's a bit harsh, isn't it?"

"Is it? You must've heard the rumors from the frontlines, right? How many patients under their care have actually survived..."

"In front of His Highness! Don't disparage the Plague Guild recognized by the Orthodox Church based on unverified rumors."

While the two were at an impasse, Seongjin abruptly asked a question.

"What's the reputation of the Adelheid Plague Guild?"

It was a sudden curiosity.

One of the organizations that Morres is supporting is the Adelheid Plague Guild. If they are as dubious as the Lyora Plague Guild, he thought of immediately cutting off their funds.

Masain's face stiffened at this.

"They are suspected heretics, Your Highness."

However, Francis had a slightly different opinion.

"They are quite skilled pharmacists. Mostly young people, they focus on efficiency and are cautious enough to only proceed with verified treatments. Recently, they are probably the most preferred in the front lines. At least they don't actively kill their patients."

Hmm, is that so?

As Seongjin looked convinced, Masain warned, "As a paladin blessed by His Divine Grace, be cautious with your remarks."

"Why? I'm just stating the facts. I don't understand why the Orthodox Church would back a sect like Lyora over Adelheid."

"Francis!"

Just as the atmosphere was turning tense, a carriage sent from the Pearl Palace arrived. As they approached, the coachman nervously tightened his grip on the reins.

Lyora Plague Guild, these quacks. What a nuisance.

The three of them sat at a distance from each other in the carriage and returned to Pearl Palace.

After arriving at Pearl Palace, Seongjin took a bath and was rolling around in bed early.

He had built up the 5th floor in haste, so he was looking forward to afternoon training. However, physician Ninnias who had treated him recommended that he rest for today just in case.

But he couldn't stay disappointed for long. The news from the demon king who had inspected the Judiciary was somewhat unsettling.

'Parasites?'

[Parasites! They are small, but they are still demons. In the Sigurd 34th District, they would be similar to parasitic wasps.]

According to the demon king, he faintly sensed the aura of demons from the two collapsed people. Upon closer inspection, they had a small egg of a demon the size of a fingernail inside their bodies.

Called [Lophellum], it was a parasite from Gehenna, a worthless demon that parasitizes the eggs of certain insect-like demons.

'But I haven't seen such a thing in decades.'

[It doesn't lay its eggs in humans, so it doesn't come near humans. It only parasitizes the eggs of a few specific insect-like demons.]

That's why even the demon king was initially skeptical.

'Are you sure you didn't mistake it?'

[Hey! I am the demon king who once ruled over everything in Gehenna! There's nothing about the demons of Gehenna that I don't know!]

If that's the case, it's strange.

Why would the eggs of a demon that doesn't lay its eggs in humans be inside Ashley and Jonathan?

Moreover, considering the Bantra Moss incident, why do demons from Gehenna keep appearing?

However, the demon king didn't seem to find it particularly strange.

[Just as humans don't only exist in the Sigurd 34th District, there's no rule saying Gehenna's monsters only exist in Gehenna.]

"Exactly."

[Furthermore, it might be related to the previous incident. Lophellum are fond of Bantra Moss eggs.]

"So, you're saying the two people who were already near the infected Bantra larvae could have been accidentally infected as well?"

But I thought Lophellum doesn't lay eggs in humans?

Can an egg just enter a human body if it's nearby?

Is there a possibility that someone deliberately inserted the egg into the body?

[If someone really wanted to do that, it's not impossible. But why? After all, Lophellum eggs can't hatch and will die unless they're in another monster's egg.]

"Originally, the human body temperature was too high for parasitic monsters to survive. The eggs inside Ashley and Jonathan were almost dead."

"So, there won't be an immediate death due to parasitic infection?"

"As long as they aren't excessively drained by Lyora's doctors."

Feeling somewhat relieved, the Demon King suddenly whispered to Seongjin.

[Seongjin.]

"Huh?"

[Someone has sneaked into Pearl Palace.]

"What?"

I didn't sense any presence?

[Just one person. They're coming straight to this room.]

At those words, Seongjin sharply heightened his senses.

Indeed, although faint, he could definitely feel an unfamiliar presence within Pearl Palace.

'...They got this close and I didn't notice?'

Seongjin quickly got up from the bed and picked up the Nutcracker he had set aside. If someone sneaked in, their intentions couldn't be good.

'Even though I was distracted, why didn't the guarding knights or mages notice?'

[They're very good at hiding their presence. I see their soul coming, that's how I know.]

Indeed, had it not been for the Demon King's warning, Seongjin himself would have had a hard time detecting them. This intruder was skillful enough to evade the notice of Seongjin, who was one of humanity's last hunters.

[They're coming to the balcony!]

Swoosh. Seongjin drew his Nutcracker and aimed at the balcony.

Sure enough, a person in dark clothing suddenly dropped down from the upper floor. They bypassed the second floor and entered from the relatively lax third floor directly into Seongjin's room.

The uninvited guest in black clothing and a mask cautiously opened the window, and upon locking eyes with Seongjin holding his weapon, seemed surprised.

"Huh? I took extra caution because the knight commander is here, but I didn't expect the prince himself to notice me."

The voice was slightly husky, a woman's voice. There was no particular hostility in her voice.

"Don't worry, I'm not an enemy."

She raised her hands to show she was unarmed and slowly approached, stopping just a step outside Seongjin's sword reach.

"Your argument isn't very convincing with that mask on."

"Haha, fair point."

She laughed cheerfully and started to take off her mask.

Her long, wavy black hair and dark skin soon revealed her face. Her white teeth shone exceptionally bright in the darkness.

"Hello, Prince. I brought Bremen's reply from the Monkey Watchtower."

Monkey Watchtower.

A pub that sells cheap dark beer, located prominently in front of a square with an elegant fountain.

When Seongjin had visited the place to give his regards for the closure ceremony a while ago, he had been led by the twins Herna and Gades to greet the owner Bremen.

"I've received your greetings. I'll return the favor soon."

Little did he know that the return greeting would come across the walls of the imperial palace.

A woman clad in black stealth attire introduced herself as [Dasha].

She looked entirely different from the people of Delcross that Seongjin usually encountered. She was a beauty with deep brown skin and long, wavy black hair.

Her emerald eyes, which sometimes appear teal depending on the light, twinkled playfully.

"Hmm? Is this your first time seeing a Varsha person? I'm not a heretic."

Sitting on the sofa with her long legs crossed, Dasha revealed her white teeth as she laughed. She had a smile that somehow looked refreshing.

'Varsha people' refers to a term collectively describing the ethnic groups living in the southern part of the continent.

They were divided into several smaller tribes, each with its own language and unique appearance. However, people from the central continent often could not differentiate these subtle distinctions and would simply call anyone with darker skin a Varsha person.

Of course, among the heretics, there were also people with white skin like those from the central continent, and there were people like Dasha who had dark skin but were born and raised in the central continent. Strictly speaking, Dasha, who was born in Delcross, was not a Varsha person.

Nevertheless, due to her unique and rarely seen appearance, she would always be categorized as a 'Varsha person' by others.

"So, you came from Monkey Watchtower wearing that stealth attire? Are you out collecting debts or something?"

"Hahaha. I wish. Monkey Watchtower is no ordinary pub, Your Highness."

According to Dasha, that small pub was actually a direct intelligence agency under the holy emperor.

It is a department that acquires and processes fairly high-level information within the Central Intelligence Agency and performs functions of a personal secretary's office depending on the user's request.

A secret agency exclusive to the imperial family that even the assembly and administration were not aware of.

Coming to pay respects to Monkey Watchtower means requesting to actively use the organization, and asking to place an informant.

Those darn twins. Shouldn't they have explained this beforehand?

"I should have given you the answer earlier, but it took some time to assign a dedicated informant. As you know, the Pearl Palace is a bit of a special place..."

Even though the visitor restrictions had recently been lifted, Pearl Palace was still a place where the emperor strictly controlled the entry of people. Having someone with stealth abilities enter was a security-related issue, thus making approval even more stringent.

Moreover, a dedicated intelligence agent needs to be able to connect with the target without arousing suspicion, and Pearl Palace is much more difficult in that regard compared to the main palace.

There are resident knights with verified capabilities from various orders and even the dedicated maids possess considerable aura usage. So, finding someone capable of infiltrating the palace seamlessly isn't easy.

In other words, Dasha was among the top agents in Monkey Watchtower's network of informants.

"What an honor it is to have such a talented person as my personal informant."

"Don't you have any suspicions? If it were me, I would start with suspicion if someone suddenly showed up late at night to say something like this."

"Well, it's not that I haven't considered the possibility.

However, for now, Seongjin's intuition did not perceive any danger signals from her.

If you think about it, her infiltration skills are remarkable. It was only due to the Demon King that Seongjin was able to notice her presence at all. Given Seongjin's abilities, it's notable that he couldn't easily detect her.

If she wanted, she could easily wipe out someone like Morres. What's the point of a well-crafted lie? It's a waste of energy considering Morres' position. Behind Morres is the Holy Emperor. An incredibly fearsome person whose limits are unknown. Based on his previous encounters, the Emperor seems to hold Morres in high regard. Could the person in front of him really handle the fallout if she deceived Morres?

Moreover, on our side, we have an excellent lie detector.

[No change in pulse. Blood pressure normal. Breathing normal. Very likely to be telling the truth.]

Although the Demon King can't use abilities that directly interfere with the soul since the Holy Emperor's barrier has overridden it, this is still pretty useful.

[Heh heh heh.]

Feeling the demon king laugh proudly inside his mind, Seongjin clicked his tongue inwardly.

Even though he was a king of a dimension, now he feels fulfilled just being this useful.

Anyway, since he decided to trust and use her, Seongjin decided to get along with Dasha without any needless probes.

He had been troubled by not having any reliable subordinates lately; anyone would be better than Edith.

"Why would I have reservations about someone coming to help me? Besides, Dasha gives off a trustworthy vibe. I also think you're quite capable and have a good impression."

Seongjin smiled and gave a bit of lip service.

"Oh my?"

Dasha's eyes twinkled.

"It seems you have no prejudice against people from Varsha."

"Why would I be prejudiced against someone who came to help me? You're competent and also have a good personality."

Her smiling face was pleasant, and she was also beautiful.

Dasha's eyes widened as if hearing something unexpected, and then she burst into laughter.

"Ha ha. To be honest, I was also a bit surprised when I first saw you. Contrary to the rumors, you're astute and charismatic, and I think it'll be rewarding to serve you. Moreover..."

"Moreover?"

"You have a very pleasant scent. It smells faintly like roses."

Damn those Lyora Plague doctors!

Regardless, his first encounter with Dasha was satisfactory. She seemed to think that their trust relationship had been successfully formed and shared various unasked-for pieces of information.

For example, she knew quite a bit about the recent activities of the Brittanians with whom Seongjin had previously clashed.

"Those guys were all dragged back to Brittany?"

"Yes, Your Highness. Young master Ravioli made a firm decision. The knights who were taken are likely to face severe punishments in their homeland. They say he didn't forget to command their party to strictly keep their mouths shut as a lesson."

"That's more than I expected."

Seongjin thought of young marquis Ravioli, with a bobbed hairstyle and round cheeks.

Same goes for Chloe, but it seems like all these kids from Brittany have something that's slightly off.

Dasha also informed him about the survival of Ashley and Jonathan, who had fallen into the hands of Lyora's swindlers.

"So far, their blood pressure hasn't dropped to dangerous levels due to bloodletting treatments. I will closely monitor their condition, and if it looks like they're losing too much blood, I will notify you immediately."

Seongjin upgraded his assessment of Dasha inwardly by a notch.

'...She's really competent, isn't she?'

Was it her intelligence or knack for understanding what he needed? She always seemed to scratch exactly where he itched.

If this continues and trust builds up, Seongjin thought it might be worth asking her to investigate the organizations that Morres had previously sponsored. It's a sensitive area, but there's certainly a limit to what Seongjin can do on his own.

"Ah, and Dasha, I have a question. Is it possible to share information I have with others who use the Monkey Watchtower in reverse?"

While it was good to receive various information and have minor tasks handled on his behalf, what Seongjin was curious about was the opposite. Could he also relay his information to the Holy Emperor?

Fortunately, Dasha confirmed that it was possible.

"If you wish, I can even send your New Year's greetings to each other. After all, the only people we serve are His Majesty Holy Emperor, the princes and princesses."

Good. Seongjin nodded.

"Then Dasha, this is a message I'm sending to my father."

The moment the Holy Emperor was mentioned, Dasha's face stiffened with seriousness.

"The epidemic arising from the judiciary is not a simple illness, but due to parasitic eggs from a monster. These creatures don't naturally implant their eggs into humans, so I suspect someone deliberately planted them. Further multidirectional investigation is needed to guess their purpose, given that the parasite won't wake up just by being implanted. That's all."

Well, this sort of information can't be casually passed on through servants.

Dasha's face showed a momentary confusion due to the unexpected flood of serious information.

"...May I know the source of this information?"

"I can't say."

I'm sure His Majesty wouldn't be curious. If Katrina, who is the Emperor's right hand, or the Emperor himself, wanted to ask something, they would have done so already.

Dasha looked slightly confused but quickly regained her composure and gave a slight nod.

Her role was not to judge the truth of the message, but to relay it.

"Then, I will visit you again tomorrow evening, Your Highness."

She walked toward the balcony window and, just like when she arrived, vanished into thin air. Even though he was watching closely, Seongjin could hardly feel her leaving. Truly an impressive individual.

Seongjin turned his gaze to the dark window for a moment after Dasha's disappearance, then turned back to his bed.

Well, he had done all he could.

I wonder how my father, His Majesty the Holy Emperor, will respond.

"Your Highness, I'm really struggling because of Sir Masain!"

It was another regular morning.

Just as he finished his meditation and was about to eat a walnut, Dame Maria, who was beside him, began to complain.

While Seongjin spent each day satisfied with diligent training, the resident knights were increasingly dissatisfied due to changes in work conditions caused by Sir Masain.

The number of knights had increased more than anticipated, and the work shifts had become incredibly tight. Procedures, which were somewhat lax before, had also been readjusted to conform with the standards of the Imperial Guard at the main palace.

As a result, from shift changes to basic training, nothing was easy anymore.

Because of this, the resident knights these days had stormy expressions on their faces.

If working at the Pear Palace used to be a cushy job that also paid well, now it had become a demanding post to the point that people were saying the money was well-earned.

So, whenever Knight Commander Masain was momentarily away, the resident knights would constantly grumble and complain to Seongjin.

Just like right now.

"But being on a dispatch mission, it's honestly a bit more comfortable than being with the main force, isn't it?"

"Sob! If only I didn't have the bar tabs piled up this month...!"

"I really need to quit drinking right away; it's so exhausting these days!"

Maria and Kurt, who were quietly doing personal training nearby, sighed with a gloomy expression.

Although they belonged to different Knight Divisions — the 1st and 2nd, respectively — they had been longtime drinking buddies since their squire days.

They had volunteered for the well-paying dispatch duty at the Pearl Palace, thinking they'd earn some extra money for drinks.

"Well, I know a great bar where the drinks are pretty cheap. They only serve dark beer, though..."

"It's not just about money; I'm too tired to even go out drinking after work these days!"

"Could you please persuade Knight Commander Masain? Huh?"

Seongjin felt a bit awkward.

If Masain was being unreasonable with the knights, that would be one thing, but he was operating according to the main palace guard manual, so there wasn't much to say. In fact, these guys had been having it too easy until now.

On top of that, they were whining to the person who did the most work and training among the resident knights. How could he persuade anyone?

"Alright, hang in there. I'll find time to treat you to a good drink."

To the earnest appeals of the resident knights, Seongjin was comforting them in such a manner.

Thud.

Just then, a noise like a falling scabbard echoed from the side.

"...?"

When Seongjin and the resident knights turned around in unison, they saw a knight sprawled out in the corner of the training ground. It was Haven, who had looked somewhat off since the morning.

"What's wrong with him?"

"Did he drink too much last night?"

Haven had just returned from vacation. He had apparently spent the last day of his vacation drinking late into the night.

Knights who were standing nearby carelessly approached to shake him.

"Why did you come back from vacation like this?"

"Hey, get up. If you're feeling unwell, take sick leave."

As they were checking on him, one of the knights suddenly exclaimed in alarm.

"Something's wrong with him! His body is really cold!"

"I see some kind of rash..."

"Could it... be the plague?"

"It's the plague!"

Panic broke out instantly. They had heard rumors about the outbreak of a disease in the judiciary just the day before.

The knights hastily retreated from Haven, whose symptoms included low body temperature, rash, and impaired consciousness.

'Could it be?'

[Yes, it's the Lophellum egg.]

The Demon King answered.

[The egg is already dead, but I don't know why he's in that condition.]

Noting the tense atmosphere, Seongjin paused as he was about to approach Haven. The knights were in an excessive state of turmoil due to the sudden fear of the plague.

'First, I need to calm the situation...'

It seemed best to leave Haven's medical care to the physicians and first calm down the panicking knights to avoid an unfortunate situation.

So, he quickly gave orders to the two most experienced individuals there.

"Sir Kurt, contact Sir Masain immediately, and have the Dr. Ninnias, the physicians and priests on standby at the knight's quarters."

Kurt looked at Seongjin with a strange expression, but nodded respectfully and left. He also managed to drag along a few trembling knights with him.

"Dame Maria, control the other knights. This is not the plague, so stop panicking and hold your positions."

Maria looked at the collapsed Haven and then back at Seongjin. However, as soon as Seongjin calmly met her gaze, she visibly regained her composure.

She clenched her fist tightly to control her shaking hand and turned around to shout at the knights running all over the place with a booming voice.

"Everyone, calm down! This is not a plague, so stop your baseless speculations! Are you really the proud Royal Guards of Delcross if you lose your cool over something like this!"

As Maria gathered and calmed down the knights, Seongjin approached Haven. Then he gave instructions to the remaining knights who were still frozen nearby.

"For now, let's move Sir Haven to his quarters."

"For now, let's move Sir Haven to his quarters."

At Seongjin's words, one of the knights asked with an anxious face.

"Shouldn't we wait as is until the plague doctor comes? What if we accidentally spread the disease...?"

Once the plague doctor starts drawing blood, Haven might actually die.

Seongjin shook his head, "It's not the plague. It's a disease I know."

"How can we believe you?"

Another knight standing beside them, a young one with a long scar on his forehead, asked skeptically. Although Seongjin had gotten close to most of the resident knights recently, this young knight had always cast him sidelong glances.

"If Your Highness says so but it turns out to be the plague, we're the ones who will die, right?"

"..."

As insolent as the young knight's attitude was, he wasn't entirely wrong.

It would be strange to easily believe a young prince, notorious for being a good-for-nothing, when he claims, without any medical knowledge, that it's not the plague.

Seongjin didn't answer and gently grasped Haven's fallen arm.

Instantly, the surrounding knights gasped.

Regardless, Seongjin hoisted Haven's arm over his shoulder and helped him sit up. Haven was rather small, and Seongjin had pumped Aura into his muscles, so lifting him wasn't much of a challenge even with his young body.

Seongjin then looked at the surrounding knights, "Well, I'll take half the responsibility, you guys gamble on the other half. He's a comrade, right?"

"..."

The knights glanced at each other in silence.

Surprisingly, the first person to step forward was the young knight who had questioned him. The young knight silently grabbed Haven's other arm and helped Seongjin lift him up.

The two of them started to move towards the knights' quarters, supporting Haven between them.

'I thought he was a hard-headed guy, but it seems he still knows the meaning of loyalty,' Seongjin thought. He glanced over, and the young knight looked unhappy, his brow furrowed as he stared straight ahead.

"What unit are you from? How long have you been stationed at the Pearl Palace?"

"...Why? Will you remember if I tell you?"

"..."

'What's this guy's problem? Doesn't he know how to socialize?'

The atmosphere grew tense, but fortunately, they didn't have far to go. Knight Kurt had come prepared with a carriage.

The young knight disappeared without even saying goodbye as soon as he handed Haven over to the doctor. Truly an unfriendly character.

Soon, Haven was quickly moved to the accommodation on the carriage.

"Since when has he been in this condition?" Ninnias, the doctor, asked. As always, his nose was red, as if he'd just had a drink.

"He was fine until yesterday afternoon," answered Kurt.

Ninnias promptly examined Haven. He checked his pulse, looked inside his mouth, and even flipped his eyelids.

Of course, Ninnias's severe hypochondria made one doubt if he was checking the pulse accurately...

'Didn't this guy accuse the Lyora School of being traitors before?'

Seongjin suddenly remembered that Ninnias didn't seem to like the Lyora School. His trust in the doctor rose dramatically!

Unaware of Seongjin's thoughts, Ninnias, after a thorough examination, finally spoke to the group.

"Indeed, as the Prince said, this does not look like a commonly known plague."

"A plague...it's not?"

Sir Kurt asked, seemingly relieved.

"Probably not. Most plagues initially come with a fever, but this one, on the other hand..."

His body temperature is dropping.

"Of course, as time passes and the illness worsens, one's pulse weakens and body temperature drops like this, but it hasn't been long since the symptoms appeared in him."

"So Doctor Ninnias, if it's not a plague, what could be affecting him?"

At Sir Kurt's question, Doctor Ninnias wiped the sweat off his forehead with a somewhat troubled expression.

"It's too early to say. We'll have to keep an eye on his condition for now..."

And then he subtly glanced at Seongjin, who stood quietly with his arms crossed, listening to the conversation.

It seemed like he was curious to know how much medical knowledge Seongjin had as an apothecary, being the first to say it didn't look like a plague.

"Sometimes, people show similar symptoms when stung by a bee. I remember a young man in my old neighborhood died after a bee sting; he broke out in hives, his face swelled, he struggled to breathe, and most notably, his body temperature dropped rapidly. Apparently, his father and grandfather also died from bee stings."

Ninnias added, "Of course, his condition isn't deteriorating that rapidly, but..."

"Moreover, it's difficult to guess why he lost consciousness before his pulse weakened. It's not typical symptoms of poisoning, but we should also consider the possibility of some new kind of toxin."

Seongjin examined Haven, who was lying unconscious on the bed.

The man's complexion was pale, almost to the point of appearing grey. His lips were drained of color, and sporadic red, swollen rashes appeared on his exposed skin, including his face and neck.

And below his chest, a portion of the skin had turned gray.

Could it be there?

[Yes, there is an egg of Lophellum in his chest. It's already dead.]

The Demon King whispered.

'What effects would a Lopfern egg have on a human? Is it toxic?'

[Who knows, I've never laid an egg in a human.]

Seongjin lost himself in thought for a moment.

Even though he had lived a modern Earth life, Seongjin didn't have much medical knowledge. Before the Gate incident, he was just an ordinary office worker, and after the Gate incident, he was a superhuman hunter who had no worries about diseases.

However, even he knew that people could die suddenly from bee stings due to an anaphylactic shock caused by bee sting allergies.

The Lophellum egg can't parasitize in a human body; it just dies as time passes.

But what if that dead egg triggers an allergic reaction similar to anaphylactic shock? Or what if it keeps emitting something toxic?

If so, the condition won't improve unless the egg is removed.

The next step was clear. Remove the egg.

"Doctor Ninnias, doesn't the skin tone over there look a bit off? It appears different to my eyes..."

At Seongjin's words, the doctor examined the area on Haven's chest that he was pointing to more closely. It probably hadn't caught his eye before due to the uneven rashes and pale complexion.

As Doctor Ninnias carefully unbuttoned Haven's shirt, a palm-sized area of discolored skin became clearly visible. And in the center of that grey skin, there was a small wound covered in scab.

That wound must be where the Lophellum egg had burrowed in.

The physician touched the discolored chest area and slightly tilted his head.

"Come to think of it, you're right. The color is different, and there is a wound. And the skin feels somewhat hard, doesn't it? ...Hmm?"

He tapped the discolored skin with his fingers and gently brushed it. Then, he raised his head with a somewhat serious expression.

"It feels like there's something strange inside?"

Was it shallow enough to be felt from the outside? If so, this will simplify matters.

Seongjin suggested to the physician with a half-smile.

"Shouldn't we remove that?"

"Huh?"

"I mean, a small incision might be enough to extract it."

"...What?"

Both Ninnias the physician and Kurt the captain looked at Seongjin in utter astonishment.

"Well, it's not certain that it's something strange. It's not that rare to sometimes feel a lump inside the body, you know..."

The physician seemed perplexed and rubbed his nose, which was already red, turning it an even deeper shade of red.

"Won't cutting into an already sick person make the situation worse?"

Sir Kurt discouraged Seongjin with a flustered expression. His face openly displayed his concern that the reckless prince might exacerbate Haven's condition.

I guess trying to persuade them like this is pointless. Seongjin frowned.

However, help came from an unexpected place.

Arriving late at the knight's quarters with Masain, Francis heard Seongjin's words and supported him.

"The energy doesn't feel like that of demonkind, but it's still unsettling. I think it should be removed."

"...!"

It was the opinion of someone who was no less than a deputy commander of the Saint Aurelion Paladin Order.

The physician hesitated for a moment, but soon gave in to Francis's determined look and began preparing for the incision.

"The symptoms in the Academy students and this knight are the same."

Francis briefly explained the symptoms he had seen at the tribunal to Seongjin.

Pale complexion, cold body temperature, and rashes all over. More importantly, he had felt something strange near the students' chest areas.

"A weird energy that repels holy power."

"It definitely wasn't a demonkind. If I were to find a similar feeling, maybe it's like the strange lifeform in the Diggory Mansion?"

He said that at the time, the aura was so weak that they passed it off simply as a plague.

But having heard Seongjin's explanation, now he also suspected that maybe the Academy students' symptoms were also caused by this strange energy.

"If it repels holy power, is it like a curse from the demonkind?"

Masain asked with a slightly pale face. Francis clicked his tongue lightly.

"I get why you're worried, but that's impossible. As long as His Majesty the Holy Emperor is here, no curse from the demonkind can prosper within the Delcross Empire."

And then they all fell silent and watched as Ninnias made an incision in Haven's chest.

First, he disinfected the skin with a high-proof alcohol, then with a sweat-drenched face, he made the incision.

There wasn't much bleeding. The Lophellum's egg had indeed been just below the skin.

Soon, Ninnias nervously extracted a dark grey egg about the size of a pinky fingernail.

Although the egg was partly cracked and soaked in blood during the incision, it was clearly not something that could naturally occur in a human body.

After carefully inspecting the incision area and disinfecting it again with alcohol, he brought a needle and thread to start stitching the wound.

For someone who seemed reluctant, his skills were surprisingly neat.

What school of pharmacists did Ninnias belong to? He seemed to want to keep it a secret, but Seongjin thought he'd discreetly ask him later.

Seongjin and Francis then carefully handled the egg that the physician had brought out.

The dark gray semi-transparent egg looked elongated like a grain of rice.

Knowing this was a monster's egg, Seongjin could see tiny segments glowing faintly inside the egg. If it had survived and awakened, it would have become a larva.

"This looks... definitely like some kind of egg, doesn't it?"

Francis was subtly sharp.

Nodding inwardly, Seongjin saw Francis turn towards the entrance of their quarters.

"I will go to the tribunal, Your Highness. First, I have to tell the plague doctors to stop the students' 'bloodletting' treatment and to search for the egg."

They shouldn't have died from excessive bleeding yet.

Leaving behind these ominous words, Francis quickly left the room.

Soon after, Ninnias, having finished suturing the wound, began hastily pulling out various herbs. He finely grinded them into a powder and dropped it into Haven's mouth.

Was it just his imagination? Although Haven was still unconscious, his complexion seemed to have slightly improved.

Seongjin watched this for a moment, then ordered that if anything happens with the egg, to inform him immediately and left with Masain.

"That wound in the chest, it looked like someone artificially injected the egg into it..."

His mind was in turmoil.

Who exactly is doing this and what is their purpose?

Does the Emperor know about this situation? How far has the investigation gone, and what measures have been taken?

"Your Highness."

Suddenly called from behind, he turned to see Masain looking at him with a rather stiff face.

"I heard briefly about what happened at the training grounds from Maria. You helped the sick knight yourself?"

"Yes."

With a sigh, Masain continued his words.

"You acted too hastily. You should've avoided that situation and heard about it later. It's fortunate this is likely not a plague, but if something like this happens again..."

"Sir Masain."

Seongjin cut him off.

"I'm not a child in need of a nanny."

Masain's eyes quivered at the unprecedented firm words.

"But, Your Highness, I think you should make this clear."

If Masain decides to stay as the knight commander and not his brother, he will need to clarify his attitude.

"I understand that you're concerned for my safety, but I also had my own convictions and assurance."

"..."

"A sincere advice is always welcome. But don't mistake that for having the right to limit my thoughts and actions."

Seongjin stared straight into Masain's confused face. Masain looked back for a moment, then bowed his head.

"I... overstepped my boundaries. My apologies, Your Highness."

"Yes."

Seongjin nodded and began to walk again.

The two of them had lunch in silence and also safely finished their afternoon swordsmanship lessons.

Back in his room late in the evening after parting with a somewhat deflated Masain, Seongjin entered into early meditation.

He didn't feel great having been harsh on the man who was like a loyal dog.

Training is the way to go at times like this.

However, his meditation was cut short.

[Seongjin, it's her.]

With the Demon King's warning, Seongjin also sensed the faint but discernible presence sneaking in.

It was much easier to sense than yesterday.

Soon, a dark figure dropped from the 3rd-floor balcony into Seongjin's window. It was Dasha, an elite agent of the Monkey Watchtower.

Opening the window and sneaking into the room, she found Seongjin sitting on the bed, staring straight at her.

"How, Your Highness, how do you know I am coming?"

She looked as if her pride had been wounded.

69

Dasha. She was a standout expert even within a secret agency composed of the most elite intelligence agents.

So, until now, she was somewhat complacent, feeling that there was nothing to fear unless facing a Decalon Knight-level threat.

However, the young prince, who seemed barely to have reached the level of a squire in terms of aura activation, was intently watching her whenever she arrived. It was indeed perplexing.

"Welcome, Dasha. Any new information?"

What was more irritating was that he looked blankly at her as if he had no idea what he had accomplished!

Suppressing her momentary irritation, Dasha soon bowed briefly and began her report promptly.

"The Academy students have been rescued from plague doctors thanks to Sir Francis' intervention. They have ceased the bloodletting treatment and have undergone a procedure to remove the eggs from the royal medical staff. They are still unconscious though."

It's good to hear they're still alive.

"If they were a bit later, they would've been in a life-threatening condition due to blood loss."

What a bunch of Lyora quacks!

However, the following report was unexpected.

"In fact, while conveying the information Your Highness told me to the Holy Emperor, I learned a shocking fact from the Intelligence Department. The discovered plague wasn't something that just broke out yesterday."

It wasn't the first occurrence?

"For several months now, cases of this plague have been appearing sporadically throughout the Empire. It mainly spread among people living alone, so the initial symptoms were not readily detected."

"Several months ago?"

"Yes."

Dasha nodded, her gaze deepening.

"Within the Intelligence Department, they've been calling it the 'Gray Plague.'"

Gray Plague.

The name came from the victims whose skin turned an odd shade of grey.

It was mainly manifesting among elderly people living alone, vagrants, or those already ill. For this reason, there were still no early discoveries. Most were only found after they had been isolated for a few days and had transformed completely.

The first incident was reported months ago by an Inquisitor, who was alerted by villagers claiming an elderly man in their village had been cursed and had gone mad. The old man had lost his son and daughter-in-law and lived alone. A once healthy individual had suddenly displayed strange behavior within days.

By the time the Inquisitor arrived, the old man was drooling uncontrollably, and his eyes were unfocused. He couldn't speak or understand anything, and his skin had turned into dry, rigid grey, as if he had become a wooden puppet.

He eventually died within a week without eating or drinking.

Since then, sporadic reports about grey-skinned mad people had come from various places in the capital. Initially, they were suspected to be cursed by demons, so they were immediately imprisoned and investigated by the Heretical Tribunal. However, eventually, they concluded that it seemed to be a mysterious plague, with no evidence of demonic involvement found.

Hearing this, Seongjin frowned.

"How could they not know the initial symptoms? How do they know these cases are of the same disease?"

"One of the Inquisitors who investigated the case happened to witness the treatment of the students."

In response to the prince's valid query, Dasha nodded absentmindedly and flicked her hair back as she continued.

The Inquisitor pointed out that the discolored skin on the students' chests was similar to the skin changes observed in Gray Plague patients.

And he recalled that similar rock-like formations were found in the same location on the chests of patients who had died from the plague. In other words, those formations were believed to be calcified monster eggs.

Ah. Seongjin suddenly realized.

'So, they've dissected everyone who died from the plague.'

"Moreover, the clergy felt the same energy from these so-called monster eggs as they did from that stone fragment. As Your Highness knows, they are highly sensitive to malicious energies."

Francis had also said something similar.

They could detect whether someone was a demonkind by just the energy. And that these monster eggs and the larvae of Bantra Moss felt similar.

"So what's the plan?"

"Besides what's being discussed at the Holy Council, a special task force will be formed as per His Majesty's orders. Inquisitors, exorcists, and experts will be mobilized en masse. They say the formal term for these abominable creatures will probably be 'demons,' following Your Highness's proclamation."

"..."

Hmm, it's a bit odd.

It's called a 'plan,' but I don't feel a strong will to actively resolve the issue. It's more like they're reluctantly responding because things have escalated to this point.

Hold on, could this guy...?

Seongjin raises an eyebrow slightly, to which Dasha, unaware of his thoughts, excitedly added,

"Thanks to Your Highness and Sir Francis discovering the cause of the plague early, we've achieved quite a lot on just the first day of becoming dedicated informants."

"You seem quite pleased."

"Why wouldn't I be? It's fulfilling to produce substantial results on the very first day of the job."

Dasha revealed a bright smile, full of satisfaction.

"Ah, and a message from the Holy Emperor."

My father?

"Do as you wish,' he said."

What the hell?

As Seongjin looks puzzled, Dasha wore an ambiguous smile.

* * *

At that moment, there were those plunged into great confusion due to unexpected circumstances.

"It's serious. The palace doctors have extracted seeds from those academy students."

"I heard. How did they find it all of a sudden?"

The elderly and young men, both dressed in white, intricate priest robes, converse quietly. Even in the dim light, the divine symbols engraved on their garments are clearly visible.

The elder priest groaned, clutching his head with both hands.

"It's my mistake. Perhaps we sowed too recklessly in the excitement of the impending harvest."

"No, it's not! There aren't that many suitable prisoners coming in with aura or divine power for planting. Who could have predicted that prisoners in custody at the heresy tribunal would be transferred to the tribunal in just a day? Don't blame yourself too much."

"Even so...."

Both of them sighed deeply in unison.

"So what happens to the harvest now?"

"As for that, Brother Clemence has gone to see the Bishop regarding the issue."

"Then let's pray together until Brother returns. May we complete our mission safely. Bethella."

"Bethella."

Both priests began praying devoutly right where they stood.

After some time had passed, a young priest with a weary expression approached them. It was Clemence, who had gone outside the Imperial Palace to meet the Bishop.

And the news he brought was even more troubling.

"Someone seems to have mistakenly attempted to plant a seed in an imperial knight. That's how the academy students' seeds were also discovered. The bishop was extremely angry."

"What!?"

The elder priest's face turned pale.

"Which idiot tried to sow seeds on an Imperial Knight? Unless they were planning on getting caught by His Majesty! Didn't the bishop clearly say that seeds will never blossom in aura users?"

"That's why I'm confirming with our external supporters. They claim to have only sown seeds in drifters and drunks. They say they didn't touch anyone with high aura activity."

"What good are excuses now!"

For a moment, the elder priest's face flushed with anger, then he muttered a small prayer to calm himself. "Bethella."

"Anyway, what's done is done. What does the bishop say?"

Clemence frowned at the elder priest's question.

"The Bishop said to proceed with the plan as long as the Holy Emperor shows no special movements. Even if we start investigating now, it would take quite a bit of time to find something out."

"What about the inquisitors?"

"That area will also be difficult for a full-scale investigation. They were already understaffed and now they've taken on some of the duties of the Inquisitors who were sent to the southern front."

At this, the young priest spoke in a worried voice.

"It's unpredictable. Who is the leader of the exorcists? That elusive Leandros, right? He'll surely sense something is off and try to interfere."

"The plan takes into account that we might be discovered once it progresses to a certain point. If things don't go smoothly, we'll have to push up our timeline."

"Expedite? Is that even possible?"

At the elder priest's question, Clemence' eyes shone with seriousness.

"I happened to meet another brother from our forgotten sect here recently. If we can get his cooperation, accomplishing our mission might become a bit easier."

* * *

—Do as you wish.

The cryptic message from the emperor could be confirmed the very next day.

After breakfast, Seongjin, who was about to rush to the training grounds with his slingshot, stopped in his tracks when he spotted a strange man in the Pearl Palace grounds.

'...Who?'

Just in front of him stood Masain, who seemed to be welcoming a guest. Feeling Seong-jin's presence, he looked back with a slightly awkward expression.

"Your Highness...."

Under this unusual atmosphere, Seongjin carefully observed the man before him.

He was a middle-aged man dressed in an almost black, ash-colored uniform.

Apart from the color, his outfit looked similar to that of the Aurelion Knights. The only difference was the silver sword and crossed silver hooks engraved on his deep-colored uniform.

The man had a rigid face, almost like dried-up, gnarled wood. His cold expression was as impassive as could be, matching even the emperor's.

After a quick glance towards Seong-jin, he put his hand on his chest and bowed rigidly.

"I am here to see the Third Prince."

His voice sounded as if it were scraped out of a parched throat.

Just sharing space with him somehow made one feel uncomfortable, such was his aura.

"I present to you, Sir Leandros, the commander of the Knights of Saint Terbacchia," Masain softly informed him.

One of the five orders of knights, the Knights of Saint Terbacchia.

The commander of that order and the leader of all inquisitors, Sir Leandros.

Why had he suddenly come to visit Morres and Pearl Palace?

—In a while, an inquisitor from Saint Terbacchia will visit Pearl Palace. Don't worry, it is only for consultation. If you can provide information on the 'monsters' you know of, it will greatly help their work.

Katrina had mentioned this before, but he didn't expect the commander himself to come.

'Furthermore, this man... there's something strange about him...'

Seongjin stared intently at Sir Leandros, trying to gauge the man's energy. However, all he felt was a vague and stale emotion that he couldn't quite describe.

What is this? I'm not sure, but why does it feel so unsettling?

It wasn't just Seongjin who felt an odd vibe from him.

[What's with this guy? He's a bit off.]

'Where, specifically?'

[Hard to point out, but something's not right.]

What do you even know?

One thing was certain: this man was one of the few knights granted permission to enter the Pearl Palace by the Holy Emperor.

"Are you the guest who sought me? Then let's go to the reception room, Sir Masain. We can talk there."

Giving a fleeting glance to the now visibly restless Masain, Seongjin led the way to the reception room.

And moments later,

Seongjin found out the reason why the commander of the knight brigade had come to find him himself. There had been a rapid change in the situation with the [Monsters] in just a few days.

"I have been appointed to lead a specialized task force against [Monsters], with Terbacchia's knights as the main force," the man explained in a monotone voice.

Seongjin already knew this information through Dasha.

Here, we have invited experts from all fields we believe would be helpful in dealing with [Demon]-related events, from inquisitors to professors from the Theological Academy to members of the Plague Council...," he paused, his dry gaze briefly meeting Seongjin's eyes. "I've heard that thanks to Your Highness's knowledge and wisdom, we were able to confirm the nature of the [Gray Plague]. You also slew the demon during the incident at the Diggory residence and provided detailed information about it."

Seongjin had a gut feeling he was being roped into something troublesome.

Masain also seemed to share that sentiment, as he nervously glanced at Seongjin to gauge his reaction.

Either way, this unemotive man continued to speak impassively.

"So, the prevailing opinion within the Terbacchia Knight Brigade is that we should not merely seek your advice but should actually include you in the specialized task force against [Monsters]. Therefore, I, Leandros, formally request Your Highness's participation as part of the [Noblesse Oblige]."

"Ah..."

Masain let out a small sigh.

Noblesse Oblige

Just like 1st Prince Owen who leads soldiers on the southern frontlines, rushing through the battlefield.

And 2nd Prince Logan who leads young knights in purging the seas of pirates across the continent.

Now, they are asking the third prince, Morres, to contribute to protecting the capital by joining the task force against [Monsters].

So this was what the Holy Emperor had been talking about.

"Your Highness, the [Noblesse Oblige] is just a nice phrase. It doesn't actually carry any compulsion," Masain interjected nervously from the side. "You have only just recovered from fever and have barely mastered the swordsmanship at the squire level. There is still time. Please consider this carefully."

Ordinarily, he would have yelled first and asked questions later.

Was it because he had been reprimanded by Seongjin yesterday? Masain's tone was almost pleading.

'Right, there's no compulsion.'

That must be why the Holy Emperor said he could do as he pleases.

'But still...'

Seongjin felt a strange sense of foreboding as he looked into the eyes of the stoic Sir Leandros.

If he refused, the outcome might not be favorable—that was his intuition.

A vague sense of missing out on something crucial loomed over him.

The same intuition that left him as the last standing among the less prominent hunters, still held him tightly now.

Unknowingly, Seongjin nodded towards Leandros, and at the same time, a deep sense of defeat surfaced on Masain's face.

70

When he first received a visit from Commander Leandros, Seonngjin had thought that he would need to start working in the [Monster Special Task Force] from the very next day.

However, pulling together the budget to establish a new department, securing office space, filling up the team members, and even determining the operational policy—all of these required a long road ahead.

On top of that, the celebration of Emperor Seonghwang's birth was just around the corner. Inquisitor Valerie explained that it would likely be after the celebration before the department could be fully operational.

"So, Sir Valerie, where are we headed now?"

"We're going to the temporary office of the Monster Special Task Force, Your Highness. Fortunately, some suitable vacant space has just opened up in the administration building annex."

Sir Valerie was a rookie Inquisitor in the St. Marcius Knight Order, a handsome man with flaming red hair. He was the person designated to be assigned to the Monster Special Task Force when it was established.

Seongjin didn't initially have a favorable impression of him since there had been some friction with the St. Marcius Paladin Order before. However, after talking a bit, he found Valerie to be quite likable.

"Why do I have to visit an office that's not even properly set up yet?" Masain, who was following behind Seongjin, growled.

Ever since Seongjin decided to join the Monster Special Task Force,

Masain had been like this, as if irked because he couldn't find any faults.

"Sir Masain, I was the one who told Commander Sharon that I would go to the office."

"But Your Highness, you could have summoned them to the Pearl Palace..."

"Do you not know how difficult it is for knights to gain entry into the Pearl Palace?"

"..."

Commander Sharon was also set to join the Monster Special Task Force as an Exorcist.

Seongjin had once visited the Pearl Palace for work reasons, and having witnessed the complicated authorization process, decided to make the move himself next time.

"Haha. The office is shaping up quite well, Sir Masain. For now, Commander Sharon and I have been coming to work here every day," Valerie said, managing to dismiss Masain's veiled threat with a smile.

"In fact, we're sticking it out here on purpose. If we continue to forcibly occupy this place, there's a high chance it will become our official office as long as there aren't any major incidents."

Then the suave red-haired Inquisitor winked at Seongjin.

"Going to the main building has its share of hassles. Yet, being too far from it also makes paperwork difficult. The location of this temporary office is just perfect."

"The office might be a bit small, but it has quite a cozy atmosphere," Valerie added, laughing heartily.

The administration buildings were all huddled together on the west side of the imperial palace.

In stark contrast to the blindingly white main palace, the buildings here were mostly made of red brick, exuding an antique charm.

The walls covered with dense ivy and well-maintained garden trees created an illusion as if one had visited the campus of a university with a rich history.

As Seongjin looked around curiously, Valerie asked, puzzled.

"Is this your first time visiting the administrative side, Your Highness?"

"Hmm, probably. It's my first time since recovering from the fever."

Ah, I see.

Valerie seemed to have understood something, nodding his head.

On the other hand, Seongjin felt a fresh sense of revelation.

Come to think of it, this isn't the issue of not being able to go out of the palace right now.

Have I ever been to other parts of the imperial palace besides Pearl Palace and the main palace?

Not even to Amelia's Moon Rose Palace, let alone Queen Elizabeth's Ruby Palace!

'I've been too cooped up in the Pearl Palace...!'

[...You're just realizing that now?]

Seongjin heard the snide laugh of the Demon King in his head.

The Monster Special Task Force was located on the second floor of the Administrative Branch annex.

As they opened the door and entered, Knight Sharon, dressed in dark ash uniforms, stood up to greet them.

"I've been waiting for you, Your Highness."

Sharon was a veteran inquisitor of the St. Terbacchia Knights.

She was a tall woman, making most men look inferior. She had jet-black hair like a crow and seemingly permanent dark circles under her eyes.

The dry, ominous impression she gave off slightly resembled that of her commander, Leandros.

It seems people's expressions change when they deal with demons for a long time.

"What an honor it is for someone of your stature to visit this humble specialized squad's office. I'm at a loss for how to express my gratitude, especially since you've taken even my convenience into account," she said.

Her voice was thin and shaky, a stark contrast to her robust physique. Throughout the conversation, she couldn't make eye contact.

As I thought before, she seemed to have low self-esteem.

"No, it's fine, Dame Sharon. We will be working together from now on; it's only natural that I get used to the department. So what should I do next? Do I share what I know about the monsters?"

"Yes, we've invited you to the specialized squad to consult about [Monsters]. I'm deeply grateful that you've readily accepted our request."

"It's not a big deal, really."

"If you don't mind waiting a moment? I'll need you to detail the Diggory estate incident first. I intend to make it an official record of the specialized squad, so paperwork will take some time. Hehe."

Despite Masain giving her a stern look, she leisurely began to gather her writing tools.

Perhaps she is more daring than she appears.

Seongjin then sat down and began explaining in detail about Bantra Moss for quite some time.

The approximate periods from egg to adult, the characteristics of the larvae and pupae, the adult's characteristics, their respective weaknesses.

And most importantly, about Bartos, their channeling organs.

Of course, Seongjin already knew all the knowledge needed for defeating monsters, but organizing this knowledge was easier thanks to the intrusive Demon King who always wanted to meddle.

[Also, also... tell her this too. The factor that influences the larva transforming into a pupa isn't the amount of nutrients consumed but the number of the entities. The varying sizes of Bantra Moss are because they consumed entities of various sizes...]

'Yeah yeah, this is enough. It's not like I'm writing a dissertation.'

Throughout this, Dame Sharon kept nodding and diligently taking down Seongjin's words.

Not a shred of doubt about the authenticity of the information showed in her demeanor, making Seongjin wonder.

'Why isn't she asking me anything?'

Seongjin now suspected that there might be some directive from higher-ups.

But even if that was the case, blindly trusting like this is another story.

"Aren't you curious about the source of the information I'm providing?" he asked.

At this, Sharon gave a strange laugh, curling her lips. "Hee-hee-hee."

"How could I dare to?"

"I mean, shouldn't you naturally be curious?"

"I trust all that Your Highness says."

Isn't that a matter of forced belief?

Suddenly, her eyes glazed over and she started mumbling.

"Heh. Maybe it's not just me. Some of the emperor's close aides might have noticed by now."

"Noticed what?"

"The constraints due to your latent potential."

"...?"

"And that constraint implies another possibility."

For the first time, she lowered her gaze from the sky and looked directly into Seongjin's face.

"At least I, for one, am not ignorant of the potential and constraints of the Oracle, Your Highness."

...Oracle?

Before Seongjin could ask further, Sharon turned her eyes away and began to chuckle aimlessly.

"Yes, that's right. I know. Although I'm nothing but a useless half-breed, I heard quite a bit while spending my childhood with the tribe. In my own way, I co..."

Realizing Seongjin's confused expression, she shut her mouth saying, "Ah."

"Please forget what I just said. I sometimes talk to myself when I'm distracted. Commander Leandros often scolds me for it. Yes."

"Huh? No, Dame Sharon, it seemed like something important, so about the ora..."

"Uh uh! No need to worry about my delusional blabber. How could I dare to doubt a member of the esteemed imperial family? It's just that."

Seongjin narrowed his eyes and glared at Sharon, but she skillfully dodged his gaze, her eyes darting around.

"You're not planning on talking, are you?"

"Uh... What do I have to say? Moving forward, I'll be alert and keep my mouth shut. I'm already overwhelmed just trying to document each and every precious word of yours."

As Seongjin slightly knitted his eyebrows with disdain, Dame Sharon raised her voice a bit.

"It's not nonsense, Your Highness. From now on, your every move will become a significant milestone in determining the course of our monster-specialized team. Naturally."

"Quit the digression. I've just come as an advisor."

"Heh. But it will eventually come to that."

"How do you know that?"

Upon hearing this, Dame Sharon smirked in a twisted manner.

"Hehehe. I just...know, Your Highness."

She then leaned in closer to Seongjin and spoke in an even softer voice.

"Isn't that why I strongly recommended you join the 'Monster Task Force' to Commander Leandros? Hehe."

For a moment, Seongjin stared at her with a glare that could devour her whole.

So you were the one who manipulated Commander Leandros into summoning Morres!

Sharon merely focused back on her documents, feigning ignorance.

Some people really are unexpectedly audacious.

* * *

After a somewhat exhausting morning, Seongjin returned to Pearl Palace and casually asked Edith while having lunch.

"Edith, do you know what an Oracle is?"

However, Edith simply tilted her head and asked back, "Oracle? What's that?"

"...Ah, never mind."

Seongjin hastily fiddled with his utensils.

[Are you bothered? By what that insane knight said earlier?]

'Insane... Haven't you picked up on anything during your time here?'

[No, this is the first time I've heard of Oracle.]

Even the Demon King, who had soul-scanned for a relatively short period but still collected ample information, didn't know. It probably wasn't something commonly known.

'It seems important, though...'

I'll have to ask Dasha later.

As he thought this, the Demon King chuckled.

[Just ignore what that woman said earlier. She looked like someone who's going to have a hard time keeping his sanity intact for a lifetime.]

'...What does that mean?'

[She's not mentally stable, right? Even if she doesn't realize it, she might sometimes hear hallucinations, right?]

Seongjin was appalled as the Demon King explained what he had observed earlier.

The Demon King went, explaining that he saw something like a tiny shining pebble inside Sharon's head.

At the core, Sharon is a Paladin with divine energy, which is why her soul is enveloped in a faint light, making it hard to notice initially.

However while the woman was talking to Seongjin, the Demon King saw an unstable, flickering little light on one side of her head.

[That was undoubtedly a mind crystal.]

'A mind crystal?'

[It's like a receptor organ that living beings have.]

Surprisingly, the Bartholomew organ that the swarm monsters possess is also a type of mind crystals.

[It's rare, but it seems that it can naturally occur in humans as well. When it functions unstably in a vague location like that, you go insane. But if it stabilizes in the right place, you become something like a psychic or a prophet.]

[You humans also occasionally leave records of it, right? Those depictions where light shines from the forehead, like in paintings or sculptures.]

Upon hearing the Demon King's words, Seongjin inadvertently recalled halos or Buddha statues he'd seen long ago when the Earth was still intact.

...Could it be?

[It's the same with that paladin. She's got an uncontrollable and incomplete channeling organ in the wrong place. I don't know how such a person can act as an exorcist against demons or evil spirits. She seems to have a constitution that's good for anything 'holy'.]

It's the perfect setup to go insane when random voices suddenly appear in your head.

[She even said it herself earlier, right? That it's hard to focus on even a single person's words.]

She did say that.

"Moving forward, I'll be alert and keep my mouth shut. I'm already overwhelmed just trying to document each and every precious word of yours."

That didn't sound sarcastic to you?

[Be nice to her, life must be exhausting for that poor soul.]

...Does Sharon deserve sympathy even from a lowly being like me?

Seongjin felt slightly uncomfortable as he finished his meal and headed for the training ground. Then, unexpectedly, good news awaited him.

"His Highness, Haven has awakened!" Kurt announced, rushing over with a bright face.

Seongjin hurried to the knight's quarters. Finally, he could get clues about the Lophellum's egg!

"Your Highness!"

Under Ninnias's care, Haven, who was lying in bed, jumped up as soon as he saw Seongjin.

Fortunately, he seemed mentally stable at first glance.

Haven stared at Seongjin with a fervent look and said something bizarre.

"Thank you, Prince Morres! Not only did you save my life, but you're also responsible for half of my life!"

What?

Seongjin looked at Ninnias, puzzled.

Is this guy really fully recovered? Is he in his right mind?

Masain, who was standing beside him, started to look menacing. Nonetheless, Haven began to ramble, tears welling up in his eyes.

"I've heard it all from Calmen! I, Haven, have never received such affection even from my parents! How can I ever express this overwhelming emotion..."

What the hell is Calmen doing?

Seongjin's eyes narrowed, and Kurt quietly hinted.

"...The knight who helped you support Haven."

That insubordinate gaze is one thing, but sabotaging someone like this?

Confused, Seongjin was about to say something when Haven stood up, his face full of resolve, and exclaimed while kneeling.

"I've made my decision! I'll dedicate the rest of my life to Prince Morres. I wish to be buried in the Imperial Palace, so please accept me!"

Seongjin gave a commanding response.

"I don't need it!"

71

In summary, it seemed that there was no significant fault on the part of the knight named Calmen who had relayed the information to Haven.

It was Ninnias, the physician, who was extremely irritated while dragging Haven back to his bed.

"When did His Highness say that he would take responsibility for your life? He said he would take responsibility for the statement that it wasn't a contagious disease, didn't he? I clearly heard what the knight was saying right next to him!"

"No, but..."

"Stop confusing things! Like I've been saying, you're too careless about everything. If I say to calm down, then calm down!"

Upon hearing this, Haven immediately grabbed Ninnias' hand, jumping around while calling him a life-saver, until he received a hit from the exasperated physician.

Well, Haven had always seemed a bit frivolous, but it seemed that impressions of people don't really change.

Sir Kurt subtly opened his mouth towards Masain, who was still emanating a furious aura.

"That guy has always been one to not listen well and exaggerate things. He's a guy who bets his life here and there; please understand."

That's right, just calm down. Sir Masain.

It seems like Haven just did what he usually does, but you're acting like you want to kill someone.

"Not too long ago, I distinctly heard him going around saying he would dedicate his life to Princess Amelia when she visited the training ground."

...Should I really kill him?

After a bit of commotion, Seongjin was barely able to relay the overall to Haven.

"Parasites in my chest?"

He jumped in surprise and touched his own chest. The incision and stitches had almost healed completely thanks to the priest. The discolored gray area had significantly reduced, with only a small portion remaining.

"Based on the shape of the wound, it looks like someone directly inserted an egg into you."

At the physician's words, Haven tilted his head in confusion.

"I simply went out, drank, and then went back to sleep at the inn. If someone stabbed me, wouldn't I have noticed?"

"Was there anything unusual?"

"Unusual? Ah!"

Haven grinned at the people around him, who were all ears.

"Now that I think about it, I met an incredibly beautiful woman on my way! That's what I remember."

"....."

Seongjin asked, while raising his hands to block Sir Masain, who seemed resisting his urge to slap him right there.

"And what did she do?"

"Hmm? I don't know; maybe I was too drunk? Now that I think about it, I can't remember her face well. Just that she had long, beautiful hair."

Haven's eyes became dreamy.

"More than anything, her voice was really beautiful. I don't remember well, but it felt like a heavenly voice. I wish I could see her again..."

Sir Kurt then asked incredulously.

"Do you even realize you just barely escaped death? What if she's the culprit?"

"Hehe. If she's that beautiful, then she's worth risking my life for."

"....."

He really does gamble his life on various things.

"Hehehe."

"This guy, he's seriously out of his mind, isn't he?"

Thump!

In the end, Haven was slapped on the head by an infuriated Sir Kurt.

"Hmm....."

Seongjin crossed his arms and sunk into thought.

Even though Haven seems like that, he has some basic skills as a palace knight. If someone forcibly implanted an egg, it must have happened while he was drunk and not fully conscious.

However, he really can't remember anything at all?

'Maybe I should wait for Jonathan or Ashley to wake up?'

But there's no guarantee that they would wake up as fine as Haven did.

Maybe I should question Kenneth Diggory or other academy students as soon as I have a chance.

As he was thinking, he lifted his head and saw that Sir Masain was staring at him intensely. It looked like he had a lot to say but couldn't quite get the words out.

Seongjin sighed and thought, 'first of all, I have to do something about that overprotective gentleman.'

* * *

So when Dasha visited that evening, Seongjin bluntly said:

"Teach me the art of stealth."

"Excuse me?"

"I need a way to move through the palace as stealthily as you."

"...Yes?"

Even Dasha, who rarely lost her composure, seemed taken aback.

The truth was, besides finding swordsmanship enjoyable, another big reason for Seongjin voluntarily training his martial arts was because of his identity as the prince of the noble Holy Imperial Family.

Guards would always wait outside his room, and dedicated maids constantly checking on his condition. Whenever he ventured into the city, a resplendent carriage and a procession of escort knights would follow him, drawing undue attention to himself.

Moreover, to leave the imperial palace even once, one must pass through several layers of the palace guard. With all these constraints, who would find the energy to step outside?

When he focused solely on sword training, he could tolerate it, but the moment he tried to take any proactive steps, numerous inconveniences arose.

At Seongjin's words, Dasha seemed a bit troubled and asked.

"Your Highness, did I ever tell you that I am among the elite of the Monkey Watchtower's intelligence agents?"

"Yes, I've heard. Your skills are remarkable every time I see them."

"Do you know how much rigorous training it took for someone like me to infiltrate the Pearl Palace covertly?"

"It's fine. I don't expect that much. If you can just divert the palace guards, that would be sufficient. I learn quite quickly, you see."

"That's what makes it difficult... No, even if it were possible, that alone presents a problem."

"What's the problem?"

"How could I dare to smuggle Your Highness out of the palace? Oh my goodness!"

Dasha clutched her head and groaned.

"Don't you think that the paladin commander, who watches over Your Highness like a mother, will leave me be?"

"Don't worry. If he throws a fit, I'll talk to my father."

At that, Dasha responded with a chilly expression, "Your Highness, are you planning to kill me?"

"No, I mean..."

"Hehehe. Yes, I'll teach you. I will spill all my secrets, but please don't tell His Majesty..."

Her words implied that she would do her best to protect him using her influence, but it sounded more like he was threatening her.

"Stealth techniques are essentially assassination techniques. Therefore, all the skills intelligence agents learn are those of assassins."

And thus, Dasha started from the fundamentals in her explanation.

Perhaps she planned to take her time teaching him, anticipating that it would take a while for him to master the techniques.

"The core of stealth techniques is to completely mask any traces you may give off."

While many think of stealth as becoming invisible, Dasha explained that the visual aspect is actually the last thing to consider.

"It's virtually impossible to make oneself completely invisible. However, if you can eliminate your presence, most people won't recognize something even if it's right in front of their eyes."

The key is not to hide but to erase one's presence completely. If you can manage to do that, you can hide even in the most open spaces.

"So they can see but not know? Really?"

"Yes. If you get detected, it means you didn't eliminate your presence well enough. Have faith. If you have no traces, even someone right in front of you can't see you. You have to believe that."

"I have to believe it?"

Dasha was resolute.

"Yes, belief is crucial. Even the slightest self-doubt can accelerate your heartbeat and raise your body temperature, thereby revealing your presence. In any situation, you need unshakable calmness, backed by unwavering belief. That belief is the foundation of stealth."

"..."

"It sounds plausible when you put it that way. But still..."

"Why does it sound like you're selling snake oil[1]?"

Seongjin was tilting his head in confusion when Dasha continued speaking.

"Suppressing your presence isn't just about stifling any natural phenomena that occur when you're alive. It's about silencing your sound, suppressing your breath."

It meant utilizing a strong belief to kill even the variations in one's consciousness.

And lastly, killing the activation of one's aura.

"In some ways, killing the activation of one's aura could be the crux of stealth. Because it's impossible to move silently and suppress your breath without utilizing your aura."

The activation of the aura naturally becomes more active the more layers of aura one accumulates. Hence, the dilemma arises that as you become more skilled in killing sound and breath through the manipulation of aura, the activation of the aura drastically increases.

"So, how do we resolve that?"

"That's why you learn a technique to completely block the external flow of aura. This technique is called [Aura Concealment]."

It involves suppressing your breath to the maximum to minimize the aura you absorb, and completely binding the aura in your body so it doesn't escape.

Huh? That sounds like...

"Seems similar to [Aura Binding]?"

"Well, fundamentally they might be similar. [Aura Binding] temporarily reduces aura activation. However, binding your aura completely and simply concealing its activation are clearly different techniques."

To assist in insufficient breath and to move muscles soundlessly, the aura needs to freely flow within the body. That means aura is blocked only at the skin level, and the body constantly consumes the bound aura without any replenishment.

In short, [Aura Concealment] is similar to a person with a large lung capacity holding their breath for a long time.

"You'll need to sever your body from the outside world and hold out on the stored aura in your body. Plus, there's the additional difficulty of completely isolating every surface of your body from the outside world."

"... Sounds pretty complicated."

"Yes, it's not something you can compare with [Aura Binding] in terms of difficulty. It requires a lot of training."

To maintain concealment for a long time, first, you'll need to accumulate a lot of aura layers.

The more the aura activates, the more challenging it becomes to conceal, which is natural.

"Ultimately, when you reach the [Aura Balance], all of it becomes irrelevant."

When one reaches the level of a Decalon Knight, adjusting the aura activation becomes possible. This is because it's the stage where one achieves the most ideal balance of aura.

"So, the ultimate assassin would be at the level of a Decalon Knight?"

"Yes, but the problem is..."

Dasha added with a somber face,

"Who would become an assassin at the level of a Decalon Knight?"

Indeed. Even in Delcross, the strongest empire on the continent, Decalon Knights are extremely rare.

Any country would shower a Decalon Knight with titles, territories, and wealth. Who would give that up to become an assassin?

"The reason I mentioned the state of [Aura Balance] is that while it may be the ultimate stage an assassin could achieve, it is also the nemesis of an assassin."

"Nemesis?"

"Yes. [Aura Concealment] is completely useless in front of a Decalon Knight."

A Decalon Knight, who maintains the most ideal balance of aura, can not only freely adjust their aura activation but can also easily differentiate between the natural flow of aura and the forcibly concealed aura.

Someone who can better conceal their presence than an assassin and see through the assassin's concealment.

A nemesis, in the true sense of the word.

"Now, enough with the boring explanations. I'll teach you the method of [Aura Concealment]."

Dasha proceeded to give a detailed explanation on how to manipulate the aura, even demonstrating it herself.

Amazingly, when she executed [Aura Concealment], Seongjin felt as if Dasha, who was standing right in front of him, suddenly became faint and blurry.

Staring intently made it manageable, but had they crossed paths unexpectedly, he might have brushed past without noticing.

"How strange, I can still see you, though?"

"Damn it! Stop shaking my faith! Stop!"

Being highly sensitive, Seongjin could still sense Dasha's aura despite her skillful concealment.

And because of that, he could even more keenly sense how she was manipulating her aura.

After receiving a detailed explanation, he started to grasp an image of what he needed to do.

"Even though I agreed to assist your Highness with a heart full of goodwill, I never thought you'd strip away my secrets so quickly."

Dasha continuously grumbled as she demonstrated.

"Do you know, Your Highness? This goes against my teachings. These are techniques I learned through getting beaten up by instructors for years."

"Right. Thank you, Dasha. I'll make sure you're rewarded appropriately, even if I have to ask my father."

"...Well, as long as you understand, that's enough."

And so, based on Dasha's guidance, Seongjin practiced concealing his aura.

However, contrary to his imagination, controlling aura with different intervals across various body parts was quite difficult.

Watching Seongjin who kept tying and untying his aura incorrectly, Dasha chuckled.

"Don't rush. It's natural for it not to work out at the beginning. Even I, who was evaluated as having the best talent by my instructors recently, took over two years just to poorly mimic concealment."

"True. It's definitely hard."

"But you, Your Highness, will likely find it a bit easier. Your aura activity isn't that high yet, after all. Hehe."

"Uh-huh..."

Seongjin focused his entire mind on controlling his aura, sweat pouring down his face.

And after some time had passed,

" ... "

The relaxed smile gradually disappeared from Dasha's face, replaced by an astonished expression.

"...What?"

And a moment later,

"How is it?"

Seongjin, wiping the sweat from his forehead, proudly asked. Dasha, her eyes wide as saucers, said in a trembling voice.

"...A, A genius?"

Seongjin smirked.

Heh. See that? This is the class of Hunter Lee Seongjin.

T/N:

1. Idiom to describe deceptive marketing, or fraud

72

Seongjin demonstrated the [Aura Concealment] for Dasha, who found it hard to believe even after seeing it with her own eyes.

"How can this even be possible..."

She couldn't recover from the shock for a while.

"Selective trainees usually take an average of 3 to 4 years for this process. How did you manage it in just one day..."

Seongjin casually shrugged his shoulders, keeping his aura inactive.

Is that so?

Well, that's decent. I've managed to build up to the 5th layer of aura in just a few weeks, a feat that takes others an average of 7 years.

But even then, my father still treats me as a commodity to be sold.

"Your Highness, can you move in that state?"

Upon Dasha's question, Seongjin cautiously took a step forward. However, his efforts were in vain as his previously faded presence snapped back into its original form.

"Hmm..."

This is not going to be easy.

Seongjin focused his mind, constantly recalling the image he had been meditating on.

In fact, he was thinking of a memory from his Hunter days to make manipulating aura easier.

A day from long ago when he had been isolated in the nest of a venomous creature called the Fire Caterpillar. Amid the floating poisonous particles in the air, he had focused his vital energy to protect his respiratory system and skin.

Unable to breathe properly and at risk of his skin melting at any lapse in concentration, Seongjin had survived two whole days in that poisonous environment before finally returning to his unit.

"Right. [Aura Concealment] isn't simply tying up your aura to your body."

What needs to be visualized is a seamless barrier of aura, continually circulating within the body while maintaining a dense concentration to prevent any external aura from infiltrating.

And then he just had to move his body as he did back then.

"Is that really possible? This is insane!"

Dasha's voice, filled with awe, echoed beside him.

After several trial-and-error attempts, Seongjin finally succeeded in taking his first step without any fluctuation in his presence. After that, everything became smooth sailing.

In no time, Seongjin managed to move around the room with his presence perfectly concealed. He even demonstrated hopping in place while manipulating some aura in his legs.

"How did you do that? Why does [Aura Concealment] look so easy when you do it?"

Dasha, appearing almost desperate, asked him.

Seongjin kindly explained his method, albeit with some creative liberties.

"So, Dasha, imagine you are a poison dart frog. Imagine that you've fallen, unfortunately, right into the nest of venomous ants. You lack an immunity to their venom, so you have to constantly exude a mucus to protect yourself. However, if you exude all your venom, you won't have any more protection, so you'll need to absorb the exuded venom back through your skin. Just like how the poison dart frog..."

Listening to his long-winded explanation, Dasha muttered.

"Is this for real..."

She looked at Seongjin with a devastated face and soon dropped her head, whispering softly.

"Is that how it works, even with such a messy method? In this damned world where geniuses get everything?"

"..."

Seongjin, whose senses were heightened due to the intricate aura manipulation, couldn't help but hear her. However, he decided to let it pass for now.

He did feel a certain sense of guilt for having achieved in a short time what took others years of bloody effort.

"...I'll find a stealth suit that suits Your Highness by tomorrow."

Dasha, who had been panicking for a moment, finally composed herself and spoke.

"We absolutely cannot get caught, under any circumstances."

Her face, clenched in a tight fist, looked exceptionally grave.

"Can't I just sneak out now?"

"What are you talking about! You've certainly grasped the most important techniques, but assassination skills aren't just about [Aura Concealment]. You haven't even started practicing controlling sound, breathing, or consciousness."

According to Dasha, there's still a long road ahead.

Depending on the situation, you'll have to learn several evasion techniques, weapon skills for assassins, how to handle sleeping drugs, and various ways to handle unexpected situations.

"To make full use of all these techniques, you'll need a lot of practice. You also have to make various preparations. Above all else..."

"Above all else?"

"I can sense it. You still lack trust in me."

Ah, that elusive trust.

"You see? Your Aura Concealment might work on ordinary people, but it's not yet sufficient to completely ward off other Aura users. So, don't carelessly go outside and risk strengthening the palace's security."

Seongjin slowly lifted his arm. His existence seemed a bit blurred, but it was clearly not enough to fully deceive the palace guards like Dasha could.

"Your Highness, please keep this in mind. Your safety should be the top priority. If you intend to go outside covertly, you must, absolutely must, go with me. Understand?"

"Yep, got it."

Avoiding Dasha's intense gaze, Seongjin replied casually, prompting her to let out a deep sigh.

"Sigh, am I digging my own grave? I thought you'd give up within at least 3 years if I taught you moderately..."

So, you were just trying to kill time, huh?

"Absolutely do not attempt to go outside the palace alone. You hear me? You hear?"

Ignoring her, Seongjin obediently lay on his bed. Dasha continued her earnest cautions before leaving.

Of course.

The moment her presence fully disappeared from the Pearl Palace, it was only natural for Seongjin to spring up and slightly open the terrace door.

Shall I take a brief walk around the vicinity of the Pearl Palace?

What's the problem if I'm caught while walking around my own palace?

"Asein introduced it as a new mineral."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

In the pitch-dark imperial palace on a moonless night.

The Emperor was receiving a report from No. 21, Enrique, in a dimly lit room.

"Asein has named it 'Red Gold,' due to its reddish-gold color."

"Red Gold, huh..."

"Yes. Asein is confident that its value will soon surpass that of gold due to its rarity. It's slightly heavier than gold and has a beautiful red luster. It's quite hard, like platinum, which makes it difficult to work with, but this makes it even more popular among the wealthy."

The Emperor tilted his head and said, "But breaking into Asein's gold craftsmanship market won't be easy."

"Asein is actively taking the lead in opening that market. He plans to make some of the relics for the church from Red Gold, and is preparing all gifts for the birth celebration from Red Gold as well. He's mobilized all the craftsmen in the workshop, and they've never seen Asein spend so generously."

"I see. He probably aims to gain credibility for its value through this birth celebration..."

Suddenly, the Emperor stopped speaking and looked out the window.

"..."

No. 21, puzzled, also looked out. The pitch-black imperial garden showed no signs of patrolling guards, remaining silent.

"What is he up to this time..."

"Your Majesty?"

"...No, it's nothing."

The Holy Emperor soon faced No. 21 again with an expression as if nothing had happened.

"So, what about this [Red Gold]? Is it an alloy?"

"Yes, our guild's technicians tried to melt it down but failed to separate anything from it. Surprisingly, it seems to be a single metal."

"How peculiar. I had assumed it was an alloy, given that Asein is known for deceiving people with copper, claiming it to be gold."

21 looked carefully at the Emperor's face and cautiously asked, "Your Majesty, do you believe it's not a new mineral?"

"New mineral at this point? Isn't the timing just too perfect? Especially considering Asein has scoured every available resource in our territory over the past decades. However..."

The Emperor paused and stroked his chin, lost in thought for a moment.

"...What if the [Red Gold] vein extends from the western mountain range triangle to the direction of Carthago?"

21 flinched.

"How did you know...?"

"Indeed."

Although it was pitch-dark, 21, who had night vision, clearly saw a slight smirk on the Emperor's lips.

"Then, even if it really is a new metal, it wouldn't matter much. The amount available won't sustain long-term mining."

"Yes?"

"By now, the grandson of Young Master Carthago must have grown up. Asein must be getting anxious."

"...Yes?"

"Same as ever, an old fool."

"..."

How did you know? How far can you see?

If this had been the 21 of the past, he would have asked the Holy Emperor directly. But now, he just looked at the Holy Emperor with a slightly uncomfortable expression and soon bowed his head quietly.

"Enrique."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"Investigate the current situation of Carthago's supply of rock salt. Compare it to the trade trends mediated by Asein."

"Yes, understood."

"Ah, also prepare the newly-mined Red Gold ore. I'll make a brief visit to the Asein branch soon."

21 slightly nodded and disappeared as if melting into thin air.

After he left, the Holy Emperor alone turned his head to look out of the window. There was a silvery light in his eyes, seemingly shining in the dark room on their own.

"I told him to do whatever he wants, but I really can't predict where this fellow will jump next..."

The Holy Emperor couldn't take his eyes off the window until dawn broke.

Swoosh...

Even though there was no wind, the flowers in the garden were suddenly shaken.

Swish...

A branch that was suddenly shaken rubbed its leaves, making a small friction sound.

"...?"

This sudden disturbance caught the attention of a patrolling knight. However, after scanning the garden for a while, the knight found nothing unusual and disappeared toward the armory.

If he had known what was happening in the Pearl Palace garden, he would have been shocked.

The prince, dressed in his pajamas, was testing the limits of his agility, literally running around the garden freely.

'Ahahahaha!'

[You're totally excited. So exciting.]

Even under the Demon King's reprimands, Seongjin merely laughed joyfully inside.

When he first cautiously ventured into the garden, the resident knight who was guarding the door outside didn't notice Seongjin slipping onto the terrace at all. This knight was, based on aura activity, a mid-level knight at the medium stage!

'Is it working? Should I try other places?'

So, Seongjin also wandered around the servants' quarters.

Edith, who would usually swoop in like an arrow even if she sensed a slight anomaly, was now deep in sleep, completely unaware. Having confirmed her even breaths and light snoring, Seongjin gained confidence.

'Will this work on the guards or resident knights too?'

Although Dasha had mentioned he needs to learn more skills.

Seongjin also had some know-how related to stealth from his past Hunter days, infiltrating monster nests and wreaking havoc.

Above all, a solid resolve.

'If I get caught wandering in my palace, so what? What are you going to do?'

This unshakeable resolve, stemming from his robust self-confidence, wasn't something the ambiguous belief effect Dasha pointed out could match.

And shortly after.

After verifying against a few resident knights on patrol, Seongjin was now freely running around the garden as he pleased.

'Hahaha! I feel alive!'

He must've been somewhat stressed, maintaining his prince-like demeanor all this while. Reminiscing his Hunter days after a good run felt nostalgic.

Seongjin pushed his aura to its limits, moving his body as high and as far as possible. It was a fruitful time to properly adapt to his rapidly increasing aura.

However, he soon reached the limits of his aura, now on its 5th layer.

Thud. Thump. Thud.

Filling his legs with aura for one last leap, Seongjin landed on the roof of the Pearl Palace and sat down to catch his breath and released his aura concealment. Immediately, depleted aura and scarce oxygen started to replenish swiftly in his body.

'This is better than expected? Maybe it's not too much to go outside the palace alone...'

If only he wasn't wearing these clumsy pajamas, he might've stepped out of the palace right away.

The Demon King seemed especially anxious.

[Isn't it enough that you've made this much of a fuss? Let's go back, Seongjin. It's already dawn. Kids grow well only when they sleep well.]

'...Shall I?'

Come to think of it, he had skipped meditation today because he was learning aura concealment.

If he wants to proceed with tomorrow's morning training without a hitch, it's best to go to bed now.

'Who knows when I'll get another chance.'

Fortunately, today was the day Sir Masainhad returned home.

Although he almost lived in Pearl Palace these days, he also had a decent home in the capital, with servants of his own.

If Mason had stayed in Pearl Palace, he wouldn't have been so reckless. He wasn't confident enough not to get caught by a Decalon Knight or a high-ranking knight.

'Alright, let's go all out today. It's just for today.'

[Really?!]

Seongjin, after finalizing his decision, quietly returned to his room with his aura concealment activated. He gently opened the door; the escort knight, still unaware, yawned and started to doze off.

Perfect.

'I should find some decent clothes to cover up...'

Opening the dress room, he found only flashy clothes that obviously suited a prince.

'...I should ask Dasha to find some comfortable clothes later.'

Reluctantly, Seongjin wore his sword belt with Nutcracker over his pajamas and put on boots.

[Are you going out like that?]

'Let's stop by the knights' quarters on the way. Perhaps I could borrow a coat there?'

Doing his best to move silently to avoid waking any sleeping knights, Seongjin started walking towards the knights' quarters. But he soon realized that there was no need to be so cautious.

A boisterous drinking game was taking place in the brightly lit knights' quarters.

73

Bright lights and noisy chatter filled the air.

Seongjin hesitated for a moment, considering whether it was a good time to sneak in and borrow something. His hesitation didn't last long, though.

'I can't go on like this, anyway.'

Seongjin approached the barracks and spoke to the Demon King.

"Hey, can you check if either Maria or Kurt are around?"

If a high-ranking knight was present, his crude aura concealment could easily be exposed.

Fortunately, the Demon King, who had momentarily disappeared from his thoughts, promptly returned with news.

[Neither of them are in the barracks.]

"Great!"

Seongjin activated his aura concealment and swiftly snuck into the barracks.

The first floor of the knights' quarters had a large space used as a lounge, where four knights sat, drinking. Empty liquor bottles littered the floor, along with a large barrel. Seongjin quietly clicked his tongue at the sight.

Well, considering most resident knights volunteered to pay for alcohol, such a scene was to be expected on an off-duty day.

While he was wondering where to look, luckily, he spotted some old cloaks piled up near the entrance of the lounge.

Seongjin cautiously reached into the lounge, grabbed a cloak that looked relatively clean, and quickly hid again.

He was just about to make his exit when someone suddenly burst into the lounge.

Bang!

"Is Sir Calmen not here yet? Where is he?"

Trapped, Seongjin quickly hid in the opposite corridor.

Keep calm. Keep calm.

"Oh, Dame Claudia. Want to have a drink?"

"No, thanks. Where is Sir Calmen? I'm on duty with him tomorrow."

"He had a day off today. He probably hasn't been informed of the duty change yet. Want me to fill in for him?"

"Maybe you should sober up first, senior."

Claudia seemed to grumble for a moment but then joined the drinking session.

"Fine, give me a shot. I guess I'll have to fill in for him tomorrow."

"Go ahead, drink up. Worry about tomorrow when it comes."

Seongjin, confirming that the conversation had shifted back to casual chatter, put on the cloak and prepared to move cautiously.

Just then, another knight exited the lounge, walking towards the only exit of the barracks. He leaned against the outer wall and began to urinate.

Damn it. If you're going to pee, go far away!

"Please take care of our junior knights, especially since you and Sir Calmen are from the same 4th Knight Division, senior."

"Do you think I don't want to? As you know, he's been acting distant lately."

"Distant?"

"Yes. He had issues with the 2nd Knight Division before, but now he's also standoffish with others."

"Why is that?"

"It's all because of the 3rd Prince."

"What did our prince do?"

"Wow, you too? Why is everyone so infatuated with 'our prince' these days?"

At this point, the urinating knight returned to the lounge.

However, Seongjin stayed put, leaning against the wall, carefully listening to their conversation.

"Look, isn't the atmosphere strange lately? People were trashing that 'pig' just a few days ago. And now he's suddenly a genius prince, 'our prince?'"

"That's true."

"Because of what happened back then, Calmen still can't raise his head around the 2nd Knight Division. But even those guys from the 2nd are praising the prince as a genius now. It's absurd."

"It's all Sir Kurt's fault. Despite being a 2nd Division knight himself, he quietly supports the prince."

"What's gotten into everyone's heads? We don't know when that scoundrel will start acting up again."

Then, Claudia exclaimed angrily.

"Don't talk so recklessly when you don't even know who His Highness truly is!"

"And what do you know so well? Do you know what happened between the old Second Knight Division and the Third Prince?"

"That's..."

"If you don't know, keep your mouth shut. Although the atmosphere has changed since Sir Masain became the Commander, there was a time when people from the old Second Knight Division wouldn't even dare to pee towards the Imperial Palace."

"True. I've heard there were quite a few interesting stories."

"..."

Claudia made a disgruntled sound and began to gulp down her drink.

From the 'oohs' and 'aahs' coming from the people next to her, it seemed she was drowning her anger in alcohol.

Bang!

She slammed her glass down, her voice rising with her heightened emotions.

"Yes, I'm a newcomer, and I don't know about past events. But one thing I do know for sure: we should judge people by what we see ourselves!"

"Well, you're not wrong there."

"You seniors aren't directly involved either, just gossiping, right? The people from the Second Knight Division aren't saying anything now."

"Hey, you know as well as I do how much of a jerk that pig used to be."

"That's not the case now! He's not a pig! He's not a loser!"

"Ah, are you getting drunk already?"

"Please take a closer look at His Highness. Our Prince is subtle, deep, and mature!"

"Alright, alright, got it. Stop drinking."

For a while, the knights seemed to placate Claudia, and the topic changed.

There was some banter and mild insults, and the tense atmosphere heated up again.

It was some time after that when Seongjin left the scene.

Feeling that his limited aura was about to be depleted, Seongjin hurriedly exited the knights' lodging and released his aura concealment.

"Huu..."

As he caught his breath, Seongjin sorted out the information he had just heard.

There was a significant incident between Morres and the Second Knight Division in the past, and a knight named Calmen was involved. His relationship with the Second Knight Division remained strained.

Most of it was probably Morres's fault.

Calmen's recent bad attitude towards Seongjin is probably due to that.

[Does it bother you?]

'... A little.'

Not being bothered would be a lie.

While he was in Morres's body, he couldn't completely separate himself from Morres's past actions.

Even if it is glossed over with the excuse of him having no memory, there must be people who still have unresolved grudges.

If anything, the people surrounding Seongjin have been too kind so far.

'...Amelia really was an angel.'

[Hey, you inconsistent guy.]

Suddenly, he remembered Calmen's sarcastic retort.

—Why? Will you remember if I tell you?

I don't know what happened in the past, but the fact that he is currently working at Pearl Palace probably means he has sorted out his emotions to some extent.

Anyone who poses even a slight problem for Moress is prevented from entering the Pearl Palace by the Holy Emperor anyway.

Maybe Calmen just found it difficult to see the prince forget all his mistakes and walk around carefree.

[So, what will you do now?]

'What can I do?'

He had no intention of sorting out Morres's past wrongdoings.

Most of the issues were already being covered up anyway, and Seongjin had no obligation to bring them up.

Well, considering the circumstances, I'm willing to tolerate Calmen's slightly obnoxious behavior in the future.

Feeling the depleted aura quickly filling up, Seongjin slowly began to move.

That's when the voice of Dame Claudia, who was drunk and shouting loudly, came from afar.

"Your Highness! Regardless of what others say, I will follow you for a lifetime!"

A smile unknowingly formed at the corner of Seongjin's mouth.

Dame Claudia, did you have such special thoughts?

Great. If there's a performance review, I'll definitely take that into account.

[I thought you didn't like that Haven guy].

Ah, no, not him.

Seongjin's harvests from the knight quarters weren't only limited to the the cloak he was currently wearing on his body.

During the trivial chatter he'd heard, he learned of a little-known entrance frequently used by the knights.

Well, it's not really a hidden passageway that allows for secret entry into the imperial palace or anything like that.

It was described as a route where there are fewer inspections and the procedures are not as complicated. Even drunken knights can pass through without receiving too much scrutiny.

[You're going to sneak out using aura concealment anyway, right?]

'Well, a route with fewer guards is still worth considering.'

Thus, Seongjin moved toward the "Second East Gate" next to the greenhouse garden, as mentioned by the knights.

The walls surrounding the inner castle of Delcross Imperial Palace were high and made of luminous stone.

It looked to be a height that would be a bit burdensome for someone to climb over, but that was it.

'If a giant monster ever tried to break in, these walls would probably just collapse...'

Seongjin thought that the palace's aesthetic appearance seemed not to consider external invasions or siege situations at all. Perhaps it was built with the confidence that no one would dare to invade.

The Second East Gate was no different.

It had a thin, flamboyant single-layer iron gate, and as for the guards, there were only two imperial knights standing on either side of the door.

'So this is the "hole" they talked about. The security really is lax.'

Although he occasionally passed by guards carrying lanterns and knights from the royal guard, the frequency was not high.

Just as he confirmed that two teams of guards crossed paths and moved far away in opposite directions, Seongjin stepped back a few paces, maintaining his hidden aura. Instead of approaching the door where the two imperial knights were standing, he thought he'd just climb over the wall at a reasonable distance.

Tat.

With a few stomps on the ground for momentum, Seongjin effortlessly leapt up onto the smooth wall. He didn't even have to use much aura.

As he crouched low on the wall, taking a look at the other side,

The Demon King suddenly made a surprised noise.

["Something just passed by us, didn't it?"]

'...?'

Seongjin held his breath and extended his senses, but he didn't feel anything at all.

'Nothing's there?'

[That's strange? I'm sure something just whisked by...]

Seongjin suddenly felt a chill run down his spine.

Could it be something like a ghost? Is that it?

[Are you scared of such things even after dying once?]

No, I'm not scared. Really.

It's just that you can't punch ghosts, which is a bit inconvenient.

[Nothing's there now. What the hell was that?]

Just then, a patrol passed right below the wall Seongjin was on. He held his breath and waited until they were far enough away, then swung his body back, hung onto the wall for a moment, and then jumped down.

This is going more smoothly than expected.

He hadn't walked much further outside when he easily bypassed the outer walls of the imperial palace, which started to worry him a bit.

'Is it really okay for the palace's security to be this lax? Anyone could easily get in.'

Of course, there were two things he didn't know.

First, even as he worried, Seongjin's [Aura Concealment] skills were rapidly improving.

The difference between when he first demonstrated aura concealment in front of Dasha and now was astronomical. If she had seen him now, she would not have been able to complain about a lack of faith.

The second thing was—

The imperial palace's security wasn't simply comprised of physical manpower.

[Seongjin, there's something. It feels like it's been following us since earlier.]

Upon the Demon King's repeated warning, Seongjin, who had been carelessly moving away from the palace, stopped in his tracks.

But, no matter how carefully he scanned his surroundings, his senses picked up nothing.

[It's spiritual, so you probably won't be able to feel it. But what is it? It feels like a soul but not a complete one.]

Is it really a ghost?!

[It's circling around us. Ah, another one has appeared. They don't seem to have a hostile atmosphere, but what on earth do they want?]

'.....'

[Ah, there's another one.]

Because he could always directly feel the Demon King's emotional state, Seongjin knew that his words were all true, even if he couldn't see it with his eyes.

So things he'd never seen before since landing in this world suddenly appeared as soon as he stepped outside the royal palace?

'...Can they understand language?'

At this, the Demon King grunted for a moment and made a considerable effort before sighing.

[I don't think it's possible? I can't really read their thoughts.]

'Then try speaking to them from your end.'

At this, the Demon King cleared his throat and shouted imperiously,

[Hey, you lot! Stop circling around arrogantly and kneel before me! Receive me, the great Demon King of Gehenna, the eternal lord of terror, with a devout heart!]

'.....'

[They don't seem to understand, do they? Maybe because they're not complete souls but fragmented ones.]

Do those things even have knees to kneel with?

Anyway, according to the Demon King, there are currently a total of three small soul fragments circling around them as if on guard.

They were the size of a child's fist, like small orbs, too insignificant to be considered conscious beings.

[But they move as if they have a proper will. They don't even seem to hear my words. What's with these things?]

'Hmm.....'

While the Demon King was confused, Seongjin took a moment to organize his thoughts.

The opponents were small soul fragments, not proper ghosts.

If they can't be seen or touched, conversely, the influence they could exert would also be extremely limited, he assessed.

Isn't that existence just as insignificant as the Demon King living in my head when you think about it?

'Not a big deal.'

Furthermore, this place is near the imperial palace, where the representative of the god resides. They're probably not too dangerous.

Coming to that conclusion, Seongjin started to walk again, a bit more leisurely this time.

The road starting from the second eastern gate led to a long row of residences extending to the east of the capital. As he strolled slowly, densely packed houses filled his vision.

It was late, so there were no people around, and occasionally the distant barking of a dog echoed in the silent void.

And not long after entering the residential area,

[Oh, they're gone.]

The souls that had been doggedly following them had suddenly all disappeared.

'Good, it seems they've given up.'

Even if they were insignificant, their unknown nature had been somewhat unsettling.

But before Seongjin could take a few more steps, the Demon King suddenly exclaimed in surprise.

[Eh? Another one has appeared this time. More powerful... Huh? This one seems to understand language.]

Then he seemed to focus on something and abruptly became angry.

[What? Why are you daring to call me 'Red'? I am the great Demon King of Gehenna...!]

[What? Who's a brat? Hey, you bastard, do you really want to do this?!]

'Quiet down. Don't fight over trivial things; talk.'

Chastised by Seongjin, the Demon King grumbled to himself and then groaned.

[Ugh, for now, that guy is asking you to follow him. What will you do? Shall we go?]

'.....'

[I'm not sure how trustworthy he is, but according to him, you might have to see for yourself.]

Whether to trust him or not was another issue, but Seongjin was a bit curious.

So, following the Demon King's guidance for a while longer, Seongjin ended up meeting someone unexpected.

And there was Calmen, who had been beaten to a pulp, lying on the ground.

"Why is the man that DameClaudia was so desperately looking for here at such a late hour?"

That morning, Calmen, who was usually secretive, prepared to go out early.

Instead of his knight's uniform, he was in casual attire, armed only with a single sword.

"Man, aren't you tired? These days, everyone just lies down in their quarters on their days off. How come you're always out and about?"

"Bet he's got a girlfriend lately. Who is she? Is she pretty?"

"....."

Ignoring the light chatter of his fellow knights, Calmen briefly glanced at them before turning away without a word. They were not people he was keen on socializing with.

"Wow, that guy! What's gotten into him these days?"

"Ah, leave it. You know how the prince is these days..."

"Ah, he was from the 2nd Knight Squad, wasn't he?"

Muttering could be heard behind him, but Calmen clenched his teeth and walked on.

He headed into the city to buy various groceries and a rather good bottle of liquor.

Though the price was a bit steep for a knight's salary, it was worth it. He'd often be chastised for frivolous expenditures, but every time he visited, the bottle was always empty.

Quickening his pace, he arrived at a slum on the outskirts of the capital by mid-morning.

The atmosphere in the neighborhood, which he had not visited in nearly ten days, felt ominously tense.

Armed guards roamed the streets, and here and there, Inquisitors from the Order of Saint Marcias could be seen.

People gathered outside their homes, buzzing with chatter.

"...What's going on?"

Calmen approached the crowd to ask.

Just then, CRASH!

Loud sounds of breaking pottery echoed from across the street.

Inside the only small clinic in the neighborhood, guards and an Inquisitor were causing havoc.

"Are there any more patients hiding here?"

"Sir Knight! These are just patients with skin diseases, not cursed by demons!"

"Don't be absurd. The rash is an early symptom of the curse! If you keep interfering, you'll be deemed a heretic and arrested too!"

"Ah, Sir! At least spare this child! The child just has a fever, you see?"

"Ugh, quiet! Take this one away too!"

People were led away, one by one, by the guards.

Calmen was gaping at the spectacle when an old man beside him muttered,

"As you can see, the Inquisitors have come. They said they're taking all the patients with rashes to the heretic court today."

"Patients with rashes? Why all of a sudden?"

Then the old man shrugged.

"You know the curse that's been turning people gray and mad recently?"

"Ah, the Gray Plague you mean?"

"What? That's a disease, not a curse?"

The fact was already known to those who should know it, but it seemed the news hadn't yet spread in detail to this impoverished area.

But why would the heresy tribunal, which surely knows the truth, be in such a hurry to take them away?

The old man tilted his head in puzzlement before speaking.

"Anyway, weren't all those afflicted by the curse taken to the heresy tribunal? According to Inquisitor Nari today, the curse initially manifests as a rash. So now it seems they're even taking away those who merely have rashes."

"Ah, yes..."

"Anyway, they've been scouring every slum for days now. This village might just be the last on the list."

"I see."

Calmen looked at the people being led away with awkward eyes before turning away. The actions of the higher-ups were often hard to understand.

Perhaps some still believed this disease to be a curse. It seems they're capturing as many people as possible before guidelines for managing the gray plague patients are established.

Calmen quickly walked a bit more and arrived at an old shack located at the end of the slum.

"Commander, I've arrived."

He knocked twice on the door and, as usual, entered without waiting for an answer. However, the room had an odd, indescribable smell.

"...Commander?"

Confused, Calmen scanned the dim shack and found a man wrapped in a blanket lying in a corner.

"Commander!"

He rushed over and shook the man.

"Commander, what's happened? Are you not well?"

Despite Calmen's calls, the man did not respond at all. His body was unnaturally thin and his temperature was alarmingly low.

Only the man's faintly trembling, scruffy beard indicated that he was still alive.

"I will take you to the doctor right away!"

In haste, Calmen tried to carry the man on his shoulder and run. But then, a dreadful realization hit him.

Inquisitors. They were currently arresting all gray plague patients.

"No way..."

The sunlight coming through the open door revealed the man's appearance. Rashes covered his body and his skin was turning gray in places.

A chill ran down Calmen's spine.

'...He'll die! If we go out now, he'll be taken to the heresy tribunal and executed!"

Grasping his trembling chin with one hand, Calmen racked his brain.

Think. Think about it.

For now, it was impossible to take the leader out without the Inquisitors noticing.

They had to stay hidden until the search was over, until the villagers were asleep. Then they would go to the medical center affiliated with the royal palace, where there would surely be proper guidelines for treating gray plague patients.

What happened after, he couldn't clearly remember.

He changed the man into fresh clothes, burnt the old ones, ventilated the filthy shack that clearly had no one living in for days, and haphazardly put together an unidentifiable stew with the food he brought.

So when the Inquisitors arrived with their guards, Calmen was able to greet them with a smile, pretending to eat.

"Do you live here alone?"

"No, this is the home of an old man. I came to stay for a few days during my vacation. He went downtown and will probably return tomorrow."

He avoided telling an outright lie about the house being his, considering that the villagers might be questioned for verification.

"...Hmm, is that so?"

The Inquisitor scanned the shack with his piercing eyes.

His gaze moved from the empty bed to the wardrobe, and then he gestured to the guard standing behind him.

Soon, the guard strode in, and without asking for permission, started thrusting his sword into the bed.

Finding nothing but straw, he then jabbed his sword into the wardrobe. Shiik. Swiik.

"If the furniture is this ruined, what am I going to tell the owner when he returns?"

Calmen lamented about the furniture, to which the Inquisitor snorted dismissively.

"Seems there's no one hiding here. Move on to the next house."

After the crowd of Inquisitors hurriedly left, Calmen, who had been standing there observing the outside for a while, quickly pushed the table aside once he deemed it safe enough. Creaaak.

Lifting a wooden plank from the floor revealed a small space used as a liquor cabinet.

From there, he pulled out a man who was forcibly crammed in, laid him on the messy bed, and wiped his face with a wet towel.

The man's pulse and breath were alarmingly weak, just enough to not catch the Inquisitor's attention.

"Commander, please hang in there. Just endure a little longer; I will take you to a physician."

Calmen murmured to himself as he massaged the man's stiff limbs.

Hours passed as if they were decades.

When the moonless night came,

Carefully lifting the man, Calmen finally began to escape the slum.

Initially, things seemed relatively smooth.

Calmen, a Royal Imperial Knight, was a fairly skilled Aura user, and carrying an adult man was not much of a hindrance for him.

Quickly sensing the sparse patrols of guards and Inquisitors, Calmen successfully exited the slums at a swift pace.

However, upon reaching the main road where houses were, things changed.

The patrols were more frequent, and the wide-open road offered no place to hide.

"Hey, wait there!"

Finally, a member of the Capital Guard patrol spotted Calmen and hailed him.

Doing his best to conceal his tension, he stopped in a seemingly casual manner.

"Yes. What is it?"

"Where are you rushing off to this late, and who is that person you're carrying?"

"Ah, that's my master. He drank so much last night; I'm taking him home as he's still not sober."

Praying that the fine liquor he had doused his clothes in would do the trick, Calmen replied.

"Is that so? But why is his face so covered? Does he have a rash or something?"

The guard lifted his torch toward the man's face.

It was at that moment that Calmen realized.

"These guys, the influence of the heresy court has reached them.. I can't just play this off!"

His decision was quick.

In the blink of an eye, Calmen wrapped Aura around his lower body and darted forward.

"What! You, stop right there!"

Shrieeek.

A sharp whistle sounded, and all the Capital Guards began to chase him.

"Heuk, heuk, heuk."

His breath was running short.

Dashing through various alleys, Calmen tried his best to shake off the guards. However, they were closing in from all sides, making it impossible to evade them all.

His flight didn't last long. Eventually, Calmen was cornered in a dead-end alley by several members of the Capital Guard, including two armed knights.

"Heuk, heuk. You! Making people go through all this trouble!"

Calmen glared at the guards as he shouted.

"I'm a knight of the Imperial Guard! If His Majesty hears of this, what do you think will happen? You think it's alright to just capture a law-abiding citizen like this?"

"Imperial Guard?"

The advancing Capital Guards hesitated upon hearing Calmen's surprising revelation.

While they couldn't fully trust him, the young man's formidable aura made them reluctant to label him an impostor.

"...Then why is someone who should know everything making this complicated for no reason?"

"It's not some random civilians we're dealing with. Those cursed by the demon need to be rounded up or dealt with today. This is an official order from above."

"Running away on your own is despicable, but if you hand over the ones cursed, you'll be let go."

Calmen clenched his teeth.

He realized that the command came from higher up and that the Capital Guards prioritized capturing the cursed above all else.

'Either apprehend or handle them.'

Should he have handed over the commander to the Inquisition and then tried to rescue him through the Imperial Palace?

No, no one who has entered there has ever come out unscathed. Moreover, in this dire situation...

He gently laid down the man on his back and gripped the sword at his waist cautiously.

Two armed knights and five guards.

It seemed improbable with his strength alone, but if he didn't break through by force, there was no other way.

The only reason Calmen hadn't drawn his sword yet was because he instinctively knew that doing so against the Capital Guards would extinguish even the smallest glimmer of hope he had left.

And at that moment.

Calmen saw a guard in the back aiming a crossbow at the man.

Without any more time to think, he lunged towards the man.

Zwiack! Thud!

The misfired bolt hit the ground and ricocheted.

"Damn, this punk finally!"

"Hey! Don't kill the Imperial knight! Get him off first!"

Hands of the approaching guards maliciously grabbed him, but Calmen bit and tore at them, stubbornly clinging to the man.

How long was he resisting? Soon, a hail of kicks and stomps descended on him.

"Get out of the way! Move it!"

"What's gonna change if you resist!"

"You gonna die with this cursed one?"

Smack! Thump! Smack!

As his consciousness started to fade amidst the violence, Calmen curled his body around the man as much as possible.

A muffled groan slipped through his tightly clenched teeth.

Please, someone!

Somebody please save the commander somehow!

And into his ears came,

"Hey, stop it right there."

A soft but oddly piercing voice resonated.

"Are you guys Capital Guards? Why are you assaulting someone on the street? If there's no proper reason, you should be ready for disciplinary action."

".....?"

"...Who is this kid?"

The guards ceased their beating and turned towards the voice.

Standing there was a boy wrapped in a large, worn-out cloak.

Above the clearly standard-issue cloak, well-maintained light blonde hair emitted a yellowish glow under the torchlight.

The boy with a somewhat fierce expression was a face Calmen knew well.

'...Prince... Morres?'

Why is he here?

The prince also seemed to recognize Calmen, widening his eyes before asking.

"Why is the man that Dame Claudia was so desperately looking for here at such a late hour?"

"....."

"Ah, so that's why you brought me here."

"What's this brat babbling about? Get lost!"

One of the guards spoke with bravado, but the prince wasn't phased.

"The ones who should get lost are you guys. Or would you rather be beaten up here for your unjust violence?"

"...What?"

The guards' faces turned grim.

"Kid, disappear while we're talking nicely! Unless you want to taste the consequence of obstructing public duties."

Two guards approached the prince, their hands on their sword hilts.

Then Crown Prince Morres subtly raised one corner of his mouth.

It was a smirk that annoyingly angered anyone who saw it.

"Was that your public duty? Seriously? From where I stand, you guys look like gangsters bullying people."

"Grr, you!"

Shrring.

Finally, one guard, who was closest to the prince, lost his temper and reached for his sword.

Calmen almost screamed out.

These idiots, that's His Highness! Don't draw it!

Do they know what will happen to them for this mistake?!

Choking back coughs from his injuries and blood pooling in his throat, he would have shouted this if he could.

Prince Morres also saw the partially drawn sword, scratched his cheek, and made a peculiar face.

"Hmm, even if I tell you who I am, you probably won't believe me. But let me warn you. Draw that sword, and you'll surely regret it."

75

Not even two months had passed since Prince Morres woke up from his fever.

His appearance had changed so dramatically during that time, and he had been so secluded in Pearl Palace Palace, that not many people actually knew what this notoriously unreliable prince looked like.

Moreover, he was wearing an ill-fitted, worn-out cloak, a far cry from a royal appearance.

Even if he were to reveal his identity honestly here, it was unlikely that the capital's guards would take him seriously.

The problem was, the prince himself didn't seem keen on actively asserting his identity either.

"I've given you fair warning. Anything that happens from now on is entirely your responsibility. Now, what were you all doing here?"

As the prince took a step closer and spoke, an inexplicable force made the guards flinch and take a step back.

"Didn't we tell you? We are on official duty, so get lost while you're still ahead..."

"Shut up, those of you who were beating him. The one who got hit should answer."

After glancing dismissively at a guard who was awkwardly holding his half-drawn sword and shouting, the prince turned his gaze to Calmen.

"Can you speak?"

Calmen spat out a mixture of blood and saliva before replying, "Yes."

"Good. Then you tell me, Sir Calmen. What was going on here?"

"The capital's guards are..."

I never thought I'd be ratting to Prince Morres, but...

Though it was a terrible situation, right now the prince was the only lifeline offered to Calmen.

"The capital's guards are dragging anyone suffering from skin rashes to the heresy tribunal, under the pretext that it's a curse from the demon. I was merely trying to move a patient in critical condition to a medical center when we were obstructed by these people..."

Then, the prince's gaze moved to the man Calmen was shielding from above.

He clearly didn't recognize the man who had changed so much.

"Who is that? Is he the one with the critical condition?"

"...."

After staring at the man for a moment, the prince soon nodded his head, as if he had understood something on his own.

"I see. A patient with the gray plague. Since Lophellum's egg is still alive, we need to extract it quickly."

Then the prince leisurely walked toward Calmen.

The guards, who felt like an insurmountable wall, hesitated a bit and easily gave way as the Prince approached.

It wasn't just the strange sense of pressure emanating from the prince, but also the uneasy undertone in the conversation between the two that they sensed.

It was a surreal scene.

The prince appearing here at this critical moment, overwhelming the atmosphere with just his presence.

And so, before he knew it, Calmen found himself shouting something he would never normally say to the prince.

"Your Highness! This patient is... this man was once the captain of the Imperial Guard! Please make sure he is not taken to the heresy tribunal!"

"...."

"Please help him! Save him!"

This person should not be collapsing here like this!

At the very least, you should not, you cannot, turn your back on him!

The prince, who heard this desperate cry, calmly replied, "Alright, wait a moment."

A wave of relief washed over him.

Calmen let out a small sigh and immediately wondered why he felt so relieved.

Meanwhile, the guards who had been beating Calmen were also plunged into confusion.

Was he really an imperial knight?

But then who is the prince? And what's this about a former captain of the guards?

What is even happening right now?

Prince Morres boldly declared to them, "We're taking this patient with us. Do not interfere and step aside."

"...That's not possible. I don't know who you are, but you can't obstruct official business like this... There are orders from above to detain anyone with the rash..."

A fully-armed knight responded in a trembling voice. He seemed extremely cautious, probably sensing that the boy in front of him was no ordinary person.

The prince simply nodded his head.

"Is that so? Then you'll need a valid reason for failing to carry out those orders."

In an instant, the prince's fist swung like a bolt of lightning.

Pbaak!

Jjejeok. A disturbing sound echoed as the knight fell to the ground, his head turned awkwardly.

His eyes rolled back, indicating he likely suffered a concussion from the sudden impact. Judging by the eerie sound, his jaw couldn't have remained intact.

Before the other officers could even take a defensive stance, the prince was already darting toward his next target—a guard with his sword half-drawn.

Bang! The prince swung his Nutcracker, which he was holding in his left hand, smashing away the guard's sword. He then drove his fist into the guard's face.

Thud! Another cracking sound, and the guard fell to the ground clutching his face. A substantial amount of blood oozed from between his fingers.

"Gah! That guy! No, that brat...!"

"Stop him! Stop him, whoever he is!"

Shiing. Clank.

The remaining guards all drew their swords simultaneously.

But in that time, the prince was already charging at another target.

Flipping his grip on the nutcracker's handle, the prince wielded his sheathed sword like a shield, blocking the guards' attacks.

Immediately after, his fist swung again.

Thud! Thud!

The sounds of his strikes were uniformly unsettling.

"What is happening..."

Calmen couldn't believe what he was seeing, even with his eyes wide open.

The prince seemed exceptionally skilled in melee combat against multiple opponents.

He blocked descending swords, aimed for the solar plexus of those attacking him from behind, deflected bolts aiming for his shoulders, and knocked down anyone who charged at him from the side.

And they all received his fist, and all of them collapsed unconscious, some part of them broken.

Before long, except for one knight, all the guards lay on the ground.

"How... How is this possible..."

The knight aimed his sword at the prince, his voice tinged with a moan.

A boy, who looked no more than a squire in terms of aura level, had knocked down six capital guards in a matter of seconds—using only his fists.

The knight himself was a seasoned aura user, beyond level 7, but he had no confidence that he could move like the young boy.

Thud thud. As the prince approached, the knight asked in a trembling voice.

"Do you think you can get away with this, whoever you are?"

"I wouldn't worry about me. Wouldn't it be better for you to faint cleanly here and take sick leave? You could avoid getting reprimanded by your superiors."

"What...?"

"Still, isn't this quite a generous treatment compared to how you've beaten my palace's knights without any restraint?"

My palace's knights.

Before he could even consider the implications of those words, the prince spoke in a chilling tone.

"So, why don't you obediently come here and offer your head."

"....."

With a tone that suggested he would casually smash his head, the prince's eyes were so calm they seemed boring.

An aura devoid of malice.

That made it all the more eerie, and the knight felt this keenly.

"Aaahhhh!"

Letting out a scream or a battle cry, the knight slashed his sword toward the prince.

Screech!

As auras clashed, a deafening sound reverberated, making their heads throb. The knight looked wide-eyed at the scabbard that blocked his own sword.

He had imbued his sword with his finest aura; how could a squire's aura hold up? And with just a scabbard?

Screech!

Once again, the swords and the scabbard collided. Nearly equal force could be felt this time as well.

"How the hell...!"

Looking in disbelief at the scabbard in contact with his sword, the knight then noticed a faint aura coalescing around the middle of the scabbard.

And then he finally understood what the prince was doing to him.

He wasn't using aura by the book. He was simply focusing all his body's aura on the part of the scabbard that touched the sword, compensating for his relative lack of aura.

Screech! Before he had time to be surprised, a third clash occurred. In the gap, the prince thrust his elbow into the knight's side.

Clang. Of course, not much damage is done thanks to the armor.

While other knights were knocked out by a punch to the jaw, a well-armored knight like him left little room for the prince to penetrate.

But this strike introduced a new sense of crisis to the knight. The aura concentrated on the scabbard had disappeared, now swirling around the prince's right arm.

As a result, a clear dent was left on the sturdy steel armor.

'...What is this? This unconventional use of aura? How can he focus aura just anywhere?'

Confused, the knight swung his sword again towards the prince.

Internally prepared for a fourth clash, the prince, who had been stepping forward with his scabbard, suddenly twisted his body diagonally.

The knight's sword barely missed, cutting a long swath in the prince's fluttering cape.

At that moment, the prince, taking another big step closer, swung his left arm upwards.

Thwack! The pommel of the reverse grip extended and struck the tip of the knight's chin. The knight's head was thrown back, and he staggered.

And before he could regain his balance,

The prince, who had spun his body around, slapped the knight's empty neck with the back of his hand.

Thump! Darkness instantly enveloped his vision as consciousness slipped away.

Clank. Thud! Accompanied by the weight of his armor, the last knight fell with a noisy impact.

Calmen watched the entire spectacle without even being able to breathe properly.

Everything happened so quickly that he didn't have time to think.

The prince's martial prowess was so surreal.

There were rumors among the resident knights about his swordsmanship being that of a genius, but was that all there is to it? Didn't he look more skilled with his fists than with his sword!

Misinterpreting Calmen's astonished expression in some way, the prince spoke awkwardly to justify himself.

"Uh, it's okay. I didn't break his neck. I hit him without using aura."

"....."

"...I did it because we're short on time. There's no need to unnecessarily solve a situation that can be resolved through violence with crude conversation, right?"

".....?"

Before Calmen could even express his confusion, the prince swiftly approached him.

"You took quite a beating. Can you move?"

"...Yes."

"It would be difficult for you to carry the patient yourself, though."

Thud.

Before Calmen could even reply, the prince snatched the injured man from his arms and hoisted him onto his back. Despite the dirt and the unpleasant smell, Prince Morres showed no signs of discomfort.

Though still young, Prince Morres seemed to carry the weight effortlessly, perhaps due to his mastery of aura. Turning to Calmen, he spoke.

"Do you have any broken bones? If not, follow me on your own."

And without waiting for a reply, he started walking towards the main road.

Calmen stood there for a moment, staring at his retreating figure.

He couldn't quite come to terms with handing over the man he had most revered to someone he had loathed so much.

Is that really Prince Morres?

And without waiting for a reply, he started walking towards the main road.

The boy walking ahead didn't look regal at all.

His dusty, worn cloak was nothing more than a standard issue for the knight order, and what occasionally peeked out from beneath it was clearly pajamas.

But then, something was odd.

Only now did he truly feel that this man was the prince.

'No, what am I thinking...?'

Shaking his head, Calmen began to follow Prince Morres with heavy steps.

While walking towards the palace at a quick pace, the prince began to bombard Calmen with questions about the current situation.

"So, you were planning to go to the medical facility affiliated with the imperial palace?"

"Yes, I thought everything would be fine as long as we got there..."

Calmen hesitated.

Thinking about the security forces that had been deployed all over the capital under the orders of the Heresy Tribunal, he now had his doubts about whether the medical facility would really be safe.

If someone with the authority to orchestrate something of this scale was issuing commands, the Imperial Palace's medical center might not be immune to their influence either.

"Right. I also think it's best to avoid that place. By the way, what on earth is His Majesty doing amidst all this chaos?"

While speaking irreverently, the prince suddenly stopped walking and turned into an unexpected alley.

"Where are you going now...?"

"Stop asking questions and just follow me. This way is faster."

"...Huh?"

After walking for a bit, the prince once again glanced around as if measuring something, and this time started heading in the opposite direction of the Imperial Palace.

Given that such unpredictable actions had already occurred multiple times, Calmen felt too weary to question it anymore.

Suddenly, a thought crossed his mind.

'Come to think of it...'

There had been an unusually low number of encounters with security forces.

Was the prince purposefully avoiding them? Could it be?

"Yes, for now, I'm trying to avoid running into them as much as possible."

In response to Calmen's query, the prince nodded as if it were obvious.

'...So, what's your point?'

Calmen was unaware that the prince had perception levels sensitive enough to rival those of high-ranking knights.

On top of that, he didn't know that the prince had a detachable short-range navigation system inside his head.

"So if we're avoiding the Imperial medical center, where should we go?"

"Well, we have to go to a place that's out of reach of the Heresy Tribunal, don't we?"

"But if they've seized control over the Imperial medical center, we can't trust any clinics in the capital either."

"True, but I know at least one place they can never touch."

"What? Where is such a place...?"

Then the prince turned to look at Calmen, wearing a playful smile.

"The Pearl Palace."

76

Following the guidance of something, whether a ghost or a spirit, Seongjin finally found Knight Calmen, who was being severely beaten while surrounded by the Capital Guard.

'...Why is he taking such a beating? He's not the type to go down so easily.'

Seongjin had always considered Calmen as someone to watch among the resident knights. He found the situation puzzling. However, he soon realized that Calmen was desperately protecting someone.

While the Capital Guard were doing their job, the situation was clearly far from normal.

Deciding to intervene, Seongjin shouted, "Hey, stop it right there."

Strangely enough, the moment Seongjin encountered Commander Calmen, the ghost disappeared from the spot. Perhaps its objective was to lead him there.

Regardless, the current situation didn't allow him to worry about the ghost anymore.

"The Capital Guard is taking all the patients with the gray plague to the Heretic Tribunal under the pretext of a 'demonic curse!'" Calmen exclaimed.

Seongjin frowned at the news.

The gray plague had already been revealed to be caused by monster eggs.

Moreover, the Tribunal had long concluded that the issue was a plague, not a curse.

A specialized 'Monster Special Task Force' was soon to be formed, and all they had to do was extract the eggs from the patients.

Who was orchestrating this, and for what purpose?

Did the Holy Emperor know about this?

What concerned him more was the condition of the patient that Calmen was protecting.

It seemed that a considerable amount of time had passed since the Lophellum's egg had parasitized the patient; the rashes had receded, and the patient's body was turning gray.

[The egg is still alive.]

The Demon King inside Seongjin hinted.

[But something's odd? I see an immense number of psychic crystals in his head. What is this? I've never seen this before.]

Seongjin's intuition whispered to him.

He must investigate this person.

This might be connected to the cause of the gray plague outbreak.

"We're going to take this patient. Don't interfere and move aside."

Seongjin firmly advised the Capital Guard to step back, and eventually they obediently laid on the floor, clearing the way.

Well, I won't deny that a bit of force was mobilized in the pursuit of efficiency.

And Calmen looked at Seongjin as if he was some kind of criminal from another era.

He had just saved him, and yet he was so ungrateful!

Taking the patient upon his back in place of the battered Calmen, Seongjin walked quickly towards the Imperial Palace.

The initial destination Calmen had intended, the medical institution affiliated with the Imperial Palace, was also deemed unsafe for some reason.

After securing the patient in Pearl (Pearl Palace), he thought he'd have to find the whereabouts of the other patients who had been taken away.

Considering what the academy students who were imprisoned by the Heresy Tribunal had gone through, it would be a relief if the patients weren't immediately killed.

'I need to inform my father about this too...'

First, he'd have to confess that he had sneaked out of the Imperial Palace.

The palace's security is likely to be further strengthened.

Dasha would probably give him an earful too.

At the very least, it would surely reach the ears of Masain, the head of security.

'... Sir Masain will be furious.'

Seongjin sighed deeply.

He did his best to avoid the Capital Guard and took a circuitous route. Fortunately, the staggering Calmen managed to follow him.

Meanwhile, the Demon King inside him didn't stop chattering about the psychic crystals filled in the patient's head.

[With this amount, channeling is absolutely impossible.]

For psychic crystals to function like Bartoshi's, they need to be of proper shape and appropriate size.

However, this patient was different.

"It's as if the entire mind has been sprinkled with glass powder."

Each piece is so insignificant that it's embarrassing to even call them crystals.

Recalling Dame Sharon's case and asking, Demon King outrightly denied the possibility.

[That's impossible. The mind crystal in that mad knight we saw during the day may be incomplete, but at least it had some form. This one can't even sense anything. It's practically like grains of sand.]

So, it's nothing more than contaminants filling the mind.

'Then what happens?'

[The brain simply breaks down, especially if there's a lot of it. With the mind this cluttered, it's even questionable if consciousness can be maintained.]

So, the cause is likely to be the Gray Plague?

He was said to have once functioned perfectly fine as a knight-captain, so this couldn't have been his original state.

It might be related to the deteriorating conditions of the minds of those suffering from the Gray Plague.

Sir Haven was discovered early and recovered without any after-effects, but it might be good to check on other patients who are further along in the disease.

Seongjin was about to ask Calmen about the patient's previous condition, but when he looked behind him, he saw the man walking with a very serious expression, as if contemplating deeply.

"Your Highness! This patient is... this man was once the captain of the Imperial Guard! Please make sure he is not taken to the heresy tribunal!"

Despite being beaten, he had still tried to protect him. His desperate pleading to save someone who generally displayed an unruly attitude also stood out.

What is the relationship between this patient and Sir Calmen?

I am also concerned that a former Imperial Knight Captain is in such a ruined state.

Thinking he might touch on an extremely sensitive subject, Seongjin decided to refrain from asking any further questions and kept his mouth shut.

When they finally reached the second east gate of the Imperial Palace, Seongjin was somewhat disheartened.

The once-empty gateway was now brightly illuminated with torches as if it were broad daylight.

Armed Imperial Guards were stationed around the gate, and occasionally one could spot knights in the uniform of the St. Aurelion Order.

And at the front of them stood Sir Masain.

'I ended up making the security manager come out at dawn, huh...'

He didn't expect to sneak back in as he did when he left, but making such a fuss was like admitting he'd really screwed up.

Did they figure out I had escaped?

But when did they find out?

How did they precisely identify the second gate?

All these thoughts were brief. Upon discovering Seongjin's group, the Imperial Guard knights rushed towards them.

One by one, they were shocked to see the young prince carrying someone, who in turn looked absolutely destitute, and that their own knights couldn't even walk due to injuries.

While handing over the patient to the knights, Seongjin saw Lord Kurt and gave him instructions.

"This person is a guest from the Pearl Palace. He's suffering from the Gray Plague, so take him directly to the Ninnias clinic in the Pearl Palace. Ask them to expedite the diagnosis."

Kurt seemed shocked but soon regained his senses and made a makeshift stretcher from knight cloaks.

In the midst of this, Calmen, who was staring at the stretcher carrying the patient, caught his eye.

That guy seems completely out of it.

"...Lay Sir Calmen down next to him as well."

Upon Seongjin's fluttering hand signal, two Imperial Guard knights came to support him.

Kurt, who was overseeing this process, took a moment to scrutinize Seongjin with a strange expression before respectfully bowing and leaving with the patient and Calmen in the direction of the Pearl Palace.

Only then could Seongjin turn towards Masain.

He had thought that upon seeing him, Masain would rush over and scold him, but surprisingly, he simply stood afar, staring silently.

Feeling uneasy due to the strange atmosphere, Seongjin hesitantly approached him and began to speak.

"Uh, umm..."

"..."

"...I'm sorry for going out on my own, Sir Masain."

Masain stared at Seongjin for a moment before taking off his cloak and placing it over Seongjin's shoulders.

He carefully adjusted the clothing to hide the tattered old cloak and pajamas.

"Um, Sir Masain..."

"There's no need for Your Highness to apologize."

At his firm response, Seongjin looked up to find Masain's face weighed down as if he were carrying all the sorrows of the world.

"I am the head of security at Pearl Palace. This incident is entirely my fault."

"Huh? I was the one who went out, so why..."

"I've had a lot of self-reflection because of recent events."

Reflection? What do you have to reflect on?

"I failed to fully trust you, imposing my own standards on Your Highness. It drove you to make the decision to act without me, forcing you into a perilous outing on this ambitious night. Isn't all this my failure?"

Is he serious right now?

Seongjin was shocked.

Wait, no, no! Stop digging yourself into a hole over a simple outing!

"I'm ashamed to have dared to offer unsolicited advice to Your Highness, especially when I couldn't even fulfill my own responsibilities."

"Um, so..."

"I should have followed Your Highness with faith, but instead, I hoped for your trust while neglecting my duties as a subject. Realizing that now, I don't even know how to face you..."

"...Uh, Sir Masain?"

"I haven't even been claiming to protect Pearl Palace for long. What face should I show you now? If only I could atone through death..."

"Stop it! I was the one who did wrong, Knight Masain!"

I won't go out without telling you again, Knight Masain!

So please, stop overthinking it! Don't dig all the way into my core!

The Demon King suddenly asked, sounding rather jittery.

[It looks like you're trying to stop that guy from going overboard, or is it just my imagination?]

* * *

As soon as Seongjin arrived at Pearl Palace, he received a summons from the Holy Emperor.

He had planned to visit anyway. If someone was arbitrarily abducting people, this was a matter that he must report to the Emperor.

After quickly freshening up, Seongjin immediately headed to the main palace.

Perhaps because it was deep into the night, the main palace was still shrouded in darkness. Only the Holy Emperor's office was brightly lit.

"Normally, the entire Imperial Guard should have been put on emergency alert. Fortunately, His Majesty sent a messenger to Pearl Palace before the situation escalated," said Masain, his face still showing traces of gloom.

The prince had disappeared abruptly. It was a situation that could have turned the whole Imperial Court upside-down. Yet the Holy Emperor had assured the people at Pearl Palace and had ordered them to greet him at the Second East Gate.

"Wait, the Second East Gate?"

"That is exactly what His Majesty said."

The one who had specified the Second East Gate was the Holy Emperor.

That gentleman, just how long has he known?

"...How did he know I was missing?"

He was proud that he had left without leaving a trace, so he was extremely curious about how he was discovered.

However, the answer he got from Masain was unexpected.

"Your personal maidservant came to your room saying something was off."

Edith?

"Yes. She said she didn't hear your voice. Apparently, you usually mumble in your sleep around the same time."

".....?"

This was news to him.

I have such a habit?

Hey, Demon King? Do you know anything?

[.....]

The Demon King remained silent.

Usually, when he visited the main palace, he would keep his mouth shut so as not to offend the Emperor. But this time, Seongjin received a strange feeling of discomfort from the Demon King.

Something is suspicious about him.

Before he could ponder further, they arrived at the office.

"His Majesty is waiting for you, Your Highness."

Led by Louis, Seongjin entered the office.

He had been prepared to be scolded for causing a major incident, but the Holy Emperor's face was calmer than expected.

"You've arrived."

"...Yes."

He looked at Seongjin with a serene face and made a silent gesture.

".....?"

Not understanding the gesture, Seongjin approached. The Emperor's hand slowly moved towards his forehead.

Worried he was about to get a knuckle-rap, Seongjin tensed up. But suddenly, a bright streak of light burst from the Emperor's hand touching his forehead, showering down over his head.

It was then that Seongjin realized he had been feeling minor pains all over his body.

"The flow of your aura is disturbed. You must have used it recklessly in a short period."

Come to think of it, I might've used the Aura recklessly while fighting the Capital Guard.

The thought that this would be evident to him isn't exactly new anymore.

Having loosened his shoulders, Seongjin was met with the Emperor's nod.

"Sit."

He doesn't seem interested in reprimanding me for leaving without permission.

Feeling thus assured, Seongjin took the seat across and cut straight to the chase.

"Someone has been dragging all the Gray Plague patients to the heretic court. They've even nabbed people with simple skin conditions, claiming them to be the early stages of the curse. Are you aware of this?"

"....."

The Holy Emperor remained silent, but Seongjin could read the answer.

"So why then..."

He felt as if his questions were piling up, each stuck in his throat.

In fact, there was something he'd wanted to ask the Emperor for a while.

—Did Father know the true nature of the Gray Plague from the very beginning?

This question had lingered ever since Dasha reported about the Monster Special Task Force.

The evidence linking the Gray Plague and the new disease seemed too flimsy. The initial rashes and the later stages when the entire body turns gray. The parasitic eggs extracted from early patients and the stone fragments found on deceased bodies.

Shouldn't observing the transition from the former to the latter come first to establish their correlation?

Yet the Holy Emperor, as if waiting for it, had promptly classified the two as the same disease and ordered the formation of a new division. And he hadn't stopped Seongjin from joining under the pretext of consultation.

It was clear that he had some understanding of how well Seongjin knew about the monsters, and how easily he could detect the parasitic eggs by using the Demon King.

In any case, Seongjin was contemplating that the Holy Emperor did intend to solve the Gray Plague.

"The primary goal of the [Monster Special Task Force] was to resolve the Gray Plague. But someone's unilateral actions contradict that purpose, don't they? Why let them continue?"

"....."

After a moment of silence,

"...The Monster Special Task Force is,"

The Emperor finally spoke, his words cryptic.

"A small cog that will eventually support one pillar of Delcross, Morres."

Seongjin blinked in confusion.

Then he vaguely recalled a conversation he had with the Emperor a long time ago.

—A dynasty is like a finely-tuned clockwork mechanism.

Wait, when did we talk about that?

As he felt bewildered, the Holy Emperor continued.

"And the one now moving the Capital Guard on his own initiative is no different."

"...A part of that finely-tuned clockwork?"

Skeptically asking, Seongjin was met with a nod from the Emperor's impassive face.

"Yes, a delicate mechanism that will break if tampered with recklessly."

"....."

"Do you find the current situation unjust?"

As Seongjin met the Holy Emperor's gaze with his downcast eyes, the corners of the latter's lips seemed to rise ever so slightly.

"Do as you wish. If you want to correct that injustice, then so it shall be."

"Though it may seem now like an institution wielding unchecked power, the Heresy Tribunal originally began as a judiciary organ within the Holy Council. Though it has now become the highest authority overseeing both the Orthodox Church and the Theological Academy, the Holy Council was originally just one of the minor decision-making bodies within the Orthodox Church."

The Holy Council and the Heresy Tribunal, once minor divisions within the Orthodox Church, had grown into major organizations that even overshadowed the Orthodox Church itself. The Holy Emperor began to explain how these bodies had become independent and grown in power.

"There are still some loopholes within the Orthodox Church that allow it to exert direct influence on the Heresy Tribunal, even if they've become largely nominal. These are remnants of the old command structure."

For example, the Archbishop of the Orthodox Church can invoke something called [Temporary Emergency Authority], he explained.

When a grave issue threatens the empire's stability, this grants the authority to directly mobilize the capital's guard and the Heresy Tribunal.

"So, the ones capturing people right now aren't the Heresy Tribunal but someone within the Orthodox Church."

It would either be someone who has influence over the Archbishop or the Archbishop himself.

"The authority has its limits. It can't infringe on the Heresy Tribunal's original tasks, and upon invoking this authority, the approval of the Holy Council must be sought within three days."

Of course, the Heresy Tribunal could also request that this be rejected. However, this could only happen once the Holy Council begins its review. In the meantime, the Orthodox Church can mobilize the capital's guards and inquisitors who are between assignments as they see fit. The Heresy Tribunal can only sit on their hands while waiting for the review to begin.

"Even if the Inquisitors are told to round up the Grey Plague patients, actually accommodating them within the Heresy Tribunal is another issue. This will undoubtedly disrupt their operations."

"So, the Heresy Tribunal won't actually detain them? Then where do all these people go?"

"I suspect they are temporarily under the management of the capital's guard for now."

Seongjin frowned.

What does that mean?

Collecting people who won't even be accepted by the Heresy Tribunal? It would all be pointless if the review ends up rejected.

Seeming to sense what he was thinking, the Holy Emperor spoke casually, "Whoever instigated this surely knows this. They likely consider it a success if they can process about half of the plague patients."

"Half?"

"Yes. The rationale for invoking Temporary Emergency Authority and for requesting its cancellation are both important. If the Orthodox Church provides a solid rationale, the Holy Council will usually try to mediate instead of outright rejecting it. There may be some friction, but the Heresy Tribunal will eventually end up accommodating about half of the people brought in."

Seongjin tapped the armrests of his chair thoughtfully. Then it dawned on him.

"So, the deadline for bringing everyone in is today, which means today is the last of the three days. Tomorrow, the Orthodox Church will file for review, and the Heresy Tribunal will immediately request a cancellation."

"..."

"If anyone were to intervene, it would be best to do it before the review cancellation is requested and mediation by the Holy Council begins; specifically when there's a period of vague authority and responsibility."

"You catch on quickly, that's good."

At the Holy Emperor's casual reply, Seongjin looked at him intently and asked.

"May I take the fact that you (father) are explaining the structure of this winding mechanism to me to mean that you're also not particularly fond of this situation?"

"..."

"...So it's alright for me to do as I please, but if you interfere directly, something might falter?"

"..."

Though he received no answer, Seongjin felt satisfied. When the old man keeps his mouth shut, it usually means 'yes'.

"Go and receive cooperation documents from the administrative office tomorrow morning. Instruct Dorian to do so."

It was a royal command.

Seongjin got up, bowed slightly to the Holy Emperor, and left the study.

"The young Prince Morress is growing increasingly brilliant."

Louis, who had come late with tea, remarked somewhat regretfully. Serving the Holy Emperor, who enjoyed the aroma of tea but rarely drank it, made him secretly look forward to serving the prince, who would appreciate the drink.

"He was always an extraordinary child. The problem is that he applies that extraordinary talent only to what he wants to."

The Holy Emperor took a new cup of tea and replied.

Louis was a bit surprised because the young emperor, who rarely shows emotion, had a faint smile on his face.

"You seem pleased."

"Indeed. I can't help but be pleased. Whether it was taking action for Amelia a while back or volunteering to do something for the plague patients today, it must mean that Morres has developed some affection for Delcross."

Louis inwardly found it odd.

Isn't it only natural for the prince of Delcross to have affection for Delcross?

Reading into the Chief Chamberlain's puzzlement, the Holy Emperor gave a bitter smile.

"None of those things are obvious to that child, Louis."

The Capital Guards recently had an uneasy cohabitation with the 7th Knight Division.

The 6th Knight Division, with whom they had been working in the Imperial City, was divided and dispatched to the east and south. They now had to coordinate with the newly formed 7th Knight Division from the start.

Unlike the 6th Knight Division, which had helped occasionally, the 7th Knight Division was established with the sole purpose of defending the Imperial City. They began to interfere in the operations of the Capital Guards.

Naturally, constant discord arose as both sides had overlapping responsibilities and debated whose authority should take precedence.

And so the war between the two departments began to heat up, primarily through official correspondence requesting cooperation.

It was a typical morning.

Julia Meyer, the Lieutenant of the 7th Knight Division, was grinding her teeth while reading several documents that had flown in the wee hours of the morning.

"Damn these cooperation memos..."

As Julia muttered, the young knight accompanying her looked startled. Her strange behavior was unlike the usually disciplined and elegant senior.

The cooperation memos seemed to particularly target Julia Meyer. Not only because she was the Lieutenant responsible for the operations but also because she was the primary target of the Captain of the Capital Guards.

She was Julia Meyer, the only granddaughter of Cardinal Meyer, and a prodigy from her academy days in swordsmanship and academics.

By the end of her first year, she had caught the eye of the continent's top knight, Balthazar, becoming his immediate disciple. Her exceptional capabilities were so highly valued that she was appointed as Lieutenant not long after graduating from the academy.

Despite her excellent work ethic and respectable disposition, even she was getting exhausted by the pointless cooperation memos.

"They're asking us to give up our training ground for prisoner accommodation. Can you believe these cooperation memos?"

The knight reading the memos frowned.

"For prisoner accommodations, for the deployment of knights for prisoner management, for the supply of food for prisoners..."

"Why not use the perfectly good jail in the Capital Guard..."

"That's exactly my point. The creativity of the Captain of the Guard is shining brighter every day."

However, upon arriving at the Capital Guards, they couldn't deny that the cooperation memos were issued out of genuine need.

The prison of the Capital Guard was overflowing, and people with shabby appearances had occupied even the courtyard. An unpleasant smell filled the air.

"What is this..."

As they looked around, an armed knight from the Capital Guard and a junior knight from the 7th Knight Division were arguing.

"Hand these people over now!"

"No, I won't just send them off to the training ground without a proper list of their identities."

"I've already explained that a cooperation memo was sent to the person in charge!"

"Then provide a list of their identities. I'll issue a cooperation memo for the provision of data!"

"Hey, you!"

Just as she was seriously contemplating whether to barge into the Captain of the Capital Guards, someone tapped Julia on the shoulder.

"Are you Julia Meyer, the Lieutenant of the 7th Knight Division? It's an honor to meet someone so famous."

He was a cheerful, red-haired paladin.

"And you are?"

"Yes, I am Inquisitor Valerie. Lieutenant Julia, would you mind taking a look at this first?"

As Valerie handed her a sheet of paper, Julia couldn't help but frown. She was now irritated by documents from other departments.

"What is this?"

"[Monster Special Task Force] sends a cooperative official document to the 7th Knight Division."

"Monster Special Task Force?"

I had briefly heard rumors about the creation of some strange department, but as far as I knew, it wasn't yet an official division.

Thinking this, Julia skimmed through the documents and suddenly widened her eyes in surprise. She found a prominently stamped seal. However, the content of the document was rather plain.

—We seek your department's active cooperation.

".....?"

So, what are they asking us to cooperate with?

While she was puzzled, she saw someone approach the city guards to hand them a document as well. From their dark knight uniforms, it appeared they were an Exorcist.

An Inquisitor and an Exorcist; it was an odd combination.

During this, Inquisitor Valerie began to explain brightly,

"Starting this morning, the jurisdiction for deciding the treatment of these people has been transferred from the church as the Holy Council's approval process has begun. Since the Heresy Tribunal just formally filed for a review rejection, it's not even their jurisdiction yet. So, if any commands come down from either side regarding our department's work from now on, please know it would be a blatant abuse of power."

"But then, what does this phrase 'active cooperation' mean....."

"Yes. It's a request to 'actively do nothing.' We, the Monster Special Task Force, will handle everything!"

At the Inquisitor's cheerful expression, Julia was at a loss for words.

While this was happening, another group of oddly matched people began to stream into the city guard's courtyard.

"I see they've gathered quite an uncouth bunch. Even if it's an order from above, one should move with some discretion. If they've been brought here, then detain them properly. What's all this pointless fuss?"

First, a boy with an imposing demeanor, dressed in elegant clothes.

"Your Highness! These people are in a dire situation, but is there a need for you to personally intervene in matters involving the Heresy Tribunal? You could just leave it to your subordinates....."

"This is a time-sensitive matter, Sir Masain. Things will move faster if I'm there."

"Really? Why is that so?"

Following behind the boy, almost awkwardly given his large build, was a knight.

"Am I your personal secretary now? They keep summoning me for all sorts of matters."

"Didn't Dame Katrina specifically say to help me out? Keep it up, and I'll bite you."

"Ugh...!"

Next to them, a towering, glasses-wearing Paladin kept muttering.

"Your Highness has directly requested assistance from the Lyora Plague Association; it's an honor. What can I assist you with? Shall we extract blood from these people?"

"No, physician Jibril. I just need the credibility of the Lyora Plague Association. If the Holy Council says anything later, just testify that we sorted the patients through appropriate medical procedures."

"But I'm a plague doctor! I think we should actively treat the patients now that we are here!"

"Then at least disinfect the area by spraying some fragrance."

"Got it! Leave it to me!"

In a protective suit, a doctor from Lyora's Plague Association wielded a large sprayer.

"...What are these people doing?"

Muttering under his breath, one of the junior knights observed the peculiar group, and Julia scrutinized the boy at the center of this chaos.

His strong gaze reminded her of Queen Elizabeth, and the title 'Your Highness' made it clear.

"Prince Morres....."

"Yes? That chubby idiot?"

Shocked by the junior knight's outcry, Julia sternly corrected him,

"Watch your language. How dare you speak disrespectfully of a member of the imperial family!"

"I-I apologize!"

Meanwhile, a few members of the imperial guard arrived to set up tables and chairs.

"I apologize for burdening you with such menial tasks during your escort mission, Sir Haven."

"No worries, Your Highness! I've already dedicated myself to you! I will faithfully execute any command you give!"

"Don't say you've 'dedicated yourself' so casually."

"What? How could you say that's 'casual'? Isn't that a bit harsh?"

Another imperial guard pulled a large cart into the area.

"I've gathered all the rye bread from nearby, Your Highness!"

"Good job, Dame Claudia. Make sure to record all the expenses. We'll be billing the church later."

"Of course, Your Highness! Hehe, can I have one too?"

"....."

She could not even begin to guess what they were planning to do.

Amidst the city guard and 7th Knight Division who had surrounded the courtyard to watch, Prince Morres, who had been directing the entire situation, finally stepped forward.

He took a sweeping look over the commoners who filled the courtyard.

Some people had severe rashes or their whole bodies had turned gray, and they had collapsed on the ground as if unconscious. But more than half were patients with minor boils, simple skin diseases, or fevers.

All of them were anxiously eyeing the rye bread piled on the cart, swallowing their saliva with desperate looks.

Then Prince Morres spoke to them.

Though not amplified by aura, his voice strangely resounded clearly in their ears.

"From now on, for a short time, our monster-specialized unit will take charge of your ailments! Those suffering from the Gray Plague will receive treatment, and those who have been brought here by mistake will be safely returned, so rest assured!"

At that, the crowd's murmurs grew louder.

They had thought they would be imprisoned by the Inquisition and tortured to death.

"First, let those who can move come quickly to this table."

However, the people hesitated, only gauging the reactions of the guards, not daring to step forward.

Just yesterday, those who had insisted they didn't have the plague were severely beaten. What if they were foolish enough to step forward and get hit by the guards again?

But the situation changed as the prince continued his words.

"It seems like there's not enough rye bread, so it will be first-come, first-served..."

In an instant, the commoners surged forward, rushing towards the front. The ferocious glint in their eyes, aimed at the food, made even the guards who had brought them here flinch.

The young prince, far from being flustered, shouted at the people with an overwhelming presence.

"Form a line!"

78

The line was fairly long, but their assessment did not take much time.

From the get-go, those affected by the Gray Plague usually experienced a decrease in consciousness first. There were none who were infected with the larvae of Lophellum and could still walk on two legs.

About half of the people who had filled the prison and courtyard of the capital guard were quickly assessed as they passed by the table.

First Phase: Jibril, the plague doctor from Lyora.

Dressed in almost perfect protective gear, she briefly scanned the patients. If she determined they didn't have the Gray Plague, she immediately sprayed rose-scented perfume.

"Before standing before His Highness, thoroughly remove the foul smell to prevent disease! Foul smells are the root of all diseases!"

Damn charlatan Lyora plague doctor!

Second Phase: Trustworthy fighting dog Francis.

While incessantly coughing due to the strong perfume, he double-checked whether he felt the aura of demons from the patients passing by.

"You promised, Your Highness! To the commander, cough! Please properly convey my, cough efforts... choke!"

You good-for-nothing, only brag after you've done your job.

Third Phase: The bastard Demon King—along with Lee Seongjin.

The Demon King scrutinized the chests and heads of the people passing by and whispered to Seongjin.

[No Lophellum larvae, no inflammation. Confirmation complete. Hehehe.]

Feeling the pride emanating from him was rather uncomfortable.

Fourth Phase: Treasurer Masain.

He handed a few copper coins to the people who had been assessed and emphasized as he uncomfortably looked them in the eye.

"The one who saved your lives today is Prince Morres! Live without ever forgetting to be grateful. Understood?"

...Sir Masain, please stop! You're making me want to die of embarrassment!

And finally, they received a loaf of rye bread and an apple from Sir Haven and Dame Claudia before leaving the capital guard.

With a puzzled expression, she was wondering whether this was a dream or reality.

After a number of people had queued and been processed, Dame Claudia quietly murmured.

"Is giving just a few copper coins really enough? That'll barely cover a meal on their way home."

"It's appropriate," Seongjin replied.

"If you can take these people to their homes and watch over them until they spend all the money, then more can be given. But..."

Unneeded favors can sometimes be poison to those who cannot handle it. It's unfortunate, but that's the limit.

"...Ah!"

Dame Claudia seemed to have an epiphany and looked at Seongjin with twinkling eyes.

She looks at me like that every time she's hungry. Didn't she sneakily eat a loaf of rye bread earlier?

Just when there were only a few people left in line, a burly middle-aged man rushed out from the building of the capital guard.

He was the tardy captain of the capital guard who just heard about the situation.

"What is, what is all this nonsense?! Why are you releasing all the prisoners?!"

Then, Dame Sharon, who had been monitoring the capital guard, stepped forward to intercept him.

"I am under the impression that I delivered an official document stamped with the seal for cooperation. Didn't you receive it?"

"I did, but what do you mean by actively cooperating... furthermore, releasing the prisoners on your own! These people were arrested under orders from higher-ups! No one should arbitrarily...!"

"Hehe. If you don't understand, let me explain again. Once the approval review by the Holy Council begins, the temporary emergency measures are deemed to be over. And the Heresy Tribunal has also withdrawn its hand by requesting a review rejection. So, no side has the right to decide their fate now. Hehe."

"What kind of nonsense is this! Even if so, these people aren't immediately under the jurisdiction of the Monster Special Task Force! At least until the Holy Council decides their policy, they should naturally be managed by the capital guard!"

The captain was right. Technically, the Monster Special Task Force was the third party meddling out of the blue.

"Isn't it also not within the jurisdiction of the capital guard?"

"We must follow the temporary emergency measures..."

"But those measures are no longer under the jurisdiction of the Orthodox Church."

"But ultimately, they should be imprisoned by the Heresy Tribunal..."

"Unfortunately, they're not within their jurisdiction right now either. Then why are you interfering with the [official duties] of the Monster Special Task Force?"

"Krrrgh...!"

The captain's face was losing its patience as he listened to Sharon's thin, leisurely voice.

In the meantime, the last person hastily left the capital guard, leaving only dozens of unconscious patients in the courtyard.

Thud. The captain, drained of strength, slumped down on the spot.

'Is it time to console him?'

Seongjin approached the captain.

"You've always worked hard defending the capital. Because we had our own [official duties] that we were desperate for, we couldn't ask for your cooperation in advance. I apologize."

"...Prince Morres."

The guard captain stood up brusquely, his face visibly frustrated, and began to argue.

"Your Highness! This is a difficult situation for us when you suddenly push us like this! Have you even considered our position of having to bring back all those people we've just released?"

"That's not possible anymore. The temporary emergency measures have already ended. From now on, if innocent citizens are harmed, I will deem it as an arbitrary decision on your part and take appropriate measures."

"Arbitrary decision? The orders clearly stated to arrest even those showing rashes!"

"Exactly, so why do you think you were told to arrest those with rashes?"

"That's obviously because rashes are the initial symptoms of the curse...!"

"Exactly, the key point is that the rashes are initial symptoms of the Gray Plague."

Seongjin interrupted the guard captain's words and brought forward Jibril Seymour, who was standing behind him.

Jibril Seymour.

She was the same plague doctor who had once sprayed rose perfume on Seongjin and his party in court. She had been hastily invited when a familiar face was spotted during a visit to the Lyora Plague Association's office.

Although she was clearly a charlatan, she was heavily armed in a hazmat suit and looked quite like a specialist.

"So, we sought advice from the Lyora Plague Association. As you know, they are a scholarly faction that has been recognized by the Holy Council for their expertise. To not trust them is akin to not acknowledging the authority of the Holy Council itself."

The guard captain glared at Seongjin with a scowling face.

Hey, don't get mad.

Since we dismissed the people who are under review by the Holy Council, don't you need an excuse to tell the Council later?

"Also, thankfully, the deputy commander of the St. Aurelion Knight Order has personally stepped in."

Seongjin pointed to a grumpy-looking knight who was frowning in the back.

"Isn't a paladin who serves under His Holiness, the Holy Emperor is the most reliable person to detect the curse of the devil. He was the one who first discovered the outbreak in the tribunal not long ago. In the past, he was able to save the life of a knight who had contracted the Gray Plague. It was all thanks to Sir Francis."

The guard captain then tugged at his mustache and looked uncomfortable.

"Your Highness. The capital guards are merely following orders. Isn't it the responsibility of the Heresy Tribunal to determine whether it is a curse or not? You're ignoring all proper procedures!"

"Is that so? You may not have heard, but the Heresy Tribunal has already concluded that the Gray Plague is not associated with the devil. If you still unjustly detain innocent people and something happens to them, do you think the Heresy Tribunal will take responsibility? In the end, all the blame will fall on the inflexible capital guards."

"..."

"By the way, it's going to take some time for the Holy Council to mediate. What was your plan for managing all those people in the meantime? Would there even be enough food for them?"

People from the slums who can't even get proper treatment anyway. Even if they hadn't been brought here, they would have died in the slums, so the intention was merely to detain them loosely. However, the captain of the guard couldn't bring himself to say that outright.

"...We've also been considering various measures. We've sent several official documents asking for cooperation to the 7th Knights Division..."

"In that case, there's no need to send more official documents now that all problems have been solved. It's a good thing, isn't it? Just manage the remaining prisoners well."

"....."

The boy's face, which sneaked a sly grin while responding to every little thing, was annoyingly irritable.

The captain of the guard's eyes narrowed slightly as he looked at Seongjin.

"Speaking of which, I had something else I wanted to ask you, Your Highness. Last night, some of the capital guards were seriously injured while on duty. What are your thoughts on this disgraceful event happening within the Empire where His Holiness's law exists?"

"Oh? Did something like that happen? I hope the injured guards get the treatment they need. Ah, speaking of which..."

Seongjin frowned as he continued.

"Last night, the knight who was escorting my [guest] from Pearl Palace was also severely assaulted on the road. An assault on an Imperial [guest] and a group attack on an Imperial Knight, even drawing a sword on a member of the Imperial family who tried to stop them. How do you propose we deal with such rampant incidents within the Empire, where the law still exists?"

"..."

"Plotting to assassinate the prince after undermining the imperial family, they're truly a nefarious group. I'm really curious to know under whose orders they were operating."

"Uh...."

"One thing, I'm too busy with [official duties] to pay attention to this. So, I plan to delegate all investigations entirely to the capital guard. Can you handle it quietly, without any fuss?"

"...We will devote our utmost effort, Your Highness."

The guard captain, with a drained expression, swallowed his saliva and retreated.

[Didn't you say you'd appease them? Why are you threatening?]

"Threatening without even raising a fist? Considering the situation, that was quite a mild way of appeasing them.'

[...]

The real issue starts now.

Everyone lying here is suffering from the grey plague. From now on, I have to decide who to save.

In the past three days, almost 150 people were roughly dragged in by the capital guards.

About half of them, those who could still move, had already left this place.

Seongjin scanned the courtyard and prison cells, quickly surveying those who were lying down. He then selected around ten people who were unconscious due to illnesses other than the grey plague.

After having Jibril and Francis check on each of them, he sent them to the Imperial Medical Center. Now, only those suffering from the grey plague remained within the capital guards.

"...Will you extract the eggs from all of these people? Time is running out.."

Seeing still around 50 people remaining, Masain asked with a worried look.

Seongjin provided a clear criterion.

"Tell the guards to give them water. Exclude those who can't swallow."

Soon after, the guards of the capital, each carrying a bowl of water, began to pour water into the mouths of the prisoners one by one.

While Seongjin was walking around inside and outside the prison giving various orders, the guards were somewhat flustered but were following his instructions.

Since the entire monster-specialized unit was operating smoothly under his command, naturally everyone recognized this young boy as the ultimate authority. Even the captain of the guard simply watched as the prince wandered around issuing orders.

Moreover, although he didn't assert his status or authority, his words carried an inexplicable weight. Nobody felt like opposing him.

Thus, another ten or so people who could barely swallow water were selected. Now, only those truly in the late and middle stages of the Gray Plague remained in the prison.

"Take those we've filtered out to the medical chamber and begin the extraction process."

After giving that command, Seongjin turned away without hesitation.

Those already advanced in the Gray Plague stages appeared to have no hope of recovery.

Their brains were filled with inflammatory crystals, and the Demon King had confirmed that their brains were completely damaged. Even at a glance, their bodies had hardened like wooden logs; they were barely breathing.

Whether that was a reversible change was another issue. Either way, those who couldn't even drink water had no chance of survival, especially since intravenous nutrition wasn't an option with the current medical technology.

In that case, handing them over to both the Heresy Tribunal and the Orthodox Church would be beneficial for everyone.

It might seem callous, but Seongjin thought it was the best course of action.

'From the Heresy Tribunal's point of view, they may not want these people, but if another department takes them away, that could hurt their pride. However, if I simply reduce the numbers a bit, they are more likely to accept.'

The Orthodox Church was no different.

If they smuggled out all the prisoners, the church's credibility would be diminished, and the desperate Orthodox Church might again invoke emergency measures.

However, if a significant number of confirmed Grey Plague patients were left behind, the likelihood of quietly waiting for the evaluation to end would increase.

If the initial aim was about half of the total performance from the beginning, 'then I should be satisfied with just about a quarter of that half.'

While Seongjin was lost in various thoughts, Masain was engrossed in a strange sentiment as he studied Seongjin's face.

He had cautiously expressed his dissenting opinions since Seongjin moved the Monster Special Task Force in the morning.

"If Your Highness is concerned about the fate of the falsely arrested imperial citizens, it would be appropriate to lean toward rejecting the deliberation by exerting pressure on the council now. If it's rejected, everyone will be released. Otherwise, you risk making both the Orthodox Church and the heresy tribunal your enemies."

"But then, those who were wrongly implicated would suffer, and the early-stage Grey Plague patients would miss their treatment window, wouldn't they?"

"Even so, I disagree. If Your Highness intervenes and personally decides the life and death of these innocent citizens, there will inevitably be those who later shift the blame onto you, exploiting their deaths. Moreover, there will be many who question your judgment and pour criticism on your qualifications..."

"Sir Masain."

Having grown up watching his father fight bloody battles of justification with brothers and sisters, the activities of Seongjin appeared to Masain as perilous endeavors that could jeopardize his own standing.

Yet, the young prince was surprisingly resolute.

"Matters that will happen later can be dealt with later. For now, let's focus only on how many people we can save."

"... "

The young prince, who seemed to be brimming with a commitment to help the citizens at great risk, was now ruthlessly dividing those who would live from those who would die. That demeanor was unnervingly cold.

Masain felt that this young prince seemed exceedingly unfamiliar yet, on the other hand, oddly familiar, making him inadvertently shake his head in disbelief.

79

Not even two hours had passed since the Monster Special Task Force made an unannounced attack on the Capital Guard. The situation had already been completely resolved.

Those who were wrongfully taken away due to skin diseases and other rashes left the Capital Guard with somewhat satisfied expressions after receiving food and money. No trace of resentment was visible on their faces. They could have been dragged to the Heresy Tribunal and possibly tortured to death, but as things ended well, everything seemed like an unexpected turn of events.

Other patients with serious illnesses were transferred to the palace's medical institution to receive treatment. These were people who, under normal circumstances, would have never stepped foot in a medical institution and would have died at home in the slums. Now, they had the chance to receive proper treatment.

Even some early-stage patients of the "Grey Plague" were sent to the royal physicians for diagnosis and treatment.

The remaining patients were those who seemed beyond recovery. The number had been reduced so precisely that there was no further need for emergency measures from the Orthodox Church, yet they could still be managed by the Capital Guard.

Julia Meyer, who had been monitoring the situation in real-time, couldn't help but click her tongue internally.

Honestly, she couldn't guarantee that things would have been resolved this smoothly even if she had stepped in.

"Your Highness' decisiveness is truly impressive, isn't it?" The red-haired Inquisitor standing next to her grinned slightly.

"I didn't expect His Highness to barge into the Capital Guard since early morning. Initially, he was only summoned for advice, but soon enough, the entire department was operating under His Highness' commands."

"Right. It seems we no longer need the cooperation document that arrived at dawn."

Julia handed over the documents she had been holding to a junior knight.

"For now, our 7th Knight Division will fully cooperate with the Monster Special Task Force. But tell me, Sir Valerie, are you okay with this? Isn't this crossing the line as an Inquisitor and going against the Heresy Tribunal?"

"Well, I'm a member of the Monster Special Task Force. Plus, the Heresy Tribunal has already rejected the case for review. Maybe our seniors are secretly relieved that the burden has been reduced?"

Valerie glanced briefly at the patients being transferred into the guard's prison.

"Your Highness has made a big decision. In some ways, aren't these people the most desperate citizens of the Empire? If he hadn't intervened at all, he would certainly face criticism for neglecting the needy later on."

"Even though it was the Orthodox Church that initially commanded them to be brought in?"

"Yes, they probably planned to leave everything to the Heresy Tribunal after consulting the church. Who would dare to object to the judgment of the Heresy Tribunal?"

"I see," Julia responded briefly and nodded her head.

"God commands us to love his people as we love our own children. Don't you think His Highness is being overly pragmatic as a member of the Imperial Family?"

"I am a soldier of Delcross before I am a member of the Capital Guard responsible for protecting the citizens. Even the lives of healthy people sometimes need to be strategically sacrificed. I have no intention of blaming His Highness for not clinging desperately to those with no hope."

"I see. It's a wicked choice as a prince."

"But it's the most efficient choice as a soldier, blocking the possibility of reimplementing temporary emergency measures." Julia then turned her head towards Valerie. Her unique purple eyes examined his face with a serious gaze. "I can tell that you also think His Highness didn't make the wrong choice. Stop beating around the bush and tell me directly, Sir Valerie. Do you feel any guilt for contributing to determining the fate of these innocent people?"

At that, Valerie shrugged his shoulders.

"No, it's not like that. I was just curious to see how others would think. When I look at Your Highness, there are times when it feels peculiar."

"Peculiar?"

"Yes. Didn't Dame Julia just mention it? That as a soldier, it's the most efficient choice."

"....."

"What's fascinating is that sometimes he feels less like a prince who has grown up splendidly in the palace, and more like a seasoned soldier from the southern frontlines."

"Sir Valerie!"

Just then, a bright voice called him from the other side.

Prince Morres was cheerfully waving his hand towards them.

"The Orthodox Church has dispatched the Knights of St. Bastian. Let's get out of here before we run into them!"

Hahaha.

Valerie let out a hearty laugh and gave Julia a mischievous glance.

"Well then, we shall execute a strategic retreat, Dame Julia. Thank you for your proactive collaboration so far."

And the red-haired Inquisitor bounded towards the prince with a jovial stride.

"We must hurry, Your Highness! The Bastian folks are a bit dense. Running into them will undoubtedly be tiresome."

"Really? Even if for the Knights of St. Marcias?"

"What, you say that when I'm standing right here? St. Marcias and St. Bastian have been notoriously incompatible. The seniors have always complained that they can't communicate."

"Shouldn't we also consider the stance of the Knights of St. Bastian? Perhaps both sides dislike each other for the same reason?"

"Hahaha! I can't deny the possibility."

They chatted back and forth as they quickly moved away, followed in a line by the commander of the imperial guard, an inquisitor, and the palace knights along with plague doctors.

It was a strange combination, yet oddly fitting.

Julia, who had been watching them for a moment, soon led her junior knights away from the scene. She wholeheartedly agreed with Valerie that encountering the Knights of St. Bastian would be tiresome.

* * *

St. Bastian Church.

Built over 500 years ago, this beautiful church has upheld more than half of the thousand-year history of the Holy Kingdom Delcross. It serves as the cradle for the Knights of St. Bastian and the headquarters of the Orthodox Church.

On one of its high spires, in the archbishop's office, two elderly men in magnificent robes were sitting across from each other.

"It seems we've grown old. I wish we wouldn't set up meetings in a place this high anymore."

Archbishop Albus Meyer, the head of the Council, removes his bishop's hat and wipes the sweat off his forehead.

The elderly woman sitting across from him snorted.

"It's too late to complain now. Don't you remember summoning me here day after day when you were archbishop?"

"You were in your prime back then."

"Stop whining. We are all growing old. I commute to this high place every day."

The saying that people grow old together didn't seem to be empty words; the majority of the woman's hair covered in grey streaks made her look even older than Cardinal[1] Meyer, depending on how you looked at it.

Archbishop Wesker.

The current head of the Orthodox Church, she became a high priest at a relatively young age and had risen through the ranks to archbishop from a bishop faster than anyone else.

Thanks to an eyepatch over her right eye, Archbishop Wesker looked more like a battle-hardened veteran than a clergywoman. The fact that she had sustained a deep wound that could not be healed, despite her strong divine powers, indirectly showed just how fierce a life she had led.

"Originally, the reason I summoned you here was to ask for your advice on the upcoming screening process, but..."

"I heard the news on my way here. The prince has considerably reduced our workload, hasn't he?"

"Yes, that Prince Morres."

Archbishop Wesker frowned deeply, her face wrinkling all over.

"He really pulled quite a stunt today. When I hastily sent the Bastian Knights, there were already fewer than 40 prisoners left."

"Commander of the guard is not an easy person, either."

"He pushed in cooperation documents stamped with imperial seals and released people in the blink of an eye. The commander didn't even have a chance to stop it."

"Haha, indeed."

Cardinal Meyer chuckled and stroked his beard.

"He did leave a reasonable number, though. As you know, there are precedents for the screening process. It would have been difficult to hand over more than that to the Heresy Tribunal. It's more than enough that he sorted out the innocent beforehand."

"That's what makes it more infuriating! Unfortunately, his effectiveness isn't bad, and when you blame the prince, things seem to have cleaned up!"

Archbishop Wesker seemed irritated just thinking about it.

"What on earth is he doing? Has he completely given up his right to the throne? Doesn't he care about his reputation? The high-ranking members of the Orthodox Church and the Heresy Tribunal will now turn their backs on him."

"If he cared about reputation, would he be doing these absurd things to begin with?"

Cardinal Meyer wiped the sweat from his forehead a couple more times and neatly placed the mitre back on his head.

Then he looked straight into Archbishop Wesker's eyes and spoke in a slightly lowered voice.

"I think you know it too. You've really crossed the line this time."

"..."

"Don't even think about making nonsense excuses like being cursed by a demon, as you submitted in the review documents. You're not a simpleton who would blindly charge in like Benitus. Don't you know best that as long as His Majesty the Holy Emperor exists, demonkind can't extend its claws into the Imperial City."

"...Even if it's not a curse, it doesn't matter, Your Eminence. The patients with the gray plague are dangerous."

"Is that why you arrested people who might not even be infected?"

"The symptoms were revealed; I didn't want to miss a single case. Whether they're infected or not will be determined during the review period."

Archbishop Wesker didn't want innocent people to get involved either.

She simply had her own calculations.

Patients in the late stages of the gray plague would die while waiting for the screening, and during that time, patients in the early stages would have progressed to a point where their symptoms could be identified.

Even if a small sacrifice was made during this process, it was nothing compared to the risk that would occur if they were left in the Imperial City.

"If the Heresy Tribunal had done their duty, this wouldn't have happened. When even one more capture is insufficient, now they are standing idly by, making the excuse of an unknown thing called [monster] spreading the disease."

"The duty of the Heresy Tribunal is to fight heresy. Not to arrest random plague patients."

"If it poses a serious threat to the safety of Delcross, shouldn't we condemn them, even if we have to accuse them of non-existent devil worship!"

"Archbishop Wesker, you really..."

Cardinal Meyer sighed.

Although they are now leading separate entities, the Heresy Tribunal and the Orthodox Church, Benitus and Wesker were originally junior priests who had long worked together under his leadership.

Benitus, who would charge headlong without considering the repercussions if it involved stepping over the strict religious line, and Wesker, who didn't mind skirting the edge of doctrinal taboos for the sake of pragmatism.

If only one could mix the two half and half, how wonderful that would be.

"I'm no stranger to your fiery personality, but you are now the leader of an organization. There are limits to acting first and dealing with the consequences later, just like in your days as a high priest. Do you think His Highness is the only one who's been labeled a troublemaker by high-ranking officials due to this incident? I wonder what you're going to say to him now.."

"..."

"I say this because it seems His Majesty values you quite highly. I, too, don't want to lose a talented individual who has served under me for a long time. Do you understand? The fact that His Majesty has given His Highness a letter of cooperation branded with the Emperor's seal is not to be taken lightly."

Archbishop Wesker remained silent.

She looked at Cardinal Meyer with sunken eyes and rose from her seat. She slowly walked toward a wardrobe in the corner of her office.

"Your Eminence, I still dream of those days from time to time."

Inside the wardrobe was a small wooden box. She picked it up and gently stroked it as she spoke.

"The days when you led the Orthodox Church and I was still a high priest. Fighting against demon cults and purging the underground dark orders, following His Majesty. A time when there were no suspicions and doubts, and it felt good just to forge ahead."

"..."

"I remember the time when I thrust the holy relic with all my strength into the torso of the demon that took my eyes. And finally, when His Holiness[2] crushed its neck with the Nutcracker."

The archbishop pushed the wooden box toward Cardinal Mayer.

When the cardinal slowly opened the lid, inside was a translucent, milky-white stone-like object. It looked as if it was made of crystal, but its form was irregular, twisted together like an aged lump of oil—a sinister mass.

"This stone is dangerous, Your Eminence."

"What is this..."

"These are occasionally found in cremation grounds. Sometimes, these stones emerge from the heads of the Gray Plague victims who have been executed by the Heresy Tribunal."

Cardinal Mayer racked his faint memories. He was certain he had seen such a stone before.

Hadn't Wesker, when she was still a senior priest, shown him something like this in this very place and reported it?

After a long moment of pondering, the cardinal suddenly widened his eyes.

"You don't mean, the Ansa village...!"

"Yes, Your Eminence. I clearly saw it that day. The entire village and its surroundings were being sucked into a human body! That's when I realized that the seed of unrest must be eradicated, even at some cost."

In the sole remaining eye of Archbishop Wesker, who was facing the cardinal, a flame that looked like a form of madness was fiercely burning.

"Do you find the pain that some of our faithful are currently going through pitiable? If we leave it as it is, eventually there will be no more commoners left to suffer."

T/N:

1. Note that the Cardinals are ranked higher than Archbishops[↔]
2. His Holiness here refers to Holy Emperor[↔]

80

The patients with the gray plague that were rescued by the Capital Guard were immediately transferred to the Imperial Palace's medical facility for extraction surgery.

As the patients with shabby appearances began to pour in, the physicians openly scowled. However, with the prince himself standing and glaring, they reluctantly set aside other tasks to treat the patients.

Although he had repeatedly instructed the physicians to take good care of the patients until they woke up, Seongjin was skeptical about their recovery.

Most had already developed psychic crystals in their brains.

Even the academy students, who were relatively fine due to early discovery, had not yet regained consciousness. It was unlikely that those whose brains had been damaged by psychic crystals would easily regain consciousness.

"How is the patient who was brought to Pearl Palace yesterday?"

"Physician Ninnias is currently treating him, but there doesn't seem to be much progress."

The patient brought by Sir Calmen was currently receiving intensive care from Dr. Ninnias at Pearl Palace.

He had undergone extraction surgery as soon as he was brought in last night, but he was still unconscious and even struggling to swallow medication.

Well, he might be beyond saving. According to the Demon King, his brain was thoroughly damaged.

Still, they had to go through the motions of treating him.

After all, Seongjin had publicly declared him a 'guest' of Pearl Palace. Considering the attitudes of Sir Calmen and Sir Kurt, a bad premonition that the patient might not be unrelated to Morres's past actions surfaced.

"I can't promise anything since the disease has progressed quite a bit. Even with the priests pouring in divine power, the gray plague patients show no response. Moreover, his health was already in a severely weakened state," explained Dr. Ninnias to Seongjin, who had returned to Pearl Palace and visited the treatment room.

The patient appeared much cleaner, likely due to the maids' care.

However, his skinny body, full of wrinkles, and thinning hair suggested that he had been malnourished for a long time.

Above all, his aura activity was barely perceptible, indicating weak life signs.

If he had been the commander of the Royal Guard, he would surely have been an aura user. How did such a person end up in this state?

"Commander..."

Calmen, who had been fussing since yesterday, was a complete mess, sticking right beside the patient and staying up all night.

His face was swollen from bruises, and he had a splint on one arm; still, he had no regard for his own condition and was solely focused on tending to the patient.

Continuously wiping the patient's face and limbs with a wet towel, as if trying to make him absorb water through his skin.

"Sir Calmen, you two must have had a special relationship. It's unfortunate."

Seongjin had carelessly remarked, thinking they were not related, but Sir Kurt asked, "Do you happen to not remember anything about him, Your Highness?"

Ah, I see.

This person must've had some relation to Morres.

"Regrettably, I don't have any recollection."

"...I see."

Looking at Sir Kurt's seemingly calmer face, Seongjin recalled the conversations he'd heard the previous night at the knight's dormitory.

"-Because of what happened back then, Calmen still can't raise his head around the 2nd Knight Division..."

"-It's all Sir Kurt's fault. Despite being a 2nd Division knight himself, he quietly supports the prince."

[TL/N: Refer to Chapter 73]

This meant that Sir Kurt, despite knowing all the details of the case, bore no particular grudge against Morres. Perhaps he could offer a fairly objective explanation about what had happened in the past.

Seongjin gave him a light nod.

"Sir Kurt. If it's alright, could we talk about that man?"

Behind him, he felt the aura of Masain taking a sharp breath, as if startled.

Well, he (Masain) had been the commander of the 2nd Knight Division not long ago, so he must know something.

However, this is a man who hasn't even disclosed to Seongjin that he's part of the royal family. If he decides that Morres doesn't need to know, he will keep his mouth shut.

Ignoring the somewhat anxious Masain, Seongjin followed Sir Kurt out of the treatment room.

"That man is Commander Bruno. About 7-8 years ago, he became the commander of the Imperial Guard and led the forces."

Leaning against the window in the hallway, Seongjin listened to Sir Kurt's explanation.

Bruno Green.

He was a refugee from Ortona and, after joining the Imperial Guard, he received the surname Green for his various accomplishments. Remarkably, he had risen to the position of a commander, which is rare for a commoner.

Considering the sons of famous martial artists who have been training since childhood, Bruno was a self-made man who rose through the ranks due to his innate talent.

Especially during the early years of the Imperial rule, he stood by the Emperor's side, wielding his sword valiantly.

"...He was a confidant of my father?"

Seongjin widened his eyes and asked. It seemed unlike the Emperor to neglect someone so close to him.

"But doesn't His Majesty usually take good care of his people?"

"Yes, His Majesty highly valued Commander Bruno. It was the Emperor who recognized him despite his lowly background, opened the path for him, and even personally bestowed upon him his surname. He didn't skimp on support."

Having the Emperor's favor, Bruno Green fully utilized his talent and eventually reached the level of a Decalon Knight. The Emperor then, as if he had been waiting for this moment, appointed him as the commander of the Imperial Guard.

Even the nobles who couldn't accept a commoner as a commander were quickly suppressed. Some even complained about the excessive favoritism.

2nd Imperial Guard Commander.

A commoner knight who had been scraping by at the front lines had suddenly risen to a position only second to the continent's greatest knight, Sir Baltazhar.

At that time, as Sir Baltazhar was busy at the southern front, it was only natural for Commander Bruno to supervise the swordsmanship training of the imperial princes.

Ah, so that's the connection with Morres.

"Did some friction occur during the lessons?"

Rather than answering Seongjin's conjecture, Sir Kurt seemed uncomfortable and averted his eyes.

"...It wasn't so much friction, but rather bad luck."

Commander Bruno's swordsmanship lessons had been peaceful for a while.

Back then, the students that Commander Bruno taught were Logan and Morres. Prince Logan was such a modest and diligent student that he didn't need much teaching. Moreover, he was a genius in swordsmanship; when taught one thing, he would grasp twenty.

Morres, on the other hand, was usually absent, spending his days unseen, making it difficult for any incidents or accidents to occur.

Starting to enjoy training new disciples, Commander Bruno then shifted his attention to a new student—a commoner boy from his neighborhood who showed promise.

"That student is none other than Sir Calmen."

Ah, so Calmen was involved in all this.

It's said that Commander Bruno took great care of young Calmen. During work hours, he would have him sit in his office with some food. During swordsmanship lessons, Calmen was often seen practicing alongside Prince Logan.

Gradually, the people in the palace grew accustomed to seeing Calmen at the Commander's side. Although he was still young, he was tacitly considered the official apprentice of the Commander.

However, this peace didn't last long.

One day, while Calmen was waiting for the Commander alone in the royal garden, Queen Elizabeth and Morres appeared. And for some unknown reason, a fight broke out between the two boys.

"I'm not sure about the details. The only witnesses were the Queen and her attendants, and they all claimed Calmen was the one who committed the impiety."

At that time, Calmen had no one on his side.

Well, it makes sense. It's unlikely for an ignorant commoner boy to challenge higher-ups outright.

Seongjin speculated that perhaps the two who passed by picked a fight with Calmen for no reason.

The problem was that the fight left visible injuries on both children.

And to make matters worse, it happened right in front of Queen Elizabeth.

"By the time the guards arrived, the Prince already had a bruise on his face, and Calmen's forehead was bloody from being slashed."

So Morres even drew his sword?

"And the Queen ordered the immediate execution of Calmen."

"What? A child?"

"Well, he did harm the Prince, so..."

"Even so, he was defending himself against a sword! So he should just die?"

At Seongjin's incredulous reply, Sir Kurt's expression subtly changed.

In the end, Commander Bruno, responsible for the situation, was summoned. The furious Queen Elizabeth demanded he take responsibility and personally execute the boy on the spot.

"..."

Wow, that's extreme.

Commander Bruno pleaded for mercy, but the Queen's stance was unwavering.

In the end, he had to make a drastic choice.

In order to save Calmen's life, he had to resign as Commander and destroy his own Aura Layer, effectively crippling himself.

From a Decalon Knight to a man unable to gather even a handful of Aura—it was akin to death for a warrior.

Thus, Commander Bruno, whose Aura Layer was shattered, was cast out of the palace half-dead, without proper medical treatment. As for Calmen, who directly caused the downfall of the Commander, he was considered an ungrateful wretch among the SecondDivision Knights and still remains in an awkward position.

Hearing the unexpectedly brutal details, Seongjin was at a loss for words for a while before finally asking in a trembling voice.

"... What about Father? What did Father say at the time?"

"How could we dare to fathom His Majesty's profound intentions?"

Kurt was vague in his explanation, but Seongjin knew.

The Holy Emperor did nothing at the time!

Commander Bruno, whom he had cherished, was not stopped from becoming a cripple and being expelled. Even a man of his power, who could easily work miracles with just a touch, didn't even offer the man a proper treatment.

Why on Earth?

"Anyway, the commander ending up like that is all my fault," said Seongjin, feeling a headache creeping in.

At this point, he was even grateful for the rude glares that Calmen used to give him.

Whenever he looked at his face, he felt like stabbing him with a knife; how had he held back until now?

As Seongjin was massaging his forehead, Masain, standing beside him, exclaimed in a fluster, "That's not true, Your Highness! You're not the one who requested his punishment, are you? You were just a child who knew nothing back then!"

"Being young doesn't absolve me of responsibility, Sir Masain."

Seongjin quickly organized his thoughts.

Initially, he had thought to help as much as possible just for the sake of making eye contact with Sir Calmen, but now he realized that he must do his best to treat the former commander.

The man had ended up in the slums and contracted the Gray Plague; in the end, it was all because of Morres' actions.

But how could the man be cured?

A person whose brain has completely deteriorated can't be revived even with modern medicine.

The only possibility he could think of was to seek help from the Holy Emperor and bring about a miracle, but...

'If he completely ignored it just as before, what would change now?'

Well, it's not like I don't know how that man is.

There must be some reason, Seongjin thought.

"First of all, I will talk to my father. Both of you, help Doctor Ninnias here. Make sure that the commander gets the best treatment possible..."

As Seongjin, having made up his mind, lifted his head to speak, the treatment room door violently swung open.

"Don't bother pretending to care! It's all useless now!"

Turning around, he saw Calmen, his face flushed red, glaring menacingly at Seongjin.

"What kind of impudent language is this before His Highness..."

With a stern face, Masain took a step forward, but Calmen, exploding with anger, cut him off.

"Why? Did I say something wrong? Stop pretending not to know, stop pretending to care! You all think there's no hope for the commander anyway! That it would be easiest to just bury him and be done with it! Don't you?"

Calmen's eyes seemed to flare with intense anger, as if sparks were flying from them.

'Doesn't he look like he's so mad he can't see anything else right now?'

"How dare you show me pity like you're doing some noble deed? It's too late! What use is it now when things have gotten this far!"

"Sir Calmen..."

"You people know nothing! Do you know what the commander always said, even after being driven out of the palace? That it was an immense honor to have been by His Majesty's side even for a moment! That he has no regrets! He always said that like a mantra! But look at this! Is this the tragic end for a lifetime of devotion to Delcross and His Majesty? I can't, I can't..."

Shaking uncontrollably, Calmen couldn't continue speaking. Sir Kurt quickly approached him.

"Sir Calmen, please calm down. His Majesty also did his best for the commander's treatment."

"Don't make me laugh, Sir Kurt! The 2nd Knight Division is the same!"

Calmen shouted as if he was lamenting.

"Back then, was there anyone from the 2nd Knight Division who stood up for the commander? You did nothing for him! You looked down on him because he was a commoner, and now you suddenly talk about pity when he is tragically expelled! You are no different from that worthless prince!"

Is he going to cross the line at this rate?

Seongjin frowned, and the arrows of anger were aimed back at him.

"Nice job, you say! So, it's all your fault, is it? Even if you're young, it doesn't mean you're not responsible. Stop saying things you don't mean! Anyway, you don't remember anything!"

"...Yeah."

"And all you could do is discuss with His Majesty? Why? Because he's..."

Thud!

Before Calmen could finish his sentence, he fell to the ground, knocked out by a punch from Seongjin.

"....."

Facing the bewildered expressions of Masain and Sir Kurt, Seongjin hastily explained.

"Uh, sorry. I didn't mean for this to happen, but it seemed like he was really going to commit a serious act of disrespect, so I acted without thinking."

I mean, isn't disrespecting the prince and His Majesty not much different in weight?

He seems out of it, maybe he should rest.

As Seongjin thought this, he looked at Calmen, who was now lying quietly beside Commander Bruno.

On another note, Calmen really does have a fiery temperament.

Maybe I can't entirely dismiss the possibility that he could have committed an act of disrespect, just as the queen suggested.

81

Despite the increase in unconscious patients, Dr. Ninnias seemed rather elated.

"It's truly tiresome when they keep struggling while on the verge of death. It's much better when they lie still like this."

He chuckled and started to apply mashed herbs onto Calmen's now noticeably swollen face.

In contrast, both Commander Masain and Lieutenant Kurt were visibly nervous as they gauged Seongjin's mood.

Seongjin, who had suddenly knocked out a palace knight in one punch, now felt strangely unfamiliar to them.

"... Although he did do something deserving of punishment, Your Highness..."

"One could've been more gentle... that face is, ahem, is quite something!"

Why are they acting like this? I sacrificed my own fist to save a pitiable creature.

Especially Sir Masain, what's up with that look in his eyes?

He's the type who would've been the first to throw Calmen in jail for blasphemy!

Amidst this, Seongjin's group received an unexpected visitor looking for the patients.

The commander of the Paladin Order of Saint Aurelion, Katrina, arrived with her lieutenant Francis in haste.

"...Commander Bruno."

She gazed at the commander lying in the bed, his appearance so altered it seemed unbelievable. Katrina soon approached him with a somber face and carefully laid her hand on his shoulder, channeling a faintly glowing holy power into him.

Known for her indifferent attitude towards anyone other than the Holy Emperor, and nicknamed "The Iron Shield of the Holy Emperor," it was unprecedented to see Katrina pouring her divine power so earnestly.

"Holy power isn't very effective against the Gray Plague."

Despite Dr. Ninnias' warning, Katrina couldn't easily remove her hand from the commander.

Looking at her with a somewhat sullen expression, Francis muttered to Seongjin.

"So that's the unlucky commoner who became a knight commander. I heard he fought side by side with our commander. They had a complex relationship, according to her."

Seongjin's confusion deepened.

Complex relationship?

Well, considering Katrina's current reaction, it does make sense.

But why hadn't she searched for Commander Bruno even when he was in such a state?

Could this be related to the Holy Emperor's indifference towards him?

"Anyways, it's not my place to know. It's all meaningless past relationships now. Yet to worry about our commander like this..."

Sigh

Seongjin, lost in thought, abruptly raised his head at the soft sound.

You crazy fighting dog, do you even want to be jealous of a critically ill person?

Just then, by chance, his eyes met with Katrina's, who happened to be looking in his direction.

Seongjin awkwardly turned his head.

'Is it just my imagination? Why is she looking at me so desperately, as if I'm the only hope? Of course, that can't be the case...'

But that feeling wasn't mistaken.

Katrina, who had turned her body away from the bed, slowly approached Seongjin with an expression of unprecedented urgency.

"Your Highness, I beg you. Please help Commander Bruno."

"...?"

How am I supposed to help?

While Seongjin was puzzled, Katrina laid her hand respectfully on the breastplate of her light armor and bowed her head!

"There is no one who has served Delcross with as much sincerity as him. His loyalty to the imperial family is unparalleled. Please, Your Highness, bestow mercy upon him."

"..."

In his bewilderment, Seongjin's mind raced.

Surely she wasn't asking Morres to directly heal the man, who had no divine energy to speak of. The only possibility seemed to be—

"...Are you asking me to personally request my father to help him?"

Katrina didn't respond, but her head lowered even more, indicating that he was correct.

"Why don't you ask directly?"

Seongjin genuinely wondered as he posed the question.

She had been assisting the Holy Emperor for a long time, serving as his most trusted right hand.

Yet, Katrina shook her head.

"That won't be sufficient."

"Insufficient?"

"Yes, Your Highness. Just because someone has a desperate wish, it doesn't mean His Majesty can help everyone unconditionally."

For a moment, a thought crossed Seongjin's mind.

Having recently dealt with the Gray Plague incident, he began to suspect whether the Holy Emperor knew more than he let on.

The real question was;

To what extent and how should the Holy Emperor intervene?

As far as Seongjin could perceive, the Holy Emperor was an enigmatic individual whose limits were impossible to gauge. If he were to take action with full intent, what problems could he not solve?

To what extent should he intervene?

Take the plague as an example. Even if he could cure every illness, it would be unsustainable for the citizens of Delcross to solely rely on the Holy Emperor for everything.

If the Holy Emperor were to prevent and cure all diseases before they worsen, what would be the need for hospitals? For people to maintain public hygiene?

This would be a poisoned chalice, leading Delcross down a path of infinite regression.

Perhaps the Holy Emperor's somewhat lukewarm recent reactions were not unrelated to this.

—His Majesty can't help everyone unconditionally.

As Katrina had said, it seemed there needed to be certain [conditions] for him to act.

And she was implying that Seongjin himself had to take the initiative to fulfill these [conditions].

"Would my request serve as a [condition] for my father to help the Commander?"

When Seongjin asked, Katrina evasively averted her gaze and responded ambiguously.

"Sometimes, even words spoken casually can shake and crumble the very foundations, Your Highness."

"..."

You can't talk, huh?

"Well, that's better than completely sealing my lips, Your Highness."

Seongjin nodded and spoke, "I was also planning to ask my father for his help with that matter. I'm just not certain how much that will actually help. You've heard too, haven't you? The Gray Plague shows little response to divine power."

"You need not worry about that, Your Highness. The divine power emitted by the clergy and the power of His Majesty the Holy Emperor may seem similar, but they are fundamentally different."

There was strong conviction in Katrina's voice. It was clear she was saying that the Holy Emperor must have a way.

Seongjin nodded and stood up.

If the course of action is clear, there's no need to delay.

Initially, the plan was to just drop by the office and briefly ask for a favor.

However, as he left the treatment room, Seongjin suddenly thought,

'Why don't I just bring Commander Bruno from the start? Telling His Majesty the Emperor to come and see the patient seems a bit cumbersome.'

The deteriorating condition of the Commander was also a concern. According to the Demon King, the 'psychic crystals' were still growing in his mind.

Despite the considerable time that had elapsed since the extraction, it seemed the disease was not stopping.

Anyway, nothing good would come from delaying treatment, so as soon as the Holy Emperor's permission was granted, they planned to bring the patient before him.

'Of course, there's a chance he may refuse treatment...'

Still, Seongjin had an almost intuitive, ungrounded conviction.

In the end, the Holy Emperor would save Commander Bruno.

So, a somewhat strange procession formed behind Seongjin: not only the priest but also the commander and lieutenant of the Saint Aurelion Paladin Order, and even the resident knights carrying a palanquin.

The issue was how to explain the unusual composition of this visit to the palace guards.

However, Seongjin soon realized this worry was unnecessary. Upon their arrival, chief chamberlain Louis had already come out to greet them at the entrance.

After briefly glancing at the pitiable state of the Commander, he turned and led the group straight to the Holy Emperor's office. It was as if he already knew why Seongjin had come to the palace.

'Well, it's something His Majesty the Emperor is involved in, so I guess it's not surprising.'

Seongjin shrugged his shoulders and followed Louis.

"Have you arrived?"

Entering the office, the Holy Emperor greeted them in his usual indifferent manner.

However, what Seongjin saw was so unexpected that he had no choice but to momentarily stop in his tracks, taken aback.

'What is he doing?'

That is to say—

Currently, the Holy Emperor turned his head in a direction that wasn't towards the entrance, not even glancing at Seongjin and his group.

No, it would be more accurate to say that he couldn't see them. This was because his eyes were wrapped in something that resembled a dark cloth, like blindfolds.

It wasn't only Seongjin who was surprised by this unexpected sight. Masain opened his mouth with a blank expression, and even Francis widened his eyes and pushed up his glasses.

Only Katrina seemed to have a hint of what was going on, as she slowly moved to stand beside the Holy Emperor, as if assisting him.

Feeling momentarily disoriented by the strange atmosphere in the office, Seongjin spoke directly:

"I've come to ask for a favor, Father."

"A favor."

"Yes, I would like for you to heal someone. I brought a Grey Plague patient to the Pearl Palace yesterday. You probably already know who it is—"

"—Morres."

The Holy Emperor cut him off, speaking in a firm tone.

"There's no need for you to tell me that person's name."

"..."

"I have no reason to recognize his face, either."

Seongjin blinked.

Ah, is that the purpose of the blindfold? I don't fully understand the meaning.

"Don't you understand?"

"Actually, I don't."

"When asked, 'Why do you not see?' he replied, 'Thus, I do not pre-judge the direction in which my staff points.'"

"...Yes?"

When Seongjin stared blankly at the Holy Emperor's face, the corners of his lips slightly lifted.

"...It seems you haven't yet considered reading 'The Introduction to Theology.'"

Seongjin turned his head awkwardly.

Ah, was that a reference from a book?

"Um, I've been making an effort to read it."

Meaning, he'd only opened the preface.

He'd been discouraged by the small, densely packed characters that were barely legible even with a magnifying glass and had immediately closed the book.

"I see. Then it's settled."

He had thought he would be scolded more for not studying, but surprisingly, the Holy Emperor didn't seem to mind much as he nodded his head. Then he slowly extended one hand forward and directed,

"Bring him here."

The knights, who had been only moving their eyeballs until then, began to hesitantly move only after receiving a cue from Seongjin.

Soon after, the medium carrying Commander Bruno was placed in front of the Holy Emperor, who gently touched the commander's chest as if measuring something. Seongjin clearly saw the corners of his mouth slightly twist for a moment.

Why? He suddenly thought of the harsh expression that Katrina had initially shown toward the commander.

Caught in a strange mood, Seongjin observed as the Holy Emperor softly sighed and opened his mouth.

"Is he important to you?"

It felt as if some sort of ritual was beginning.

Even though he didn't know what specific steps were needed, Seongjin thought that he had to affirm the question in order to proceed to the next step.

After a moment of contemplation, Seongjin answered, "He is someone who will be important to me."

Immediately, the next question followed.

"Is it right to save him?"

The answer to that question was easy.

"He is a person of worth, but has undergone undue hardship. Therefore, it is only right to save him."

Then the third question was promptly thrown at him.

"Can you bear the consequences of that decision?"

"....."

The weight of this question felt somewhat different from the previous ones, so Seongjin couldn't immediately respond and took a moment to think.

Is it possible for one person to completely bear another person's life and future?

'No, that's not what it means. This is closer to a procedure that must be followed. Don't overthink it.'

Seongjin quickly organized his thoughts and nodded.

After all, if the plan to help Bruno succeeds, he was prepared to take responsibility for Bruno's well-being and even his welfare.

"His past is due to my mistake, so his future will also be my responsibility."

It was at that moment.

Both the Holy emperor and Katrina simultaneously showed faint smiles on their faces, as if they were twins.

Seongjin suddenly realized.

Katrina Belphein. She was known as the Holy Emperor's strongest shield, but in fact, she might be closer to being his mirror.

"Very well, Morres."

The Holy Emperor's calm voice continued.

"From now on, he will wholly belong to your karma."

With that declaration,

A dazzling white light burst forth from the Holy Emperor's fingertips.

82

Calmen's nightmares always started with the same scene.

One day, after being severely beaten at home and driven out with a bruised abdomen, a seemingly respectable knight approached him.

"Why are you standing here barefoot on such a cold day, kid?"

It turned out that the knight, who lived not far away, was a neighbor. That day, he provided Calmen with a hearty dinner and a warm place to sleep.

From then on, Calmen often escaped from his stepfather and secretly took refuge in the knight's house.

Though the knight was always busy, he was a good neighbor who never turned away the child who kept coming to him. Even when he wasn't home, there were always simple snacks prepared on the table for the hungry young guest.

Thus, the knight, who later turned out to be far more incredible than initially thought, became close to Calmen.

He was the commander of the royal palace's knights and even the swordsmanship instructor to the imperial princes.

"Why would someone as strong and noble as you take a local kid like me seriously?"

"Wow, what does it feel like to be that strong? How can I become like you, Commander?"

"Do you want to learn swordsmanship, kid? That's a good idea. His Majesty's grace is like the sea; if you have the skills, even commoners like us have the opportunity for advancement."

"I don't really care or know much about advancement. I just want to give my wretched stepfather a good kick."

"Then, would you commit to one year of training with your eyes closed? That should be enough to kick him when he lets his guard down and escapes safely."

Thus, Calmen began learning swordsmanship from him. He was even praised for having quite a talent, which made him feel proud.

Then one day, before he knew it, Calmen found himself serving almost as an apprentice or servant to the knight, commuting to and from the imperial palace with him.

Perhaps those were the happiest days of his rather short life.

Yet, it was a nightmare because he knew too well what end that happiness would meet.

"You brat! What do you think you're doing, wandering around the imperial palace?"

A group of people suddenly appeared before him, surrounding the naive commoner boy and pouring out their sharp malice.

"Lucky you, being able to impersonate a servant. Just the right kind of guy to eat out of anywhere."

A chubby kid sneered at him, twisting his mouth.

"It seems like the lowly gather and console each other. Let's leave them, Morres. It's not as if we had a commoner knight as a master in the first place."

A beautiful woman with sharp eyes scornfully laughed in a haughty manner.

Tittering. Cackling.

Confused and frozen, he was bombarded with maids' mockery and humiliation.

Those sharp words were so obviously malicious that even a young commoner boy like him realized they were aimed at Commander Bruno.

How long had they been at it? When he came to, Calmen was unknowingly gripping the collar of the chubby kid.

Then, suddenly, something sharp cut across his forehead, filling his vision with a burning pain. His sight grew blurry with blood.

The scenes that followed are spotty memories.

"Your Majesty, the Queen. He is just an innocent, unknowing child. Please, retract your order to have this young one executed!"

Through the blood-blurred vision, he could see the kneeling figure of the Commander.

Calmen clenched his teeth.

"I didn't do anything wrong! That damn brat was the one who cursed me and insulted the commander first! So why do I have to atone for a crime I didn't commit, and why does the innocent commander have to suffer for it?"

It was always the same dream, but Calmen struggled frantically every time.

"Everyone stop! Somebody stop this!"

"Commander! Commander, please stop! Don't do it!"

Despite his desperate struggles, Commander Bruno in his dreams would inevitably end up coughing up blood and collapsing.

And watching the commander's miserable state, a brat stood there, pulling up the corners of his lips to let out an evil laugh.

With the backlit, shadowy face, only the brat's eyes shimmer eerily in silvery gray.

"Prince Morres."

- "Thought you'd die sooner. But if it ends like this, it's as good as being dead, isn't it? Perfect!"

"Prince Morres."

- "Why are you staring at me like that? You stupid fool! Luckily for you, I've given you a good opportunity, so be grateful for the rest of your life. Ha. Ha. Ha!"

Damn Prince Morres!

While struggling and letting out a silent scream, his nightmare gradually came to an end. Realization that he was dreaming dawned upon him as he slowly woke up.

And at the boundary between dream and reality, a chaotic mix of incomprehensible scenes swept over Calmen along with intense emotions before receding like a tidal wave.

In one scene, for some reason, Calmen appeared to be considerably older.

After squandering his earnings from mercenary work on alcohol, he was heavily drunk when suddenly a bandit-like man blocked his path.

- "You're the guy? The one who spent last night with our Olivie?"

- "Huh? Olivie? Who's that?"

- "She's my wife. Don't tell me you don't know."

- "What the hell are you talking about? If you can't keep your wife in line, why are you blaming others? Was your night not so great?"

- "What did you say? You son of a-!"

Before he could even confirm the axe the man brandished,

Thud!

He felt a vivid sensation of his forehead splitting and skull cracking, sending chills down his spine.

Calmen screamed.

I, I can't believe I'm dying like this?

"...Aaaargh!"

"Man, he sure knows how to take a noisy nap."

"Should we wake him up, Your Highness?"

"Maybe? He looked like he was having a good dream just now."

Familiar voices conversing near his ear reached him.

In a state of semi-consciousness, he strained his ears to grasp the meaning, but the voice receded and his body sank downward.

Meanwhile, the dream shifted its scenes once again, this time to a battlefield with arrows flying through the air.

Dressed in armor, Calmen, now transformed into a dashing knight, swung his sword anxiously while staring into the distance. He might not fully grasp the situation, but he was clearly worried about someone's well-being.

And below the ominous sky, tinged red as if with blood—

Someone he knew well was fearlessly darting through the hail of arrows!

Startled, Calmen rushed towards him.

Hey! You lunatic!

Always running off like that?

Haven't I always told you to be more careful? Huh?

"Ah? If you go out there, Crown Prince, just you wait!"

Gritting his teeth and yelling, he heard a sigh in his ear.

"This child is truly a troublemaker, Sir Masain."

"Outrageous. Now he's even committing blasphemy by imagining a nonexistent Crown Prince in his dreams."

"Shall I give him another smack, Sir Masain? To make him rest quietly."

"...Doing that might make Calmen rest for eternity, Your Highness."

"What do you take me for, Sir Kurt?"

Struck by an unusually clear voice, Calmen fully regained consciousness and opened his eyes abruptly.

"Oh, he's awake."

"....."

What was that? I felt like I was in a deeply sentimental mood just a moment ago?

Calmen blinked his eyes.

The lingering images of the dream vanished from his mind at a rapid pace, leaving him with no recollection of why he felt the way he did.

"Hmm..."

However, what caught Calmen's slowly waking eyes was a bizarre sight that he never could have anticipated.

A room filled with people surrounding Prince Morres... or rather, a group of people surrounding him, filling the small treatment room, standing and staring at Calmen in unison.

'What is everyone doing here? And why are they looking at me with those strange expressions?'

His eyes quickly scanned the faces of the people.

Dr. Ninnias, Prince Morres, Masain, the maidservant to the prince, and many resident knights including Sir Kurt and...

".....?"

In an instant, Calmen jumped to his feet.

Among those people, he saw the face of someone he thought he would never see again.

"...Commander?"

Indeed.

As if out of a lie, there was Commander Bruno.

His unkempt beard and gaunt appearance were the same, but he was no longer the dying patient from before. His previously hunched back was now straight, and his wrinkled face had tightened, making him look younger than his years.

Though he hadn't regained his former vitality, his robust body overflowed with a lively energy.

With a refreshing smile that seemed dreamlike, Commander Bruno answered Calmen.

"Yes, kid. Got your wits about you now?"

What on earth is happening? Am I still dreaming?

"...Commander? Is it really you?"

At this, Commander Bruno's brows furrowed.

"Still half-asleep, huh? What on earth is that appearance of yours? I don't remember teaching you so carelessly. How absentminded are you usually, tsk tsk."

Bruno, the commander, clicked his tongue, and Kurt, standing next to him, cautiously defended Calmen.

"Uh... Commander? Calmen fought against the capital guards to rescue you, so..."

"Huh? Did that happen? I don't remember. So, how many did he fight?"

Then, Prince Morres tilted his head and answered.

"Probably seven, including heavily armed knights? It was no big deal."

The one who had actually defeated the seven couldn't persuade anyone.

Hearing this, a look of disdain briefly crossed Commander Bruno's face.

"So, you're saying you were defeated by just seven? Not even seventeen? Hmph, shame! Don't go around calling yourself my disciple."

"....."

Tears welled up in Calmen's eyes without his realizing it.

Ah, that arrogant attitude. Definitely the Commander Bruno I remember!

"...Commander, aren't you being a bit too cold? You made him cry."

"Yeah. The commander went too far this time. Calmen did his best, there's no reason to make him cry like that."

"Ah, my body is already in pain and you guys are still making fun of a sick man. Why would a grown man cry like a fool?"

I didn't cry! Ugh.

Calmen sniffled.

"...What happened, Commander? The Gray Plague?"

"Huh? Oh, right. I did mention that I had caught the plague. I don't remember, though."

Commander Bruno rotated his shoulders and grinned.

"I don't know what that plague is, but as you can see, I'm perfectly fine. All thanks to His Majesty's grace."

"Ahem! One should not forget the grace of Prince Morres, Commander Bruno."

"Ah, that's right! Sir Masain is correct. If it weren't for His Highness, how could I, Bruno, have the honor of serving His Majesty again."

Ha ha ha. He he he.

It was an atmosphere he couldn't adapt to.

Clearly, Commander Bruno had been disgracefully expelled due to Prince Morres, his achievements as a knight and a warrior all taken away in an instant, and he lived just because he couldn't die.

And now he's casually chatting with the prince who is the root cause of all this!

Calmen felt his mind blur and mumbled, "This must be a dream. How could Commander Bruno and Prince Morres be..."

The air around him suddenly froze.

Calmen had carelessly spoken, but omitting the honorifics in front of an imperial family member is a serious disrespect.

"This fellow, as soon as he woke up..."

In a scene filled with tension, his master with an ugly expression on his face attempted to charge, but Prince Morres quickly grabbed his arm to stop him.

Meanwhile, Commander Bruno respectfully bowed his head towards the prince, speaking on behalf of the flustered Calmen.

"I apologize, Your Highness. It's due to my unworthy disciple that I have no face to show you."

"Eh? No, I think he's just a bit flustered because he just woke up, don't worry about it."

The scene was reminiscent of the past when the Commander had knelt before the Queen on behalf of Calmen. Feeling his heart sink, Calmen shouted in a suppressed voice.

"Why are you apologizing on my behalf again? You've done nothing wrong, Commander!"

However, the look from Commander Bruno was extremely stern.

"Don't make excuses, Calmen. It's my responsibility, of course."

"But..."

"I've hesitated to say this because you seemed to be blaming yourself too much. But now that I've returned to the palace, let me make it clear."

Facing Calmen squarely, the Commander continued.

"Calmen, the incident that day was your fault, as you were the one who committed the irreverence first, unable to control your own temperament. And it is my responsibility, Bruno, for not properly teaching you manners because you were young."

"..."

"You must face the difficult truths squarely. You're a distinguished knight of the Guard now, aren't you?"

Calmen was at a loss for words.

He wanted to deny it, but deep down he knew the situation had escalated uncontrollably because he had failed to contain himself in a critical moment.

Being naive was no excuse. As Prince Morres had said, being young did not absolve him of responsibility.

The reason he had resented Prince Morres until now was because he couldn't fully bear the fact that he had led the person he admired the most to ruin.

Struggling to his feet from the bed, Calmen knelt before the prince.

His internal resentment towards Prince Morres hadn't completely disappeared. However, unlike before, he now knew what he needed to do.

"I have committed multiple acts of irreverence and disloyalty. I humbly seek your generous forgiveness, Your Highness."

Scratching his cheek, Prince Morres responded, "Well, it's fine. Don't worry about it. It's not like I don't know your temperament."

"And..."

"Yes?"

"...Thank you."

Calmen bowed his head deeply.

"I will never forget the favor of saving the Commander. Thank you again, Your Highness."

For the first time, with complete sincerity, Calmen was able to show his respect to Prince Morres.

That evening, as always, after finishing his meditation and waiting, Dasha soon dropped down onto the balcony.

This time, before the Demon King gave a warning, Seongjin sensed her presence first. Ever since learning [Aura Concealment] from her, his ability to detect the discomfort given by a concealed aura had also improved significantly.

With her twinkling eyes, she sighed towards Seongjin, who was staring at her.

"Yes, yes, whatever. I won't expect to be able to sneak into the palace without you noticing anymore. You've completely shattered my unyielding composure."

Then Dasha began to unload the bags she had tightly wrapped and brought into the room.

Stealth clothing, a few sets of disguise clothes, various types of daggers, and suspicious vials.

It was surprisingly thorough preparation, considering she had been reluctant to pass on assassination techniques.

"You have no idea how much resentment I got from Captain Breman."

As she spread out the items, Dasha continuously grumbled.

"How could you leave the palace as soon as we parted, after I had given you so many warnings? If His Majesty hadn't given special permission, I really would've gotten into big trouble."

"Uh... Sorry."

In that regard, Seongjin had no room for excuses.

"I initially thought I would just take a casual stroll, but the palace knights didn't seem to notice. It's all thanks to my excellent teacher, you know."

"Sigh, if you can't even keep your word..."

However, their conversation couldn't continue. Suddenly, the Demon King urgently shouted at Seongjin.

[Huh? Seongjin, that guy is coming this way?]

'What? What are you talking about? Who?'

And the next moment, there was a loud knock from outside the door.

Knock, knock.

Both Seongjin and Dasha were startled and froze. Normally, no one would disturb the prince's rest at this late hour.

More importantly, neither of them had sensed anyone approaching!

But the voice that followed was one Seongjin knew well.

"Your Highness, is everything alright?"

Seongjin blinked.

"...Commander Bruno?"

He was officially on leave and was staying in the Pearl Palace as Seongjin's [guest].

"I felt a suspicious presence from your room at this hour, so I've come to check. Is everything okay?"

As Dasha's eyes widened in astonishment, Seongjin quickly yelled towards the door.

"Oh, it's fine. A friend I know well has come to visit, so don't worry, Commander."

Then, a moment of silence seemed to weigh something, followed by the Commander's voice.

"Yes, Your Highness. I apologize for the intrusion. Please rest comfortably."

Thump, thump.

As the sound of footsteps faded away into the distance, only then did Seongjin and Dasha let out the breaths they had been holding.

"Phew, is that person Bruno Green? The former Decalon Knight, right? As far as I know, he's no longer an Aura user, so how did he notice us?"

Dasha spoke, unable to hide her tension.

Come to think of it, wasn't it said that assassins' natural enemies are Decalon Knights?

"Do you know about Commander Bruno?"

"Do I? That's an understatement. One of the few treasures of the continent, a Decalon Knight, who lost everything overnight and was expelled from the Imperial Palace."

It was indeed strange when you thought about it.

No matter the accusations of blasphemy, it was shocking that they would easily make a Decalon Knight, who could significantly boost a nation's military power just by existing, into an exile.

This should have had Queen Lizabeth, who sentenced him to atonement, punished as well.

"Such a big incident got buried without making a sound, and not long after, nobody knew where Bruno Green was. What's strange is, he was hiding perfectly well within the Empire!"

"Wow... really?"

"Is that all? If you look into Bruno Green's personal records, there's no record of disciplinary action. He's simply been 'suspended' from the Knights for years."

"That's interesting."

"Isn't it? It smells like a massive conspiracy, Your Highness. Although I'm not sure, the rumor in the intelligence department once was that the person who buried Bruno must be an incredibly powerful individual."

As for the conspiracy, I'm not sure.

At least I feel like I know who the power player involved is.

"Anyway, the whole Imperial Palace was buzzing today with news about him. They say the ill-fated commoner commander has returned."

The ill-fated commoner commander.

A once-in-a-generation genius who became a knight commander from humble origins but lost everything due to a momentary misfortune. A man who sincerely served Delcross and the Holy Emperor but was not repaid and was forgotten. That was Bruno Green as known to the world.

Well, the Bruno that Seongjin met in person had a somewhat different image from the rumors.

"And he even suffered from the Gray Plague? How on earth did he manage to survive?"

"My father healed him."

A universal cheat key, so to speak.

"So it was curable. The Gray Plague is known to be completely unresponsive to even pouring in divine power. Truly, the representative of God, His Majesty the Holy Emperor."

"Mm, yeah..."

Seongjin dodged the question with a vague answer.

Katrina had mentioned this. The Holy Emperor's power runs on a different track than ordinary divine power.

But can that be explained just by saying the tracks are different? Having witnessed the Holy Emperor healing the Commander, Seongjin couldn't even be sure it could be described as divine power.

- "From now on, he will wholly belong to your karma."

The moment he made that declaration,

Along with a burst of white light, Seongjin felt some kind of mysterious force pulling towards him and Bruno. This unnatural phenomenon grew stronger with time, so much so that he began to worry something might be going wrong.

And then a true miracle happened.

The Commander's discolored skin regained its original hue, and his weakening breath began to stabilize. He was clearly coming back to life.

Yet even witnessing this phenomenon, Seongjin couldn't be certain that this was really a [healing] process.

Seongjin had previously experienced the miracles caused by the Holy Emperor when he was carried into the palace due to a bursting wooden sword.

However, while the sensation at that time felt like an overwhelming surge of life energy, what was happening to Commander Bruno now felt oddly different.

Something was being broken down and reassembled. Time axes throughout his body were twisting, breaking apart, and then rejoining.

This process was happening on such a microscopic scale and so simultaneously that for a moment, Seongjin felt as if the Holy Emperor was disassembling Commander Bruno down to the cellular level.

The strange thing was, among all those people, the only one who felt such discomfort was Seongjin.

While everyone else was lost in the awe of the divine light, only Seongjin was nervously observing the transformation of Commander Bruno.

Well, there was one more person who felt something was off.

[How... How can this be possible for a human... This is insane! Hiiiiieek!]

The Demon King, who let out a bizarre scream, was subsequently silenced and embedded in a corner of Seongjin's mind for a while.

And a moment later, Commander Bruno stood up in front of everyone, seemingly in perfect condition.

Even his weakened aura started to slowly increase, and it seemed that the aura layer, once thought to be destroyed, began to recover.

Regaining his senses, he immediately confirmed the well-being of the Holy Emperor and shed silent, hot tears as he bowed on the spot.

It was truly the perfect return of a genius commander.

Well, it did turn out well in the end.

[I don't know how to explain this. Simply put, your father forcibly adjusted the divine power even in places where divine power doesn't work. He even changed the definition of divine power several times. That was a dangerous and terrifying act that could shake the very foundation of the Main World, Delcross.]

The Demon King, who had finally composed himself, explained it with trembling.

Well, it's not clear, but at least it wasn't something one should do lightly just to cure a single person. This makes the stringent [condition] understandable.

'And now the result has become solely my responsibility?'

While it was done to save a life, shouldn't he have been a bit more cautious?

Seongjin felt belated regret.

"Alright! Let's put that issue aside for now."

Dasha clapped her hands to refresh Seongjin's focus.

"You have something you need to learn quickly. Originally, I wanted to teach you slowly, but I worry you might sneak out of the palace again."

"I won't do it anymore."

"Focus. I know you don't mean it. People who learn assassination techniques first learn something specific. It's the secret hand signal passed down through our sect."

Dasha belonged to a sect known as [Oberon's Hand], reputedly somewhat famous in the industry. All informants of the Monkey Tower are from there.

She then taught Seongjin several complex signals. If he encounters anyone displaying these signals while undercover, he must respond appropriately, she stressed.

"What happens if I can't show it?"

"You'll be hunted down by the members of [Oberon's Hand] from across the continent until you die. It's the industry rule to deal with thieves who steal techniques through death."

Wow, that's harsh.

"You were lucky yesterday. Imagine if you had run into a lower-ranking informant who didn't know you well. Ugh... I can't even imagine."

She's implying he would have been killed outright.

Of course, Seongjin wouldn't just die obediently to a low-level assassin, but he nodded without saying anything.

"So, Your Highness. If you're planning any undercover activities, take me with you. No one knows when an unexpected accident could occur. Also, it wouldn't be pleasant to tighten the palace security due to that."

Well, about that.

To be honest, the palace security seemed quite lax.

"Wouldn't it be better to reinforce it a bit?"

"You say that because you don't know. The palace's security system isn't that simple. There's even a dedicated assassination team for security. The place you entered yesterday is just an implicitly accepted loophole. Even that would have been closely monitored by [Arenja]."

"[Arenja]?"

"Yes, it is His Majesty's direct secret organization and its details are not known. It is said to be a spiritual surveillance network monitoring the entire Imperial Domain. The intelligence department speculates that it's probably an elite organization made up of high-ranking clergy."

Suddenly, something came to Seongjin's mind.

The spirit orb that appeared the moment he crossed the imperial wall and had a skirmish with the Demon King!

'Hey, Demon King. Were those guys clergy?'

[Hmm? I don't know? They were unique spirits, but I didn't really feel any divine power.]

Words from the Demon King, who usually has a sensitive reaction to clergy. The intelligence department seems to be quite off in their conjecture.

"Dasha, have you ever actually seen how this [Arenja] guards the boundary?"

At this, she looked at Seongjin with a strange expression.

"How would I see that when I'm not a clergyman? If it's called a spiritual surveillance network, then probably some angel or ghost-like being is wandering around the palace. That's all that is known."

Makes sense.

At least for an emperor who can see souls, it must be a discreet and easily manipulated organization.

"It feels uncomfortable thinking that such things are wandering around here and there."

"Right? I also feel somewhat creepy when passing through desolate areas."

Seongjin nodded and proceeded to ask her another question.

"Ah, by the way, Dasha. Do you know anything about something called 'Oracle'?"

She pondered for a moment before shaking her head.

"Hmm... Not sure. It feels like I've heard it somewhere, but I honestly don't know. Should I look it up?"

"No, it's fine. It's not that important."

In any case, learning about [Arenja] from Dasha was unexpected but fruitful.

Seongjin, too, had only heard about it from the Demon King, so asking someone else about the spirit orbs that wander the palace was tricky.

'Anyway, I need to find out about this spiritual surveillance network soon.'

Thinking about it, it wasn't strange that it had directly drawn

Seongjin in when Bruno and Calmen were in crisis.

He had the feeling that whoever made up Arenja likely knew quite a lot about him and the Demon King.

'Well, there's no point worrying about it now. I'll ask the emperor when the time comes.'

With that, Seongjin lightly let it go.

However, someone with more detailed information was closer than he thought.

A few days passed.

Bruno, who was slowly warming up at the training ground, said this to Seongjin.

"Yes. Actually, I received a proposal from an organization to work together recently. Do you happen to know about [Arenja], Your Highness?"

...What?

After recovering, Bruno Green comfortably settled in as a guest at the Pearl Palace.

While worried that he might shout, "I don't deserve this treatment!" and return to the slums, such concerns proved unnecessary.

Bruno Green comfortably occupied one of the few guest rooms in Pearl, receiving attentive care from the palace maids and resting. His demeanor appeared so aristocratic that no one could believe that he had lived in the slums for years.

A man who had climbed up the social ladder from humble origins purely based on his talent.

A commoner knight commander who lost everything due to an unfortunate event.

Though this was the image people had, the real Bruno Green was incredibly relaxed in all matters. His cheerful face betrayed no trace of misfortune.

Absurdly, the first thing Bruno Green did in Pearl Palace was carefully trim his mustache.

"...That's an impressive mustache."

During dinner, Seongjin awkwardly uttered these words when he saw Bruno Green's face. The mustache was so unique that it stole the spotlight.

While his unkempt hair remained, the impeccably trimmed mustache maintained a precise angle of 165~170 degrees and extended in a smooth curve.

At Seongjin's compliment, Bruno pulled on his mustache seriously.

"It's an attitude of a warrior, Your Highness."

"Eh?"

"When I go to battle or face a duel, I always sharpen the angle of my mustache as I prepare my inner sword."

"...?"

"I have groomed my mustache with the mindset of going into battle. I cannot afford to show hesitancy for this second life granted by His Majesty and Your Highness. The mustache is the most accurate gauge of a man's mindset."

What, really?

Although reason screamed that it was all nonsense, Seongjin found himself unconsciously touching the smooth area around his still mustache-less mouth.

And someone else was strongly influenced by Bruno's mustache: namely, Knight Calmen.

"Um... I've been cultivating my attitude as a warrior..."

Calmen, who had now begun to show a certain level of respect toward Seongjin, muttered as he stroked his chin.

Unfortunately, his beard was too young and patchy, making it difficult to discern any particular 'mindset.' Still, Seongjin thought it was a sign of respect toward his master.

The problem was that his master did not even acknowledge it.

"Before you cultivate your inner sword, you should properly train your swordsmanship. You got beaten by just seven guys, you useless apprentice. Don't go around bragging that you're a Royal Guard Knight."

"Master!"

When Calmen yelled out, Bruno Green snorted.

"What? Did I say something wrong?"

"But back then I couldn't— Isn't your attitude towards me different now? Just a while ago, you encouraged me saying I had some talent!"

"Huh? I told you that you have talent? Did I really? Don't you remember I was Prince Logan's swordsmanship teacher?"

For Bruno Green, who had been called a genius, anyone with talent less than Prince Logan was all the same to him.

Frustrated, Calmen stomped his foot.

"We shared drinks together! You said one of the best things you did in your life was to leave behind an apprentice like me!"

Bruno Green only rolled his eyes indifferently.

"Well, I remember you occasionally bought good liquor."

"That's why back then...!"

"But I don't remember sharing it with you. Why would I share something good with you?"

"You...!"

Seongjin sighed as he watched the comedy unfold between the two.

Well, Calmen is naturally hot-tempered, jumping around without knowing anything. But in the eyes of Bruno, the commander who is calmly egging him on, who wouldn't see the affection he has for his disciple?

However, Seongjin knew that the commander wasn't just teasing Calmen.

-'There will be occasional gaps in your memory. That was the best course of action for now.'

After finishing the treatment, this was the first thing the Holy

Emperor said as he removed the blindfold.

Reversing a completely damaged brain was by no means a simple task.

As evidence, several small psychic crystals remained in the commander's head like scars.

['I can guess some parts.']

The demon king, after contemplating for a while, explained.

['Psychic crystals are organs that can naturally form in the body. The problem is just that they formed in a bad location, in abnormal numbers.']

The demon king's speculation was this:

The psychic crystals were not so much traces of the plague invading the place, but rather a result of the human body naturally reacting to something emitted by Lophellum's egg.

['Isn't the difficulty with using holy power due to that? Just like getting treatment for sunburn from a priest doesn't make freckles disappear.']

Not long ago, Claudia had suffered minor burns from training under the harsh sun. Even after receiving treatment from a priest, her charming freckles remained.

In other words, while sunburns were targets for holy power healing, the body's natural reactions remained intact.

'So, then...'

In the end, there's only one way to cure the gray plague: to fully reverse the body back to before the psychic crystals formed.

But before discussing whether manipulating time is possible, reversing a single person's time involves unimaginably complex causal relationships, the demon king explained.

[‘So, I’ve tried to keep the healthy parts and only revert the damaged parts due to the psychic crystals. The psychic crystals would have formed gradually, so the time that has been reversed would vary for each area.’]

When the Holy Emperor had felt like he was dissecting the leader on a cellular level, it wasn’t entirely a misunderstanding.

[‘Even then, he had to bend the definition of holy power several times, and still, a tremendous amount of causality was twisted, shaking this world with shock. You probably felt it too.’]

Indeed.

Seongjin recalled the peculiar flow of attraction that had gathered around him and Bruno at that time.

[‘Moreover, the brain is not an organ that can easily be tampered with. Even a slight change in synapses can erase memories or paralyze you. Yet, he almost restored it without damage. Do you now understand what your father has done?’]

‘Wow...’

What did Holy Emperor actually do?

After doing such a tremendous thing, is he saying he’s going to push all the consequences onto me? What is he thinking?

Regardless of the complicated thoughts in Seongjin’s mind, the squabble between the two knights continued.

‘Haven’t I always said since your knighthood? Becoming a knight is just the beginning. True training starts now, so be diligent! Why haven’t you improved since then?’

‘Ah, yes! You also told me that day, I’ve become a distinguished imperial knight, and that even you have nothing more to say...!’

‘Hmm, I don’t remember saying that.’

‘Gah!’

Really, how conveniently selective his memory is.

After a few days of rest, Bruno began to appear in the Pearl Palace training grounds.

"My aura is recovering."

Bruno, who seemed to have grown some muscles from eating well in the last few days, said so.

Even without him saying it, most people would have guessed. His aura activity had noticeably improved in the past few days.

"It seems to be approaching the 3rd level."

"Yes, Sir Masain. I believe I'll reach the 3rd level soon."

"Phew, truly remarkable speed. Even as I feel the aura activity, it's hard to believe."

At Masain's admiration, Bruno smiled.

"It's a path I've already walked once. Building aura for the first time is different, isn't it?"

A Decalon Knight is someone who reaches the 10th level of aura, achieving the epitome of long-term training. You can't reach the 10th level without some form of enlightenment, and after that, the number of levels doesn't matter much.

Balthazar, known as the continent's top knight, was a Decalon Knight with a whopping 12 levels of aura. However, that was just because his sword was more suited for operating at 12 levels; achieving an ideal aura balance wasn't fundamentally different at 10 levels.

The level of Aura could decrease as well, and it was no different in the case of Commander Bruno. The only reason he couldn't achieve the 10th level was due to the limited amount of Aura accumulated in his body; his enlightenment was still firmly embedded in his experience.

As evidence, if he willed it, he could create a perfect balance of Aura at any time. This was the ideal state of Aura concealment that Dasha had mentioned.

"Could it be due to my mood? My Aura affinity seems to have increased considerably compared to before. I'm not sure why, though."

"Is that so? That's interesting."

Ah, I think I know what it is.

Didn't Seongjin also feel the same after getting swept up in the Aura storm before? It must be related to the Emperor in some way.

'...The more I know, the more incredible he is.'

Seongjin thought so, but he was too focused on the conversation to notice the knights whispering amongst themselves.

"Hey, what about Prince Morres?"

"He's accumulating Aura at a rate surpassing a Decalon Knight, as a beginner?"

"What is he really?"

It was good news, in any case. Given a little time, the Commander could fully return to his former glory.

Another Decalon Knight was guaranteed for Delcross.

"So, what are you planning to do now? Are you going back to the Knights?"

Curious, Seongjin asked the Commander.

For now, he was staying in the royal palace as a guest, but this couldn't go on forever.

The position of the Commander for the Second Knights was vacant. After Sir Masain stepped down, there hadn't been a suitable successor, and deputy commanders and former commanders were filling the position.

Bruno Green was currently in a [Hiatus] state.

No one seemed interested in his past mistakes anymore, and there was no disciplinary record against him. It wouldn't be too bad if he became a Knight Commander again.

The problem was Bruno Green's will.

Would he want to reclaim his glorious past position, or would he want to leave behind his miserable past and live a new life?

"If you want to work in the imperial guard again, I'll fully support your quick return."

Commander Bruno replied with a bright smile to Seongjin's cautious proposal. "I truly appreciate your kind words. But don't worry, Your Highness. I have some thoughts on what to do next."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. Actually, I received an offer from an organization recently. Do you know about [Arenja], Your Highness?"

For a moment, Seongjin doubted his ears.

"...Arenja?"

"Yes. It's an organization directly under His Majesty the Holy Emperor, but it's not well-known."

"Arenja was a small elite organization created in the early days of Holy Emperor's reign. They were so secretive in their operations that no one knew the details except for his closest aides.

Had it not been for the regular annual budget allocations to [Arenja], their very existence, let alone their name, would have remained unknown.

They weren't a group made up of clergy as the intelligence department had speculated. Instead, a certain rare [ability] was required to join them.

Recently, such an ability manifested in Bruno, and there had been cautious contact from Arenja, it is said.

"Ability?"

"Yes. There are generally two types of agents in Arenja. Agents who use spiritual powers internally to monitor the Emperor, and agents who operate externally in a cellular organization. It so happens that I have developed an ability suitable for external operations, and was advised to join the agency."

Commander Bruno awkwardly tugged at his mustache.

From his explanation, Seongjin could guess several facts.

The identity of the soul orb they had encountered not long ago was neither an angel nor a ghost, but a person with spiritual powers.

And even among those with spiritual powers, there were differences in abilities. There were some like the ones he first met who couldn't communicate at all, whereas others who appeared later were more powerful and capable of communication.

And perhaps they had been keeping an eye on Commander Bruno for a while. Amidst the forced abductions of patients with the gray plague all over the Empire, the timing of handing Seongjin over to Commander Bruno wasn't mere coincidence.

At that moment, the Demon King exclaimed in an excited voice.

[They were human? How could that be? They didn't even have proper souls. Ask more, Lee Seongjin!]

He was planning to do just that.

"So, what ability have you developed? Can you explain?"

"Hmm..."

At Seongjin's question, Commander Bruno looked into space for a moment before answering.

"For example, yes. I can hear the voice of the person who just spoke to you. That person is the [Red One] that Arenja speaks of."

85

Bruno Green's words were nothing short of shocking.

"For example, yes. I can hear the voice of the person who just spoke to you. That person is the [Red One] that Arenja speaks of."

Could he possibly be talking about the Demon King right now?
Really?

Seongjin was so surprised that he froze. The Demon King was the first to snap out of his shock and grew irritable.

[What? Is that what you're saying to me? Who's the Red One?]

"Then could you please tell me your name?"

[How dare a lowly human seek to know the true name of this great Demon King?]

"I apologize. Red One."

[No, I said I'm not the Red One!]

Unbelievable!

Bruno Green was really talking to the Demon King!

In the midst of the confusion, Seongjin checked to make sure there was no one nearby. Fortunately, Sir Masain, who had left when they were talking about rejoining the Knights, had not returned yet.

In a low voice, Seongjin cautiously asked Bruno,

"...Since when?"

"Since I regained consciousness in the palace. I began to hear strange voices in the air."

"And you never had such an experience before?"

"Correct. There is a slight gap in my memory, but I can say with certainty that I've never had this kind of experience."

Then, there could only be one reason to consider.

'...The Mind Crystal!'

And the Demon King confirmed Seongjin's speculation.

[Yes, that guy has a rather intact Mind Crystal in his head. Seems to be functioning quite well. That means the [ability] he's talking about is clearly channeling.]

That seemed a reasonable conclusion.

"Is what he is saying true?"

Seongjin asked Bruno for confirmation, but this time his reaction was a bit strange.

"Pardon? Did you say something again? I didn't hear it."

"...?"

Could it be that he can't hear all the conversations?

"He says you're channeling..."

Then Bruno nodded.

"Channeling... Ah, Arenja's agents said the same. They said what I'm doing is the most basic form of channeling."

"So the 'ability required by external agents' is channeling?"

"Yes. Precisely, all Arenja's agents are channelers. Internal agents would have spiritual abilities added to that."

To be precise, spiritual abilities are like secondary skills exhibited by advanced channelers. Ultimately, the essence of the two abilities is the same.

"That's why Arenja can only be an elite group. Channelers themselves are not common to begin with."

[Yet they have enough numbers to form an organization? Why haven't I ever seen any of them before?]

When the Demon King directly asked him, a satisfactory answer returned.

"It's not unreasonable. Originally, Arenja's agents are not allowed to approach the Pearl Palace."

So, not only the clergy but also spiritual ability users are restricted from entering!

As they continued to talk and test each other, Seongjin was able to get a fairly detailed understanding of the range of Bruno's abilities.

Firstly, he clearly understood the thoughts the Demon King directly transmitted to him. He also sensed the waves of thought the Demon King emitted whenever he became agitated.

However, he couldn't hear the thoughts that the jerk was discreetly transmitting to Seongjin's mind. The same was true for the words that Seongjin said to the Demon King.

[It makes sense when you think about it. To sense someone's thoughts through channeling, those thoughts first have to be emitted out of the soul. But our conversation is different. We directly transmit thoughts from one soul to another. It's like a true soul-to-soul conversation!]

The Demon King spoke with a somehow proud demeanor.

'Wow, that feels terrible.'

[...You cold bastard.]

Either way, Seongjin started feeling a headache due to the sudden situation.

Even a few days ago, the Demon King, who was initially trying to communicate with the Soul Orb, got furious, didn't he?

-How dare you call me 'Red'?

Seongjin had just found out that an organization called Arenja existed, but they already had enough information about the Demon King to even give him a friendly nickname like 'Red'.

Just because they are part of the imperial organization, expecting them to be friendly towards Seongjin and the Demon King was perhaps naïve?

"How did you come into contact with Arenja? What did they say about 'Red'... this guy?"

When he asked, sensing that he had received some rumors about the Demon King from Arenja, Bruno briefly explained what had happened.

Initially, when he heard the Demon King's voice, he suspected that the prince might be possessed.

But while he was cautiously observing Seongjin, Arenja contacted him through channeling.

"And I got detailed explanations from them. They said 'Red' is not a demon but actually a loyal servant of Your Highness. A perfectly harmless entity, so you can relax."

[What!?!]

The Demon King wasn't willing to let that go.

[Who said I'm a loyal servant! Who said I'm harmless! These mindless fools! I am the owner of a terrifying presence that can even burn souls! Will they realize the greatness of the true Demon King after they burn to the bone!?!]

Kraaaaack!

His mind was in chaos due to the Demon King's outburst.

Well, the trivial and harmless part is true. They seem to have a detailed understanding of the Demon King.

"So, if you join Arenja, what will you primarily be doing? You said something about becoming an external agent?"

"Yes, Your Highness."

What Bruno Green said next was unexpected.

"They want me to stay by Your Highness' side and act as a liaison."

"...With me?"

"Yes. They said there will be a need for close cooperation between Arenja and the department led by Your Highness in the future."

"..."

Cooperation? With my Monster Special Task Force?

He suddenly remembered what the emperor had said about the Monster Special Task Force not long ago.

—'...The Monster Special Task Force is, a small cog that will eventually support one pillar of Delcross, Morres.' (Chapter 76)

Although it was founded due to the Gray Plague, its real purpose seemed to lie elsewhere.

What exactly did the emperor expect from Seongjin and the Monster Special Task Force?

"The terms are favorable, so I'm considering it positively. Being a Knight Commander is actually filled with more trivial tasks than people think. They're offering me good pay just to stay by your side as a liaison, and I can devote myself to personal training. What could be a better job?"

It looked like Bruno had already made up his mind.

"Is it alright? The position of an imperial knight commander isn't light."

"It would be a waste to let a rare ability rot, wouldn't it? Channelers are scarce."

You there. Just how scarce must one be to qualify as a Decalon Knight Commander?

The atmosphere in the Imperial City had been quite chaotic lately due to the sudden changes in the Gray Plague situation and the unexpected emergency measures.

But those who were most disturbed were none other than the sower brothers who had been sneakily planting Lophellum seeds, awaiting a large harvest.

Including Clemence, the three underground priests were huddled in one corner of the Heresy Tribunal building with worried faces today.

"Ah, it feels like a farmer who watched all his crops wash away in a flood for a year."

The elderly priest who spoke had a gloomy expression.

"Why did this happen now? The Holy Emperor who wouldn't bat an eye at a few people dying is acting now?"

Clemence, who was next to him, shook his head.

"It's not the Holy Emperor's doing. I heard this was entirely the church's unilateral decision."

"...That Archbishop Wesker!"

The elderly priest ground his teeth.

During the period of the Great Purge, Wesker, who was merely a high-ranking priest at the time, led the crackdown on an underground cult, which he considered brethren serving the same deity. Her accomplishments eventually earned him the rank of Archbishop.

She was famous for her rapid rise to power, but the path she took was stained with the blood of many brothers.

"Has she noticed something about the [Mission]?"

"It doesn't seem like it, according to the Bishop. He simply thought that Wesker was excessively cautious about the Grey Plague."

Just as the three of them were disguised as ordinary priests of the Inquisition, there were brothers of the [Seed] hidden within the church. The [Bishop] leading them was also one of those undercover brothers within the church.

"But did the Bishop really not know anything about Wesker's moves? How is that possible?"

"Until emergency measures were activated, even her close aides didn't notice. And even after learning the facts, there was no feasible way to evacuate the seeds scattered throughout the empire," the Bishop said.

"...Bethella."

The old priest swallowed his saliva and drew the holy symbol.

The youngest among them, a young priest, also drew the holy symbol and asked with an anxious face.

"Bethella. Are there no saved seeds at all? I heard that the majority of those arrested were released."

"Unfortunately, Prince Morres intervened. He singled out the seeds and handed them over to the capital's guards. Now they're all being transferred to the Inquisition here, so our plan to scatter the seeds widely has failed."

At Clemence's answer, the old priest sighed.

"...And yet his preparations are not over!"

"Yes, it seems his preparations are not over yet."

Confused by the vague conversation, the young priest asked.

"...Prince Morres?"

The so-called disgrace of the imperial family—how did he manage to do it?

Clemence chuckled at the young priest's puzzled expression.

"Don't you know? Well, maybe not to brothers of your age, since it's been over 10 years since then."

Just 10 years ago, no one among the brothers of the underground cult didn't know of Prince Morres.

The day he was born, the leaders of the four underground cults, each an Archbishop of [Passion], [Seed], [Repentance], and [Rest], gathered exceptionally to bless his birth.

Together, they made offerings to the Lord and celebrated his birth, saying,

– "Rejoice! The child is the [Chosen One] for the glory of the Order!"

– "Passion ignites flames in the dead of winter, Sowing plants crops in the desert, and Rest personally breathed life into him!"

– "Repentance shall accompany him, ensuring he walks without regret!"

– "Freed from long-standing oppression, the underground Order shall prosper once again!"

At the time, Morres was a fatherless illegitimate child, but as the only grandson of the mighty Young Master of Asein, he was not easily accessible to the Order, so his brothers watched him from afar, waiting for the time of glory the Archbishops spoke of.

However, years later, the situation took an odd turn.

One day, the child's father emerged and became the 17th Holy Emperor, and the child entered the palace as a prince. Naturally,

Prince Morres was out of the cult's sight.

Not long after taking power, the young Holy Emperor began a massive crackdown on the underground cult. They were defined as heretics and [Cult of Darkness], and a great purge began against the brothers scattered across the continent, not just in Delcross.

The underground cult suffered a severe blow from the Holy Emperor's unexpected actions.

[Seed] and [Repentance], who were based in foreign lands, narrowly survived and maintained their lineage. However, [Passion] and [Rest], the cults that were prospering in Delcross, were utterly eradicated without a trace.

And among the surviving old brothers of the cults, strange rumors began to circulate. They said the reason the Holy Emperor hastily purged the underground cults was that he had learned in advance that his son was the Chosen One prepared by the cults..

"Isn't that strange? Then, isn't Prince Morres not the Chosen One for the Order's prosperity, but rather like..."

Unable to finish his sentence, the young priest hesitated. Clemence lowered his head and said, "How could sinners like us ever fathom the Lord's deep grace? Besides, the faith of the Archbishops remained steadfast to the end, they say."

It was the [Rest] cult that the Holy Emperor slaughtered the most brutally. And even up until the moment his neck fell to the Emperor's blade, it is said that the Archbishop of [Rest] loudly mocked the Holy Emperor, shouting his last prophecy.

-"His preparations are not yet over!"

"His preparations are not yet over..."

"By now, we can't even know what Prince Morres is being prepared for. However, whatever his actions may be, we can't sit idle. Because..."

"Because [Repentance] said that there will be no regret in his steps."

"..."

A heavy silence descended upon the three underground priests.

"...Given the situation, we have no other choice. Starting now, all we can do is sow the seeds diligently. For the time being, it seems that the Holy Emperor has no plans to make a move, and the Church's Archbishop cannot continue to issue temporary emergency measures. If we hurry, we might still be able to reap a great harvest."

A moment later, Clemence spoke with a determined look on his face.

"That's the only way, indeed. By the way, what happened to him? I'm talking about the other brother from the Forgotten order. Didn't he say he would cooperate?"

At the elderly priest's question, Clemence's face darkened.

"It would have been better to just preach to a wall. I've repeatedly emphasized the importance of our task, but Priest Hayes keeps giving the same answer with a somewhat carefree expression."

– "I'm just waiting for His command."

His demeanor felt like that of a condemned prisoner who has accepted his fate, making Clemence sometimes feel a sense of eeriness.

"We're not getting through to him at all."

"What a shame. I had hoped that some part of [Rest]'s legacy would surely be preserved here. If so, it would have certainly been a great help in our mission."

The elder priest sighed and made the sign of the cross.

"In that case, let's forget about him. If we remain faithful to the tasks given to us, the Lord will surely respond someday. Bethel..."

86

It was a world where the sun had completely disappeared.

A frigid air devoid of life's warmth.

From the sky, a sticky rain fell incessantly, covering a land of countless, rapidly cooling corpses—a realm of death.

It was only later that Nate realized the viscous fluid wasn't rain but blood. Everything—the sky, the earth—was steeped in a deep red hue.

Standing alone under the crimson sky, Nate remained quiet.

This was the visage of Delcross post the advent of [Catastrophe].

Had equilibrium finally been shattered?

[Ha ha.]

A faint laugh echoed from somewhere.

Slowly, Nate moved his feet.

Every step he took squelched against the sprawled corpses of soldiers that covered the vast plains. Puddles of spilled blood formed splattering sounds beneath his every step.

Soon in his sight lay a crumbling city wall.

Or should it even be called a wall anymore?

With its semi-broken gates and partially remaining stone walls, what once was a fortification now stood soaked in blood.

And in the center of that gate hung a horrendously mangled corpse.

Hundreds, if not thousands of dull blade wounds had torn it to a degree beyond recognition. It took Nate a while to even figure out that this had once been a human.

A deed carried out by someone harboring a hideous grudge.

As Nate frowned, a voice whispered in his mind.

[That man was the king of Rohan.]

Was it that good-for-nothing Amelia was so obsessed with? How did he end up like this?

[It's the retribution he deserves.]

The voice conveyed no emotion, making Nate feel all the more uneasy.

Surveying his surroundings, Nate moved towards a patch of dry ground untouched by puddles of blood.

But he had to stop, lost for words. Lying before him were people he knew all too well—now lifeless.

The young woman lying with her face to the sky wore a tattered dress, a small dagger embedded in her chest. Though her hair had shortened and her face had aged, she remained beautiful in her pale, lifeless visage.

Amelia.

[A pitiful sprout. I nurtured it with care through its neglected youth, only for it to wither in its small pot without ever blooming. She was a child full of dreams and talent...]

Beside her lay a young man in black armor. Arrows pierced his back, and he lay fallen.

Though his face had grown sharper and harder with age, a youthful innocence still lingered on his pale features.

My son.

[A child with great potential. I built fences around him, worrying he might fly away. In the end, he mustered the strength on his own. I should have let him spread his wings earlier...]

Nate's hand began to tremble.

The other kids...

[Stop. You're not ready to handle this.]

Hwaak.

With those words, he was abruptly pushed out of that red world by an intense force.

The sky and the ground inverted, and in an instant, his vision blurred and he found himself in a completely different place.

"...Ha!"

"Your Majesty!"

Nate opened his eyes to the desperate voice calling him. Lifting his head, he saw the face of Chief Chamberlain Louis, who was looking down at him with a worried expression.

He was leaning back on the sofa in his office. In his hand was Amelia's pendant that Louis had brought to him earlier.

The pendant, which the chambermaid of the Silver Rose Palace had sent for repair, had been intercepted and brought to him by Louis.

"Are you alright, Your Majesty? You skipped your meal and stayed in your office. I came to check on you, and you're sweating profusely."

"...No, it's nothing."

Nate took a deep breath and waved his hand at the chief chamberlain. His racing heart slowly started to calm down.

He brushed his face with one hand and looked down at the shattered pendant he was holding. The tiny droplet-shaped gem was still sparkling brilliantly even though it was broken in half.

It looked completely unrelated to that ominous world filled with red light.

"It's nothing," he said again to the chief chamberlain, who still had a worried look on his face. Nate opened his desk drawer, put the gem inside, and slammed it shut.

Several days had passed since the establishment of the special task force for dealing with monsters.

The Holy Assembly was still in heated debate over whether to recognize these "monsters" as such, or to categorize them as a type of demon race, as there was no specific mention of otherworldly beings or monsters in their scriptures.

The point of contention was a single line in their scriptures:

"The Lord's representative shall be present, and the Lord Himself will bestow blessings, ensuring that the likes of demons cannot set foot on this land."

Depending on the interpretation of this line, the creatures would either remain classified as monsters or be categorized as demons.

"The scripture doesn't mention anything other than demons! To say otherwise is heresy!"

"But this line clearly uses the term 'the likes of,' implying there could be others!"

"Implying? Did you just say implying? It's dangerous to make such expansive interpretations. That's heresy!"

"What? Have you finished speaking?"

They had been arguing for a week over a single line in a book. Theologians were indeed fascinating individuals.

"This is the current situation. I thought we'd be roaming the streets investigating the plague immediately, but here I am, stuck in the office reading books," Seongjin grumbled while crunching on a cookie. The Holy Emperor, sitting across from him, quietly listened to the story as he sipped his tea.

It was the first leisure time they had since Bruno's treatment. Seongjin had a lot to tell the Holy Emperor, given the numerous events that had occurred in just a few days.

Firstly, the aura layer of the short blade was nearly reaching the 6th level. It would be complete within a few days.

Considering it generally takes 3-4 years to progress from the 5th to the 6th level, Seongjin's progress was extraordinarily fast. At this rate, he would soon surpass being a squire and be on par with a newly initiated low-ranking knight.

The admiration from the priests and resident knights wasn't a one or two-day affair. Even Bruno, the knight commander, couldn't hide his astonishment. He looked almost betrayed.

-Why, if someone this capable exists, why didn't I notice him in my own class?

He didn't even seem to consider Morres as his disciple, so why the fuss now?

"Commander Bruno's regaining his Aura thanks to Father. As his Aura becomes more active, his disposition changes day by day. It won't take long for him to reach the level of a Decalon Knight."

"....."

Holy Emperor didn't respond, but Seongjin felt that he was listening more attentively than usual.

Anyway, Commander Bruno also accumulated his Aura quickly and recently reached the 4th level.

He usually seemed to be relaxed, but lately, he seemed to be invigorated, intensifying his meditation. His mustache becoming longer and sharper was a bonus.

Another topic was the newly formed monster special task force.

For the last two days, Seongjin had been showing his face daily at the task force's office with Masain. Since the department was officially launched, they had started what could technically be termed "going to work."

Of course, there were no specific plans for work yet, and people were just getting to know each other on the team.

At first, according to Commander Leandros, they were recruiting talents from various places. However, the appointed advisors were busy arguing in the assembly. On top of that, Commander Leandros, who had a lot of work of his own, didn't even think about coming to the office.

Exorcists and Inquisitors who had been roaming the country anyway just continued their existing work, now with the added task of "monster" hunting.

In the end, the ones consistently showing up at the task force's office were a half-crazy Exorcist, a cheerful red-headed Inquisitor, and a perfume charlatan from the Lyora Plague Guild.

Seongjin had a lot to say about this Lyora charlatan.

Jibril Seymour.

She had attached herself to the monster task force after breaking into the capital's guard unit with Seongjin not long ago. She was the same plague doctor who had once sprayed rose-scented terror on Seongjin's group in front of the tribunal.

Of course, her first day in the office was no exception. She greeted the new members not with words but with a baptism of perfume.

"So the whole office smells like roses when we go to work! Ah, really! I don't know why Commander Leandros brought in that charlatan."

As Seongjin pouted, Holy Emperor, who had been quietly listening, tilted his head slightly.

"But the scent is pretty good. Those who take care of plague patients often have to deal with foul smells, so it's not incomprehensible for them to be obsessed with perfumes."

Huh, has the scent grown on you too?

Seongjin sniffed his sleeve and then looked up suddenly.

"So you don't believe that nonsense about the scent driving away the disease, do you?"

"Hmm....."

Holy Emperor averted his gaze. He seemed unable to directly criticize the plague doctors who were officially endorsed by the assembly as quacks.

"Anyway, this is what we do with these members. We open the scripture and theology textbooks and discuss what we should do next, and half the day just passes by."

When will the assembly finally end? We should just investigate; I don't understand why there's so much fuss.

Listening to Seongjin's grumbling, Holy Emperor faintly curled his lips.

"So does that mean you finally read a bit on the Introduction to Theology, huh?"

"Um....."

I just flipped it open and become lost in thought myself.

This time, Seongjin also averted his gaze.

As he lowered his gaze, Seongjin noticed that there was a sword hanging at the Holy Emperor's waist that he had never seen before. Unlike his previous Nutcracker, it was a short sword with a white blade.

At first glance, its simplicity suited his taste. But wasn't it much shorter than the one he used to use?

"No big deal. When I use the Aura Blade, the length doesn't matter. All I need is a sturdy sword that doesn't require much maintenance," Holy Emperor said.

Ah, for someone whose Aura goes wherever his heart desires, the length of a physical sword doesn't seem to be of much concern.

Seeing Seongjin's keen interest, the Holy Emperor willingly unsheathed the sword to show him.

The new sword had a white hilt and its blade was also made of a rare white metal. It felt surprisingly light yet sturdy. The more he looked at it, the more it seemed like a fine piece. Despite the absence of any special decoration, it looked incredibly luxurious.

The Holy Emperor seemed quite pleased with the sword as well.

"It's as agile as a fish, don't you think? Hence, I've named it 'True Salmon.'"

Wait, what?

"...Is that the original name of the sword?"

"I'm not sure. I just picked something that seemed appropriate from the imperial warehouse."

If it's from the imperial warehouse, shouldn't it be a treasured sword? Wouldn't it have a grand name?

"Father, it might be a sword with a significant legacy. Shouldn't we find out its proper name?"

Seongjin was sweating nervously. He had to prevent another embarrassing naming debacle.

The Holy Emperor slightly tilted his head.

"Do we need to? If it gets a better name, then that should be enough."

Salmon is a very tender and delicious fish, after all."

"..."

This man, does he have a thing for seafood?

Seongjin frowned and pondered for a moment. How should I persuade him?

Even if it's not a significant issue, still, 'The Emperor's Beloved True Salmon'? Doesn't it sound a bit... odd?

"Um, Father..."

Seongjin hesitated.

"Of course, this sword is not a living object, but if it has once been given a name, then forgetting that name seems like a regrettable thing."

"..."

"If you're going to cherish it, shouldn't you also respect its name?"

Right. Names are really important.

Wasn't that the case with the twins as well? A name binds someone to this world, and if you continuously deny that name, you won't be able to set foot in the world.

Moreover, whatever the sword's original name, I'd bet my entire fortune that it would be cooler than 'True Salmon.'

Of course, that would be the fortune that I received from Father.

Then the Holy Emperor, who had been fixated on the name 'True Salmon' was silent for a moment.

He then looked at Seongjin with an indecipherable gaze and finally nodded slowly after some time.

"...Your words are correct. It is never desirable for the original name to be forgotten."

So?

"Then I'll instruct Louis to look into the records in the imperial warehouse."

Done! I've averted a second Nutcracker incident!

Elated, Seongjin clenched his fists and cheered inwardly. As a result, he failed to catch the fleeting expression that crossed the Holy Emperor's face at that instant moment.

There was no need to specifically search the imperial treasury records to know the original name of 'True Salmon' sword. Fortunately, the chief chamberlain Louis, who had just come in holding a pot of warm tea, gave a clear answer.

"The name of that sword is [Eungashi], and its nickname is [Acacia]. It's a truly beautiful sword," he said, as he set down a warm cup of tea at the Emperor's table.

"The virtue bestowed by the sacred text on the sword is called [Repentance]."

It was said that adding the virtue from the sacred text to a treasure sword was a long-standing tradition of the Delcross royal family. Things like [Promise], [Sacrifice], or [Devotion], for example.

It seems that if you become a chief chamberlain, you know all the items in the imperial treasury. Truly impressive, isn't it?

At Seongjin's admiration, Louis chuckled softly, "Hehe."

"How could that be the case? It's just that this sword is special. It was one of the few weapons designated as a sacred relic, but it was stolen several decades ago."

At the time, it was under strict supervision within the Theological Academy along with other holy artifacts. But, it vanished overnight, so to speak.

And the sword that was found again after a long search had become just an ordinary precious sword.

"It was an event that occurred 40 years ago. I was just an apprentice steward at that time, but it was such a famous event that I still remember it."

It was an event where a sacred relic was stolen and lost its noble status. Both the imperial family and the academy were turned upside down.

High-ranking clerics and scholars from the academy had spent months making a fuss, but the noble status the sword had lost never returned. In the end, Eungashi was left abandoned in the imperial treasury amidst many people's lamentations.

"So, I thought that Your Majesty choosing this sword might also be destiny," said Louis, looking at the Holy Emperor with a soft smile.

The Holy Emperor, who had not known the full history, looked gravely serious. It's understandable if it was a sword that had once been a sacred relic.

"A name that's not so special after all. In that case, True Salmon is..."

Was that his concern?

Seongjin quickly shouted, "No! Eungashi or Acacia is definitely cooler!"

"..."

Looking all sour won't change the fact!

After finishing his royal duties and on his way back to Pearl Palace, Seongjin decided to stop by the Tribunal. It was to meet Kenneth Diggory and the Black Prophets who were imprisoned.

With nothing much to do even if he went to the Monster Special Division, and the whole division strangely just staring at Seongjin's face, he thought it might be okay to do some independent investigation.

Clip-clop. Inside the slow-moving carriage, Seongjin was lost in thought.

The accompanying knight Sir Masain who was traveling with him, discreetly observing his mood and remained silent. To his eyes, the prince's face was quite serious, so there was no point in questioning why they were going to the Tribunal.

In truth, throughout the journey, Seongjin had different questions he really wanted to ask the Holy Emperor:

—"Did you keep an eye on Commander Bruno through Arenja?"

—"What do you mean when you say he wholly belongs to my karma?"

—"How much does Arenja know about me and the Demon King?"

—"What do you expect from me and the special monster task force?"

However, every time he faced the emperor, the words would not easily come out. Whether it was due to some strange premonition of Seongjin's, or because of his sensitive intuition, he could sometimes sense an unexplainable, precarious atmosphere coming from the Holy Emperor.

—"Sometimes, even words spoken casually can shake and crumble the very foundations..." (Chapter 81)

Katrina's words kept coming to his mind.

'Is it just me, or does everyone look oddly tired these days...?'

After pondering for a while, Seongjin abruptly raises his hand and messes up his hair. Startled by this sudden action, Masain, who was on the opposite side, looked at him.

'Ah, I don't know! This is giving me a headache!'

Originally, such worries weren't in Seongjin's nature.

Wouldn't the Holy Emperor handle everything well anyway? There's no need to add burdens by sticking his nose into the issues of a failed construction supervisor.

Right, let's not create any trouble.

Maintaining his health and staying out of trouble would fulfill his duties as a child, wouldn't it?

While Seongjin was having these somewhat reassuring thoughts—thoughts that would have made the Holy Emperor sigh if he knew—the carriage arrived in front of the Tribunal.

It was a timely visit for Seongjin.

Three out of the six members of [Black Prophets] were soon to be released on bail until the Church Assembly was over.

Of course, Kenneth Diggory, the main culprit suspected of being related to the disappearance of a maid and a servant from his residence, was excluded.

So were Ashley and Jonathan, who hadn't regained consciousness after receiving treatment for the Gray Plague.

"We know nothing about that disease, Your Highness."

"Ashley and Jonathan have been under investigation elsewhere from the beginning."

As the three individuals who were preparing for release hesitated to speak, Seongjin furrowed his brows.

Seongjin was now suspecting the Tribunal. Those two who were fine at Diggory's residence were already implanted with a demon egg when transferred to the Tribunal. That means the implantation happened within the Tribunal's prison.

If the two regained consciousness and testified, it would simplify matters. However, due to the random formation of salt crystals from the Gray Plague, all patients were mentally unstable, so it was uncertain if they would wake up at all. The only option left was to interrogate the inmates from the Tribunal.

However, no matter how much they were questioned, the three individuals knew nothing. It seemed that they were originally imprisoned in a different jail.

In the end, Seongjin had to let the three men go without any significant information.

"As you know, Your Highness, I was receiving treatment elsewhere at that time."

The second person Seongjin met was Kenneth Diggory.

His complexion had considerably worsened; whether it was due to the hardships in prison or because of the dissertation he had recently submitted was unclear.

Kenneth claimed to have suffered a skull fracture after getting hit on the back of the head by Seongjin during the Bantra Moss incident. Thanks to the treatment, he had no particular hardships in the heretical tribunal.

"You should be truly thankful to me."

"...Huh?"

Kenneth looked blankly at Seongjin, who was acting rather haughty despite being the one who had injured him.

At the time, Kenneth had acted like a complete lunatic, but now he seemed to have returned to being a well-mannered young man.

Does this guy remember feeding two of his servants to Bantra Moss? At the very least, he can't deny that he tried to use Ashley Becher as bait right before my eyes.

And yet, he spoke to Seongjin with a pitiful face.

"I'm truly thankful, Your Highness, for stopping me. I don't understand why I acted that way when I think about it now..."

What is up with this guy?

As Seongjin's expression turned grim, Kenneth flinched and lowered his eyes.

"I know it's meaningless to say this now, but we, the 'Black Prophets,' were simply a humble gathering exploring the mysteries of this world."

They had initially formed their group two years ago as an energetic social club to read forbidden books behind their professors' backs and discuss various questions.

However, everything changed a year ago when a person called the "Sage" appeared.

At first, the members did not easily believe the self-proclaimed 'one who had reached the truth of this world,' but the more they knew about him, the more appealing he became.

Above all, the black mass he brought was something that couldn't possibly exist in this world. The members gradually started to believe that it was a mystery of this world.

And sponsorship from Morres started roughly around then.

"Exactly as the Sage said! If it's the Emperor, he could share our mysteries."

Seongjin suddenly recalled Kenneth's shouts in the Diggory family's underground chamber.

So, the one who first brought that Bantra Moss spawn here was that 'Sage.' And for some unknown reason, he mentioned Morres to the Black Prophets.

Who the hell is this Sage?

"In fact, I don't remember much about the Sage," Kenneth said, sweating. He felt Seongjin's increasingly piercing gaze.

"But it's true! Although we were definitely charmed by him, thinking back, I don't have a clear memory of his face or voice! I even don't remember how we first met him!"

Kenneth's face was almost tearful.

And at that moment, Seongjin recalled the words that Haven spoke when he woke up from the gray plague.

– Who was she?

– Hm? Maybe I was too drunk, but I don't clearly remember her face now. Just that she had long, beautiful hair.

Was Haven really just drunk that day?

Kenneth looked further into this 'Sage,' but there was little information to be had.

The last time Kenneth met the sage was the day he sent an invitation to Prince Morres.

Before meeting him, the Black Prophets simply planned to continue ignoring him while taking the prince's sponsorship money. However, the sage directly advised Kenneth to invite Prince Morres to their gathering.

- "Even if you see what's in that prince's eyes, would you still be able to act that way? Heavy restrictions always entail great potential. You are more than qualified to step into the mysteries of this world."

That was the inside story behind the sudden arrival of an invitation to Morres.

'...Hey, Demon King.'

[Hmm, it seems to be true. His heart rate is fast, but it looks like it's just emotional fluctuations.]

The lie detector was working hard today as well.

Seongjin wrapped his head in agony, took a glance at Kenneth, sighed, and left the visiting room.

He definitely had to dig deeper into this sage, but he had no idea where to start.

The investigation into the Gray Plague wasn't even proceeding properly yet.

Ah, it's frustrating. So frustrating.

He suddenly wanted to swing the Nutcracker around in the training ground.

But as soon as he went to the training ground, even more troubling stories awaited Seongjin.

"I have a feeling it wasn't just a coincidence," said Commander Bruno cautiously, sharing his story.

Apparently, he met someone who resembled his first love from his childhood before contracting the Gray Plague.

"Didn't you say you don't remember anything?"

When asked about the initial progress of the illness, Commander Bruno had stated that he hardly remembered anything. At Seongjin's question, the commander's face reddened.

"That's because... at that time, I thought I was just dreaming..."

"Ah."

Certainly. Saying, 'I had a good dream where my first love appeared,' is indeed awkward.

"But as days go by, I keep thinking that it wasn't a dream. Her face is blurry, but her voice is still vividly in my ears. Of course, my memory at the time isn't intact, so I can't be sure."

"Is it possible that she was your first love?"

"Impossible. She definitely died during the Ortana civil war long ago."

"Hmm..."

Seongjin stroked his chin, lost in thought.

The person resembling Commander Bruno's first love, the gorgeous beauty Haven met.

And the sage who captivated the Black Prophets.

[...Something smells fishy, right? It feels like the 'Charm' that demons use.]

At the Demon King's words, the commander nodded.

"Exactly. As Sir Red said, the more I think about it, the more I can't shake off this 'Charm' feeling. But there can't be any demon race in Delcross."

[Who the hell is calling me 'Red'?]

"My apologies. Sir Red."

[Ack!]

Seongjin raised his hand to stop the two who were anxiously talking.

"So, do you remember what she said?"

"Nothing much. I just remember feeling completely relaxed because she was comforting me. So... " —"I know your pain better than anyone else. You don't need to blame anyone anymore. Forget everything, and after you sleep well for a few days, everything will get better."

"... something like that... Ah, that doesn't mean I resent the Holy Emperor or anything..."

Although the commander belatedly rambled on with excuses, Seongjin nodded his head with a generous smile.

I get it, you sir. Even if you've been sincerely loyal to the imperial family, who wouldn't harbor some resentment after living as an outcast for years? If it were me, I would still be unsatisfied even after venting all my frustrations.

"Yes, even if you vented your frustrations a few times, I understand."

"That's not what I meant..."

"Don't worry. I know. I know it all."

"....."

Enchantment.

The Demon King explained that it's a basic ability possessed by high-ranking demons, usually manifested through magic.

[So, there's really no way for a non-cleric human to resist it. That's why this guy was acting all confused, without even knowing that someone had implanted an egg inside him, acting all 'dazy'.]

"Who said I was acting all 'dazy'? Sir Red!"

[Who are you calling 'Red,' you brat!]

Leaving the two bickering figures aside, Seongjin started to organize his thoughts.

The assumption that the person going around implanting Lophellum's egg was using some sort of [Enchantment] ability seemed fairly plausible. Otherwise, who in their right mind would stand still while a parasite was being implanted into their chest?

However, wouldn't that require the initial premise that the demon species had entered the Imperial domain? He had heard that Delcross was entirely under the Holy Emperor's influence, preventing any demons from even stirring.

[Generally, the medium is magic, but it's not like there aren't cases where something else serves as the medium. In a sense, it could be even more dangerous if you don't consciously resist it, like with divine power for example...]

What?

As Seongjin blinked his eyes, the Demon King sighed.

[You don't have to look far. Just think about it. How did humans react when they faced your father's overwhelming divine power?]

Seongjin recalled the day his neck almost got sliced off.

How did they react? Weren't they just a bit moved?

So, that's why all the Archbishops ran out of the conference room, lost control of their emotions, and cried their eyes out while sitting on the floor shouting praises to the Lord... huh?

'...Somehow, that feels extremely dangerous?'

Seongjin broke into a cold sweat, and the Demon King chuckled.

[See? In a narrow sense, enchantment is just a technique to seduce someone, but in a broader sense, it's a technique that extremely stimulates human emotions to the point of losing their sanity. So, if you think about it, whether the medium is divine power, aura, or anything else, it's all possible.]

In other words, the Demon King was saying that as long as one can stimulate certain human senses properly, an effect similar to [Enchantment] could be produced.

[Ordinary humans often can't even distinguish what starts as enchantment. Even if they know, they find it hard to resist. For example, I've used [Enchantment] on countless humans, but there was only one who didn't fall for it. That is, you, Lee Seongjin.]

'...Huh?'

Hold on, did I just hear something that can't be ignored?

'...What did you do?'

[Ah, enchantment. I used it on you...]

Seongjin was horrified.

When exactly?

[That's the point, I offered to give you the world and all, didn't I? Didn't I look like an incredibly beautiful woman at that moment?]

'.....?'

Certainly, back then the Demon King did make various proposals.

—"I will save your life, and you'll get to have both Earth and the Demon World. Think about the potential of the two fused worlds! You could even have power rivaling the Demon King!"

Let's think more in detail about the situation at that time.

What did the Demon King look like then? A head that was all that was left, and even that face had been completely smashed by a fist? Was that a beauty?

Hold on, is that a situation where [charm] could work?

[...Khu-khuk!]

The Demon King suddenly let out a sound, whether it was a cry or a scream, and buried himself in a corner of Seongjin's mind.

Hmm, it seemed like I triggered his trauma.

* * *

The next morning, after finishing his early training, Seongjin stamped his attendance with Sir Masain at the Monster Special Task Force office.

For the first two days, even Commander Bruno accompanied them. Faithfully fulfilling Arenja's request to stay by Seongjin's side.

However, at some point, he started to avoid the Monster Special Task Force office.

"That woman keeps talking noisily."

When asked why, he scrunched his face and replied.

"Which woman?"

The commander pointed at his head without saying anything.

Ah, the woman with an abnormal amount of mind crystals in her head.

She is Dame Sharon Kyung, an exorcist from the Holy Terbacchia.

I thought she was usually a quiet person doing her job, but it seems she feels different to a channeler.

Apparently, various voices keep coming from her uncontrolled mind crystals. He said it's too noisy, even if he tries to endure it.

"She said she can't help it and asked for understanding, but well..."

Saying that, the commander furrowed his brows and nervously tugged at his mustache.

"She keeps throwing embarrassing comments at me, then laughs while watching my reaction. She's enjoying it. She's a really unpleasant woman."

"...."

Dame Sharon. Why on earth did you do that?

Meeting another channeler with similar abilities after such a long time seemed to make her giddy with excitement.

And so, the regular members of the Pearl Palace team became Seongjin and Masain once again.

The Special Monster Task Force was still using a temporary office on the second floor of the administrative annex building. The annex was relatively quiet, so the two were able to arrive at the office without running into anyone. As soon as they opened the door, the overpowering scent of roses made them involuntarily scowl.

"Jibril..."

"Your Highness!"

A young woman with dark-brown hair curled into a high bun and large eyes greeted them with an elegant bow, lifting the hem of her skirt slightly.

Jibril Seymour.

A young talent specially invited to the team, serving as a plague doctor at the Lyora Plague Conference.

She always carried a large sprayer full of rose-scented perfume, and because she was unnecessarily diligent, she was always the first to arrive in the office and finish disinfecting the space. Meaning, the scent of roses never really left the office.

Seongjin found it slightly irritating, but as the Prince of the Holy Empire, he couldn't just ignore the teachings of the Lyora doctrine recognized by the Church. He couldn't easily kick out someone who had been recruited by Commander Leandros, who was in charge of the team.

Moreover, Jibril was fundamentally a very pleasant young lady. She always greeted people with a friendly smile and sprayed her perfume, leaving them no choice but to avoid the range of her sprays.

Seongjin sighed.

"What about the others?"

"Dame Sharon is out assisting Commander Leandros for the day. Sir Valerie has gone to the Theological Academy."

"Ah! Your Highness, you're already here!"

Before Jibril could finish her sentence, a red-haired inquisitor burst through the office door. He greeted them with a radiant smile and was holding a large book under his arm.

"I thought I'd get back before you arrived, but I was a little late."

"No, I just got here. What's that?"

Valerie grinned and put the book down on the desk with a thud. Dust flew up from the ancient tome.

"Prepare to be amazed! It's probably been decades since anyone has opened this book."

It was an old book covered in thick layers of dust. After brushing off the worn-out leather cover, the title of the book, barely legible due to wear and tear, came into view.

[Apocalypse of Another World]

Masain seemed startled and glared at Valerie.

"...Isn't this a forbidden book designated by the Church? What are you doing with this?"

Masain, who was particularly sensitive to heretical discussions, looked as if he wanted to protect Seongjin from the book. The red-haired inquisitor blinked in momentary confusion.

"Ah, don't worry. Of course, I borrowed it from the Theological Academy with proper permission."

"You got permission?"

When Masain looked skeptical, Valerie scratched his head.

"Well, it's understandable. The Church is in an uproar over discussions about creatures from other worlds. As a result, some materials are likely to be removed from the list of forbidden books."

"....."

Jibril leaned in with curiosity, to which Valerie responded with a smile.

"Besides, this is the only book that describes creatures close to 'monsters.' Even if it remains a forbidden book, we have received limited access for our department. We are, after all, the Monster Special Task Force, aren't we?"

A book containing monsters.

Finally, Seongjin felt a twinge of curiosity and glanced at the book over Masain's shoulder.

Who in Delcross would write a book about monsters? How did they know about creatures that don't exist in this world?

[Oh? There's a book that contains Gehenna's monsters?]

The Demon King also sent an interesting emotion for the first time in a while.

[Who wrote this? Wow, it's fascinating.]

Pushing aside the still hesitant Masain, Seongjin approached and closely examined the book's cover.

The thick leather cover was intricately embossed, making it difficult to distinguish the faded letters. After observing it for a long time, Seongjin was finally able to find the author's name at the corner of the book.

—Written by Sigurd Sigurdson

Sigurd? Could it be?

[Seongjin! It's him!]

The excited voice of the Demon King echoed loudly in his mind.

[I told you before, it's undoubtedly him! The storyteller who wanders from dream to dream!]

The day he died and revived at the Diggory Mansion.

Despite being advised to maintain absolute stability, Seongjin laid in bed and had quite an extensive conversation with the Demon King about various matters that had occurred up until now.

The stories of the High Demon Kings and foreign lords the Demon King had seen at the border of the Void.

The story of Seongjin flying to Sigurd's 34th District and returning with the aid of the Holy Emperor. The story of meeting the twins and wandering about.

Among them, the story that they talked about the most was about the puppet show that Seongjin had seen. A puppet show about the Dream Demon King, the Fire Demon King, and a cruel warrior.

[That was the guy who attacked me back then!]

The Demon King grumbled as if annoyed.

[Unforgivable to launch such an ineffective attack!]

Ineffective?

[Hey! Imagine being pushed slightly by a finger while standing on the edge of a cliff. How would you feel? I was dying at the boundary of the dimension!]

Ah, sorry.

After venting his anger for a while, the Demon King finally calmed down.

[The puppeteer you saw must be the storyteller who wanders through dreams.]

'Storyteller?'

[Walking through a thousand dreams, emitting a thousand voices.]

Seongjin recalled the peculiar allure of that person's voice.

So, is he the Dream Demon King? Must he fight the warrior to become the Storytelling Demon King?

[Well, from what I know, he's not really what you'd call a 'Demon King'. The concept of a story isn't higher than that of a dream. He probably just lightly manipulated the concepts needed to create his small thought experiment.]

According to the Demon King's explanation, the concepts that the puppeteer needed were [Dream], [Fire Demon King], and a human [Warrior].

Of course, the Dream Demon King wasn't friends with the Fire Demon King either. All that was sufficient was solidifying the notion that the Fire Demon King entered someone's dream, fought with a human, and died.

'What about that gloomy story filled with betrayals...?'

[The author of the story is dark, so naturally, a dark story is born. However...]

'However?'

[The story about the cruel warrior seems to be quite well-researched.]

What, this guy?

The two engaged in a brief war of words, fraught with nervous tension.

Looking back, I was like, 'What kind of psycho is this guy?' Even now, just thinking about that moment makes my heart race, you know?

What? You're the one who invaded first, and you're being all self-righteous? And you're just a soul, you don't even have a heart to race. What's your problem?

Anyway, what Seongjin was focused on was the Demon King's real name, and that part about the "dream."

The Demon King's name wasn't actually "Al Pahars," as expected. The name was twisted in the first place to launch an attack, so that was a given.

But when Seongjin asked for his real name, the Demon King hesitated.

[Hmm, maybe it's better you don't know. Speaking this name aloud could be troublesome.]

'Why?'

[Because there are some conditions attached.]

'...?'

So how do I call you if you suddenly fly off somewhere?

[I'll call you to my side. Then, won't your father swiftly come to pick you up?]

'What are you talking about?'

If the Holy Emperor knew, he'd give this guy a good thrashing for speaking so carelessly. If anything like that happens again, that nobleman would happily kick the bucket!

Shaking his head in disbelief, Seongjin shifted the topic.

'So what's this 'Dream' about?'

Seongjin could understand that Gehenna's Demon King was a representative of the Fire Demon King. After all, Gehenna was another name for the hell of eternal suffering.

But what did it mean for the Fire Demon King to have fought a human hero in a dream?

The Demon King calmly responded.

[It's simple. I'm talking about lower-dimensional realms like the Sigurd 34th District as dreams.]

Huh?

To Seongjin's befuddled face, the Demon King elaborated.

[The name Sigurd 34th District simply means it's the 34th Earth dimension discovered by a storyteller named Sigurd.]

The 34th Earth dimension discovered?

Are there that many Earth dimensions?

[It's just a simple lower-dimensional realm. The Earth of the Main World is separate, Seongjin.]

Seongjin, having lost all words due to the shocking revelation, heard the Demon King deliver the final blow.

[Your world is a lower-dimensional realm created based on the concepts of the Main World. In other words, it's nothing more than someone's dream.]

Imaginary Dimension.

A world where immense thought-forms solidify and eventually form a complete dimension of their own.

For some, it's an entire world in and of itself, while for others, it's a mere dream or an illusion— a sub-dimension.

"Are you saying that the Earth I lived on... wasn't real, but just a dream or an illusion?"

If Seongjin had heard such a thing while he was living on Earth, he would have scoffed and told the person to spend their time more productively, like hunting demons. However, now that he himself has traveled to another dimension, he can't simply dismiss these ideas as nonsense.

[Don't think of it so simply, Lee Seongjin. It may have started that way, but an Imaginary Dimension is ultimately a legitimate dimension. There is no change to the fact that it is a complete world.]

The Demon King spoke as if to console Seongjin, who rarely showed signs of emotional disturbance.

[Look. You are, after all, a solid existing soul. You've come all the way to this main dimension and you're still living and breathing just fine. What better evidence is there to prove your existence?]

According to the Demon King, the Earth dimension where Seongjin had lived—Sigurd-34 Earth, as it's called—is nonetheless a unique dimension distinct from the main Earth. It may feel like there are quite a number of Earth dimensions based on their numbering, but compared to the sheer amount of dreams that appear and disappear daily in the main dimension, it is actually an extremely small fraction.

Becoming an individualized dimension means that the originating dream is that deep and powerful.

However, the imaginary worlds are slightly less sturdy in their boundaries compared to the main world or permanent worlds. Consequently, it's relatively easier for them to be created or destroyed. If one intends to, interference or infiltration from other dimensions is also comparatively straightforward.

The reason why storytellers often move around in imaginary dimensions is precisely because of this.

To strengthen the boundaries of such an imaginary dimension, it needs to either merge with another dimension to evolve into a permanent dimension, or two dimensions have to interlock perfectly to form a complete loop and resonate with each other.

Hearing this explanation, Seongjin suddenly recalled what the Demon King had once told him during their final battle.

"You'll have both Earth and the demon world. Think of the potential harbored by the fusion of the two worlds!"

Come to think of it, hadn't the Demon King mentioned that Gehenna was also an imaginary dimension?

[That's correct. Gehenna had already undergone one dimensional fusion.]

The Demon King calmly admitted.

[That's why I intended to merge Sigurd 34 Earth and Gehenna, to create a new, sturdier permanent dimension.]

* * *

Sigurd Sigurdson.

A tale-spinner of dimensions, wandering through a thousand dreams and uttering a thousand voices.

He named the dimension after his own name upon discovering the Earth where Seongjin lives. He might be a puppeteer who was trying to completely annihilate the Demon King of Gehenna.

Seongjin felt a bit uneasy with the ancient forbidden book laid out before him, tracing the footsteps of that person.

'I'm still not sure if it's that Sigurd.'

[Of course, there's a possibility that it could be someone with the same name.]

The Demon King agreed but seemed to be inwardly confident that this author was indeed that tale-spinner.

[But who else could this Sigurd be, who wrote such a massive book about another dimension, if not that boastful tale-spinner?]

'.....'

It's not that Seongjin didn't have a strange feeling that the two might not be completely unrelated.

"Alright, team. This is a historic moment! For the first time in nearly 50 years, we are opening this forbidden book before even the professors of the Church!"

The red-haired Inquisitor looked completely thrilled. His exaggerated tone and theatrical speech reminded Seongjin of his college juniors, who used to get excited about bad acting experiences.

"Sir Valerie, you seem happy."

Jibril, who was delicately wiping the surface of the worn-out book with a rose-scented handkerchief, smiled.

"Yes, isn't the story of another world just too exciting? I was so excited when I heard that reading permission had been granted, I couldn't sleep all last night!"

He had hurriedly rushed to the Theological Academy as if terrified of going to work.

But is this really okay? Considering he's an Inquisitor of St. Marcia, which is almost the hands and feet of the heretical tribunal?

"Ah, it's a secret, but becoming an Inquisitor actually allows you more freedom to explore these fascinating subjects. Regardless of whether you believe it to be true or not, the story itself is very interesting, isn't it? It used to be a hot topic among the seniors as well."

He slyly glanced at Masain, who seemed displeased, and then smiled awkwardly.

"Of course, there's not a speck of doubt in my faith towards God!"

Of course, how could there be?

And so, they all gathered and turned the first page of that enormous book.

Just as Sir Valerie said, it was a historic moment. Seongjin was able to confirm the truth of the Demon King's words as soon as he read a few lines from the book's introduction.

—I, who freely roam through a thousand dreams, the great king, embark on a journey to become the one tale, the one rule that penetrates the world. I shall record Sigurd's journey in this book.

So, it was extremely grandiose from the very first sentence.

[Ha! Such arrogance, this level of pretentiousness...]

The Demon King clicked his tongue. Regardless of the facts, it appears that the storyteller himself thinks he's some sort of "Dream Demon King."

Of course, there was also an Inquisitor who became even more excited.

"Wow, it's intense right from the first line! It's completely spine-tingling, isn't it?"

—This book is a record of the most impressive dreams I have ever experienced. It serves as a guidepost set forth by a great explorer for those who may one day encounter these dreams themselves. A suggestion personally given by a benevolent king so that you, so that you, the pitiable ones, can finally find solace within these set of grand rules.

This guy is even more boastful than that wicked dragon he claims to have faced. It's unbearably cheesy to the point where modern sensibilities can't keep up.

"It seems like there's more than one reason this book became forbidden, right?"

Jibril narrowed her lovely eyes as she spoke.

Indeed, if someone who self-proclaims to be a great king and vows to be the single rule of the world isn't heretical, then what is? Even in modern society, they'd likely be banned from publication for excessive rhetoric.

In any case, once they laboriously moved past the pretentious preface, the content that followed was surprisingly written in a more normal tone. Soon, Seongjin and his party were engrossed in the book.

Unicorns, mermaids, and other legendary creatures; bizarre-looking monsters and beasts; strange lifeforms that exist on the border between plants and animals; and various magical creatures that Seongjin is familiar with.

For those who love stories, the book was packed full of fascinating content.

As Valerie turned each page, his eyes began to sparkle with delight.

Brief descriptions of the dimensions where these wondrous otherworldly creatures exist, relatively detailed accounts of their ecology, and even simple but accurately depicted illustrations.

To Seongjin's eyes, it was an incredibly well-crafted book.

Well, except for the preface.

[Hoo?]

As he continued flipping through, he finally started seeing content about magical creatures. The Demon King seemed to be fully engaged.

[This is pretty good?]

Upon seeing the pincer-legged creature that he often used as a weapon, Seongjin also concluded inwardly. The content of this book was fairly reliable.

"It's like an encyclopedia. But why is the title of this book 'Apocalypse'?"

Valerie smiled brightly at Jibril's question and responded.

"That's a valid question. The decisive reason this book is forbidden lies in the last chapter of this book."

He quickly flipped to the last chapter.

And there, just as the title suggested, the apocalypse unfolded before their eyes.

—When the first star awakens, a figure with a black face appears. Wherever he passes, not a blade of grass, not a drop of water remains; a great famine ensues. This is why he is called Greed. All beings of Delcross will suffer from hunger.

"Good heavens, this is a book that directly prophesies the fall of Delcross."

—When the second star awakens, a figure with a pallid face will appear. He is called the Bringer of Rest, and behind him, he commands an army of cold immortality. This is why he is known as Death. All beings of Delcross shall achieve eternity.

Ahem. Masain stepped back, his face drained of color, beads of cold sweat trickling down his face. The ominous prophecy had clearly shaken him.

This book had recorded how Delcross would face calamity as a total of five stars awakened. And roughly, the last part went like this:

—And then, the sky and the earth will connect, and a harbinger of the apocalypse wearing a lofty crown and wielding three swords will appear. When he swings one sword, the sun will lose its light and one-third of the stars will fall to the earth....."

Thump. With a grim look, Masain snatched the book and forcefully shut it.

Whoosh. The sound of the old, uncleaned dust scattering into the air.

The members of the special squad stared wide-eyed at Masain, who spoke with a trembling voice:

"This... this last chapter, it's best not to read any further."

"It's nothing but the ramblings of an arrogant person, Sir Masain."

Although Sir Valerie shrugged his shoulders, Masain's expression was firm.

"Merely laying eyes upon these erroneous verses that hint at the millennium kingdom of Delcross's ruin is sinful!"

"However....."

"We must especially prevent these sinful verses from reaching the young Prince's eyes!"

Seongjin, who was standing in front of Masain, looked up at him with puzzled eyes.

Sir Masain, who didn't seem to be particularly devout on a regular basis, was surprisingly sensitive to heresies and such.

"Hmm, hmm....."

The red-haired Inquisitor coughed awkwardly with a slightly flushed face. Apparently, he found it somewhat embarrassing to be corrected by a mere Knight.

"It seems Sir Masain is correct. This is a forbidden book marked as heretical, so we should be cautious, even if we have permission."

While saying that, Valerie's expression was one of reluctance. His words didn't carry much conviction.

Noticing the awkward atmosphere enveloping the members of the special squad, Seongjin sighed. For now, the mood needed to be refreshed.

"Sir Masain is right. Let's not forget that we've gathered to stop the [Gray Plague]. Shall we go back to the list of monsters in the codex?"

Taking Seongjin's cue, Masain hesitated for a moment before reluctantly putting the book back on the table.

In silence, they reopened the otherworldly apocalypse book and slowly began flipping through its pages.

"Hmm... it's not here?"

How much time had passed? They thought they had roughly skimmed through the section containing magical beasts, but they couldn't find anything about parasitic monsters that lay eggs anywhere.

Of course, it's not impossible that they simply missed it, but it's unlikely that the Demon King following Seongjin would have overlooked such a passage.

[Hmm, the idea that this single book contains all the beings from another world is nonsensical from the get-go.]

The Apocalypse of Another World was not an encyclopedia but rather a record primarily of what interested Sigurd. Even if it only gathered creatures with unique shapes or strange lifestyles, the volume would be extensive. There was no need to allocate pages for a small parasitic monster that might not even exist.

Seongjin glanced at the still restless and anxious Masain and spoke to the red-haired inquisitor.

"Would you take another detailed look, Sir Valerie? It might be better if Masain and I investigate the Heretic Tribunal's prison."

The faces of the two brightened simultaneously.

"Yes, Your Highness, I'll look thoroughly."

"Then I shall guide you to the Heretic Tribunal, Your Highness!"

Sir Valerie cheerfully picked up the Apocalypse of Another World and vanished to his spot. Masain's face also relaxed noticeably once the book was out of sight.

Good, everything is resolved smoothly.

Except for the moment of negligence when Jibril sprayed them with perfume, cautioning them to be careful.

"The sanitary conditions in the Heretic Tribunal's prison aren't exactly ideal."

Holding a sprayer and smiling brightly, Jibril received a forced smile from Seongjin.

Damn this Lyora plague quack!

[Hmmm...]

Waiting for the carriage in front of the administrative building and shaking off the perfume scent, the Demon King groaned. He seemed to have been contemplating something.

'What's the matter?'

[No, I've been feeling like something's about to come to mind, but I can't grasp it.]

The Demon King's uncomfortable feeling transmitted without filter, making Seongjin also feel slightly uneasy.

[Maybe we're too focused on Lophellum's eggs and overlooking something crucial?]

'...?'

We're dealing with parasitic monsters, so we should focus on parasitic monsters, right? What else could we be missing?

However, they soon discovered the answer.

That is, standing in front of the Heretic Tribunal building with one corner completely destroyed and billowing smoke.

"Your Highness, did I ever mention that you seem to bring incidents and accidents wherever you go?"

Seongjin couldn't help but send a look full of injustice towards the mumbling Masain.

What did I even do!

90

After deciding to investigate the Heresy Tribunal's prison, they left the task force office when Masain made a peculiar remark.

"Although I'm still a little worried about entering the Heresy Tribunal, His Majesty assured me that it should be fine now."

".....?"

The tone suggested that, up until recently, it was a place one shouldn't set foot in.

"Why? Is there a problem with the Heresy Tribunal?"

At Seongjin's question, Masain made an ambiguous face, as if he was smiling or perhaps not.

"...No, not anymore. It should be a good thing now. I misspoke for no reason."

Avoiding further questioning by hurriedly averting his gaze, he disappeared down the road, saying he would call a carriage.

Hmm, something seems suspicious.

Another unsettling factor remained. While waiting for the carriage in front of the administrative building and shaking off the scent of perfume, the previously quiet Demon King suddenly groaned.

[What if we're so focused on Lophellum's eggs that we're missing something important?]

'Well, Lophellum's eggs are parasitic in humans, so it makes sense to focus on them, right?'

[If it was a successful parasitism, maybe. But why bother with a host who will eventually die anyway?]

Is it really impossible that the demon beasts themselves hatched the eggs? To Seongjin's question, the Demon King firmly denied.

[Didn't I tell you? Lophellum avoids animals with high body temperatures like humans. Moreover, their ovipositors are surprisingly small, so they can't create large wounds. This has to be a case where the eggshell had hardened to some extent before being implanted.]

I see. The fact that the implanted location is always the same is also odd.

Just above the sternum. I don't know for sure, but perhaps that's the environment where Lophellum's eggs can survive the longest.

The conversation paused momentarily, as the carriage soon arrived.

Seongjin and Masain climbed into the carriage. Of course, Seongjin didn't forget to shake off the perfume and fully open the window.

[...It's strange. Why purposely kill the eggs inside a human's body? Why?]

In the carriage, the Demon King continued to brood and sigh.

Is there even anything to worry about? Isn't it enough for the Heresy Tribunal to just find the spy who planted the egg and get rid of him?

[It's not that simple!]

The Demon King flared up.

[Don't you get it? There might be another life similar to Lophellum that even I, the Demon King of Gehenna, don't know about. Whoever spies planting the egg knows that. This is now a matter of my pride versus his!]

Ah, I see.

Seongjin responded vaguely and closed his eyes, thinking that everything would be resolved once they reached the Heresy Tribunal.

However, things didn't go as smoothly as expected. Seongjin and his companions were stopped by the knights and guards of Saint Marcias right at the entrance of the Heresy Tribunal.

"Heresy Tribunal does not allow random entry from outsiders."

A stern-looking, sturdy knight narrowed his eyes as he blocked Seongjin's way.

"Your Highness, are you a member of the Heresy Tribunal? Or are you a witness or defendant in a case?"

Knowing well that Seongjin was neither, it felt like the knight was unnecessarily flexing his muscles. An inexplicable sense of hostility emanated from his demeanor. For some reason, Seongjin thought he might be one of the knights who had surrounded the Pearl Palace during the Diggory incident.

Masain stepped forward.

"This is an investigation regarding a serious incident threatening the imperial palace. Therefore, Sir..."

"Inquisitor Paris."

"Yes, Sir Paris. This is part of an investigation led by the Monster Special Task Force, so we request your cooperation."

Ha. A Monster Special Task Force!

At Masain's words, the knight snorted and raised an eyebrow.

"Do you have an official letter of cooperation?"

"That..."

Masain was at a loss for words.

There was no way they would have that.

Initially, there was no official stance on the monsters from the Holy Assembly. The duties of the special unit had not yet been defined, and the investigation itself was merely Seongjin moving around whenever he had the spare time.

'But this is rather sly.'

Seongjin was quietly staring at that knight called Paris when it happened. Someone passing through the Heresy Tribunal's entrance, discovered Seongjin at the front, and looked visibly flinched.

That person hurriedly approached, soon standing next to Knight Paris and began to intensely stare at Seongjin's face.

He was a gaunt middle-aged man in priestly robes, holding a large holy scripture. Despite his relatively young age, his back was noticeably hunched.

Not only Seongjin's group was startled. Knight Paris asked with a suspicious expression due to the unexpected situation.

"Brother Hayes, what brings you here?"

However, the priest named Hayes did not answer Paris' question. He just stared at Seongjin as if entranced.

Sensing the unusual atmosphere, Masain instinctively blocked the space between him and Seongjin. The man then softly asked Seongjin,

"...I never expected you to come here yourself."

Did he know Morres?

While Seongjin was hesitating on how to respond, the man interrupted his thoughts with another question.

"Has the time finally come?"

"...?"

It was an incomprehensible question.

However, sensing an inexplicable zeal in the man's eyes, Seongjin felt an odd premonition that he shouldn't ignore him.

"...Yes."

Seongjin slowly nodded, meeting the man's gaze.

"I had thought it was a far-off future. Have you truly made up your mind?"

"...?"

Well, since I don't really understand, let's just agree for now.

"Yes."

As if ripples were forming on a quiet lake, a smile gradually spread across the man's face. The change was so serene yet intensely passionate that even Knight Paris stared at his face in astonishment for a moment.

"Ah..."

He closed his eyes and sighed softly.

"It's been a long wait. Finally, the end of all this suffering is in sight."

The man took a step back and spoke to Seongjin in a polite bow. For some reason, his demeanor seemed oddly uplifting.

"Everything will happen as you have foretold."

And then he turned his body, and swiftly walked back into the Heresy Tribunal.

...What was that just now?

"Your Highness, do you know him? What did you talk about?"

Masain asked with a puzzled look on his face, but Seongjin had no specific answer. He just had a feeling that if he simply let him go, he might miss some crucial clue.

Could he be related to the previous Morres in some way?

It wasn't just Seongjin who felt something from the man. The demon king, who had been silent for a while, suddenly whispered to him.

[Hey, I'm not sure if it's just me, but doesn't that guy seem weird?]

'How so?'

[Very faint, but I feel something familiar. Just like a demon or something...]

'...Could it be?'

Is it him? Could he be the one who planted that egg?

Seongjin turned his head to look back, but Priest Hayes had already disappeared into the Heresy Tribunal building.

[Hm, I didn't sense any demonic essence or egg from him.]

The demon king paused, but his voice lacked confidence.

[I just feel a very faint trace of demonic energy from him. Why is that?]

'.....'

He wanted to go after the priest right away, but the guards led by Paris were still eyeing him and his party warily.

Is it too risky right now? Should I wait for that Hayes priest to get off work?

As Seongjin was pondering while staring at the Heresy Tribunal building, Masain asked him again.

"Your Highness, what command did you give him? What is he going to do?"

"I don't know either."

"What?"

Seongjin shrugged his shoulders toward Masain, whose eyes widened in surprise.

"I just felt like I had to say something, so I replied vaguely. What could possibly happen? What can he even do....."

But Seongjin couldn't finish his sentence.

Boom!

A loud explosion occurred, and a corner of the Heresy Tribunal building crumbled.

".....!?"

Not only Seongjin and his party but also the guards at the entrance, including Paris, were staring up, their mouths agape.

What?

Then, a series of smaller explosions followed.

Bang! Rumble! Boom! Creak!

The building of the Heresy Tribunal trembles with a shock. Dark smoke starts to seep out of a collapsed wall, making it evident that something quite abnormal was happening inside.

"Uaaahh! Kyaaaaah!" Screams resounded from everywhere.

Soon after, people in priestly robes rushed out of the Tribunal building in a panic.

"Uaaaaaaah!"

"What on Earth is going on? What's all this commotion?"

Sir Paris rushed to grab one of the priests and questioned him, but the man just quivered in fear, his face twisted in terror.

"Let go of me! Let me go! Hell, hell has opened! Oh, Lord..."

"What the—!"

Sir Paris clenched his teeth and turned to Seongjin and his companions.

"Do not move recklessly here, do you understand?"

Then he quickly disappeared into the Heresy Tribunal building with the guards.

"...Your Highness."

Masain, who was blankly staring at the rising smoke as if lost in thought, mumbles.

"Have I ever said that you seem to bring incidents and accidents wherever you go?"

What, why would I?!

Although he guesses that his earlier answer to Hayes might be the root cause, still...

Seongjin felt deeply wronged.

And soon, the Demon King warned him in a low voice.

[Seongjin, it's a monster. The monsters are coming!]

Seongjin immediately sensed that familiar presence.

Swish.

In an instant, he was gripping his familiar Nutcracker in his right hand.

Boom! Bam!

Immediately afterward, with a disturbingly loud flapping noise, numerous monsters the size of large dogs flew out from the ruined building.

At first glance, they appeared to be giant pumpkin wasps, but their bodies were covered with sharp green spikes instead of fur, and their large compound eyes were emitting a bizarre red glow. The menacing-looking creatures swung their massive, black, poisonous stingers from their rears.

"What... what are those, Your Highness!"

Masain, pulling out his sword glowing in a faint golden light, asked Seongjin in an urgent voice.

Why do people like Masain, or even at the Diggory estate, think that I would know everything about what's happening?

Unfortunately, this time, Seongjin did know.

"They're called Vespa Pumpkins! They're demons from Gehenna! Not only can they fly, but they also move really quickly, making them pretty tricky to deal with."

Normally, the monsters weren't that aggressive towards humans.

Of course, it's rare for them to attack first, but they would naturally retaliate against hostile humans. The venomous sting of that creature had enough power to kill a moderately strengthened Hunter in an instant.

However, those creatures soared up from the rooftop, making a loud "boong boong" noise as they circled around for a while, then swiftly flew off towards the downtown area.

If it were the old Seongjin, he could've leapt high and knocked them down to the ground just with the shockwave of his fist. But now, all he could do was blankly watch them disappear into the far sky.

What's going on? They seem to be flying away without hesitation, as if they have a destination in mind?

His curiosity lasted only a moment. Seongjin turned his head back towards the Heresy Tribunal building.

Kuahng! Kuahng! Euaahhak!

Inside, the sound of something breaking and screams still didn't stop. Something was still causing havoc inside.

"Your Highness..."

Masain called him with an anxious voice, as if wanting to stop whatever he was planning to do.

However, Seongjin briefly glanced at his face and turned back around, running towards the Heresy Tribunal building.

[Seongjin! There are various types of monsters inside! Spiders, ants, and hornets!]

The Demon King excitedly yelled in his mind.

[I've figured it out now! I know what the commonality is among the gathered monsters!]

Upon entering the building lobby, the battered security guards limped past Seongjin. The paladins, supporting a few priests, also glanced at him before rushing out the entrance.

Bang!

Soon after, the floor crumbled and a massive, spiky-legged arthropod creature emerged. Each of its joints nearly reached 3 meters; it was gigantic.

The creature touched the ground and then swiftly expanded the hole, pulling its body upwards. Eight red, glass-like eyes peeked out.

Soon, its full form was revealed—a colossal monster that filled and even overflowed the spacious lobby of the Heresy Tribunal. Its height reached nearly to the ceiling of the lobby, and its body length looked to be at least 7 meters.

Thud. Thud.

Seongjin could never forget that frictional sound every time the creature moved its legs.

The same spider that had mercilessly killed his comrades on the front lines of the city of Paju.

Ahahahaha.

Seongjin found himself laughing uncontrollably. Whether it was anger or delight, even he couldn't tell. All he knew was that his limbs began to tingle and his blood started to boil.

The moment the following paladin, Masain, saw the spider and disgustingly unsheathed his sword with a grim face.

"Your Highness!"

Crack.

Ignoring Masain's cry, Seongjin stomped on the ground.

91

In the early stages of the Gehenna situation, at the front lines of Paju City, when humanity's counterattack was just beginning, it appeared.

Pavo Nephila.

The accursed spider offspring that took away most of Seongjin's initial comrades.

Urrrrrrrrrr! Kuwoong!

The monster that burst through the floor of the Heresy Tribunal building, kicking up a cloud of dirt, was as massive as that spider back then.

Its plump body, densely covered with long, coarse spines like fur, looked like a purple tarantula. Only, it was bigger than an average large freight truck, and its disproportionately long legs made it move as if it were heavy machinery.

At the ends of its tough, elongated segments—almost as if armored—were enormous claws emitting a menacing red gleam.

Kiik. Kiik. The eight eyes, emitting a malevolent light, quickly found their target.

Ddadadadadak.

The spines covering its entire body all quivered at once, generating a low-frequency noise.

"Your Highness!"

Ignoring Masain's scream, Seongjin was already charging at the spider.

As the monster struggled to fully emerge from the hole in the ground, Seongjin swiftly dodged its spike-laden legs.

And before its venomous fangs could even point forward, he had already reached the middle of its belly and slashed it with all his might. It was where its nucleus was located.

Kagagagak.

The blade, tightly wrapped in a coarse aura, managed to cut through the creature's tough outer shell.

'...Too shallow!'

Before the spider could fully stand up, Seongjin, who was sliding down, struck the same spot once more horizontally. Kagak!

But, driving his sword deeply into that massive body was still too difficult. He needed to penetrate at least 2 meters with a single strike.

Realizing his failure, Seongjin rolled to his feet, immediately running counter-clockwise, using the monster's body as an axis.

Meanwhile, the spider, now fully upright, flickered its ruby-like red eyes as it scanned its surroundings.

It momentarily followed Seongjin with its head, but then turned its body to face forward again. This was because Masain was charging at it from the front, sword raised, with a fearsome momentum.

"Your Highness!"

It seemed that their priority was to be wary of the human on the other side. After all, the golden aura surrounding Masain's sword must have appeared quite threatening to the monster.

Seeing the creature grinding its upper fangs together, Seongjin shouted towards Masain.

"Move, Sir Masain! It's going to spit poison!"

"...Huh?"

In the moment that Masain hesitated, Seongjin swiftly struck down one of the creature's protruding spikes near its rear with his sword. While he didn't completely destroy it, he was still able to make the monster flinch and turn its head.

Psst.

A large amount of mucus is scattered onto the entrance floor from the monster's mouth.

Soon after, the entrance's carpet began to melt with a shhik sound. Masain, narrowly dodging the acidic spit, was startled.

"Gah! What is this!"

"Don't stand there gawking, move, Sir Masain!"

With the urgent shout, Masain quickly regained his senses and began running towards Seongjin.

Thump! Bang! Thump!

The creature, turning its body to follow, stomped on the floor with its sturdy claws. But the experienced knight commander skillfully dodged its massive legs chasing after him.

He even managed to cut off one of the joints of its mid-air leg with a momentarily-formed elongated aura blade. Seongjin's swordsmanship teacher indeed had quite the skill.

While chasing after Seongjin, he shouted desperately.

"The imperial guard knights will be deployed soon, Your Highness! It's best to evacuate first...!"

"No, Sir Masain! We need to keep it pinned down here!"

It was a reasonable thing for Masain to say, as he wasn't familiar with the creature's mobility. If the monster broke the building and started rampaging, the damage would be uncontrollable. After all, it had already massacred hunters while moving so quickly, despite its massive size.

Moreover, the monster might not be able to aim properly in the tight space for now, but once it starts spraying its webs over a large area, it would become extremely difficult to deal with.

Most of the knights with no experience dealing with such a monster would get killed before they even had a chance to act.

'That's why we have to hit it as much as we can while we can make it go round and round in a small space!'

Of course, just like the monster was restricted because it was trapped in the building, Seongjin and Masain were also limited in their movements. It was because the creature had broken a large hole in the floor to crawl out.

Kwa-aang!

A leg as large as a crane's shot out like a cannon, embedding itself into the wall. Swiftly ducking and rolling, they found themselves facing a dead-end.

Kagagak!

Utilizing the recoil as another leg flew towards them, Seongjin and Masain barely managed to change direction. Luckily, a hallway with a completely lowered wall appeared next to them, allowing them to quickly escape from the corner.

Ttadadadak!

Frustrated at its failed pursuit, the spider angrily dropped its spikes and chased after them with a "Shhak Shhak" sound, its talons pounding the ground. Parts of its talons got stuck near the crumbling floor, causing the edge of the hole to crumble down even further.

Kuaaaaaa! Chang! Chang!

Eerie noises echoed from beneath the punctured floor. Sounds from the dungeon located in the underground of the Heresy Tribunal.

Screams, the clashing of weapons.

And a creepy, "Kkadeuk Kkadeuk" sound as if something was being chewed on.

It seemed that a battle was raging inside the dungeon as well. Most of the Heresy Tribunal's forces must have been gathered underground. The root cause of the situation must be inside that dungeon.

'Is it because the gate has opened?'

As Seongjin dodged the incoming spider webs, he thought. There was no other way to explain the sudden appearance of these many monsters.

The circumstances pointed to a suspicious priest named Hayes. But how could a human arbitrarily open a gate?

[Should I go take a look?]

Hearing the eager voice of the Demon King, Seongjin let out a wry smile. Whenever there was something to do, the Demon King seemed oddly happy about it, which felt a bit annoying.

'Please do!'

[Alright. You also take care of yourself!]

The Demon King promptly disappeared from his thoughts.

Seongjin silently swung his nutcracker and thought.

If indeed a gate had opened in the basement, it would be difficult to expect support from the paladins of St. Marcias until the situation inside is resolved. All they could do was hope that other knight orders from the imperial palace would quickly realize the situation and come running.

In the meantime, Seongjin succeeded in completely destroying one of the monster's spiky protrusions, and Masain managed to sever two more of its leg joints.

Of course, they were also gradually being cornered as time passed. The space for maneuvering was narrowing, and while they were moving perilously as if performing acrobatics, it was uncertain how long this dangerous standoff could continue.

"Puhahak." The spider indiscriminately spat out webs, tangling them around the floor.

The entrance ground was already a mess due to the sticky spider webs. If they didn't deal with it quickly, it would become increasingly difficult to even set foot on the floor.

The stairs leading to the second floor had long been corroded by the monster's venom and had crumbled away.

Screech. Seongjin clicked his tongue as he confirmed the melting railings that emitted smoke. He had initially planned to jump off from above using the creature's head, but...

"We need to destroy its core, Sir Masain!"

Thud!

Seongjin shouted as he deflected an incoming leg with his nutcracker grip. Masain yelled from behind him, severing the partially broken joint with his sword.

"Do you know where the core is, Your Highness?"

Masain seemed to immediately understand Seongjin's words, perhaps recalling the larvae at the Diggory mansion.

"I already slashed near its belly! That's where you should aim!"

Unlike the Bantra Moss larvae, which shifted positions, the core of the Pavo Nephila always remained in a fixed location.

Masain nodded and aimed his sword. However, he soon looked discouraged, as the spider creature had moved right above a hole in the ground.

They couldn't dig downwards like this.

Both retreated quickly, dodging the creature's claw attack. It was the first time they had distanced themselves from it since it appeared.

"Why don't we cut it from the top?"

Masain cautiously asked Seongjin while watching the creature's furiously grinding mandibles.

"It's difficult. The core is closer to its belly, and the carapace on its back is extraordinarily tough!"

If Masain's Aura Blade attack, which had the same destructive power as Seongjin's peak fistfight, was used, then perhaps destroying the core from the back would be possible. But so far, Masain seemed to be using the Aura Blade with some limitations.

How could they target the creature's back when it was so frantic? And if they tried to go from the front, the creature's massive body would not be easily cut through to reach the core.

For now, the only option seemed to be to slowly whittle down its stamina from the front until an opportunity arose.

Both had been pushed back to the entrance of the Heresy Tribunal building. The ground was entirely covered with sticky webs, making random movement difficult.

Two intact venomous fangs targeted them and squirmed.

Screech. Unpleasant smoke was also rising from the creature's mother, seemingly ready to spew venom at any moment.

Just then, a group of paladins in white robes rushed into the Heresy Tribunal building.

Golden chains and black swords were embroidered on their clothes—the members of the Order of Saint Marcias.

"What the hell is going on here?"

The old man leading the group shouted in a clear voice. Unfortunately, it drew the spider creature's attention.

Almost simultaneously as the old man finished speaking, the creature fired a massive amount of venomous needles it had prepared.

"Everyone, dodge!"

Seongjin quickly grabbed the old man's coat and pulled him sideways.

"Ah!"

"Arghh!"

The sudden event caught everyone off guard; three paladins were unable to dodge the venomous stinger and melted into puddles right on the spot.

The remaining paladins were not in good shape either. Some were writhing in pain due to burns from the splattered venom, while others were retreating timidly, paralyzed by fear.

Struggling to his feet, Seongjin saw one of the paladins lifting his head with a pallid face.

His eyes aimlessly stared at his fellow comrades, who were standing behind him just moments ago but were now reduced to pools of blood on the ground.

"What on earth...?"

"This is no time to be spacing out! Aren't you the commander?"

Seongjin gripped his Nutcracker, aimed it at the spider, and yelled. The creature was now distracted by Masain's bait.

"If we don't deal with that monster quickly, the damage will increase! Give orders to your subordinates now! If you can't help, at least don't stand there like an idiot!"

"...Prince Morres..."

At last recognizing Seongjin, Sir Durand's eyes suddenly filled with furious blue flames.

"Prince Morres! I knew it! I knew you would reveal your true colors someday!"

"What?"

Caught off guard by the unexpected response, Seongjin was left bewildered. Durand lunged at him, his hands tightly gripping Seongjin's collar.

"What have you done! What have you done to my men?"

"Wait a minute..."

"Do you think you can harm the paladins serving His Holiness in the Holy Kingdom and get away with it?"

"No, old man! Now's not the time for this..."

Seongjin tried to shake off the old man's grip, but his hand strength was not to be underestimated.

There was a strange glint in his eyes. Whether it was due to shock or something else, he didn't seem to be in a state where he could be reasoned with.

"You fiend! What are you plotting in Delcross?"

"What...!"

Before Seongjin could react to his irrational fury,

"Your Highness! Dodge!"

A shrill scream echoed from afar, courtesy of Masain.

In an instant, a thick spider leg shot through the air and impaled both men against the building wall.

Bang!

Lieutenant Paris of the Holy Knights of St. Marcias was quick to assess situations.

Even though buildings suddenly collapsed and unidentified creatures poured out from somewhere, he remained composed and promptly organized the available forces.

Screams echoed from the Heresy Tribunal all around, but he had no time to pay attention to each one. The real problem, he felt, was in the building's basement.

So Paris, along with his fellow knights, rushed towards the epicenter. However, while passing through the corridors of the underground dungeon, they fell through a suddenly collapsing floor, descending into the depths below.

"Guh..."

Regaining consciousness, he found himself in a vast underground cavern.

Among the building's scattered debris, there were prisoners with broken bones or dead from the impact.

The state of the guards who fell with them wasn't much better, given the height they'd plummeted from.

Apart from a few paladins skilled in handling aura and holy power, hardly anyone could get up.

Staggering to his feet, Paris looked around. Despite his long tenure in the Holy Knights of St. Marcias, he had never heard of such a vast cavern existing beneath the Heresy Tribunal building.

And there, at the bottom of the cavern, was an enormous black hole of unfathomable depth.

Out of this eerie, swirling pit of black mire, monsters were continually emerging.

Most of the monsters resembled ants or wasps, and their sizes ranged from that of a large dog to that of a horse.

Ignoring Paris and his group who had fallen into the cavern, these creatures flew straight up to the upper floors, as if they had a clear objective.

Only the wingless ants were left behind, gnawing at the fallen prisoners scattered around the floor.

"...?"

And then, standing in front of that hole, was a middle-aged priest Paris knew well.

A man with a virtuous face, Priest Hayes, who had worked together with him in the Heresy Tribunal for a long time.

Shaking, Paris slowly approached him and asked in a quivering voice,

"...Is this all your doing, Brother Hayes? Why on earth..."

"....."

"What is this place? Since when have you known about this?"

Priest Hayes didn't even look back at him. His indifferent voice merely echoed emptily through the vast corridor.

"Long before the Imperial Palace stood at the center of Delcross, the continent's largest church already existed here. Even before the Heresy Tribunal was established, this place was the sanctuary of the 'Rest' Cult."

"'Rest' Cult?"

"You're still young, it seems. You haven't heard of the four underground cults."

For a moment, he stared at the ceiling of the hollowed corridor.

"We were once persecuted and labeled as the Darkness cults, but we originally were a peaceful sect that had been worshipping the Divine even before the founding of the Holy Kingdom."

Darkness Cults.

An heretical group within the church that was said to have been purged during the early rule of the current Holy Emperor.

"Our Archbishop said that through 'Rest,' all followers of the Divine will be eternally saved. Hence, we are called the 'Rest' Cult."

What he was saying meant only one thing.

"Heretic... Priest Hayes, so you're a heretic!"

As Paris staggered in shock, Hayes chuckled.

"Knight Paris, on what grounds do you judge heresy? Do you know anything about the true teachings the Divine bestowed before the thousand-year-old empire was established?"

"What are you saying...?"

"Do you think the current Unified Church is normal? Their dogmatic approach, which distorts the teachings of the Divine and eliminates all dissent, is the true heresy against the will of the Divine!"

For a moment, Paris was lost for words. The priest, who always seemed so devout, spoke so confidently. Could he himself have misunderstood something?

The spell was broken by a calm voice that suddenly echoed from behind them.

"At least the current Unified Church doesn't commit mass murders like you."

Both Paris and Hayes turned around simultaneously.

Approaching them was a person they never expected to see here.

His appearance was as usual, wearing the long, flowing ecclesiastical robes, which swayed with his steps.

"Your Holiness, the Holy Emperor?"

The Holy Emperor scanned the surroundings with his usual emotionless face. After briefly fixing his eyes on the massive hole behind Hayes, he faintly curled one corner of his lips.

For a moment, both felt a chill run down their spines.

"You've done well to hide from my sight until now, You devil-worshipping remnants of the old cult."

Hell.

The appearance of the Heresy Tribunal's underground dungeon was as if it was directly taken from the scriptures describing Hell.

Monstrous creatures that resembled enormous hornets sprung from the crumbled floors here and there.

The prisoners were either thrown into the holes or had their chests bitten and torn by the monsters that flew into the dungeon. Most of the prisoners, who were already not in good condition due to cruel interrogations, died a dire death because of this.

"What... what on Earth is this..."

As the Elder priest turned his head in a daze, he saw the gruesome corpse of a young man whose torso was completely crushed. It was a brother from the [Sowing] order who had been working with him recently in the underground dungeon.

Suddenly, a giant monster sprang from the depths below, crawled to the surface, and happened to crush him under its body.

"Bethel..."

As he weakly uttered the prayer, he heard a voice calling him from a distance.

"Brother! Brother, are you alright?"

Clemence, struggling to approach through the chaotic environment, supported the swaying Nosajae and asked. He still held a long censer for the [Sowing] in one hand.

"Brother Clemence, what on Earth happened?"

In response, Clemence bit his lips as he glanced at the broken floor.

"It looks like the work of brothers from the Forgotten Order. They must have tampered with the [Rest]'s legacy."

"...The legacy of [Rest]? Why now?"

"How would I know!"

Clemence's voice was full of agitation.

How could he have anticipated this situation?

Priest Hayes. He even recommended that the man, who was living a pitiable existence, join the mission. But who could have guessed it would ruin the plan like this.

"Ah..."

The legacy of [Rest] that they believed would advance their mission.

But now, the monsters sprouting from there were devouring everything they had worked for.

Seeds that they had diligently planted and flower buds that were struggling to sprout.

As he blankly watched the spectacle, tears flowed from Elder priest's eyes.

"Our mission... The Day of the Great Harvest..."

"Don't you get it yet? Everything is ruined now!"

Clemence, raising his voice, forcibly lifted the elder priest.

"Forget the mission for now! Put everything aside and we have to escape this place immediately!"

The Heresy Tribunal is now over. There was nothing more they could do.

In that case, they should urgently meet with the [Bishop] and discuss the next steps.

Clemence began to move towards the surface, dragging along his brother who was still unable to hold his body steady due to the shock.

Before the proclamation of the Delcross Empire, the capital already had four derivative cults coexisting alongside the Orthodox Church.

They were respectively called [Passion], [Sowing], [Repentance], and [Rest].

After the first emperor implicitly allowed some of their activities, these underground sects grew in influence along with the rise of Delcross.

Beneath the main buildings of the imperial palace, vast underground tunnels had been established as the headquarters for each sect, much like the Heresy Tribunal.

Furthermore, these were all connected through underground passages. In some sense, one might see it as another palace beneath the surface.

It seemed as though the emperor had just crossed the underground passage connecting the main palace and the Heresy Tribunal.

Nathaniel Klein.

The 17th Emperor and the one who had single-handedly eradicated the underground sects that had lasted for centuries in the capital.

He looked at the hellish scenes he had unfolded with an expression devoid of any emotion, the same person who had made Hayes endure agonizing lengths of time.

As if none of this mattered.

"You've done well to hide from my sight until now, devil-worshipping remnants of the old cults."

At those words, Hayes, who had so far seemed somewhat nonchalant, looked at the emperor with eyes filled with intense emotion.

"Calling us devil worshippers, such absurd defamation...!"

"Didn't the archbishop personally conduct mass human sacrifices for the worship of the Demon King?"

Tilting his head slightly, the emperor elaborated.

"Those who do such things are generally called devil worshippers."

Paris, who had been listening, was horrified. Hayes did not deny the emperor's statement.

The fury slowly vanished from his face that had been silent until now. It looked as if he had regained his composure for a moment.

"It's a misunderstanding. It was a ritual to bring Rest."

"Did the participants consent to that?"

"In this world full of suffering, who wouldn't desire rest?"

"So you granted [Rest] even to nursing babies and submissive women."

"They were all saved!"

"Is that so."

The emperor nodded indifferently to the fuming Hayes.

"I too granted you salvation directly through [Rest]. What's there to resent?"

"Slashing my brethren unilaterally and now calling that salvation...!"

However, Hayes's protesting voice gradually waned.

He himself knew that the [Rest] indiscriminately granted even to babies was, in the end, not different in result from the death of his brothers.

Paris swallowed nervously as he looked at his face.

"Your decisions are so unilateral and full of contradictions; you're like the epitome of heresy."

The Holy Emperor drew a thin smile, slowly pulling the sword strapped to his waist. The sword had a disproportionally elongated hilt compared to its short, sleek blade—a pristine white sword.

"By now, he should have scattered enough pieces for us to find them all. There seems to be no need to wait any longer."

"You... knew everything?"

Hayes repeated in a voice devoid of strength. His eyes seemed empty, as if he had abandoned his life's goals and will at the same time.

The Holy Emperor momentarily met his gaze and quietly asked,

"You've managed to hide from my eyes for so long; why engage in such behavior now when you knew you'd fail?"

The Holy Emperor seemed genuinely curious.

The only reason Hayes could evade the Holy Emperor's sight was that he had not yet received the [Baptism]. Without the mark engraved upon his soul, Hayes could survive the period of great purification alone.

However, for someone unbaptized to live according to the doctrine of Rest, it's like a living person walking through death. Certainly not something one can endure with an ordinary mind.

Then how could he have so recklessly squandered these long years of suffering?

"I had no choice. I could not... I couldn't refuse His command..."

Hayes staggered, clutching his face with both hands. He looked as if he might collapse at any moment.

After shivering for a moment, Hayes eventually raised his head toward the Holy Emperor with damp eyes.

"What do you plan to do with Him?"

"....."

The Holy Emperor did not respond. He simply raised his sword slowly towards Hayes.

"...I see."

As if understanding something, Hayes gave a melancholy smile, his eyes welling with tears.

"Everything is already under His plan. His preparations are still not over..."

Swish. Silently, the Holy Emperor's arm swung down.

Before anyone knew it, a dazzlingly bright and long aura blade was exposed on the sword.

Thud. Hayes, the priest cleanly cut in two, collapsed lifelessly on the ground. Compared to the deeds he had committed, it was an utterly hollow end.

Paris couldn't even breathe as he watched the whole spectacle unfold.

"Aren't you Lieutenant Paris?"

The Holy Emperor, briefly casting his gaze on the corpse, asked Paris.

"Yes, Your Majesty."

The Holy Emperor looked up at the hollow, gaping ceiling. His pupils seemed to emit a mysterious silver glow in the dark corridor.

"Go up and restore order to the Knights. From now on, you are the Knight Commander of St. Marcias."

"What? What does that mean..."

However, the Holy Emperor did not answer his question. Instead, he moved towards the large hole on the floor of the corridor, from which monsters still continually emerged.

Slowly, the Holy Emperor raised his hand towards that hellish pit. Soon, his body was enveloped in a faint light.

At that moment, Paris thought he saw something resembling a golden halo glowing above the Holy Emperor's head.

On the sixth night of the hellish frontline in Paju City.

For a brief moment of respite, Seongjin and his comrades were huddled inside the trench, catching some winks in shifts. Despite their enhanced stamina due to the magical beasts' energy, six days and nights of continuous battle were enough to dull even the heightened senses of the hunters.

And then it appeared.

Amid the patter of falling rain, the sound of bristling spikes scraping against each other resonated.

Out of the darkness, four different sets of glowing red eyes manifested in mid-air, followed by the sudden lash of a massive, spike-covered leg sweeping across the trench.

An entire line of hunters was squashed in an instant.

Leaping over the makeshift wooden fences and earthworks, it effortlessly and cruelly snuffed out the lives of many hunters who were on the frontlines that day. If it weren't for the near-suicidal attacks of a few hunters, humanity's counteroffensive would have ended right then and there.

The Pavo Nephila.

The accursed spider magical beast that Seongjin had put so much effort into eliminating before.

* * *

Staggering, Seongjin managed to lift himself up from the rubble of a collapsed building.

Something hot streamed down from a tear somewhere on his forehead, obstructing part of his vision.

Thanks to his instincts to shield himself with aura when struck by the spider's leg, it seemed that fortunately, nothing was severely broken. However, the sheer magnitude of the impact was such that even the slightest movement caused agonizing pain.

"....."

The old man who had flown with him was already lifeless. His left flank was severely torn open, and his torso appeared almost severed, a sight most gruesome.

Seongjin turned his head to look ahead.

Beyond his blurry vision, he saw the spider beast spitting venom and rampaging in the distance. Now and then, he saw glimpses of the golden Aura Blade, indicating that Masain was fighting alone. What were the Paladins who came with the old man doing?

With creaking bones and aching flesh, he moved.

With every step forward, the pain that felt like it could shatter his body became increasingly unbearable.

As he limped toward the spider, he soon saw the Paladins of Marcias entangled in sticky webs here and there. Some were partially corroded by the venom, and others appeared flattened as if something heavy had crushed them, their lives already snuffed out.

"Your world is a figment of someone's imagination, based on the concept of the real world. In other words, it's nothing more than someone's dream," the Demon King had said.

But look. Whether it's in Sigurd-34th district or Delcross, death caused by that damned spider is equally empty and meaningless.

"You've come flying into the real world and you're perfectly fine and breathing. What better proof is there that you really exist?"

No, that's not it.

Simply breathing doesn't prove anything. What's important is that there's a spider over there that I must kill.

To Seongjin, that spider is like that. As long as he's breathing, even a little, he must chase after it and, in the end, cut off its life.

It was only when he aimed his sword at the spider that Seongjin could finally feel it.

He was definitely alive here.

A paladin who was struggling, bound in spiderweb, looked up as the Prince passed by him, trembling for a moment. Despite his body being in tatters and red blood flowing down his cheeks, the Prince was smiling, showing his teeth.

He gripped his sword more firmly.

Thud-thud. His steps gradually sped up.

Tap-tap-tap. At some point, he was running towards the spider.

Both Masain and the spider, who had been fiercely confronting each other, noticed Seongjin's presence at the same time.

"Your Highness!"

By the time Masain shouted, Seongjin was already near the spider.

Whoosh.

The spider's leg descended over Seongjin's head. Without slowing down, Seongjin charged under the creature's claw. Unknowingly, he had focused his aura into his legs.

Crash.

For a moment, his body shot up, narrowly avoiding the heavy leg. Feeling the wind pressure of the giant claw brushing his hair, Seongjin slid right under the spider's belly.

The initial cut was already mostly regenerated, except for the sword marks on its carapace. It was the characteristic of a magical beast that regenerates quickly if its core is not destroyed immediately.

Ka-ching.

Following that mark, he slashed deeply with his sword. The aura-wrapped blade cut cleanly through the thick carapace.

Rustle-rustle.

The spines all over the spider's body seemed to tremble, as if expressing its discomfort.

Seongjin pulled his sword out, twisted his sliding body, and planted his feet hard on the ground once more with a forceful aura. Crash.

Whether it was due to the forceful rotation of the aura, he felt something snap in his legs for a moment.

Cutting once more along the initial sword mark, this time the sword nearly buried itself up to the hilt. There was a momentary resistance against the carapace, but the sword, infused with enough aura, tore easily through the carapace and came out the other side.

From the deeply carved wound, a late surge of dark purple fluid gushed out.

Poo-ha-ak!

A large amount of spiderwebs burst out from the protrusions at the same time. Threads were aimed and widely sprayed at the vital point just below the torso.

There's no avoiding it. The moment he felt that, he gripped the sword with both hands and took a hard swing targeting one of the creature's legs.

Pa-gak!

At the same moment a crack appeared at the tip of the creature's toe joint, Seongjin's body was shot out like a bullet through the gaps between the spider's legs. Some spiderwebs did make contact with his body, but he managed to avoid getting entangled thanks to the speed at which he was propelled.

He crashed hard against the building wall before he could properly regain his posture.

Kwa-ang!

Even though he had shielded himself with aura, his breathing stops for a moment due to the severe impact.

"Cough! Cough!"

After tapping his short sword on the ground like a cane, Seongjin barely managed to stand up.

"Your Highness! Are you alright?"

From afar, the sound of Masain desperately shouting could be heard.

The spider creature was now recklessly spitting venom, turning its back on Seongjin. This was because Masain was worried about getting close to Seongjin who had fallen and was showering the spider with fierce attacks.

Peo-eong!

A blinding golden light accompanied by a powerful storm burst forth.

It was Masain's aura bombardment that split the spider creature's head and caused an explosion.

Kiee-eek!

The spider creature, having suffered a significant blow, twitched its joints at weird angles.

However, despite receiving an attack that split most of its head and chest, it didn't fall. Its core was still intact.

Taking advantage of the creature's momentary faltering, Masain quickly retreated to create distance. The way he was gasping for air indicated that he too was almost out of stamina.

Seongjin was about to rush in with his sword again when he suddenly felt intense pain in his right leg. His calf muscle seemed to have been strained due to consecutively releasing aura twice.

Dragging his leg that was not moving well, Seongjin once again moved towards the spider.

'...This isn't working.'

The length of his short sword wasn't sufficient to reach the creature's core.

If he couldn't smash the creature's body with a single punch like before, he had no choice but to gradually deepen the wounds.

It was only after his sword could reach deep enough to touch the creature's core that...

Suddenly, Seongjin stopped in his tracks as if he'd been hit in the back of his head.

'Why am I only considering releasing aura as far as the length of the sword?'

Seongjin looked down at the short sword in his hand.

Until now, he had been practicing how to channel his aura into his body and sword, just as he learned from Masain.

But the sword was also an object outside of his body. So shouldn't the same apply to the living creature?

He had used the creature's pincers as weapons by channeling aura into them, so why couldn't he do the same with a living creature?

Walking limply toward the spider, Seongjin continued his thoughts.

Masain had once told him that channeling unfamiliar aura into someone else's body was like stabbing them with a finely sharpened blade.

As he said, the aura flowing recklessly from the wooden sword caused it to explode, easily damaging Seongjin's legs. Then, wouldn't the aura that is also flowing recklessly beyond the sword be enough to break something?

Unbeknownst to Seongjin, a faint wind was blowing around the blade of the Nutcracker he held in his hand.

"Your Highness, please...!"

With his battered body, Seongjin, who was rushing back towards the spider, was muttered at by Masain, whose face had turned pale.

But there was no time to waste.

Seongjin, who had momentarily hesitated as the spider was regenerating its head, charged underneath it, plunging his sword with all his might into the center of its abdomen while channeling aura into his arms.

Unlike before, a sharp pain surged from his arms due to the violently extending aura.

Whoosh

The Nutcracker had pierced through the spider's guard once more, but it felt a bit different this time.

Sizzle

Inside the spider's abdomen, it felt as though something was being churned.

Kyeeeeek!

Suddenly, the spider started thrashing around like mad. While still skewered by Seongjin, it frantically collided its body against the building walls.

Thud!

Thump!

"...!"

Seongjin tightly gripped the hilt of the Nutcracker, channeling aura into his arms and sending another wave of violent aura through the blade into the spider's innards.

Kyeeeeek!

Thump!

Rumble!

With convulsions that seemed like it was going to flip over, the spider finally knocked down part of the building's outer wall.

Thud Thud!

The spikes all over its body trembled as if in convulsion.

Snap!

Spiderwebs shot out aimlessly, oddly enough entangling its own legs, causing it to start spinning and staggering around in a clockwise direction.

'...This can work!'

Seongjin clenched his teeth.

One more time!

Although it wasn't powerful, it was an attack aimed precisely at the center of the spider's abdomen.

One more time!

Seongjin could feel the aura he had stored up almost depleting.

Still, one more time!

Sizzle

The aura churned violently one last time.

Gradually losing consciousness, Seongjin faintly heard the sound of something breaking.

Creak...

Kyeeeeeeee

The spider's body, which had been shaking and convulsing, stiffened.

The trembling spikes all froze and it stopped moving.

The spider's gigantic body slowly tilted and then.

Thump!

It collapsed on the ground, raising a cloud of dust.

'...Your Highness!'

In a pallid rush, Masain charged forward, only to see Seongjin's body flung away lifelessly through the thick cloud of dust.

If it weren't for the spider that had fallen to its side with its leg tangled, Seongjin would have been completely crushed.

"Your Highness! Are you alright? Your Highness!"

Masain, who had been checking Seongjin's body, finally breathed a sigh of relief. Although the prince was completely unconscious, he was still breathing.

However, he was in a truly battered state.

His skin was torn in places, making him a bloody mess. His right leg and both arms were bent at unnatural angles, a consequence of forcefully kicking the ground and gripping his sword to attack the spider.

Above all, his muscles were unnaturally stiff. Repeated excessive shocks had caused the large blood vessels in his muscles to burst.

It was perhaps fortunate that he was unconscious and couldn't feel the pain. At this rate, his muscles would necrotize within a few hours.

As Masain stood there with a woeful expression, unsure of what to do next, the king arrived leading his knights toward them. They had just closed the gate and driven off the Paladin Order of Saint Marcias from the underground.

""

The Holy Emperor, upon discovering Seongjin's terrible condition, stopped in his tracks and remained silent for a moment.

[...I built fences around him, worrying he might fly away. In the end, he mustered the strength on his own. I should have let him spread his wings earlier...] (Chapter 86)

Someone had said that to him, but.

"...How can I let such a reckless guy out of the fence when I can't even take my eyes off him for a moment."

The Holy Emperor sighed deeply, closing his eyes.

Plunk.

A small stone creates ripples upon the tranquil surface of the water.

Seongjin was squatting at the shallow lakeside, watching the circular ripples spread outward. Every so often, his hand, still that of a small child, would pick up a pebble from around his feet and plop it into the lake.

Strangely, the scenery, faded into a shade of gray, seemed unreal.

It was a situation he had experienced before.

So, this is inside a dream, right? If that's the case, could this be another memory of Morres?

Once he became aware, the sullen feelings of the child sitting with his chin on his knees transmitted directly to him. The child was very angry, but more than that, he was sad, and so he clenched his mouth tightly to keep from crying.

Rustle.

Then, from ahead, the bushes moved and a little boy stepped out.

He must have been around seven years old. The round head covered with fine black hair resembled someone Seongjin knew well.

"Why are you here like this? The time for swordsmanship class has long passed."

As the boy approached with concern, Seongjin—or rather, the child—responded with a sharp and petulant retort.

"Go away, Logan! I'm not going to classes anymore!"

"Why? You like swordsmanship, don't you? Let's go. Commander Bruno is waiting."

"I don't like it! I've had enough, so you go ahead and enjoy!"

The child was showing a particularly irritable reaction.

However, Seongjin couldn't blame Morres, feeling vividly the child's imminent tears being forcibly held back.

"..."

Surprisingly, the boy of a similar age seemed to have noticed this as well. After hesitantly lingering around, he carefully approached Morres.

"Did Lady Lizabeth have something to say to you again?"

The corners of Morres's tightly closed mouth began to tremble slightly.

Eventually, unable to hold back, the child buried his head between his knees and hunched over. Seongjin felt a twinge of sadness as he sensed the child's trouser legs getting damp.

Morres did not make a sound; he just shed tears.

But Seongjin could vividly hear the voice mixed with sobs that the child was repeating internally.

"I've ruined all of Mama's dreams."

"It's because I... can't do it like you, because I don't resemble Papa."

"That's why she gets angry every time she sees me."

"She hates me so much..."

After listening to the sniffing for a while, the boy quietly sat down next to the child, squatting in the direction overlooking the lake.

"Hmm..."

The boy seemed to ponder as he looked at the surface of the water, as if he was choosing his words carefully.

It appeared he had some inkling of the words Morres had swallowed.

"Morres."

As the time seemed to pass and Morres appeared to have calmed down a bit, the boy softly called out his name.

"I'll only tell you this little secret. It's a secret nobody else knows."

When the child lifted his reddened eyes to meet Logan's gaze, Logan gave him a gentle smile. Perhaps it was the slightly droopy corners of his eyes that made his smile seem somewhat sorrowful.

"The truth is, it's not my first time learning to wield aura. It looks like I'm good because I've had lessons before."

"You've learned it before? When?"

"Well... The truth is...."

* * *

"...So, the truth is, what?"

Seongjin blinked with a still dazed consciousness.

A single tear rolled down the corner of his eye unwittingly, as if he had sympathized with Morres's emotions in his dream.

So, it's all well and good to show memories, but why does the dream have to end at the most crucial moment? It's as if I've seen nothing at all.

So, what is the truth?

Feeling somewhat wronged, he glared at the canopy of the ceiling when a flustered voice rang out in his head.

[Ack! You've come to? Hey! Are you alright?]

What's with all this fuss now?

[Oh my! Hey, man! I thought you were really dead! Who charges so recklessly with their entire body like that?]

"Uh...."

It was then that the events before he lost consciousness slowly began to come back to Seongjin.

The attack of the monsters. The gate. The rampage of Pavo Nephila. The old man who died....

It was an unprecedented chaos.

He had thought it was quiet today at Pearl Palace where the birds usually cried, but now he realized it was the middle of the night. Seongjin had been sleeping since the daytime disturbance and had just come to his senses.

"So what happened to the spiderling? And the gate?"

Seongjin asked the Demon King, but he wasn't really worried. He was certain that he had felt the core of the spider creature shatter completely in the end.

The gate? The monsters? Surely, the Holy Emperor would have taken care of them effortlessly.

Wasn't the fact that Seongjin was lying safely in Pearl Palace evidence enough?

[I knew of your tendency to charge headfirst without thinking ahead, but this time, really! Wow... In that brief moment, you really looked...]

Ignoring Seongjin's question, the Demon King mumbled on as if ranting to himself. Seeing Seongjin's expression grow ominous, he hastily became alarmed and began to explain what had happened.

When the Demon King had descended underground, there was a small gate opened in the underground corridor, and through it, spider, wasp, and ant-like monsters were emerging.

The monsters had attacked the underground prison and were feasting on the Lophellum eggs in the chests of the prisoners, turning the jail into complete chaos.

Wait, Lophellum eggs?

[Yeah. Most of the prisoners confined in the Heresy Tribunal's prison had eggs within them. They were mostly alive, seemingly implanted recently.]

Seongjin's expression turned grave.

Just as he had suspected, it seemed that the Academy students had indeed had eggs planted in them by the Heresy Tribunal. There was someone there indiscriminately implanting monster eggs into prisoners who had no one to look after them.

The Demon King continued to explain.

It was clear that Priest Hayes had opened that gate. However, by the time when the Demon King had descended, Hayes had already been killed by the hand of the Holy Emperor, making it impossible to know now how he had opened it.

And after that, the Holy Emperor himself closed the gate and swept away all the monsters underground in an instant.

[I have never seen anything like it. Your father crumpled the gate with one hand, just like crushing it to nothing. Even I, the Ruler of Gehenna, can't simply squash distorted space in such a way.]

The Demon King's soul shuddered as if recalling that moment. Seongjin also felt a chill.

Could a gate be closed so easily? Just how far do that man's limits reach?

[And from a distance, without even touching them, he burst all the little monsters into pieces. I can't even begin to guess how he did it. You should have seen it...]

"Um..."

Seongjin swallowed a groan.

Was it really necessary for him to have recklessly fought the spider creature?

If he had just temporarily retreated and waited, it felt like that man would have appeared and easily settled everything.

[And when your father came up to the surface, to describe what state you were in...]

The Demon King's description of Seongjin's condition was far more serious than he had anticipated.

He had intracranial hemorrhage and widespread necrosis of the muscles throughout his body. The fractures and scratches were just extras.

Without the Holy Emperor's divine power, those would have been injuries that either slowly led to death or, even if he survived, would have resulted in severe disability.

The Holy Emperor's cool silver-gray eyes unconsciously came to mind, and Seongjin broke out in cold sweat.

Only now does the fear of repercussions begin to dawn on him.

He had received a stern warning not to cause trouble, yet it hadn't been long before he was left half-dead again. How was he going to face that man now?

And then there was Sir Masain... what would be his reaction...

"Ah... maybe I should just never wake up."

Seongjin cradled his head and burrowed into his bed. The uncomfortable dream he had earlier was long forgotten.

Fortunately, his escape from reality did not last long.

[Seongjin, it's that woman.]

Before the Demon King could warn him, Seongjin, already familiar with the aura of concealment, slowly got up and sat down on the bed. Soon, as always, the terrace window opened, and a slender figure dressed in black infiltrative clothing entered the room without a sound.

Dasha, catching sight of Seongjin watching her enter, flinched for a moment, then approached him with a sigh, as if her recently bruised pride was slow to recover.

"Yes, I must be the fool for thinking I could succeed in sneaking in this time."

She sat down on the sofa opposite the bed and smiled.

"I heard you were badly injured, but fortunately, you seem to be fine."

"Dasha, you really know everything."

"It's not just me. Everyone knows. Rumors are already all over the capital that the brave young prince has caught a giant monster alone, undeterred by his injuries, for the sake of the capital's citizens."

Had such rumors spread?

Seongjin had never taken the lead for the sake of the capital's citizens, nor had he caught the monster alone.

"The city was in turmoil due to the monster disturbance during the day."

It seemed like one of the swiftly spread tales to quickly settle the people's hearts. Perhaps this would have a positive impact on Morres' reputation, which was at rock bottom?

Dasha briefly explained to Seongjin the day's events.

The numerous gourd wasp monsters that had flown into the city scattered here and there, attacking the people. It was mostly those who lived in slums or remote areas.

As a result, it took the knights a while to catch all the monsters, as they had to split into teams and disperse throughout the capital.

Somehow, it made him think that all of them were suffering from the gray plague.

Sure enough, Dasha confirmed his suspicion.

"Strangely, all those attacked by the monsters died with their chests torn open. The capital guard confirmed that parts of the corpses' skin had turned gray."

Seongjin suddenly remembered what the Demon King had said during the day.

—[I've figured it out now! I know what the commonality is among the gathered monsters!] (Chapter 90)

Could it be that these creatures' common trait was feasting on the eggs of Lophellum?

The Demon King answered Seongjin's question.

[It's a bit different. The eggs that spiders, ants, and wasps commonly favor are, in fact, separate.]

He said it was the egg of a butterfly, rare even in the demon world, a delicacy that most monsters who feast on eggs would die for.

But why had Seongjin never seen such a butterfly monster during all those years?

[They're channelers. If they sense danger, they'll flee to a completely different dimension.]

It seems that Gehenna, which was in the midst of a war with the Sigurd 34th District, was seen as a dangerous area to live in by these creatures.

[The problem is that the smell of the Lophellum's eggs before death becomes very similar to that of the butterfly's eggs. It seems they attract insectoid monsters to be eaten in that manner, but I don't know the reason either. It might have something to do with another lifecycle I'm not aware of.]

So, it seems the Lophellum's eggs were releasing a strong scent to lure insect-type monsters when suddenly, a gate opened. This explains why insectoid monsters were crazily jumping out.

But why did that priest named Hayes suddenly open the gate? Could it be that he was also the one who planted the Lophellum's eggs?

Seongjin pondered for a moment but nothing came to mind.

The purpose of planting the eggs and the reason for opening the gate remained unknown.

Seongjin decided to do what he could for now.

"Dasha, could I ask you to investigate?"

"Yes, Your Highness."

Dasha's turquoise eyes began to twinkle.

Seongjin had only met her a few times, but he was gradually getting to understand her.

Whenever Dasha became curious or saw something interesting, she couldn't hide her excited expression. It seemed that work related to the intelligence department suited her quite well.

"Firstly, about the priest named Hayes who was working at the Heresy Tribunal."

Oh! Dasha's face lit up with interest.

"You mean that problematic priest who died today. No problem! There are suspicions that he was a remnant of the Dark Order, and our intelligence department has already started investigating. I will bring you detailed news soon."

However, the words that followed from Seongjin made even her confident face momentarily lose its composure.

"And about my mother, Queen Lizabeth as well."

95

Lizabeth Asein. The daughter of Young Master Asein, a man with significant influence on the current continental political climate.

She gave birth to the Third Prince Morres after an encounter before the Emperor ascended to the throne and has ambitiously ascended to the position of the First Queen. It is unclear whether she aspires to the Empress's seat, but it is known to the Demon King that she has tirelessly endeavored to make Morres the Crown Prince.

Seongjin harbored a few suspicions about her.

First, she clearly wants to hide a certain past and considers it fortunate that Morres does not remember it.

She didn't seem to interfere much in whatever her son did, which was odd considering how much she wanted to make Morres the Crown Prince.

Seongjin was speculating that the reason why Masain was especially wary of her might be related to this.

Second, there is a suspicion that it was actually Lizabeth, the 1st Queen, who had sponsored various organizations in the past under Morres' name.

Leaving aside the question of why those particular suspicious organizations, the issue is whether it is possible for someone else to have secretly sponsored them for such a long time under the guise of the prince.

It would become clearer after asking Jonathan, who is reportedly getting better, about the sponsorship of the gathering of the black prophets.

Third, there is a possibility that she has been consistently emotionally abusive to young Morres in the past.

The fact that Seongjin, in his dream, saw an unknown Second Prince Logan suggests that Seongjin is indeed seeing Morres' past. Although it was only a brief moment of sympathy, what Seongjin felt then was that the 1st Queen's verbal abuse had not been just for a day or two but had continued for quite some time.

Could there be some connection between the sudden downfall of Morres, who seemed like a relatively normal child, into a complete reprobate?

"Heh, are you a son requesting an investigation of his own mother?"

Dasha wore a meaningful smile.

Her expression somehow reminded Seongjin of a junior colleague who looked forward to a messy family drama, and he waved his hands dismissively.

"I would ask her myself, but I don't have my past memories, and it feels somewhat wrong to keep asking her."

"Hmm..."

Dasha nodded understandingly at his excuse.

"The Queen is the daughter of Young Master Asein. Around her, there is always a sharp rivalry between the agents of Young Master Asein and the Delcross informants. It's not easy to approach her carelessly, nor is it easy to gather information. The fact that you are investigating her could very well reach the ears of Young Master Asein and His Majesty."

Could it be difficult, after all?

While he was contemplating this, Dasha clenched her fist in the air, her vibrant turquoise eyes sparkling as if stars were about to spill out.

"What a gratifying task this is! Just leave it to me. I will uncover everything about Her Highness, more secretly than anyone else. From all her past connections and behaviors to how many pieces of meat she ate in a day and how many times she went to the restroom—I'll confess it all in detail!"

Hey, that's a crime. Are you considering that I'm the son of the person you're planning to stalk?

Please respect the privacy of the person you're investigating.

"Then I shall take my leave, Your Highness. Please take good care of yourself!"

With lighter steps than when she arrived, she tiptoed across the terrace and, like a ghost, disappeared beyond the Pearl Palace garden.

Seongjin blankly stared out the window where she had vanished.

I've felt it before, but she really is an exceptionally ambitious person.

[Why don't you ask her to investigate your father as well? I'd like to see the reaction.]

The Demon King seemed genuinely curious.

Eh, I'm not curious. I can clearly see a future where Dasha and I both get smacked by that gentleman.

Seongjin got up from the bed and stretched. It was somewhat awkward timing to go back to sleep, so he considered meditating instead.

Though he had almost died or become disabled, he felt energized all over his body, as if he had become even healthier thanks to the divine healing.

'...Huh?'

He realized something was odd not long after he began meditating.

The energies in his center, which had been depleted, were already fully restored, and as he focused a bit more, the surrounding energies began to gather and automatically form the 6th layer!

'.....?'

Well, he had been close to reaching the 6th layer recently anyway. With that thought, he immersed himself back in meditation and the energies continued to flow into his danjeon. The activity of the energies was abnormally high.

Before he knew it, the flow that had been rushing in haphazardly almost reached the 7th layer before finally slowing down.

At that point, Seongjin was so flustered that his concentration completely scattered.

'What's this...?'

Sweat cooled on his brow. It scared him how quickly his energy layers had increased in just one day.

It couldn't be that his body would burst like that wooden sword, could it?

Fortunately, a quick check confirmed his body was relatively stable. A considerable amount of energy surpassing the 6.5 layers was circulating throughout his body, constantly infusing him with vitality.

What could be the cause? Was it related to the fact that his energies had been completely depleted once?

Or could it be... that man had done something?

The thought crossed Seongjin's mind and he chuckled to himself. It was funny how he'd come to think of the divine immediately when something strange happened, as if he'd already become one of the people from the Delcross Imperial Palace.

No longer in the mood to meditate, he simply lay down in bed. Contrary to his expectation that he wouldn't be able to sleep easily after having slept profoundly before, Seongjin didn't dream at all and slept soundly until morning.

The next morning, as usual at the time when the birds cried in the Pearl Palace, Seongjin woke up. Rubbing his eyes in a daze, he heard a knock at the door and Edith entered with a fresh jug of water, followed by Masain walking into the room.

"Did you cough, Your Highness?"

Seongjin flinched for a moment, cautiously gauging the other's expression. Despite Sir Masain's dissuasion the previous day, Seongjin was aware that he had recklessly fought against the beast too excessively.

After once dying and being revived at the Diggory estate, it seemed that recently Sir Masain had become overly sensitive to Seongjin's safety. Seongjin wondered how he would be nagged today.

However, contrary to Seongjin's worries, Sir Masain's face appeared more relaxed than he had anticipated.

No, not just relaxed, there was a certain enlightened aura about him.

"At least your heart hasn't stopped, that in itself is something to be thankful for."

Ah, that's right, there was that time before when he had been completely out of it, and they had to perform CPR.

"The more I fret, the more I realize that nothing changes, Your Highness."

Sir Masain said calmly, looking out towards the garden beyond the window.

As if he had let go of everything, his eyes gazed into the verdant garden, seemingly filled with a distant melancholy.

"I dare not presume to stop you, Prince. I no longer have many expectations of you. Just, please do not suddenly die on me again."

"Uh..."

"Then I, Sir Masain, will do whatever it takes to present you before

His Majesty. Yes, if only that happens, everything will be resolved. Hahaha."

"....."

His hollow laughter echoed through the cool morning air, the only sound in the silence.

Seongjin was more frightened now than when Sir Masain was openly angry.

Sir Masain, I've done wrong!

That morning, Seongjin attempted to find out the cause of the sudden increase in his aura during their aura training session. However, Sir Masain spoke with a determined face.

"I do not wish to repeat twice what state you were in yesterday, Your Highness. Do not even think about leaving the bed today, just rest quietly and regain your strength."

He didn't even have a chance to go to the training grounds. There had been a constant stream of visitors to Pearl Palace throughout the morning.

Amelia was the first to visit him. She had run there from her training, and unusually for her, she was not in a dress but in a casual shirt and slender pants.

Surprisingly, she seemed to be quite angry, more than anyone else. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyebrows sharply raised, and even this look was exceedingly charming.

With a non-threatening demeanor, Amelia fumed at Seongjin.

"Morres! Why don't you know how to take care of yourself? You must stop this habit of just recklessly diving into dangerous places! Do you know how that makes the people who watch from the side feel?"

"...Yes?"

When did I ever again dive into danger?

Is this really something you could call a habit?

Seongjin blinked in astonishment, only managing to flutter his eyes when Amelia approached and firmly grasped his hand, staring intently into his eyes. Even her clear gray eyes were moist with tears.

"Never again, never again must you do something so frightening! Do you understand?"

"Uh....."

Though he was flustered, Seongjin acquiesced with a nod because Amelia's hand, which he was holding, was trembling slightly.

"Sure."

"Really?"

"Yes, of course."

"You're promising me!"

"Yes, I promise...."

Seongjin answered reluctantly again.

Only after Amelia received several firm assurances did she finally return to the Rose Labyrinth with peace of mind.

The next visitors to seek Seongjin were the twins, Herna and Gades. It happened to be the day of their audience with the Holy Emperor, and they had entered the palace to play chess.

You guys know well that the Holy Emperor dislikes chess, so why do you insist on pestering him like that?

"Morres!"

"Morres!"

The identical twins, beautiful as dolls, ran towards him. Unlike Amelia, their faces were clearly full of joy.

They grabbed Morres' arms on either side of the bed and stretched while beaming with smiles.

"What on earth did you do, Morres!"

"Nobody could have predicted it, Morres!"

And they nodded at each other as they caught each other's eyes.

"Only Morres could do something like that."

"Morres is none other than Morres indeed."

What, are you agreeing among yourselves again on something only you guys know? Such mischievous little rascals!

I also have something to confront you about today.

"Why didn't you tell me about the Monkey Tower in advance?"

"What does that kind of thing matter now?"

"Yeah, that kind of thing isn't important anymore."

What did you say, you rascals?

Seongjin frowned, and the twins, hugging his arms from both sides, stared intently into his face.

"Well done, Morres. Thanks to you, the situation was resolved with much less damage than expected."

"Well done, Morres. You completely ruined that guy's long-time efforts."

Suddenly, Seongjin realized that his previous suspicion was true.

Despite knowing that someone was planting monster eggs and creating the gray plague, the Holy Emperor had deliberately chosen not to take any action.

"Who is that guy? Why has Father known all along and yet..."

To Seongjin's question, the twins answered with slightly gloomy faces.

"We know, but originally, it's something that we're not supposed to know."

"It's not that we can't do it, but that we shouldn't do it."

What does that mean? Seongjin blinked in confusion.

"There are several important restrictions that have come into place for Holy Father."

"Thanks to that brazen old man who dumped all that on Imperial Father."

Herna and Gades pouted their lips and rubbed their faces against Seongjin's sleeve. It was still a conversation filled with unknowns.

"Still, thanks to Morres, we've been able to breathe a sigh of relief."

"It's really good that Morres came to our aid."

"....."

They were earnestly trying to explain something, but the core of the story was skillfully avoided. Seongjin was gradually becoming accustomed to the twins' way of speaking.

The two of them loitered around the bed for a while, and then, saying they were going to visit Amelia, they left the Pearl Palace.

After that, the morning passed in a flash with constant visits from Commander Bruno and the resident knights.

And then lunchtime. It was curious that there was no news from Queen Lizabeth, who seemed like she would have come rushing immediately, but an unexpected visitor arrived for Seongjin.

That is, the entire staff of the Pearl Palace was suddenly wrapped in tension.

[Eek!]

The devil crumpled to one side of his head, startled out of his wits.

That sudden change was so dramatic that even Seongjin, who had been rolling around in bed, could feel it clearly. As he was wondering what was going on, there was a knock, and Edith's voice came through, tense with anxiety.

"Your Highness. His Majesty the Holy Emperor has arrived."

...What?

Before he could even be surprised, the door opened, and the Emperor, with his usual cold expression, strode in. It seemed he had come directly to the Pearl Palace after finishing his morning administrative duties.

Hiccup.

Seeing his cool eyes, Seongjin hiccupped involuntarily.

With a hiccup, Seongjin's eyes widened in surprise. He was so shocked that he completely forgot to greet the newcomer.

The Holy Emperor walked slowly towards the bedside, standing there for a moment in silence, gazing down at Seongjin. The temperature around them seemed to drop noticeably, causing Seongjin to shiver involuntarily from the cold.

After a long silence, the Holy Emperor spoke in a calm but frighteningly serious tone, "After bursting the wooden sword, were you planning to explode your own body as well?"

Ah, Holy Emperor already knew how recklessly Seongjin had been manipulating his aura.

Thinking about it, the outcome was obvious.

Had he pushed a little further, his muscles might have burst like the wooden sword.

"That..."

My aura didn't reach its core.

There was no other way to kill it.

There were many excuses he wanted to make, but facing those icy, sharp eyes, only a single phrase managed to escape his lips.

"...I'm sorry."

He truly was sorry. Sincerely.

It hadn't been long since he woke up in the royal palace in Morres's body, but during that short period, he had caused the Holy Emperor so much trouble. He had been seriously injured multiple times, and once, he had even come close to death.

He reflected deeply, bowing his head, and the Holy Emperor's stern demeanor seemed to soften slightly.

"Do you understand? The training method isn't a barrier that limits the aura, but a guideline."

Seongjin inwardly flinched.

The Holy Emperor had noticed that he had abandoned the training method in frustration when his attacks weren't effective. Indeed, Seongjin had thought at the time that adhering to the training method was creating a limit for himself.

However, what Seongjin actually did was force his still insufficient aura outward through his arms, using his body like another wooden sword. He was recklessly swinging his unstable aura, eroding his own flesh.

If he continued to train and layer his aura as the method prescribed, he would eventually be able to safely project his energy outward more clearly and powerfully.

"Handling aura is like wielding a double-edged sword. The training method is a necessary safety measure in managing that sword. You mustn't forget that."

"Yes, I'll keep that in mind."

"Good."

The Holy Emperor nodded. From his past experiences, Seongjin realized that the lecture was over.

Seongjin, perking up, asked Holy Emperor, "Father, I have a question."

"....."

"I meditated last night, and suddenly, my aura layers increased significantly."

"....."

"Until recently, I was near the 6th layer, but now I'm almost reaching the 7th. I feel like I can properly project my aura outward now. Do you know anything about this?"

Seongjin, engrossed in his questions, failed to notice the Holy Emperor's eyes growing cold again.

"Could this be a result of the healing I received from you? Or is it related to the aura depletion I experienced fighting the spider monster? If I continue to receive such healing or deplete my aura, could it accelerate my training progress....."

Suddenly, the Holy Emperor's eyebrows twitched, and a spark seemed to fly from Seongjin's forehead.

Snap!

"Ouch!"

Seongjin clutched his forehead, rolling on the bed in pain, tears welling up in his eyes.

The Holy Emperor watched him for a moment, then turned away, clicking his tongue.

"What have you learned? You're just like someone I know, never learning."

Isn't that a bit harsh?

I heard everything!

Katrina said it clearly! I am very much like you in your youth!

As the Holy Emperor was about to leave the room, he paused and then spoke.

"...Next time you come, bring the Nutcracker. I'll examine your sword."

"What?"

Seongjin was about to ask more, but the Holy Emperor left without turning back.

* * *

"What happened here! I merely asked you to plant a seed, and what did you do instead!"

A sharp voice echoed through the hut. This was a secret meeting place in the capital.

In front of a long-haired man wearing a half-mask, two disheveled underground priests bowed their heads.

Their once white priest robes were now dirty and stained. A small insignia on the chest was the only indication of their affiliation with the Heresy Tribunal.

While the older priest wept in despair, Clemence, kneeling beside him, quickly spoke.

"It was truly unexpected. We were merely performing our task. It's true!"

"But why did a gate open in the Heresy Tribunal?"

"We don't know the exact reason, but it might be the work of a member of the Forgotten Order. They must have tampered with the legacy of [Rest]."

"Rest's remnants? Why would they suddenly?"

"We don't know either..."

"This is no time for excuses!"

Prince Leonard, who had been sipping from a small bottle of liquor, shook his head in disbelief. He had never seen Romaine so agitated and unable to maintain his composure.

Understandably so.

Just a few days after an abrupt emergency measure swept away most of the seeds, adding insult to injury, yesterday morning, a multitude of monsters suddenly descended from the direction of the royal palace, destroying the few seeds that had managed to sprout.

All their hard work had gone to waste.

The seeds, of which only a handful would sprout even after dozens were planted, were all gone. When would they be able to start this laborious task again?

"We had been encouraging the brothers of Rest to participate in our task. Originally, we planned to ask them to open the legacy on the Day of Great Harvest..."

Clemence continued with a troubled look.

"Unexpectedly, Hayes acted on his own without any prior indication. This all happened without any warning. I swear it!"

"So why did he suddenly do that!"

"Before opening the gate, he apparently had a brief conversation with a visitor to the Heresy Tribunal. If there's a cause, it might be related to that guest..."

Romaine's voice grew low.

"And who was this guest?"

"Prince Morres, the third prince."

"Prince Morres..."

He paused, looking into the void, catching his breath.

Come to think of it, wasn't Prince Morres's name also mentioned in connection with the recent monster disturbance on the outskirts of the capital?

What is it about him that stirs the remnants of Rest, who have been lying low as if dead?

It's said that he's such a troublemaker that even the Azure Labyrinth cast him out, but could it be that he's not as simple as the rumors suggest?

Why has this person, who had been quiet until now, suddenly come to the fore, making his presence felt?

"...A new move by the Holy Emperor."

Romaine murmured to himself, grinding his teeth.

"Guardian of Delcross. I wondered what his motives were, and indeed, he's adept at manipulating without getting his own hands dirty."

Behind the half-mask, light brown eyes flashed fiercely. Clemence flinched at that gaze and bowed his head again.

"...Right. So that's how you maintain the balance. I'll look forward to seeing how long your precarious balancing act lasts."

Despite his words, his face showed no expectation.

Romaine continued to stare fiercely in the direction of the imperial palace, his gaze sharp and unyielding.

* * *

The morning's state affairs were hectic due to the monster disturbance from the previous day.

The Heresy Tribunal was almost annihilated, and there were numerous casualties, including prisoners.

The Order of St. Marcias lost its leader, Sir Durand, with his deputy, Sir Paris, now acting as the interim leader.

The revelation that remnants of the Dark Cult remained within the Heresy Tribunal led to many clergy, including Cardinal Benitus, the cult's leader, being implicated. The state affairs meeting was like a storm.

No sooner had things settled down than the Holy Emperor, who had skipped lunch to visit Jinjugung, faced another challenging time.

In the audience room, his twins were eagerly waiting for him with a chessboard set up, their eyes sparkling.

And the Holy Emperor didn't particularly like chess.

"Rushing the queen like that..."

He sighed. Suddenly, a black queen invaded his territory, targeting his king.

"Check."

Ahem. Herna always moved one step ahead. Her bold moves often left the Holy Emperor no choice but to admire.

With no other option, he moved his king.

Then, a knight moved, cornering him.

"Check."

Hmm. Gades, always one step behind, yet forming a formidable attack with the knight, protecting each other. The Holy Emperor often struggled against their impeccable coordination.

He had no choice but to delve deeper into enemy territory.

He managed to dodge for a while, but eventually, his king, alone in enemy lines, was doomed.

"I've lost."

To his calm declaration, the twins cheerfully said, "But we've only played two games, Imperial Dad."

"You promised to continue in the afternoon, Your Majesty."

The chief steward, refilling the cold teacups, smiled contentedly. To him, it was a tender moment.

The Holy Emperor slightly furrowed his brows.

In a way, this was his own doing. After all, he was the one who taught the twins chess.

Herna and Gades, having awakened to channeling at a very young age, often lost control of their minds to an alarming degree during their childhood. In a way, their imperfect channeling faculties gave them no limits.

The Holy Emperor taught the twins chess as a way to anchor them in reality when they would sometimes forget to eat or drink, staring blankly into space. The game required continuous mental effort and focused them on a physical game board in the real world.

Fortunately, the intelligent twins soon became engrossed in the game, gradually learning to control their channeling based on reality.

That was a success.

However, the Holy Emperor never anticipated that they would become such chess prodigies.

Why not find other opponents or let the twins play against each other? Even Louis, the chief chamberlain, didn't quite understand why they were so fixated on playing chess with the Holy Emperor.

But like their uncontrolled channeling, the twins were unable to regulate their ability to read strong thoughts from those around them. If someone concentrated deeply on chess in their presence, they would unintentionally read their opponent's thoughts, even if they didn't want to.

Moreover, being so close to each other, it was impossible for them not to read each other's thoughts. Playing chess against each other was essentially like playing alone.

Only the Holy Emperor, immune to their thought-reading, could genuinely enjoy a game with them.

Regardless of his personal feelings about chess, the Holy Emperor was quite skilled at the game.

The twins were getting better at controlling their abilities, and the Holy Emperor believed that one day they would enjoy chess without any issues.

However, he overlooked the fact that the twins insisted on playing chess during audience times partly because they enjoyed seeing him in discomfort, a slightly twisted form of affection.

He might never realize this fact.

"Father, you have a habit of moving independently without considering other pieces."

"Don't forget, Your Majesty, that you have many other pieces that can be moved."

The twins had matured enough to advise their father.

"...Is that so?"

"Yes, sometimes inevitable sacrifices are necessary to prevent greater harm."

"Right, feeling guilty about unavoidable circumstances doesn't change anything."

Louis, watching them with an adoring look, probably didn't fully grasp the true weight of their words.

The Holy Emperor sighed.

He did not like chess. It was a metaphor for not enjoying moving and sacrificing others in real life.

His gaze, devoid of warmth, lingered on the black queen, the first piece the twins had sacrificed.

The Demon King had always been very curious about Herna and Gades, the twins.

When he was caught in the aura storm and bounced off the dimensional boundary, those kids approached Seongjin and subtly revealed that they were aware of the Demon King's existence. They even showed him a puppet show about the Dream Demon King and the Fire Demon King.

So, he expected that once he met them, he would ask them various questions noisily.

But when he finally met the twins, the Demon King was silent for a while, as if he was deep in thought.

Then, after a long pause, he finally asked:

"Those kids... are they human? They couldn't possibly be monsters, could they?"

...What?

'What nonsense are you spouting all of a sudden? If they're not human, what are they?'

Where on earth would you find a monster that looks perfectly normal?

Even if there were, it wouldn't be Lee Seongjin, who couldn't sense the aura of a monster.

And that applies to the Demon King of Gehenna himself.

[Oh, right, now that I think about it, they aren't monsters. I know they exist but.....]

Seongjin, bewildered, listened as the Demon King hesitantly explained.

He saw the mind crystals shining inside the twins' Herna and Gades' heads.

With their size and shape being quite normal, it was almost certain that the two were channelers.

'That makes sense.....'

While the story was sudden, Seongjin began to understand something.

Every time he met the twins, he felt a strange sense of déjà vu along with fatigue.

Their way of circumventing the topic, or how they abruptly changed subjects.

Even though they weren't as mentally unstable as Sharon, the twins didn't seem completely sane either.

'But even if it's about mind crystals and channeling abilities, why suddenly bring up monsters?'

They were the prince and princess of the Holy Empire, after all.

It's unlikely they are monsters.

[No... it's just that, the location is a bit strange.]

According to the Demon King, they were innate channelers.

The delicately shaped mind crystals were stably located in a specific position. Such cases usually indicate a high degree of channeling ability.

[It's different from that foolhardy commander. Spontaneously developed mind crystals don't have such a smooth shape. That naturally limits their abilities.]

But the difference didn't end there.

Unlike Bruno, the Commander, whose crystal was near the frontal lobe, or Sharon, whose crystal was near the thalamus, the twins' mind crystals were located deep in the occipital lobe of the brain.

That was the problem. It wasn't a location typically found in humans.

Mind crystals in the occipital lobe are a characteristic of cluster monsters that channel, like those with Bartosi-like neural placements in the same area.

[Such traits are inherited from the parents. What does their mother do, by the way? Surely she isn't a monster.....]

'Yeah, right.'

What nonsense is this?

The twins' mother, though not officially a queen, was living well in the capital's bustling area, as far as he knew.

'What about the possibility that they take after their father?'

Seongjin thought this was more likely.

The Holy Emperor has the ability to see souls and even traverse the boundaries of dimensions by moving souls alone. It would be more surprising if he wasn't a channeler, right?

Then the matter becomes simpler. The next time he meets him, he just needs to search his head for a mind crystal.

However, the Demon King's reaction to this suggestion was odd.

[Look for a mind crystal in your father? Ahahaha!]

He laughed in disbelief.

[Do you think that's possible? Your father is... just light. Light! Like a star, he's a massive source of holy power glowing on its own! Would you be able to distinguish a faintly shining mind crystal in that soul?

Could you?]

It's like looking for a candle in lava. Or searching for a campfire by jumping into the sun! At least then, there wouldn't be the risk of the soul being extinguished, right?

The Demon King rambled on with a heavy heart.

[Really... Whenever I get near your father, I'm scared to death I'll just burn up! How long do I have to live like this? Huh? sob]

Ah.

Recently, he had been seeing the Holy Emperor's face quite often.

It seemed that the Demon King, knowingly or unknowingly, had accumulated quite a bit of stress.

* * *

The next morning.

Having received permission from Dr. Ninnias to resume training, Seongjin rushed to the training ground, excited to test his increased aura.

He was currently working on the fifth form of the Imperial Standard Swordsmanship, which mainly consisted of brisk thrusts. He was expecting some visible improvement in his swordplay.

"...Hmm?"

However, contrary to his expectations, his movements were not smooth due to his muscles suddenly surging, reminiscent of when he first unconsciously wove aura and his motions were choppy.

Struggling to move smoothly, he was sweating profusely when Masain cautiously suggested:

"The aura has indeed increased too rapidly to be controlled at once. Perhaps it would be better to start again from the first form and readjust your aura?"

Ah, the tedious first form again.

But, thanks to his past efforts, repeating the most familiar form helped Seongjin quickly regain control over the flow of his aura.

But as he was focused on adjusting, he suddenly realized that the atmosphere in the training ground was more bustling than usual. The resident knights were gathered in one corner, discussing something.

Feeling Seongjin's puzzled gaze, Dame Maria discreetly approached and informed him:

"[Lilium] will soon arrive in the capital."

A grand parade was planned, and some resident knights were being mobilized for it, which also required adjustments in their duty roster.

But what's Lilium?

"It's a special detachment of the St. Bastian Paladins. They're an elite unit organized for the subjugation of sea monsters."

Masain, who was nearby, quickly explained to Seongjin.

The St. Bastian Paladins.

The St. Bastian Paladins, upholding the legacy of Saint Bastian of [Forgiveness], embrace [Generosity] as their virtue. Ironically, despite such a virtue as their motto, they are known to be as strict as the St. Marcias paladins.

Operating from the Saint Bastian Church as their base, they are well known as the arms and feet of the Orthodox Church.

And the person leading the special marine detachment from this knightly order...

"Prince Logan is returning for his birthday celebration," Masain said, with a faint hint of joy on his face.

Prince Logan of Delcross, the second prince.

A young paladin, touted as a swordsmanship prodigy destined to follow in the Holy Emperor's footsteps.

—I'll teach you a little secret, just between us. This is something no one else knows.

A boy whispering secrets in a dream.

—The reason I seem good at it is because I've learned it before.

That statement likely meant more than just early education.

It's a stretch, but if he wasn't just an ordinary child...

For instance, like Seongjin, if someone's soul was inhabiting his body...

'...Wait a minute! Isn't that quite plausible? How can I be sure mine is the only case?'

The realization hit Seongjin like a splash of cold water.

In retrospect, didn't he seem too precocious for his age, even in dreams?

"Prince Logan was always unusually mature for his age since he was young."

Responding to Seongjin's inquiry about the second prince, Masain answered with a smile.

"Looking back, it was like he was an aged knight in a young child's guise."

Seongjin felt a chill run down his spine.

Really?

"Even with swordsmanship, it was as if he was effortlessly relearning what he already knew. Although I was assigned as his teacher, I'm not sure if I really taught him anything."

Bruno, the former commander, joined in the conversation.

"I've met many renowned swordsmen across the continent, but I've never seen a talent like Prince Logan. I often thought he might surpass the Eastern Continent's strongest sword, General Gale."

At Seongjin's question about who General Gale was, he was described as a genius of his time.

"Tragically, he fell in the Ortona civil war, but if we talk about swordsmanship, he was unparalleled on the continent. Truly, a knight among knights."

Masain coughed subtly.

"The continent's greatest knight is Balthazar, Commander Bruno."

"Of course, there's no dispute that Balthazar is the greatest knight. His achievements are already a living legend. However, wasn't it General Gale who holds the record as the youngest Sword Master? I'm not saying this just because I'm from Ortona."

"Well, that record might soon be broken," Bruno continued.

"If things continue this way, Prince Logan might become the youngest Sword Master on the continent. It's not certain when the Holy Emperor became a Sword Master, but they started swordsmanship at different ages. Perhaps the prince will reach that level much faster than His Majesty?"

A Sword Master is someone who has reached the pinnacle in both aura cultivation and swordsmanship.

There can be Decalon Knights who are not Sword Masters, but no Sword Masters who are not Decalon Knights.

Prince Logan is predicted to reach this exalted status faster than anyone.

And he had said so himself. The reason he excels is because he learned it in the past.

"....."

As Seongjin heard more about Logan, the idea that he might be a possessor – someone with another soul inhabiting their body – seemed less and less like a mere assumption.

Seeing Seongjin furrow his brows in thought, Masain, possibly misunderstanding his concern, quickly added:

"Of course, Your Highness is also remarkable. The speed at which you accumulate aura is truly unparalleled. Even Prince Logan couldn't increase his aura layers as quickly in one day."

The dramatic shift from the 6th to the near 7th layer of aura.

Fortunately, according to Masain, Seongjin's physical condition wasn't adversely affected.

Observing the stable activation of aura around him, it was clear that the sudden increase in aura wasn't burdening his body.

Masain was a bit surprised to see Seongjin accumulate aura so rapidly in a day, but he thought it must be the Holy Emperor's doing. The aura vortex had lingered around Seongjin while the Holy Emperor was healing him, so it was likely his work.

"But I've always wondered, why is Balthazar called the strongest on the continent? To me, it seems like my father is stronger than Sir Balthazar."

At Seongjin's question, both Masain and Commander Bruno looked puzzled.

"Well, that's because the Holy Emperor is beyond comparison."

"The Emperor is in a league of his own."

...Ah, Seongjin realized.

To these two, the Holy Emperor was beyond human categorization.

Regardless, Seongjin felt somewhat relieved and delved into meditation.

After all, what use was it to ponder about Logan, who wasn't even present? He would soon return to the capital, and Seongjin could learn more upon meeting him.

As Seongjin focused intently, the wind whirling around him became so distinct that even the surrounding knights could feel it. Most resident knights were now somewhat accustomed to the unusual phenomena displayed by the prince.

"His aura materializes just by meditating. No wonder he builds layers so quickly."

Dame Maria commented in amazement, while Kurt, polishing his sword nearby, nodded.

"The amount he absorbs and circulates in one go is different. The bloodline of the Holy Emperor's family is truly extraordinary."

But it wasn't just Morres.

Recently, Princess Amelia, who had received high praise from the spear master Dimlos as a rare talent.

Prince Logan, projected to become the youngest Sword Master on the continent.

And Prince Owen, initially unremarkable at the palace but recently gaining fame for his monstrous prowess on the southern front.

"Um... Suddenly I feel less motivated."

Haven spoke dejectedly, casting a heavy silence over the training ground.

Joining the Imperial Knights meant that one's swordsmanship skills were not easily surpassed anywhere. However, in the presence of such geniuses, even they felt diminished.

"...Let's just train."

"Ugh..."

With that, they returned to their respective spots, a bit disheartened.

The Special Unit [Lilium] of the Order of Saint Sebastian

When they finally arrived, the imperial capital Delcross was brimming with a festive atmosphere. The windows along the streets were adorned with delicate flowers, and blue lily emblems, representing the special unit, were hung on various buildings.

People lining the streets waved handkerchiefs, welcoming the young paladins who had vanquished the sea demons for the empire.

"Long live the Order of Saint Sebastian!"

"The noble blue lilies of Delcross!"

"Hail the sea demon exterminators!"

White petals fluttered everywhere.

At the front of the long procession, young knights in white knightly uniforms led their horses with dignity. Except for the blue sword and crossed blue lilies emblazoned on them, their uniforms were similar to those of the Order of Saint Aurelion.

It was a wonder how they managed to keep their uniforms impeccably clean despite the sea demon extermination not being a simple outing.

There were only about a dozen paladins at the forefront.

Although it was almost embarrassing to call it a special unit, the procession became a sizable force when counting the regular knights, squires, and other soldiers following them.

"Blessings upon the millennium-old holy kingdom of Delcross!"

"Glory to the noble knights of Lilium!"

Seongjin and Amelia were secretly watching this spectacle from the entrance of the palace walls.

He was half dragged by her, who had skipped classes to see the parade. Yet, for Seongjin, who spent his days in constant training, taking a moment to enjoy such a diversion wasn't a bad idea.

"People really seem to enjoy it."

The sea demon extermination sounded impressive, but it wasn't something the citizens of the capital would have physically experienced.

As Seongjin pondered over the somewhat excessive welcome, Amelia smiled.

"There was a monster attack in the capital recently. There was a need to lift the spirits amidst the ominous atmosphere."

Indeed.

Most of the attack victims were unconnected poor people in the slums, so the perceived human toll wasn't as significant as the scale of the incident.

However, it was a spectacle of never-before-seen creatures flying around, attacking people. It wasn't strange that the citizens were shaken.

Thanks to the [monsters] causing havoc, the endless debates in the Holy Council were gradually concluding. There was a move to classify monsters as beings from another dimension, different from demonkind.

It seemed that soon there would be proper working policies for the monster extermination unit.

"Ah, look over there, Morres! It's Logan!"

At Amelia's shout, Seongjin turned his head in the direction she pointed.

The procession of Liliium had now approached close enough to recognize faces from the wall. And at the forefront, a familiar-looking boy rode a horse with a composed demeanor.

A slim boy in the throes of puberty, with black hair. A young paladin.

His youthful face shone even brighter, possibly due to the silver light armor and the white uniform of the knightly order.

His slightly droopy blue eyes and delicate facial contours were more reminiscent of his mother, Empress Tatiana, if one were to be precise.

"...He resembles his father, somehow."

Indeed, he did.

The calm and dignified aura surrounding the boy was unmistakably royal.

"Logan truly feels like His Majesty's son."

Amelia's eyes were filled with deep affection as she looked at him.

"And he's really a kind boy. When I first came to the palace and didn't know what to do, he was a great help to me."

Seongjin inadvertently recalled a dream he had a few days ago.

In it, Logan seemed to be taking care of Morres as well.

Setting aside the suspicions of possession, it seemed certain that he was indeed a good-natured person.

[Wow, haha. There's light here too! The soul is completely covered in light!]

Then, the Demon King in his mind scoffed as if sickened.

[If it weren't for your father's barrier, I would have taken damage to my soul just by looking at him.]

Ah, right. Logan is said to have exceptional divine power as well.

In any case, a genius in swordsmanship, strong in divine power, and with a noble character to boot. What didn't this guy have?

While Seongjin gazed at the approaching procession of Lilium with a perplexed expression, Amelia cautiously observed him and spoke.

"Um... Morres. Logan is a good boy, so how about trying to get along with him from now on?"

Huh? What's that all of a sudden?

Seongjin blinked in confusion.

[Hmm, for your information, according to the information I collected before...]

The Demon King, finding an opportune moment to interject, chimed in happily.

[Morres had bad relations with his brothers, but he especially hated Logan. He used to pick fights, insult, and bother him whenever he saw him. There are rumors that Logan started participating in sea demon expeditions and leaving the palace because of Morres. Can you imagine how bad it was for people to think the Second Prince, who endured all that, might not be a saint?]

'Uh.....'

Have I, towards the continent's top golden boy and a strong candidate for the next Holy Emperor, completely fallen out of favor with him?

As Seongjin was grappling with the misdeeds of the reckless Morres he used to be, he suddenly snapped to attention due to a sharp hostility directed at him.

'.....?'

Looking around in confusion, his eyes landed on the Lilium group approaching the city gate.

And then their gazes met.

Logan.

Despite the considerable distance, the young paladin at the forefront was staring directly in Seongjin's direction with fierce eyes. It was a position that should be hard to see from outside, cleverly hidden by the structure of the wall.

Caught off guard by the unmistakable hostility, Seongjin watched as Logan soon averted his gaze. The sharp hostility also vanished.

'...What?'

Amelia seemed to have noticed nothing. She looked at Seongjin, who had suddenly become rigid, with a puzzled expression before turning her gaze back to the welcoming crowd.

At the forefront of the knights and greeters who had come out of the palace to meet them stood an elderly priest, composed in his demeanor. He was Cardinal Caplan, the father of the Empress and Logan's maternal grandfather.

As the Lilium special unit halted in front of the city gate, the Cardinal approached them with a proud face.

"Your Highness! I heard you slew many sea demons with a single stroke on this expedition! Your fame resounds throughout the continent, including Delcross and neighboring countries. You truly bring us honor!"

Prince Logan dismounted and briefly paid his respects to the Cardinal. The small buckler on his raised left arm gleamed in the sunlight with a cold silver light.

He seemed to have no special affection for his maternal grandfather, in stark contrast to the Cardinal, who was overflowing with pride for his grandson.

After the customary welcome speech and the splendid military salute of the lined-up knights, the special unit finally entered the palace.

"Long live Prince Logan!"

"Hail the sea demon extermination squad!"

"May the blue lilies of Saint Sebastian be blessed by the deity!"

Even after the group had completely disappeared into the city gates, the citizens of the capital continued to cheer and wave their handkerchiefs. It was a scene that truly reflected the popularity of the well-regarded Second Prince.

"Let's head back now, Morres," Amelia said as she dusted off her pants and stood up.

"Today, there will likely be a royal banquet for the first time in a while. Except for Owen and Sisle, the whole family will be gathering."

She spoke with a joyous expression, but Seongjin felt troubled, recalling the hostility Logan had directed at him earlier.

Such an overt hostility was a stark contrast to the kind boy he had seen in his dream.

After all, even a boy of good character who liked to look after his brothers would naturally harbor resentment against Morres, who had tormented him for a long time.

Seongjin wondered how he should approach Logan.

Should he start by apologizing for his past misdeeds?

However, Seongjin had yet to realize that the hostility Logan directed at him stemmed from something more fundamental.

* * *

Gatherings of the entire imperial family were exceedingly rare in the palace.

Considering the emperor met with his children in rotation every day, Seongjin thought it odd that he didn't organize more frequent gatherings for a family meal or the like.

For Seongjin, this was a relief.

It wasn't like a mandatory office dinner, nor was it enjoyable to dine in a crowded setting with people he wasn't comfortable with.

However, the palace was different on this occasion. When a prince returns to the capital after achieving glory and being away for months, the situation changes.

The emperor had summoned the imperial family for the first time in nearly half a year. With many attendees, the palace was in a buzz of activity.

Notably, there was a fierce competition of dressing up among the empress and consorts, each vying for dignity and pride.

Queen Elizabeth, who always paid attention to Seongjin's attire, hadn't even shown her face in Pearl Palace this time, probably preoccupied with her own preparations.

It was the dawn of a rare floral war in the Delcross Palace.

The atmosphere was different for the children, however.

It was a relatively free time to catch up and share news with each other after a long separation. This was why Amelia had been so happy.

Herna and Gades, who lived outside the palace, were also expected to attend, and even a place was prepared for Masain. Dressed neatly in his knightly uniform, Masain boarded the carriage with Seongjin to head to the main palace.

At this point, Masain, unable to hide his imperial identity any longer, smiled awkwardly.

"I apologize for not informing you earlier, Your Highness."

"No, Sir Masain. Should I start calling you 'brother' from now on?"

Seongjin, who had been inwardly frustrated about pretending not to know, asked with a sense of relief.

Considering the emperor's age, he could almost be Seongjin's son (in previous world), yet he called him 'father' without difficulty. Calling someone 'brother' should be no harder.

However, Masain reacted vehemently, waving his hands in denial.

"No! That was a term of endearment from my ignorant childhood. Besides, you don't have any memories of that time, do you?"

"But still..."

"Moreover, I am just a knight in the service of the imperial family. I am comfortable with our current relationship, so please understand."

"..."

Well, if he insists.

Seongjin had always thought him to be a man of integrity, perhaps too much so.

The carriage carrying Seongjin arrived at the main palace earlier than scheduled. Being people who didn't need much preparation helped them start early.

However, as Seongjin and Masain entered the lobby of the main palace, they found someone who had arrived even before them.

Prince Logan, a boy with a calm and settled aura, was leaning against a wall in the corridor, watching Seongjin and his party enter, alone and without any attendants.

Seongjin halted in his tracks as Logan rose to his feet and slowly approached them, still shrouded in what felt like a tangible hostility. Clearly, the sharp hostility Logan had directed at Seongjin during the parade was not a figment of his imagination.

Seongjin hesitated for a moment, uncertain how to approach Logan. If years of bad blood had built up between them, it would be best to start by mending that relationship. He thought about offering a greeting first.

However, contrary to Seongjin's expectation, Logan's hostility stemmed from a more fundamental cause. It wasn't that he was hostile towards [Morres].

"...Who exactly are you?"

Logan's eyes, glaring intently at Seongjin, burned with a blue flame of anger.

"Why are you in Morres's place, wearing his face, living his life?"

"...!"

"What have you done with Morres? Answer me!"

Faced with an unexpected situation, Seongjin inadvertently swallowed hard.

'I'm not Morres? How did he figure that out?'

Caught off guard by this entirely unexpected situation, Seongjin's mind was in turmoil.

Could Logan also possess a power like the emperor's, to see into souls?

Or is it something else...

"Your Highness?"

Masain, sensing the strange tension, alternated his gaze between the two.

However, the moment of confusion was fleeting, and Seongjin quickly regained his composure, calmly facing the boy who did not conceal his hostility.

'...I was bound to face this sooner or later.'

The question he should have been asked by someone when he first arrived in this world, he was now hearing from this boy.

Since when had he stopped worrying about being discovered? The answer was clear: since his first audience with the Holy Emperor.

Knowing yet pretending ignorance, the emperor had treated him as his son, and Seongjin had unwittingly become entangled in it, deluding himself into believing he was truly the emperor's son, a member of the imperial family.

"This doesn't seem like the right place for this conversation."

"...Don't spout nonsense!"

Logan's pressure intensified in response to Seongjin's reply.

It felt as if icy spears were being thrust from all sides, causing a tingling tension.

"You need to answer properly. If something truly has happened to Morres, I will..."

At that moment, Masain stepped in between them, shielding Seongjin with his body and quickly addressing Logan.

"Your Highness! Prince Morres recently suffered a severe fever. It was so severe that his life was in danger. Since then, he has lost his memory."

"Brother Masain..."

Confronted with Masain, the hostility in the boy seemed to soften a bit.

"Moreover, he has lost a noticeable amount of weight recently due to training. It's not strange for Your Highness to think he's completely changed."

"It's not about his appearance, brother. Morres's presence is completely..."

Logan trailed off, seemingly struggling to explain. He alternated his gaze between Seongjin and Masain, then bit his lip in frustration.

"...Right. This isn't the place for this discussion. I'll have an opportunity to talk to you at length later."

With that, Logan turned away from Seongjin and walked off.

"....."

Watching Logan's retreating figure, Seongjin inwardly clicked his tongue.

Wow, what kind of person is he? Can someone like him really be referred to simply as a swordsmanship prodigy?

Even though it was brief, the intensity of the young prince's aura was so heavy that even Seongjin, who had spent decades on battlefields fighting monsters, felt momentarily overwhelmed.

Now what to do?

In the midst of Seongjin's thoughts about Logan's intimidating suspicions, Herna and Gades suddenly appeared at the lobby entrance and rushed toward him.

"Morres! Brother Masain!"

"Morres! Brother Masain!"

The twins, smiling brightly, grabbed his arms from both sides.

They are heavy, these kids!

Thanks to them, Seongjin quickly discarded his brief contemplation. While there was still an uneasy feeling, what could he do about it now? If it really came down to it, he could always ask the emperor for mediation.

* * *

"As Prince Logan has glorified Delcross across the continent, he is indeed a blessing to the Holy Empire," Queen Elizabeth spoke elegantly, dabbing her lips with a napkin as the imperial banquet began.

Already a striking beauty, she seemed to radiate even more today. Her attendants must have put their souls into her preparation.

Prince Logan, a promising candidate for the next Crown Prince, must be a source of inner turmoil for her, but she couldn't openly criticize his significant achievements.

"Yet, there are still those in the far reaches of the continent, untouched by the deity's grace, suffering from sea demons. It pains my heart to think of them. Surely, we can expect Liliun to continue to fulfill its noble duties across the continent, bringing the deity's merciful touch to all?"

Ah, she still managed to slip in a barb, subtly suggesting that Logan should continue his expeditions rather than return to the capital.

Empress Tatiana, seated at the head table, twitched her eyebrows momentarily but maintained her usual courteous smile, lifting her wine glass gracefully. She too looked more elegant and beautiful than usual.

"Serving selflessly in any capacity for the people, that is the mindset befitting a member of the imperial family. Even the youngest, Princess Sisle, is already shouldering [the noble's duty], willingly caring for the people as a saintess. With such commendable princes and princesses, Delcross will surely be blessed by the deity for generations to come."

A subtle nudge to Queen Elizabeth, implying that if she wanted her son to be treated properly, she should discipline her own son, who lazed around the palace.

Now it was Queen Elizabeth's turn to have sharp eyes.

Seongjin awkwardly guzzled his drink, feeling slightly embarrassed by the situation.

"The citizens of the capital are full of praise. Thanks to Prince Logan, many have been saved from the suffering of sea demons. For them, it was a precious opportunity to experience the deity's mercy and love firsthand. It is truly a commendable deed."

A soft, delicate voice followed.

It was Queen Melody, the second consort.

Originally a commoner, she had ascended to the position of queen when the Holy Emperor took the throne and was the mother of the youngest of his children, Princess Sisle.

The gentle and kind beauty with soft silver hair and caring eyes was Queen Melody. Her sincere praise seemed to soften Empress Tatiana's stern expression momentarily.

"If only Princess Sisle were here to share this joyful occasion..."

Princess Sisle, the youngest of the emperor's children, was known to possess the strongest divine power among them despite her young age. The Church had already proclaimed her a saintess, and she was currently on a long pastoral visit organized by the Church.

"She's still young, so she probably feels like these visits are more like outings. I've told her to return before her birthday celebration."

As Queen Melody spoke with a smile, the atmosphere around her noticeably warmed.

Her presence was like a small sheep caught between a leopard and a wolf, but her unwavering voice in such an environment seemed even more remarkable.

Indeed, a banquet with three of the Holy Emperor's consorts gathered was never going to be a relaxed affair. It was becoming clear why the Holy Emperor usually avoided organizing such events.

Looking around, everyone seemed accustomed to the tense atmosphere, each managing in their own way.

The twins, Herna and Gades, kept exchanging glances and giggling quietly during the meal, seemingly communicating something without words. It appeared they were engaged in a conversation through their psychic channeling.

Logan was relatively focused on his meal, occasionally engaging in quiet conversations with Amelia seated next to him. Their interaction, having been close since she arrived at the palace, looked comfortable and affectionate.

Masain, too, appeared unusually relaxed and happy. He seemed utterly enchanted by his younger siblings, smiling fondly as he ate. He truly seemed to have a caretaker's nature to his core.

And then there was the Holy Emperor.

Seongjin glanced at the head table and saw the Holy Emperor quietly cutting his food, his expression unreadable.

But he wasn't eating, just cutting his food.

What was he doing?

Seongjin watched him more closely. The emperor would cut his steak when others did, and bring a cup to his lips when others ate, though he didn't seem to drink. This process flowed so naturally that unless one paid close attention, it wasn't obvious that he wasn't actually eating.

Come to think of it, Seongjin couldn't recall seeing the Holy Emperor actually eat anything.

During tea time, the emperor would just stare blankly at his untouched tea. Even during a lunch in the garden, he seemed to just toy with his food.

Could the Holy Emperor be a picky eater at his age?

As Seongjin sat there with a puzzled expression, the servants brought in the next course – a crisply fried fish dish.

'...Wow!'

Unwittingly taking a bite of the dish, Seongjin found the tender, savory fish flesh, perfectly complemented by a sweet sauce, incredibly delicious. Even for his refined palate, accustomed to the finest cuisine of the palace, this was a gourmet delight.

"This is delicious! What dish is this?"

Seongjin's spontaneous question prompted a response from a smiling servant.

"It's a cutlet made from true salmon, Your Highness. It's the season when they're at their fattest. This one was freshly flown in from the Kiproos Union this morning."

"True salmon..."

Seongjin suddenly remembered the emperor's comment about a sword's name.

-"True salmon is indeed a tender and tasty fish."

Glancing at the head table, the Holy Emperor still wore a stoic expression, seemingly intent on destroying his plate of food.

Was this his favorite?

But why wasn't he eating it?

Before he knew it, Seongjin found himself calling out to the Holy Emperor.

"Father?"

Instantly, all conversations in the dining room ceased, and everyone turned to look at Seongjin. Unperturbed by the sudden silence, he continued.

"Isn't this the fish you mentioned before? True salmon?"

"....."

The Holy Emperor silently stared at Seongjin, then looked down at his plate. His expression was unreadable, but Seongjin noticed a slight widening of his eyes, as if he hadn't realized what he was doing.

The Holy Emperor finally picked up his utensils and slowly brought a piece of fish to his mouth, swallowing for the first time since the banquet began.

"...Indeed."

After a moment of savoring, the Holy Emperor nodded.

"It is indeed that fish. The imperial chefs have done an excellent job."

Seongjin clicked his tongue.

As entangled as he might be among his three wives, was the Holy Emperor too distracted?

With a snort, Seongjin resumed his meal, but soon he felt the gaze of others and looked up.

Empress Tatiana appeared uncomfortable, Queen Lizabeth was sneakily glancing at him, pretending to be uninterested, and Queen Melody was openly admiring.

'...What's with them?'

The reactions weren't just from the head table.

The twins' eyes were wide open in surprise, and Amelia covered her mouth with her hands, silently staring at Seongjin. What's going on?

Even Masain seemed emotionally stirred, his eyes reddening, an unusual reaction.

'Did I do something wrong? I didn't say much.'

Feeling a cold sweat, Seongjin was perplexed.

Surprisingly, Logan too seemed taken aback. He glanced at the Holy Emperor with a puzzled expression, then turned his gaze to Seongjin.

His look, as if seeing someone anew, lacked the earlier sharp hostility.

In this strange atmosphere, with Seongjin still trying to understand the situation, the Holy Emperor alone, expressionless, placed a second piece of fish into his mouth.

100

"There is poison in the food that has just been served.

The tingling at the tip of the tongue from the sauce is not due to the spices. It's likely some kind of neurotoxic poison.

It's uncertain if the same poison is present in the meat as well. However, a similar type of poison seems to have been lightly applied to the plate.

The wine is also a bit strange.

The color reflecting in the light seems to be due to the effect of Carvamilla, a poison usually served with tea.

Oh my goodness. Are you listening?

Please open the channel quickly."

* * *

Logan had been observing the Emperor for a considerable time.

He had spent his childhood with him in the Blue Rose Labyrinth, and even after that, they often had audiences together, doing things that a father and son would do.

Occasionally, they would sit in the office and eat walnuts together.

But that was all. He could assert that he had never once seen the Emperor eat other food in the palace without hesitation.

The others were just as surprised. The chief chamberlain next to him was moved to tears.

The Empress and the consorts, too, stopped their veiled jabs disguised as greetings and well wishes, and just stared blankly at the Emperor's actions.

Unconcerned with the atmosphere around him, the Emperor quietly moved his cutlery, eventually finishing off the entire plate of salmon cutlet.

Of course, after that, he returned to his indifferent facade, merely cutting the food.

However, having observed him for a long time, Logan understood. The man was simply preoccupied elsewhere.

Seeing him act reflexively like that, it seemed that pretending to eat had become a long-standing habit for the Emperor.

'I thought he was just overly cautious...'

Otherwise, what reason would there be for someone with such immense divine power, capable of recovering instantly from deadly poison, to not eat properly?

"Ah, there he goes again."

Across the room, a dull murmur came from the one pretending to be Morres. It was the impostor.

Logan looked at this strange imposter with newfound curiosity.

What exactly was this person?

At first, during the opening ceremony, he had no doubt believed that an evil spirit had taken over Morres' body. Although faint, he even felt an ominous aura around him.

It had only been a few months since he last saw Morres.

But in that short gap, his brother had become a completely different person.

Whatever method was used, his aura had increased as if he had become an experienced knight. And he had lost a noticeable amount of weight.

Above all, there was an occasional wild and fierce demeanor emanating from him, though he tried to hide it.

It was as if he was not a prince raised in the imperial palace but a veteran hunter dedicated to maritime conquests for decades.

"...Your Highness, this is the first time I've seen His Majesty eat during a banquet," whispered Sir Masain, his face filled with emotion.

When had the two of them become so close?

"Why leave it be? It's disgraceful for the Emperor if such manners are allowed at the table. Shouldn't someone scold for pickiness or at least offer his favorite dishes?"

"That... talking about His Majesty's table manners is a bit..."

What a blunt and tactless imposter.

"Morres, thanks to you, His Majesty has finished his meal. I've always been concerned about His Majesty's health as he often skips meals."

Amelia, with her hands clasped over her heart, spoke joyfully.

When had these two reconciled?

"Wait, he skips meals daily and no one does anything? Why is everyone okay with this? What a disgrace it would be if the Emperor of Delcross suffered from malnutrition!"

"Well... even if that happened, we thought His Majesty would recover with his divine power..."

Could this really be an evil spirit?

Now, Logan found it difficult to make a hasty judgment.

He shouldn't think this way, but wasn't this imposter getting along with people better than the real Morres ever did?

Moreover, Logan was caught in a strange sense of déjà vu.

The imposter definitely had a different presence than Morres, but why did he increasingly remind Logan of the wayward young Morres?

'...I need to have a talk with this person.'

But what troubled him most was the Emperor of Delcross.

Would a person, suspiciously inhuman, who let an evil spirit freely take over his son's body, just stand by and watch?

Logan thought he needed to be more cautious in dealing with this impostor.

* * *

The banquet lasted a considerable amount of time before finally coming to an end late in the evening.

Feeling a bit tired upon his return to the Pearl Palace, Seongjin, as usual, meditated briefly before opening a fairy tale book borrowed from Amelia.

The book had been quite interesting when the first Emperor was busy brawling with dragons, but as it progressed to the founding of Delcross and laying the foundations of the imperial city, his interest waned significantly. It seemed necessary to finish the book quickly and borrow a new one before his motivation for learning hit rock bottom.

However, Seongjin had to close the book just before reaching the end. The Demon King, in a panic, had alerted him.

[Seongjin, it's light! There's light coming!]

What kind of sermon from a pseudo-preacher is that? If you're going to inform me, do it properly.

Frustrated, the Demon King replied.

[I mean Prince Logan. He's rushing here at an incredibly fast speed!]

What?

Seongjin tensed up and swiftly rose from his seat, grabbing the Nutcracker he had placed beside his bed, just in case.

He wasn't sure of Logan's level, but the approaching presence was so faint that even Seongjin had difficulty detecting it. This level of stealth was almost on par with Commander Bruno.

Regardless, the fact that Logan was sneaking into the Pearl Palace in the middle of the night without any formal notice of visitation did not seem to bode well.

Considering the murderous intent Logan had shown earlier that day, it wouldn't be surprising if a sword fight broke out right here and now.

After waiting for a moment, sure enough, someone leapt onto the terrace from the third floor.

Considering that Dasha always used this route to visit, it seemed the third-floor security was indeed lax. He would have to tip off Sir Masain later.

While Seongjin was observing the balcony, Logan, dressed lightly and with a long sword at his waist, approached the window.

Then, he knocked.

".....?"

What was he up to? Sneaking in, yet knocking on the window to enter the room?

Bewildered and staring, Logan knocked on the window again.

Knock, knock.

"...Yes."

As Seongjin reluctantly responded, Logan finally opened the terrace door and stepped into the room. It was peculiar how fastidious he was in such a strange situation.

"I said earlier that we need to talk," Logan stated, walking towards Seongjin with a calm expression.

No longer could Seongjin sense the rage or murderous intent from Logan that was evident before. Of course, this could change depending on the outcome of their conversation.

Seongjin nodded, and Logan looked at him intently for a moment.

His slightly droopy eyes, which had shown warmth towards Amelia and Marquis Masin, now seemed cold and stern without a trace of a smile.

"I'll ask again. What exactly are you? What did you do to Morres?"

Seongjin furrowed his brows slightly. He didn't fully understand what had happened to the real Morres, and explaining his own identity was complicated.

He decided to respond with a question, a simple way to handle a difficult inquiry.

"What about you? What's your real identity? Are you just an ordinary person?"

Seongjin had already considered the possibility that Logan might be possessed by someone else.

"....."

"What is your secret?"

The moment Seongjin mentioned the word "secret," the boy's eyes widened in surprise. It seemed like he hadn't expected to hear such words from Seongjin.

"How do you know about that... That's something only Morres should know..."

Logan's gaze hardened again.

His hand subtly moved towards the sword at his waist.

"So, you did do something to Morres! How did you find out about that?"

Oops, just as the tension was subsiding, Logan's demeanor turned threatening again.

Trying to probe further might have been too much.

"Where is the real Morres? Where is he?"

"Wait, hold on!"

Before Logan could become uncontrollably agitated, Seongjin quickly interjected. Preventing a potential clash between the brothers seemed the most prudent course of action.

"I got involved in this unintentionally! I really don't know what happened to Morres!"

"....."

Seongjin, in a mix of urgency and desperation, blurted out, "Let's calm down. I'm just as curious about why this happened! I'll tell you everything I know, but you have to be honest about what you're hiding too. Fair enough? That's all I'm asking!"

Fair? As if!

Even as he spouted nonsense, Seongjin was incredulous at his own words. Yet, driven by a sense of urgency, he continued to talk.

"Understand? From my perspective, you're the strange one. Are you really Logan? Or another evil spirit that has taken over his body? Why would I reveal everything to you?"

"....."

Logan's intense blue eyes gradually calmed. He looked at Seongjin, seemingly contemplating something.

Finally, he slowly began to speak, "...You're right. From your perspective, such doubts are reasonable."

".....?"

Seongjin gaped, surprised. Was Logan really persuaded by what he thought was nonsense?

Regardless, Logan looked around, then walked over to a nearby sofa and sat down with proper posture.

"Let's start this exchange of information you proposed. Sit down."

"....."

"We'll each ask one question at a time. Keep the answers simple, and if the response is satisfactory, we'll move on to the next question. That seems fair."

Was Logan fixated on fairness? He was oddly conventional in such an unusual situation.

Seongjin, speechless, just stared blankly as Logan gestured for him to start.

"Shall I begin? Who exactly are you?"

"...I'm Seongjin, likely from another world."

At this point, Seongjin was just going with the flow.

The two continued their Q&A session for a while. Initially, they strictly took turns asking one question each, but as the conversation progressed, they began to share information more openly, foregoing formalities.

Seongjin revealed to Logan that he had died fighting a Demon King in another world and awoke in Morres' body. He added that Morres' soul was nowhere to be found when he arrived, and he had no idea why this had happened.

He also emphasized that he was actually a very old person.

Then, Seongjin learned a surprising fact about Logan.

Logan was not possessed by another soul.

Logan revealed that he was originally an officer from Ortona who had died in a battlefield in his previous life, and had been reincarnated as Logan.

He had never heard of anyone else being reincarnated and was clueless about why it happened exclusively to him. However, he wanted Seongjin to understand that he, too, was a seasoned knight with years of experience in his past life.

"But I might have been over sixty years old! Doesn't that automatically put me in line?"

"I, too, don't have clear memories of my past life, but I believe I was over seventy."

"Seventy and still active on the battlefield? Are you sure you're not exaggerating?"

What had started as a serious conversation had somehow devolved into an argument about their ages.

After spending some time on this irrelevant debate, Logan hesitantly raised the question that had been troubling him the most.

"Why does the Holy Emperor leave you alone? What's the reason?"

That was a question Seongjin also pondered.

But the same question applied to Logan as well. Seongjin countered, "What about you? Why does Father leave you alone?"

What? Logan looked at Seongjin with wide eyes, as if he had never considered this before.

Seongjin tilted his head in confusion.

You still don't fully understand that man.

"You do realize, don't you? You don't actually think the Emperor is unaware that you're not an ordinary person?"

Seongjin was certain the Holy Emperor already knew Logan was not an ordinary person, and he had reasons for this belief.

As he conversed with Logan, Seongjin was simultaneously receiving various pieces of information from the Demon King. The Demon King's insights, akin to a lie detector, had played a significant role in believing the seemingly absurd information about Logan being a reincarnated soul.

Of course, Logan's claim about being over seventy in his previous life was false.

The guy disliked losing, it seemed.

The Demon King had also shared some peculiar observations about Logan's soul.

[His soul looks a bit strange, you know?]

It was surrounded by such a bright light due to his innate divine power that it was difficult to discern its true form.

However, according to the Demon King, Logan's soul seemed to change size when he mentioned his past life.

In other words, it appeared as a boy and then momentarily as a tall adult.

Additionally, there was one common feature in both forms: several long, stick-like objects were embedded in the soul's torso.

The Holy Emperor once answered Seongjin's question about what a soul looks like: "It looks identical to the person in life. The soul is influenced by the body until the moment of death."

Thus, the soul's appearance the Demon King described might be Logan's form just before his death in his past life.

And the Emperor can see souls.

The conclusion was obvious.

Stunned by Seongjin's words, Logan was speechless for a moment. He must have realized Seongjin was speaking with some conviction.

From their conversation, Seongjin sensed that, just as he used the Demon King, Logan also had some reliable means to gauge the truthfulness of Seongjin's words.

If Seongjin gave vague answers or didn't respond adequately, Logan would pinpoint and probe those areas, almost like a ghost.

After all, no matter how gullible, it's improbable to easily believe someone who claims to be an evil spirit that has taken over a brother's body and hails from another world.

"...He knows about me?"

Logan finally responded after a long silence.

He sat upright, but his clasped hands, trembling slightly, betrayed his inner turmoil.

"Probably. How did you die in the battlefield?"

Seongjin's direct question seemed to cut through the tension, focusing on the heart of Logan's past and potentially his connection with the Emperor.

Logan's blue eyes seemed to sink into memories as he responded to Seongjin's question.

"...I don't clearly remember the moment of my death. It was during a prolonged battle... I was surrounded by numerous enemies, weary from the long fight. I remember receiving fatal sword wounds and being struck by several spears in vital areas."

The sticks in his body were spears, then.

"Then it's certain. At the very least, the Holy Emperor knows you died on the battlefield."

"If that's the case....."

Logan's gaze became unfocused, lost in thought.

"Why has he never asked me anything until now?"

Logan no longer referred to the Emperor as 'Imperial Father' in front of Seongjin. It seemed he didn't genuinely regard him as his father.

And the reason for this became clear to Seongjin when Logan murmured almost to himself.

"Could it be that he already knows who I am?"

"....."

"Does he... remember me?"

Seongjin caught onto a possibility from Logan's words.

"Did you, by any chance, meet the Holy Emperor in your past life?"

Logan didn't respond to his question, but his silence was revealing.

Seongjin realized it: since Logan knew him in a past life, he couldn't consider him his real father.

After a moment of silent contemplation, Logan suddenly spoke up, startled by his own realization.

"...Yes. That's why he gave me [Arjuna] without any question."

Arjuna?

As Seongjin blinked in confusion, Logan drew the long sword he had at his waist.

It was a unique silver blade.

The thin and narrow blade was crafted in a wavy pattern, and it looked somewhat like a long spear due to its thin, elongated hilt and relatively small guard.

It was definitely not a typical sword seen in the knight orders.

"When I first requested this sword, everyone in the imperial knight order advised against it, saying it didn't suit the order's swordsmanship. But he simply handed it to me without a word."

After explaining this, Logan hesitated for a moment before continuing.

"And... Arjuna was the name of my sword in my past life."

Could it be?

"Your sword from your past life?"

That was a confirmation beyond doubt.

Logan slowly brought his trembling hands to his face, letting out a small groan.

"How should I... treat him now?"

* * *

It was a story from over a decade ago.

At that time, Ortona, despite being torn into three major factions, still managed to maintain its identity as a nation.

During a period when the continent's sole republican government was being repeatedly pushed back by the coalition of external forces and royalists, there was one exceptional swordsman who played a significant role in preventing its complete annihilation over the past year.

Gael Bertrand.

The only Sword Master in the eastern regions, including Ortona.

He was a longtime friend and the personal knight of Prince Benicio, a supporter of the republican government. He was also the last bastion and the final sword of the dwindling republican remnants.

However, even this busy man was now merely wasting his time as a casual drinking companion for his longtime friend.

"Ortona is finished. Those blockheaded royalists, unable to let go of the past, invited foreign powers into our lands. Now, our nation lies in ruins!"

Gael watched with a tired expression as Prince Benicio guzzled down his drink.

His once brilliant friend had now degenerated into a simple drunkard, lamenting his fate with a bottle in hand every day.

"My homeland, the first on the continent to blossom into a republic, has come to such a hollow end..."

The prince lamented in a sorrowful tone, refilling his glass.

Perhaps because he had dreamed brighter than anyone for Ortona's future, his frustration seemed deeper than others.

But Gael, instead of consoling him, let out an involuntary sigh. He himself wanted to drink and forget his worries.

He had to find a new patron starting tomorrow, persuade the mercenary groups to cooperate harmoniously, and now he even worried about sourcing more bottles of liquor.

"How about you, Gael? Do you also see me as a failed second prince who betrayed the royal family? Don't you believe in my firm conviction to support the republic for the future of our nation?"

Prince Benicio, with reddened eyes, glared at the silent Gael.

If Gael truly thought that, he wouldn't be enduring this hardship at the frontlines.

However, Gael didn't voice this response. He knew too well that even if he assured the prince otherwise, Benicio would repeat the same lamentations the next day after more drinking.

As long as the republican government couldn't reclaim Ortona, his friend's deep frustration would not end. And to Gael, the likelihood of the republicans turning the tide seemed as far-fetched as a dream.

"No one in this world believes in my sincere dedication to Ortona. Damn it all..."

As Gael gazed at his friend, now slumped over and asleep with the empty liquor bottle, he sighed and stood up. He gently touched the hilt of Arjuna, his sword, then left Prince Benicio's tent to head towards the camp where the newly arrived mercenary group was stationed.

Despite the late hour, Gael had to finalize the contract details with the new mercenaries.

"I am Justin Astros, the leader of the Astros Mercenary Group."

A tall, muscular man with an extraordinary presence approached Gael with a light, almost playful smile.

"It's an honor to meet the legendary Gael Bertrand, the Eastern Sword Master. It's my first time seeing a Sword Master, and the pressure is indeed immense!"

Justin, the man named, exclaimed with an exaggerated enthusiasm as he circled around Gael.

Gael recognized that Justin's achievements were not common, even for a young leader of a mercenary group.

"Wow! Just being near you makes my body tremble. With such a formidable figure on the front lines, I wonder if there's even a place for us."

Empty flattery, yet he seems eager to prove himself.

Just as Gael began to feel slightly irked, a calm voice came from behind.

"Enough, Justin. That's enough. You're being rude."

"Oh, if I have indeed been rude, I apologize."

Justin quickly corrected his posture and apologized to Gael.

Looking to see who had spoken so bluntly to the leader, Gael saw a surprisingly tall yet obviously young member, looking at Justin with a somewhat disdainful expression.

Gael thought for a moment.

Did I make a mistake in hiring them? They came highly recommended for their skill, but if they rely on a child...

But when Gael's eyes met the boy's, he felt something odd. He sensed that dealing with this boy would be remarkably challenging.

Of course, the boy was nowhere near the level of a Sword Master.

His aura activation was much lower than Justin's, and the slight darkness under his eyes suggested he wasn't in the best of health.

Yet, strangely, Gael felt that the boy posed a far more challenging opponent than the group's leader.

The boy glanced at Gael for a moment and then abruptly left the tent.

Gael watched the direction in which the boy disappeared and found himself asking the leader.

"That boy is....."

"Unfortunately, he's not officially a mercenary. Consider him a guest member who joined us temporarily."

Justin gave Gael a sly smile.

"Isn't he a fascinating fellow, General?"

Even Gael, who had been acclaimed as a prodigy since his youth, recognized that the boy's talent was extraordinary. Under different circumstances, he would have spared no effort to take him as a disciple.

"...Where did that friend learn swordsmanship?"

"That part is truly fascinating..."

Justin scratched his face thoughtfully before answering.

"He claims he's never been formally trained in swordsmanship. It sounds unbelievable, but it seems true. You can see he doesn't use proper sword forms, yet strangely, he wields a sword effectively."

Gael quietly observed the mercenary leader.

The vibrations he felt indicated that Justin was probably telling the truth.

Gael furrowed his brows.

A sword style that defies form and technique.

The legendary realm that Gael's master jokingly mentioned.

Could it be that this boy was independently reaching that level?

"General, shall we proceed with the contract adjustments?"

Justin rubbed his hands, his movements light despite his large frame. Gael nodded and pulled out the contract.

There was no need for excessive speculation. Soon enough, he'd confirm the boy's skill with his own eyes, as they would be working alongside the Astros Mercenary Group.

They began discussing the details.

Soon, Gael received unexpected advice from Justin.

"General, I apologize for saying this upon our first meeting."

Justin looked incredulous as he spoke.

"If you agree so readily, how can we negotiate? We expect some resistance and push accordingly."

"....."

"Do you always end up at a disadvantage like this?"

Gael sensed the vibrations from Justin, confirming the sad truth of his words. Regrettably, it was all true.

He swallowed his pride and decided to delegate contract negotiations to Prince Benicio or another republican leader in the future.

Gael's time with the Astros Mercenary Group lasted only four months. After the short-term contract ended, they left the front due to a change of heart by their sponsor.

However, the impact of this brief association on Gael's future was immense, though he had no inkling of it at the time.

102

Born as the only son of Duke Bertrand, a central noble of Ortona, Gael was sensitive to the movement of aura from a young age.

Even before he formally learned aura cultivation, he already felt the aura flowing around him like air and used it to breathe. When he actually began training, he quickly created three layers of aura, surprising everyone around him.

For young Gael, it was not a big deal.

He had reached the stage where he could not only absorb and accumulate aura in his body but also sensitively feel the aura vibrations from people and living beings around him.

He noticed strong movements from young and healthy people and weak ones from the old and sick. Gael soon realized that these vibrations subtly changed when people spoke or felt strong emotions.

He was destined to become the youngest Sword Master and was praised as a genius comparable to the legendary swordsman Banahas.

"This thieving cat! Where have you hidden my lady's earrings? Won't you confess properly?"

When he was still a child, a theft occurred at the duke's mansion: the duchess's jewelry was stolen.

The main suspect was one of her personal maids, the youngest among them.

"It's not true, Madame Gomez. I really don't know anything about it!"

"So, you didn't steal the earrings? You were the only one who could have touched them!"

"I swear I'm innocent!"

Young Gael felt anxious vibrations from the crying maid in front of the house steward.

Her denial seemed truthful, yet she simultaneously emitted strong vibrations of sincerity while claiming her innocence.

He was confused.

Why? If she stole the earrings, why did she believe she was innocent?

Soon, it was revealed through investigation that she had conspired with a mansion guard to steal the earrings and sell them secretly.

"Please! Please forgive me just this once! My sick mother at home is taking care of my ailing younger sibling! If I am expelled, my sibling won't be able to receive treatment and might die!"

"Take her away, now!"

"Please! You can't do this to me! After all the hard work I have done for the ducal family! Madame Gomez!"

Gael felt the piercing desperation in the vibrations from the maid as she was dragged away by the city guards. Her belief that the ducal family's treatment of her was unjust and overly harsh was genuine.

Gael felt melancholic, absorbing a part of her sorrowful emotions through her vibrations.

Soon after she was imprisoned, rumors spread that her mother and sibling had died of illness. Gael thought it was a tragic turn of events, but as a child, he soon forgot about her.

Months later, the woman, now released from prison, returned to the ducal mansion. She was emaciated, her hair roughly shorn, looking wretched.

She ran towards the mansion guards, eyes filled with resentment.

"It's all your fault! You imprisoned me and ignored my family, you filthy Bertrands! I curse you! I swear, in hell, I will demand the lives of my mother and sibling from you! Aaaaaah!"

Even as the city guards took her away again, she did not stop cursing them. Her eyes filled with venom were so fierce that even the guards momentarily flinched.

Watching from a window inside the mansion, Gael vividly felt the waves of hatred emanating from her. She truly believed the entire situation was the Bertrand family's fault and cursed them wholeheartedly.

Gael, sitting in his room, turned to his nanny Juana, who was busy with her embroidery, and asked, "Juana, was what that woman said true? Is all the misfortune that befell her really our family's fault?"

Nanny Juana scoffed without even looking up from her embroidery. "Of course not, young master. You shouldn't take to heart what such wicked people say. Why should she blame the ducal family when she's the thief? It's clear that she was inherently corrupt, and the Divine punished her justly."

The price of stealing earrings being her mother and sibling's lives seemed too harsh. And why did her family suffer the Divine's punishment instead of her?

Although Gael was curious, he sensed genuine vibrations from Juana. She firmly believed that the maid received the punishment she deserved.

That incident made young Gael realize that most people always speak with some degree of sincerity. It's just that their sincerity might not be the truth or it might change to another sincerity later. And these wrong sincerities are not always the fault of the person speaking them.

Perhaps it was from then that he tried to understand and listen to what people said.

Over time, Gael enrolled in the Royal Academy, where noble offspring typically studied, and there he met Prince Benicio, who would become a lifelong friend.

Compared to his peers, who were barely at a squire's level, Gael already possessed the skills of an intermediate knight when he joined the academy, becoming the envy of all.

Many sought to befriend the young heir of the Duke, the future strongest swordsman of Ortona. Among them was Prince Benicio.

"You, with such talent, should lead our country in the future."

The prince was intelligent and likable, and surprisingly, a supporter of the republic despite being a member of the royal family. He befriended radical republican professors and a minority of noble students, becoming a new focal point of the academy's republican faction.

"Everyone says I turned to the republic because I am the second prince, far from power. But that's not true. I love my homeland. I act purely based on what I think will bring a better future to Ortona."

Gael felt a slight instability in Benicio's vibrations. Part of what Benicio said was not true. Whether it was an outright lie or Benicio himself harbored doubts about his words was unclear.

"Many philosophers have pondered this. Is it right for a country to be controlled solely by an absolute monarch? Look no further than our own country, where the monarch is becoming a puppet of the royalists, and the merchant alliances and noble council are growing into an invincible force beyond the monarch's control."

The young prince, not yet of age, furrowed his brow with an adult-like seriousness.

"What then is a fail-proof nation? Listening to more people, moving the country without mistakes based on the opinions of many, that's a republic. I believe that by realizing the future envisioned by the republicans, Ortona will move in a better direction."

Gael looked at Prince Benicio, who was gazing into the distance with a sparkle in his eyes. The prince's words, filled with dreams of a glorious future for Ortona as the first republic on the continent, resonated with nothing but love for his country and pure truth.

His truth might someday collide with the harsh wall of reality and cease to be true. But for now, the passion Prince Benicio showed was strong and pure enough to inspire everyone in the academy's republican faction.

So, as always, Gael decided to believe in the sincerity of those who spoke their truth before him.

And later, Gael indeed played a significant role in establishing a republic in Ortona and eventually became the last sword of the diminishing republican remnants, pushed to downfall by the royalists allied with foreign forces.

* * *

"This is the end of everything if we don't act now! We must open the gates to Count Castilla immediately!"

"That's an unreasonable demand. Didn't Count Castilla agree to supply us with resources on the condition that we do not retreat from the Andres Plains? We are different from the royalists. We don't use force to open neutral territories."

"That's idealistic, Prince Benicio! Don't you see? If we don't secure the Castilla Fortress right now, the Andres Plains will become the graveyard of the republic!"

"It's impossible! And this isn't about ideals, it's about reality. Do you really think Count Castilla will just watch us reach his fortress?"

"But if we don't secure the fortress..."

An endless debate.

Gael sighed and left the meeting tent.

The Ortona Civil War.

The last remnants of the retreating republicans aimed to seize the Castilla Fortress, known as a natural stronghold, as a pivot for a counterattack.

However, Count Castilla, maintaining surface-level neutrality, didn't want his fertile territory trampled in the civil war. He provided a small amount of military supplies and food on the condition that the republican forces did not retreat from the remote Andres Plains, keeping his gates firmly shut.

It had been almost three months since the republicans set up their position on the Andres Plains.

Stuck between a rock and a hard place, the republican command had been divided into two opposing viewpoints ever since: invade Count Castilla's territory and seize the fortress, or break through the front lines on the plains to escape the defensive position.

To Gael, neither option seemed particularly feasible.

As he walked, idly touching the hilt of Arjuna, a child's voice came from a corner of the mercenary camp.

"So, brother, is Duke Dassiano on our side?"

Gael stopped in his tracks.

The voice belonged to Prince Benicio's young son, Kike. Why was he in the mercenary camp?

Soon, a quiet response followed.

Gael was startled for two reasons upon hearing the conversation.

First, it was rare for a foreign mercenary to speak Ortonan. Even strategic meetings were usually conducted in the imperial common language.

Second, the responses to the young child were remarkably blunt.

"Brother, what about the Marquis of Laquila on the border?"

As Gael listened to their conversation for a while longer, he eventually turned and walked away.

It seemed young Kike, still struggling with the imperial language, had managed to make a friend among the mercenaries. It was somewhat pitiful that their main activity was scrutinizing the list of supporters.

That evening, Gael visited Prince Benicio's tent and asked Kike whom he had been with during the day. The boy responded with a bright smile, "Bart from the Astros Mercenary Group. He knows Ortonan."

Proudly, Kike handed over a crumpled piece of paper, explaining, "I asked him about these people, and he explained everything to me."

Gael unfolded the paper, which had a list of supporters written in a child's scrawled handwriting. It seemed Kike had remembered the conversations of adults and organized them in his own way. The boy, like his father Prince Benicio, was quite bright.

Regrettably, most of the names were crossed out.

The list seemed to reflect the dire situation of the republican remnants, leaving Gael feeling bitter.

"Still, not everything he said is correct. At least Castilla is neutral, Kike."

Pointing to one crossed-out name, Kike tilted his head in confusion.

"Huh? No, General Gael. Bart said it clearly."

Then Kike, looking straight at Gael, stated firmly, a vibration of undeniable truth emanating from him, "Bart said that Castilla is definitely an enemy."

103

[TL/N: Bart... I've heard that name somewhere... ????]

Following that day, Gael often saw Kike, Prince Benicio's son, spending time with Bart, a new acquaintance from the Astros Mercenary Group. Bart was the boy with the extraordinary qualities that Gael had noticed earlier, a guest member who had recently joined the mercenaries.

Kike trailed after the mercenary like a chick following a mother hen, probably because there were no other children in the republican camp, and his father, Prince Benicio, was either busy with strategy meetings or drowned in liquor.

The problem seemed to be that Kike's new friend, despite being younger than most adult mercenaries, acted much older.

"It's no good to let your frustration lead to self-destructive actions."

"Do you know? Sometimes you talk really difficult stuff. I don't always understand what you mean."

"...It means if you're tangled, throwing away your weapon recklessly might cause harm."

The boy sighed as he comforted Kike, sitting on the ground.

Curious about what had happened, Gael approached and saw a deep gash on the child's shin, bleeding profusely – a result of throwing a dagger in frustration, causing it to bounce back and hit his leg.

"Kike, you should go back to your father's tent and get this treated..."

As he was speaking, Gael witnessed something unbelievable. Bart's hand hovered over the wound, and a holy white light emanated from it, healing Kike's injury instantly.

'...Divine power?'

Wasn't this boy supposed to be a swordsman?

While Gael was stunned, Kike seemed unfazed, probably used to such occurrences.

"Thanks, hyung."

Kike dusted off his trousers and thanked Bart before running energetically towards the camp.

"....."

Left alone with the boy, Gael examined him with renewed curiosity. The more he looked, the more the boy seemed like a collection of incongruous elements.

A noble-like wandering mercenary. An empire-born Ortonan speaker. A swordsman with divine power.

Gael couldn't help but ask.

"Your skill seems better than the medical priests in the camp. Why didn't you become a priest?"

Bart, who had been looking at Gael with an unreadable expression, replied with a question of his own.

"The staff here could use your talent in diplomacy. Why didn't you become a scholar?"

Bart was referring to the occasional external propaganda documents Gael had written, replacing the demoralized staff. Gael himself thought he had done quite well.

But still, asking a swordsman and the youngest Sword Master in the continent why he chose the sword?

"...You've read those documents?"

"I have. They were eloquent. If the situation of the republicans was even slightly better, they might have inspired many from the royalist side to switch allegiances."

"....."

In other words, the republic's situation was so dire that, despite the eloquence, no one was swayed.

"Quite a pessimistic view. We don't know how things will turn out yet."

"Probably no surprises, General. Everyone knows the facts."

"But many still sympathize with the republic's cause. Isn't your Astros Mercenary Group participating in the war with the support of Count Milo?"

"Count Milo is just playing his part. Do you really think he doesn't know when to withdraw?"

Gael recalled the boy's words to Kike. Count Milo was on the side of the merchant alliance.

A bitter smile crossed Gael's face. He had suspected as much.

"Indeed. Anyway, I appreciate the heads-up. I'll keep it in mind for the future."

The boy then looked at Gael, observing him silently for a moment before casually placing a hand on the shoulder of the Sword Master.

".....!"

Gael was taken aback by his boldness.

The reason Gael let the boy continue was probably due to a certain confidence that he could respond to any sudden event.

The boy's actions felt so natural and effortless.

Then, bright light beams erupted from Bart's hand, enveloping Gael.

Instantly, minor headaches and pains disappeared, and his muscles relaxed refreshingly.

For Gael, who hadn't had much to do with injuries since becoming an aura user, it was a novel experience.

'Is this what divine power feels like?'

After that day, Gael realized his own physical condition had deteriorated significantly. Engulfed in relentless duties, both on the front lines and in managing some of the staff's workload, even his Sword Master's stamina was being pushed to its limits.

Bart withdrew his hand and, turning away, commented, "You're transforming the excessive pressure into passion for the republic, mistaking it as motivation. No matter how much you try to compensate, your aura can't reach its potential under such strain."

"...What do you mean?"

Gael asked, confused.

Kike's words had at least one thing right: it was hard to understand what the boy meant.

Without turning back, Bart replied with a voice that felt coldly distant, "It means you're being foolishly stubborn."

Gael was at a loss for words, taken aback by the unexpected personal attack.

Yet, from the boy's departing back, he sensed undeniable vibrations of sincerity.

* * *

Arrows rained down from all directions, accompanied by despair-filled screams.

The enemy, holding the high ground, relentlessly showered arrows, leaving the republicans' archers scrambling for cover rather than returning fire.

"Weren't they supposed to be retreating for supplies!"

Veteran General Gaspar of the republicans shouted in despair.

The republican forces were falling, one by one, to the senseless attack.

A miscalculation had been made following a scout's report that the enemy's main force was preparing to retreat. Despite the geographical disadvantage, the republicans had eagerly advanced with most of their right-wing forces.

Had they faced the enemy near the Castilla Fortress, they would have avoided such casualties.

But Count Castilla had no intention of offering the fortress to the republic's remnants. He strictly controlled the gates, wary of the republicans.

Eventually, the republicans had to set up their position on the open plains, constantly fending off attacks from the royalist army.

Exhausted by the endless attrition, their attempt at a forced breakthrough was almost inevitable.

"General Gaspar!"

A knight, using a small cart for cover, dashed towards the veteran knight Gaspar during a brief lull in the arrow storm.

"We can't hold on like this! We need to retreat now!"

"Where to? Where can we retreat?"

The veteran knight's question made the other knight pause and look towards the southern plains.

The enemy's main force, which they thought was retreating for supplies, had appeared behind them. Their right wing was now completely cut off from the central camp.

Drum beats echoed, and the royalist cavalry, full of morale, charged towards them.

General Gaspar's forces had unwittingly walked into a trap, becoming the anvil for the enemy's hammer.

The veteran knight gritted his teeth.

"Our only chance is to break through the less defended high ground ahead! Otherwise, we will be annihilated!"

"But..."

"Hold on a little longer! Advance even a step more towards the high ground! He will soon come to our aid!"

The knight's shaky gaze steadied at the old general's words. He nodded firmly and ran back to reorganize the archers.

Gael Bertrand.

The reason the republicans could hold their ground on the Andres Plains despite the unfavorable odds was due to one factor: the presence of the last sword of the republic.

He always rushed to the weakest point on the front lines, his mere presence deterring the enemy.

As expected, soon there was a disturbance at the rear of the enemy cavalry, just as they were about to collide with Gaspar's right-wing forces.

With a flash, a long, blue aura blade shimmered, creating wave-like ripples.

"...General Gael!"

The enemy cavalry slowed noticeably. They hesitated, unsure whether to continue their charge towards the isolated republican forces or to turn back and counter the Sword Master's assault.

Meanwhile, the icy blue sword blade began to slaughter the enemy cavalry from the rear. The swift strikes were so swift that not even screams were heard.

Amidst the chaos of the horses, the Sword Master plowed through in a straight line, cutting down enemies on both sides and slashing through the center of the cavalry.

Finally, a knight with a dignified demeanor arrived in front of General Gaspar, his chest split open.

The greatest swordsman of the East.

After slashing through the enemy cavalry without even breaking his breath, it was clear that Gael was a monster in combat.

"General Gaspar."

Relieved to have narrowly escaped annihilation, the old general turned to Gael as he spoke calmly.

"The scout who brought the information about the enemy's retreat was a spy from Castilla. I've just executed him and am on my way back from reorganizing the central camp."

"Count Castilla, that man..."

Gaspar's eyes blazed with fury.

He should have suspected from the moment the count locked down his territory. Count Castilla had sided with the royalists. He appeased them with small supplies while disrupting their intelligence, hoping for their demise in the Andres Plains!

Gael watched the trembling old general and then gave an order.

"Regroup the troops. A detachment from the center will soon engage the cavalry. We'll use this opportunity to advance towards the high ground."

His silver sword, Arjuna, remained unblemished by blood.

Gaspar gazed at the sword, realizing something. Gael had an uncanny ability to identify spies, almost as if he could read people's minds.

"Ha ha ha ha!"

Suddenly, a boisterous laugh echoed from afar.

The royalist cavalry, which had hesitated upon spotting the Sword Master, was now thrown into chaos again by the central detachment that had followed Gael.

The cavalry formation collapsed in an instant.

Amidst the chaos, a large man wielding a bastard sword appeared, gleefully hammering into the cavalry. Most of the members of this new detachment were from a small mercenary group recently hired by one of their supporters.

Justin, the leader of the Astros Mercenary Group, shouted enthusiastically, "Attack, everyone! This is beyond our contract! No matter the cost, our generous General Gael won't be stingy!"

"Generous..."

As Gaspar looked at Gael with a dumbfounded expression, Gael subtly averted his gaze.

[TL/N: Gale is changed to Gale. I forgot that the name Gale was first mentioned in Chapter 97]

In Ortona, there exists a unique aura cultivation technique called [Henesys]. It is a specialized practice developed for the Henesys longsword, which features a blade not so short in length and a hilt that extends about two-thirds the length of the blade.

The Henesys longsword is a beautiful weapon, possessing both the advantages of a two-handed sword and a spear. With its delicately patterned blade, ornate guard, and pommel, some mistook it for merely a decorative sword for the nobility.

However, once one witnesses its broad attack range comparable to a spear, the speed with which it can be wielded, and the ferocious power of its jagged blade tearing through flesh, they would never again dare to dismiss it as a mere ceremonial weapon.

The pinnacle of the Henesys technique was now being starkly displayed on the Andres Plains.

Swoosh!

With the long blade already formidable, a blue aura blade, extending two more feet, swiftly drew circles in the air. Two charging cavalymen were cut in half along with their horses and tumbled to the ground.

General Gale, having judged that he was more effective against the cavalry, charged towards them again.

"Eek!"

The surrounding cavalymen, startled, quickly turned their horses.

They desperately tried to distance themselves from the rampaging Sword Master, knowing well that getting close meant being sliced like a dummy in a practice yard.

Even as the elite cavalry of the royalist faction, they dared not venture within Gale's striking range.

But the sword, maintaining its swift momentum, sliced through the air in a large 'eight' pattern. Several cavalymen, failing to escape, were cleaved diagonally and fell to the ground.

Hahaha! A cloud of dust rose in the air.

"Whew, he really is a monster," muttered Captain Justin of the mercenaries, leading a separate unit and swinging his sword vigorously, as he whistled.

A man who seemed gentle and well-mannered transformed into an unstoppable force once he drew his sword.

Just the mere presence of Gale's aura caused the enemy to tremble and fail to respond adequately. While their unit methodically took down the enemies, the Sword Master alone was dispatching cavalymen at a far greater rate.

Justin pushed up the visor of his sallet, glancing sideways, specifically at the boy swinging his sword emotionlessly beside him.

"Bart, why do you keep making that face? Are you still unhappy about accepting this assignment?"

The boy, who had been reluctant to participate in this civil war from the start and was notably taciturn, appeared increasingly gloomy. Justin, who had practically coerced him into joining, was concerned.

The boy, gazing at the swirling blue aura in the distance, replied without looking at Justin.

"It's a task with an inevitable end. These kinds of things never leave a good aftertaste."

"Well, that's..."

The captain trailed off, then shrugged his shoulders and joked with an exaggerated expression.

"That's for our employers to worry about, not you, right?"

"..."

Without responding, the boy clicked down the visor of his sallet. A strange silver light began to glow through the thin visor.

Noticing the ominous aura, a bewildered Justin asked,

"What are you about to do?"

"End this quickly."

"What?"

"...I'm sorry."

The boy, after gently stroking the neck of his horse enveloped in a white light, suddenly kicked the horse's side before Justin could say anything more. Hahaha!

"Hey, wait!"

The mercenary captain's urgent cry echoed behind him as the boy galloped into the midst of the chaotic battle. His horse skillfully avoided the tangled mass of cavalry.

Swoosh. Every now and then, he swung his sword without hesitation at a cavalryman blocking his path.

Despite not being a proper sword technique, his movements were strangely efficient and even seemed meticulous. After spraying several fountains of blood, the boy had soon reached the right flank of the republican remnants.

General Gale, who was swinging his blue aura blade, seemed to glance at him. The boy, riding at full speed, was now charging toward the enemy's stockade, where a rain of arrows poured down.

"Look... Look at that!"

The republican soldiers, who had managed to regroup with the support of the Sword Master but were still unable to advance, were wide-eyed with astonishment.

General Gaspar, unaware, stood up from behind his cover and shouted.

"...It's dangerous!"

Amid the shower of arrows, the boy, unblinkingly, drew another sword tied to the saddle with his left hand. Holding a sword in each hand, he then...

Whoosh.

Somehow, he burst into the air from atop his horse at an incredible speed.

An unreal leap, soaring well above the height of the enemy's stockade.

People from both the republican and royalist camps gaped at the sight, a height impossible for an ordinary human to reach.

Hahaha!

Meanwhile, amidst the arrow rain, the horse, turned into a pincushion, fell with a pitiful cry.

The boy was just as exposed to the arrows, yet miraculously, he was not hit even once while suspended in the air. Of course, the only one who truly understood what was happening around him was Gale.

Whoosh. A wind from somewhere wrapped and swirled around the boy's body. This fierce wind deflected most of the arrows to the side. The few that came straight were blocked by the white sword barrier created by the swords in his hands.

"Shoot... Shoot him!"

The enemy commander, in a trembling voice, urged his archers. They quickly drew their bows, aiming at the boy floating in the air.

Though he had been lucky to dodge the arrows so far, it seemed impossible to avoid all the arrows in a concentrated volley.

Then, something astonishing happened. The boy, who was expected to be momentarily immobilized in mid-air and become an easy target, suddenly shot forward at an incredible speed, landing right in the middle of the enemy lines. It happened before the archers could even take aim.

"What, what?"

While the enemy commander gaped at this scene, the boy landed softly in the midst of the camp, swirling with the wind.

Woosh! The sword in his right hand, now wrapped in a faint aura, flew swiftly towards the middle of the stockade.

The spinning sword, which didn't seem to be aimed precisely, made a thud as it embedded itself in the center of the stockade. Then, quivering for a moment, it...

Cling! Shards of sharp metal scattered in all directions. Several archers, caught off guard, were swept up in the explosion.

"Aaaah!"

"My eyes!"

An unexpected chaos ensued among the archer unit.

The sword had exploded? Even seeing it with their own eyes, the commanders blinked in disbelief.

Whoosh. The boy, leaping from the ground again, was suddenly right in front of the enemy commander.

"What...!"

And that became his last utterance.

Before the enemy commander could even understand what was happening, his head and torso were severed, tumbling to the ground. All of this happened in the blink of an eye.

"Gasp!"

"Mo, monster...!"

The soldiers, staring dumbfounded at the scene, turned pale and hesitantly stepped back from the boy. Some, who had glimpsed his silver inner light through the visor, even staggered and sat down on the ground.

The fear of the boy, who demonstrated incredible martial prowess as if he was not human, froze the entire camp.

In the enemy's camp, which had diverted most of its forces to attack the republicans from behind, only a few archers and not many infantrymen remained.

And now, having lost their commander in such a hollow manner, their morale completely plummeted.

The boy, after coolly surveying the scene, picked up the severed head of the enemy leader and began walking slowly towards the stockade.

Swoosh.

Something round suddenly flew towards the republican camp and dropped. It happened right after the shower of arrows ceased when the boy invaded the enemy lines, leaving the republicans puzzled as they scrutinized the enemy stockade.

Startled, they realized it was a severed head, helmet and all.

Through the opened visor, General Gaspar recognized the face.

That head was...

"...General Alonso!"

The republican camp began to stir.

The enemy commander's head! How did it suddenly...?

But the experienced General Gaspar realized that this was an unprecedented opportunity. He drew his sword, leapt from his cover, and shouted.

"The enemy commander's head has fallen! Charge into their lines, everyone!"

"Ch... Charge! Charge!"

Following him, other knights encouraged the soldiers and joined in.

Waaaaaaah! The entire unit cried out and began to rush towards the high ground.

Thus, no more arrows rained down until the republicans reached the stockade, and they easily occupied the enemy position, as if all their previous struggles were a lie.

* * *

"This battle truly owes much to your Astros Mercenary Group. Thanks to you, we were able to significantly reduce our casualties. I must express my gratitude."

Gale personally visited the mercenary corps' camp to meet with Captain Justin. The urgent nature of their recruitment meant that proper compensation had not yet been discussed.

He looked a bit tired. He had just come from a strategy meeting, wrestling with republican officials who were furiously insisting on immediately attacking Count Castilla's domain.

Of course, the meeting concluded with the decision that an attack with the current forces would be impractical.

Though the count who had deceived them was detestable, there was no need to unnecessarily extend the frontline. Moreover, even if they were to successfully capture the Castilla fortress, turning the intact Castilla territory into a wasteland would provide a pretext for other neutral nobles to side with the royalist faction.

"General, when you think about it, our mercenary group always takes on the most dangerous battles, doesn't it? Perhaps some additional hazard pay would be justified..."

Despite bluntly calling Gale an exploiter, this cheeky captain made a brazen demand.

Gale felt a surge of irritation, but after some thought, he realized there was some merit to the captain's words. It seemed the mercenary leader genuinely believed they deserved more compensation.

As Gale pondered, a calm voice came from beside him.

"Justin, you should know when to stop."

Mercenary Bart.

Always competing with the captain, his prowess today clearly surpassed that of his leader. His abilities were hard to believe for someone who had not even reached adulthood.

Gale still vividly remembered the boy's mysterious movements as he shot into the enemy lines. It was fair to say he contributed the most in this battle.

"No, but think about how much we contributed in today's fight! We deserve a fair reward for our efforts, don't we?"

The captain grumbled with a frown, but soon shut up at the boy's following remark.

"Then first, shouldn't we have a more in-depth discussion about my rightful share within the mercenary corps?"

"..."

Hmm. Justin, sweating, hesitantly spoke to Gale.

"...General, let's forget about the hazard pay increase."

Was he implying that the amount they were skimming from the boy was greater than the additional hazard pay!

Gale looked at the boy named Bart with newfound surprise.

Despite his young age, he was remarkably mature, yet here was another exploiter like himself. Noticing something in Gale's gaze, the boy twitched his eyebrows, prompting Gale to quickly turn back to Justin.

He discussed compensation with the now subdued captain for a while. Finally agreeing on a satisfactory amount, Gale was about to leave, fatigued, when he heard the boy's sudden question.

"How long do you plan to continue these meaningless fights?"

For the first time, the usually reticent boy initiated a conversation with him. Taken aback by the unexpected question, Gale turned around to find the boy's eyes colder than ever.

"Do you intend to become a martyr for the republican cause?"

A martyr of the republic.

This was a rather intense expression to use in front of the republic's last sword. It blatantly revealed the belief that, no matter the effort, the republican camp was ultimately doomed to defeat.

Startled by the boy's sudden remark, it was Justin who looked at him in shock.

However, instead of getting angry, Gale wore a bitter smile. In the end, the boy's words accurately pierced through the currents of the time.

After the establishment of the republic in central Ortona, there was some initial chaos, but Ortona soon regained stability.

For about two years, the new government successfully governed, and their conciliation efforts towards the local nobles were very smooth. It was unlikely that a civil war would ignite so easily just from the remaining royalists' minor provocations.

There were other unseen hands in Ortona's civil war, hoping for the republic's downfall.

Hands powerful enough to sway the powers and capital of the continent.

Now, even if a distinguished Sword Master were to fight valiantly, it was unlikely to change the outcome. It's no wonder that the astute Prince Benicio, deeply despaired, was squandering his days in alcohol.

"Officially, it is said that the Brittanian army joined the war at the request of the King of Ortona."

Gale silently listened to the boy's calm voice.

As he said, after the establishment of the republic, the exiled King of Ortona promised Brittany a part of the western territory in return for their support. This was the same territory ceded to Ortona by Brittany a hundred years ago.

A sufficient pretext for the Brittanian royal family to get actively involved.

"However, it was the Delcross Holy Empire that mediated the territorial cession a hundred years ago. There's a high likelihood that they are involved in this return of land too."

But that's not all. The Ortona Merchant Coalition was also supporting the royalists with massive capital.

With the royalists' tacit approval, part of the southern region of Ortona, including the capital, was to be declared an independent free trade zone. Naturally, this free trade zone would be adjacent to Delcross.

"While the merchant coalition is ostensibly led by Young Master Asein, he is, in fact, a third party, ultimately having to maneuver with Delcross in the middle. If it were not the empire, there would be no need for him to actively intervene."

Gale's face had hardened. The boy, facing him, calmly revealed the truth Gale never wanted to hear.

"Behind all this is the Delcross Empire, General."

The Delcross Holy Empire, the millennium-old sanctuary.

The land ruled by the continent's most powerful absolute monarch, and a place that despised the Ortona republic more than anyone else.

No matter how hard Gale tried, he could never defy the flow created by this unseen hand of the continent.

That's why the boy called it a meaningless fight. If Delcross decided to eliminate the republic, it was already an unchangeable outcome.

Realizing his vague suspicions confirmed by an unexpected source, Gale felt an odd calm settle in his heart.

"...Such a young friend yet with such remarkable insight."

How long will this fight continue?

Until Prince Benicio, the spiritual leader and head of the republican remnants, makes a decision.

Will he become a martyr for the republic?

Of course, he is the republic's last sword. He must become the complete symbol of the republic.

So that his death signifies the complete downfall of the republic in the eyes of the empire.

"You may see all this as meaningless flailing. But sometimes, even knowing the truth, one must silently endure."

Gale was well aware of how his end would come. Seeing the faint smile on his face, the boy's eyes flickered momentarily.

"Now, now. How about we stop this here? You've worked hard today, General. You should go back and rest."

Unable to bear the increasingly heavy atmosphere, Justin butted in, making a fuss.

"And tomorrow, we'll meet with a fresh mind to discuss the hazard pay again."

Gale blinked.

Hazard pay? Hadn't that been already given up?

Justin's face, usually appearing carefree, suddenly turned serious.

"We're talking about the Holy Empire joining hands with the royalists. The risk has doubled, so it's only logical to renegotiate the hazard pay from scratch."

Really? As Gale looked puzzled, the boy glared at Captain Justin with cold eyes.

"Does it matter who intervenes? How does that change the outcome? What's so obvious about that? Not everything picked up randomly makes sense."

"Huh? Hey... aren't you being too harsh? Even if temporarily, you are part of the Astros Mercenary Group! Why do you always side with the General?"

Justin seemed genuinely aggrieved, prompting Gale to unwittingly support him.

"Right. On reflection, there is some sense in what the captain says. At least he spoke honestly. So let's discuss it calmly tomorrow."

But the boy remained firm.

"Do you believe in his sincerity? He's someone who would distort even his own memories and feelings for a purpose."

"Wow... Bart, are you really doing this?"

Justin trembled with a sense of betrayal.

Gale watched helplessly as the two bickered, only managing to return to his own camp after unexpectedly receiving some divine power from the boy.

"Bart, isn't this unlike you recently?"

After Gale left the mercenary camp, Justin, who had been watching the direction Gale disappeared into, turned to the boy.

"..."

The boy didn't respond, only slightly furrowing his brow.

He too was aware that recently his behavior was quite different from his usual self.

Originally, he would have just lent his strength to the mercenary corps as needed, never expecting to take the lead and behead the enemy commander. Moreover, he even used his rarely utilized divine power in front of others, just because General Gale looked extremely tired.

Above all,

Why did he ask and interfere in so many things concerning General Gale's future? What did it have to do with him?

Yet, for some reason, the boy found himself greatly concerned about General Gale.

This man was the strongest swordsman in the east. Despite being an adult stronger than anyone, the boy oddly felt a vague urge to help him. He couldn't understand why.

Well, there wouldn't be many days left to feel this strange sensation anyway.

"The civil war is dragging on longer than expected. Soon, the Merchant Coalition will start adjusting the capital they're putting in."

Justin's eyes widened in response.

"What does that mean?"

"It means we should start looking for other contracts."

The boy waved his hand dismissively and turned towards the inside of the tent.

The territory of Ortona was already ripe enough.

All that remained was to tear and share the soft flesh of the fruit.

Not long after the boy's prediction, reality caught up. Count Milo, who had been employing and supporting the Astros Mercenary Group, suddenly decided to cease his patronage. With the frontlines unexpectedly holding firm, it was likely that Young Master Asein, Count Milo's backer, had pressured him.

Although they received a response that another mercenary corps would be sent soon, Gale felt that there would be no more support from that quarter.

The day before the Astros Mercenary Group withdrew, Captain Justin visited Gale and handed him a small box.

"It has been an honor to work with you, General. This is a small gift we offer only to our special clients."

Inside the box was a gem no bigger than a fingernail.

It looked like an ordinary, nameless gem, but when it caught the sunlight, it emitted a surprisingly brilliant light.

"...What is this used for?"

"It's an amulet for good luck. They say it relieves fatigue if you carry it."

".....?"

It sounded like something a heretic would say.

Gale passed it off without much thought, but in less than a day, he realized the captain's words were true. After carelessly putting the box in his pocket and walking around, his chronic fatigue began to noticeably decrease.

Sensitive to aura and the energy around him, Gale could feel that the effect was indeed coming from the amulet. It was somewhat similar to the feeling of receiving divine power.

Soon, the gem found its place at the end of the sheath of his sword, Arjuna.

The Astros Mercenary Group left the frontline as swiftly as they had arrived, like the wind.

After that, Gale maintained the front alone, without any additional mercenaries, and managed to hold out for about six more months.

* * *

He blocks the incoming arrows and parries swords.

Dodging thrusting spears, he cuts down one enemy after another in quick succession.

Arjuna, no longer flowing with aura, had become so dull that it was not cutting but tearing through the flesh of the enemies.

His vision blurred momentarily before clearing again.

Focus, focus!

It had been a long time since his aura had been depleted. Gale, hardly having a moment to breathe, forced his barely responsive arm to swing.

He never thought there would come a day when he felt Arjuna heavy in his hand.

He parries. Dodges. Thrusts. Cuts.

Movements that seemed to go on forever, repeating in what felt like an endlessly long duration, suddenly ceased. Gale realized that the barrage of arrows had stopped. He paused and looked around, noticing the silence.

He was the only one left standing in the republican camp.

Several knights in full plate armor surrounded him. They appeared to be a specialized unit with long shields and sharply pointed spears, a formidable sight. Gale, with his dulled sword and no aura, probably couldn't break through their formation or pierce their armor.

Gale sensed the end was near.

"Indeed, you live up to your reputation as the finest swordsman in the east, General Gale," said a figure stepping forward, presumably the leader. He towered a head taller than the other hefty knights.

"With due respect, it's remarkable that even the combined forces of the royalist coalition took five days to reach you..."

Five days. He had held out longer than expected.

By now, the group he had diverted should have had enough time to cross the border and escape far away.

Finally, Gale relaxed his body and let his sword arm drop.

"...And you are?"

"I am Syllus Agen, commander of the 3rd Knights Division of the Delcross Holy Empire's personal guard. I was dispatched here especially for you. It's a pity to end your life this way."

So he was indeed no ordinary knight, but a division commander.

The style of the armor and spears had seemed slightly unfamiliar; he hadn't expected a direct intervention from Delcross.

Then, spears flew towards Gale from all sides.

He reflexively moved, but it was impossible to dodge every spear coming at him from every direction.

Crack.

The sound of spears piercing flesh echoed loudly, as if right next to his ear.

His body, utterly depleted, quickly drained the remainder of his life.

As Syllus Agen caught the slipping Arjuna from Gale's hand, he whispered to him.

"I will remember your valor. Rest in peace."

Thus, Gale, the last sword of the republic, met his end on the Andres Plains.

As he slowly closed his eyes, it seemed like he heard something cracking inside his head.

He didn't fully remember what happened afterward.

All he retained was a vague feeling that his soul, just after death, was wrapped in a blinding white light, and it felt incredibly comforting.

It also seemed like someone gently stroked his head, as one would do to a child.

[Was it necessary to hold on so stubbornly?]

A question that seemed slightly reproachful.

Gale felt an inexplicable apology to this unknown entity.

But what could he do? Unskilled in taking the easy way out, he knew no other way to live.

With a sigh-like presence, the voice then said to him,

[You've worked hard, my son.]

Son?

Before he could ponder over it, his consciousness flickered out with those words, and everything turned dark.

* * *

He thought everything had ended.

But unexpectedly, he was reborn as a Delcross native.

And not just anyone, but the first prince of the Delcross Imperial Family, the root cause of all the turmoil.

'...How am I supposed to live now?'

A deep contemplation was etched on the face of the young child with the neat features.

[TL/N: I'm not really sure why Logan is mentioned as the 1st prince here when in Chapter 1, he was mentioned as the 2nd Prince right off the bat. My good guess is that he's the first imperial heir found by Nate?]

Archbishop Caplan's only daughter fell pregnant on her study abroad, without a father for the child!

Caplan was speechless with shock upon hearing this thunderbolt-like news.

His daughter Tatiana had been beautiful and intelligent since childhood, carrying all of his hopes.

Although she lacked divine power to become a high priest, he believed she could at least secure an administrative position of influence. Hence, he had sent her to a university in Brittany at great expense.

She was still so young.

Instead of studying as she was supposed to,

She was involved in a romantic affair.

And now pregnant?

He suppressed his rage, holding his head in his hands, but his daughter returned, visibly pregnant and unapologetically proud.

"I never thought I would meet him again in my lifetime. To bear his child is like a dream come true, Father."

Is this what you say to a father who sent his only daughter abroad and got betrayed!

Considering his social status and dignity, he wanted to disown her immediately, but seeing the happiness in Tatiana's blue eyes, it was clear that no amount of fuss would make a difference.

'...First, I have to find that damned man. Find and kill him!'

Caplan's eyes blazed with rage towards the man who threw his daughter's future into the gutter.

Until he heard the identity of the child's father.

"Nathaniel, the prince...? Are you certain of this?"

The 3rd Prince had been missing for years, and everyone presumed him dead. Wasn't he also thought to be infertile?

But Tatiana was adamant.

"I cannot mistake him. I have admired him since I was a child."

"But wasn't he at least three years younger than you? If it's him, he would be only seventeen now..."

"....."

Perhaps the real problem had been his daughter all along.

Stunned by the unexpected turn of events, Caplan soon had a change of thought.

At the moment, the capital was in a fierce underground struggle between the 1st Prince and Princess and the 2nd Prince. Princess Josephina's influence was questionable, and there were rumors about Prince Brayden meeting with strange people.

Archbishop Caplan had been considering Prince Cameron, the 1st Prince, as the likely next Holy Emperor. But what if the 3rd Prince entered this equation?

If he could form a new power base around himself and elevate him to the Holy Emperor.

And his daughter was carrying the 3rd Prince's child.

Caplan, a cleric with unusual political acumen and ambition, began to put his plans into motion. He discreetly started tracking down the 3rd Prince and quietly expanded his influence.

Then, on the day Tatiana gave birth to a healthy boy named Logan,

Caplan realized, surrounded by a bright aura of blessings, that his grandson was born with an extraordinarily strong divine power.

The boy showed remarkable talent and intelligence as he grew.

His innate dignity and cleverness.

His grandson was destined to be the crown prince!

Caplan watched Logan with fondness, his eyes gleaming with undeniable ambition.

What he didn't realize was what thoughts were running through his grandson's small head.

'...Why was I given another life? What is the meaning of this life?'

An age when other children would still be nursing, the neat and pretty-faced child was pondering these deep questions while spooning baby food on his own.

* * *

Logan was somewhat aware of his past life from the moment he was born.

It was only the physical limitations of a newborn that impeded him; he would eat, attempt to ponder a bit, and then be overcome by sleepiness, leading to a cycle of eating and sleeping.

He began to seriously contemplate his existence once he was able to control his body to some extent.

Realizing he had been reincarnated as a Delcrossan, he was initially in shock. It was disconcerting enough to be given a new life, but why in Delcross of all places?

Moreover, his new body was equally bewildering.

He had been called a rare genius in his time as Gale, but this new body was almost perfectly optimized for cultivating aura, with an exceptionally high affinity for it. So much so that even as a baby, simply eating and sleeping accumulated aura.

Secretly meditating away from his mother and the servants, Logan wondered:

His mother, Tatiana, and his maternal grandfather, Archbishop Caplan, seemed to have average aura affinity. That meant he likely inherited it from his father's side, but who exactly was his biological father?

The question was soon answered.

Before Logan turned four, tumultuous news spread through the capital: a new Holy Emperor had ascended in Delcross.

Then, his mother and grandfather took him by the hand and led him somewhere.

"Where are we going, Mother?"

To Logan's query, his mother, Tatiana, responded with a captivating smile.

"My proud son Logan, we are finally going to meet Him."

Him?

"Nathaniel Klein. The new Holy Emperor of Delcross, and your father, Logan."

The child's face paled.

His father was the Holy Emperor of Delcross?

Logan wanted to deny this reality, but the majestic and ornate building they arrived at was undoubtedly the imperial palace. Standing before the Emperor, Logan was so shocked he felt his soul might leave his body.

In the grand hall of the enormous palace, a young man with a refined face sitting on the throne, gazing down at Logan and his group, was shockingly a familiar figure.

'...Bart!'

Though taller and more mature than the boy in his memories, it was impossible for Logan not to recognize that unforgettable young man.

– The founding principle of Delcross is to realize the Kingdom of God on Earth through His proxy. They cannot accept anything other than the governance by a single Holy Emperor.

The calm boy who had explained the situation in Delcross to Gale in a matter-of-fact tone.

– Sending cardinals to manage the internal affairs of other countries is also based on the principle of 'complete governance by God's proxy.' Therefore, the moment they recognize a republican government, the empire would lose its foundation for intervention and its very purpose.

The one who had unhesitatingly labeled Delcross as the cause of all the tragedies in his homeland Ortona and an impediment to the continent's progress.

– If a true republican government is to flourish in this land, Delcross must inevitably fall first.

Now, that boy sat as the new Holy Emperor of Delcross, confidently presiding over numerous high priests and paladins.

Confusion, betrayal, and sorrow.

A whirlwind of negative emotions swept through Logan's small mind in an instant.

As the child stood there, lost for words, his grandfather and mother seemed to think he was overwhelmed by the grandeur of the imperial palace.

"Come on, Logan. Why aren't you greeting your father, the Holy Emperor?"

"....."

"Ah, my apologies, Your Majesty. He is not usually like this..."

But there was no response from the Emperor either. Bart's gray eyes were slightly widened, quietly meeting Logan's gaze.

In his inexplicable silence, Archbishop Caplan and Tatiana's faces began to harden. Then, the Holy Emperor slowly rose from his throne and approached them, still maintaining eye contact with Logan.

For a moment, a peculiar silver glow seemed to pass through his eyes.

He came up to Logan, knelt on one knee, and looked down at the child for a moment.

"...You must have had a hard journey getting here."

Finally speaking, the Holy Emperor's voice was low and subdued. He then smiled faintly at the child.

"Logan."

This faint warmth felt incredibly tender, and Logan felt a sudden urge to cry.

* * *

Logan was brought into the Blue Rose Labyrinth.

Along with his half-brother Morres.

And as the shock of meeting the Holy Emperor for the first time subsided, the child fell into a new dilemma.

'...How am I supposed to live now?'

He had become a prince of the enemy nation.

The culprit behind the fall of the republican government, the instigator of the civil war, and ultimately, the one who tore apart his homeland.

The first prince of that empire.

But again, his bad habit kicked in; he somewhat understood why Delcross manipulated continental politics to maintain its empire.

So, he didn't think about destroying Delcross, or about seeking revenge by annihilating the Holy Emperor's family in the name of 'vengeance for his homeland.'

As time passed, Logan also came to understand Bart's situation.

He had heard that Bart had been facing assassination threats from a young age and ended up wandering the continent alone. Then, in a tumultuous situation with the previous Emperor and his siblings dead and the capital being infiltrated by demonic beings, Bart hurriedly ascended to the throne to rectify the situation.

'...Then, it can't be helped.'

The child frowned deeply in contemplation.

Logan, who quickly understood everyone's perspective, found himself unable to blame anyone.

He couldn't seek revenge against Delcross or the imperial family.

But living as a proud prince in his second life was complicated by the deep entanglement of his previous life's downfall and his own death.

'What am I supposed to do...'

He groaned softly, clutching his head.

Fortunately, Logan's worries didn't last long due to the frequent troubles caused by someone in the Blue Rose Labyrinth.

"Waaaah!"

"Kyaaaah! Prince Morres!"

"Call a doctor! No, bring a priest quickly!"

In the Blue Rose Labyrinth, Morres's cries and the servants' screams were incessant.

What's the problem with this child?

If he's going to cry out in pain anyway, why does he keep jumping from high places?

His accidents were so extravagant that Morres's mother, the 1st Queen, fled to Asein, and the Holy Emperor had to move his office to the Blue Rose Labyrinth. Logan, who had been precocious even in his previous life as Gale, couldn't understand Morres at all.

And then there was his half-brother, big and bumbling in everything he did.

"Uh, where the mind goes... the aura..."

"....."

"Over the vast void... thoughts... I mean..."

Ah, frustrating. Was his name Masain?

Why does everything this brother do seem so clumsy, causing more stress to the observer than to himself? And he also seemed somewhat dispirited, which was concerning.

Before he knew it, Logan found himself following Masain around, taking care of him as part of his daily routine.

This was a level of busyness Gale, who had been an only child in his past life, couldn't have imagined.

In the midst of this chaos, Logan found himself sitting in a makeshift office in the Azure Rose Labyrinth, picking up walnuts with them. In front of them, the Holy Emperor, his father, was cracking walnuts with his beloved sword.

Was this man always like this?

"Dad (Appa-mama), spin me! Spin!"

Morres, tired of eating walnuts, stood in front of the Holy Emperor with his arms spread.

There was a moment of hesitation, perhaps worrying about spoiling the child, but the Emperor sighed and tossed the child up into the air.

Kyahaha!

Suddenly, Morres, enveloped in a gust of wind, floated gently down and fell into the Emperor's arms.

Logan was always surprised to see this, as his sensitive senses could feel that the wind was a manifestation of fluctuating aura.

He had been amazed by his own affinity for aura when he first felt its flow in Logan's body. But it was nothing compared to his father, the Holy Emperor.

Even on the battlefields of Ortona, he had felt an extraordinary mastery of aura, but now, it seemed as if the Holy Emperor's body itself had become one with aura. How had he reached such a formidable level in just a few years?

"Dad! Spin! Spin again!"

Morres clamored, and the Holy Emperor lifted him into the air again. He seemed cold but was surprisingly weak to a child's tantrums.

They repeated this action a few more times.

As Logan watched them blankly, the Holy Emperor suddenly turned to him.

"What about you, Logan?"

"...Yes?"

"Do you want to try it?"

Yes? For a moment, Logan didn't understand and just blinked in confusion, but soon he found himself flying through the air along with Morres.

What?

Whoosh. A comforting aura of wind wrapped around his body, slowing down his fall, and then the Emperor lifted him up again with a swift movement.

As Logan slowly descended, this time Morres was soaring into the air. Kyrararuk!

Hmm, this is kind of fun...

No, but still!

Feeling guilty for even a moment of enjoyment, Logan suddenly caught sight of Masain's face and gasped in surprise. The large-bodied Masain was looking at them with envious eyes.

"....."

It was nothing short of a relief that the Holy Emperor hadn't noticed that gaze.

[TL/N: The last particular scene in this chapter was first mentioned through Masain's POV in Chapter 55. You might want to read that part again.]

Childhood seemed like grains of sand that slipped through fingers just when one thought they had a firm grasp, leaving no trace behind.

Logan grew into a bright and talented young boy. His calm demeanor and prodigious skill in swordsmanship were enough to affirm him as the son who most resembled the Holy Emperor in blood.

Yet, as much as he grew to resemble his parents, Logan found it difficult to consider the current Holy Emperor and Empress as his true parents. He tried his best to show respect and affection in his actions, but the human heart does not change so easily.

Ironically, he felt a more genuine connection with his siblings. Perhaps because he, Gale, in his previous life, had never experienced such relationships.

He grew fond of the simple-hearted Masain, worried about the troublemaker Morres, cared for the timid Amelia who joined the palace later, and loved Sisle, who he had watched since she was a nursing infant.

Possibly, it was this attachment to them that kept Logan anchored in the palace, despite feeling somewhat adrift due to the memories of his past life.

As his siblings became busier with their lives and Logan's mind matured, he found himself increasingly wandering outside the palace.

While he officially led a separate unit for the grand cause of protecting the people from sea monsters, Logan was well aware of his true intentions.

He simply wanted to keep himself so busy that he had no time to ponder, tied up with memories of his past life and searching for a purpose in his new one.

Moreover, the recent deterioration in his relationship with Morres troubled Logan. Having met him first after his reincarnation, he seemed to have unwittingly become emotionally dependent on Morres.

What has happened to you, Morres?

Although he always felt his brother's presence, Logan sometimes found Morres to be strangely unfamiliar.

"Logan, all of Delcross praises your valor and virtue. Truly an achievement worthy of a prince of the millennium-old Holy Empire."

After a long absence, returning to the palace, the Empress greeted him with an elegant smile.

Joining the Order of Saint Sebastian under the [Duty of Nobility] at a young age, Logan had distinguished himself in many ways.

Not only was his swordsmanship exceptional, but his thoughtfulness and upright character endeared him to knights of all ages, leading to a group of followers within the Order.

These knights, calling themselves the [Lilium] after the lily emblem of the Order, soon formed a separate unit under Logan's command.

He had just returned from leading the Lilium on a campaign to suppress sea monsters across the eastern regions of the continent.

"You've uplifted the name and honor of the Empire and the royal family even at such a young age. I am always proud of you, my son."

Logan smiled bitterly.

He hadn't intended to elevate the Empire's prestige. He just wanted to protect the wandering refugees of Ortona, his lost homeland, from the sea monsters.

Being reborn as a prince of the enemy nation, that was all he could do for his country.

"But isn't it enough now? I'm always worried whether you're eating properly or getting hurt somewhere."

Empress Tatiana wanted Logan to stay in the palace, learn statecraft, and participate in governance. She probably hoped he would become the crown prince and eventually succeed the throne.

However, Logan could never think of himself as a Delcrossan.

Even as he led expeditions to combat sea monsters, his repeated visits to the eastern regions, deep down, were probably because he still considered himself an Ortonan.

– Did you think we would be grateful to you? When did you ever care for Ortona's downfall, and now you come to help!

– We of the East will never forget the grudge for killing our General Gael!

He vividly remembered the group of refugees he had saved, looking at the Lilium with resentment-filled eyes.

In his past life, he had sacrificed himself for Ortona, and now he was facing the resentment for that very death.

Was this new life given to him for that purpose?

To sacrifice himself for the republic wasn't enough, and now he had to bear the hatred toward Delcross and martyr himself for a nation that wasn't his homeland?

Logan didn't know.

* * *

"So... you're unsure about the purpose of your new life?"

How much time had passed since they started their conversation? The night had deepened, and it was dark without the moon.

Luckily, accustomed to the darkness, Seongjin could clearly see Logan's expression in the faint starlight.

Realizing that the Emperor probably knew his true identity, Logan's face showed signs of agitation. This was probably why he was more open to discussing worries with Seongjin, which he normally wouldn't do.

Moreover, sharing a [secret] with each other within the palace likely helped bridge the distance between them.

"In your past life, your homeland was destroyed because of Delcross, so you feel guilty just living comfortably as a prince of this nation? But when you try to actively rebuild your homeland, being a prince of the enemy country limits you?"

"That's a simple way to put it, yes."

Seongjin's face turned sour.

What's this? Just like with Amelia, why do I feel like I'm giving a lot of advice lately?

Am I more philosophical than I thought?

Is the profound philosophical aura emanating from my years of experience influencing people like this?

The Demon King was taken aback.

[You talk about being so experienced, but do you even know yourself?]

'What, you little?'

He scowled inadvertently, causing Logan to look at him curiously. Clearing his throat, Seongjin spoke to Logan.

"Hmm... Listen, this is purely my opinion, so just take it as a reference."

"I'll listen carefully. Please share your frank opinion."

Logan nodded seriously.

"Your country fell and you even lost your life purely because of Delcross. But since you became a prince of Delcross, you couldn't take proper revenge, right?"

"That's right."

"And you went on sea monster expeditions to help your countrymen, but somehow that always felt insufficient?"

"Yes, that's true."

"So what are you worrying about? There are plenty of ways to moderately solve both, aren't there?"

"...What?"

When Logan looked at him with wide eyes, Seongjin shook his head and clicked his tongue.

'Wow, why are all the kids in this house so naive?'

Amelia was the same, but this guy, even in his second life, is too innocent.

Father raised these kids too gently, tsk tsk.

"I'll give you an example of one of those solutions."

At Seongjin's words, Logan leaned forward, his face full of tension.

"What's the most difficult yet most crucial thing to obtain for rebuilding a country?"

"...?"

"Capital."

"Capital..."

As Logan pondered and nodded, Seongjin continued.

"So, the solution is simple. You embezzle some of the Delcross imperial family's capital and divert it to your homeland."

"...!"

"That way, it's a moderate revenge on Delcross without being fatal. At the same time, it's a definite help to your homeland."

Logan's mouth fell open in shock.

"But that's... that's not..."

"Not what?"

"Not... right..."

As Logan trailed off, Seongjin smirked with a slightly mean-spirited smile.

Indeed, a little more explanation is needed for someone as honest as you, who sneaks into other people's rooms but boldly knocks before entering.

"If it's not that, then how did you plan to help your homeland?"

"If the people of Ortona wish for it, I'm prepared to give up everything I have. It's regrettable to Empress Mother who has high hopes for me, but I cannot become the crown prince and inherit the throne here."

"Hmm."

"The problem is that the people of Ortona might not trust me as a prince of their enemy nation..."

As Logan ended his words with a gloomy expression, Seongjin tilted his head and asked.

"Okay, let's assume you leave here and successfully settle in Ortona. What will you do? How will you help the people?"

"Well..."

After pondering for a moment, Logan answered.

"First, I need to gather those who want to rebuild Ortona. I'll find the remnants of the republican faction that survived. Then, I'll negotiate with the merchant alliance about exclusive rights and other benefits to be offered after rebuilding the country. I'll need to persuade the nobles of territories that are now under other nations. And there are refugees wandering around that need help."

"Good."

Seongjin crossed his arms and nodded.

"All good ideas. But are those things that only you can do?"

"Uh?"

"And where will you get the funds to carry out those tasks?"

"..."

Logan was at a loss for words.

Indeed, even now, there were many people working underground in Ortona to revive the country. Among them could be leaders as good as or better than Prince Benicio. There was no need for it to be him specifically.

Sword Master. What does that even mean?

Even when the republican forces had a proper army, they couldn't avoid destruction. What substantial help could one skilled swordsman add to them now?

As Logan's eyes deepened with thought, Seongjin drove the point home.

"Think about it. Would it be more helpful for your homeland if you became a poor spiritual leader, guiding people, or if you became a wealthy internal enemy, discreetly diverting capital and supporting from behind?"

Huh?

"The former anyone in your homeland could do, but the latter can only be done by you, the Prince of Delcross and the former knight of Ortona."

"...!"

"That's something only you can do in this world, Logan."

Logan's eyes widened dramatically.

In his blue eyes, there was a wave-like ripple of sudden enlightenment.

The Demon King sighed deeply.

[No, this devil!]

Logan slowly stood up and said,

"So that's it. The reason I was given a new life...!"

The boy, who always maintained a calm and somewhat sad demeanor, now, without realizing it, rediscovered his hidden passion and looked somewhere with sparkling eyes.

Towards the invisible distant land in the east, his now lost homeland.

"The purpose of my reincarnation as a prince is to embezzle Delcross's capital and divert it to Ortona!"

Well, it sounds strange to put it that way.

...But maybe that's right?

However, Seongjin overlooked one fact: this pure prince was even more honest than he had anticipated.

The next afternoon, in a rare audience with the Holy Emperor, Logan spoke with a serious face.

"Father, I have a favor to ask."

The Holy Emperor, glancing at his teacup, looked up and blinked upon seeing the firm resolve in the boy's blue eyes.

"A request?"

"Yes. I would like my allowance to be increased."

"....."

"Significantly increased... actually, very significantly!"

Louis, the chief chamberlain who was serving tea at the Emperor's side, tilted his head in confusion.

"The amount allocated to you as a prince is not insubstantial, but how much exactly do you need?"

"Well, double the current amount? No, maybe triple?"

"Excuse me?"

"How much budget is usually needed to run a country?"

"A country..."

Logan was brazenly asking for a fortune, an amount that would be substantial even if embezzled secretly, as his allowance.

Louis discreetly glanced at the Holy Emperor.

After a moment of silence, the Holy Emperor slowly lifted his hand to cover his face, then spoke.

"You can have the allowance as you wish. However, Logan..."

"Yes, Father."

"Have you been spending time with Morres lately?"

"....."

108

The grand birthday celebration of the Holy Emperor was only a fortnight away.

As one of the biggest events in Delcross approached, the imperial palace bustled with noticeable activity. Servants were busy thoroughly cleaning and decorating the entire palace, while a stream of supplies from outside flowed into the palace storerooms.

Dignitaries from foreign lands began to arrive one after another.

Diplomatic envoys bearing congratulatory gifts from distant countries continually requested audiences, leaving the Holy Emperor scarcely a moment's rest. Consequently, regular audiences with his children seemed impossible for the foreseeable future.

Relatively idle, the princes and princesses spent their days in peace, occasionally dealing with tailors who visited the palace to create formal attire.

"Ah, this is the Henesys longsword. I've always thought so, but Arjuna is truly a beautiful sword," Amelia admired, running her fingers along the elegantly wavy silver blade. She had borrowed the sword from Logan for a moment to examine it.

It was a beloved sword of the strongest swordsman in the East. After General Gale's death, it proudly made its way into the royal treasury, befitting its status as a treasured weapon.

The blade was meticulously engraved with intricate patterns, while the narrow guard and pommel were delicately and elegantly adorned.

"I wish I had one like this. With such a sword, it would be easier to apply the Weiloiz martial arts method to swordsmanship," Amelia mused, swinging Arjuna in her hands with envy.

Back when she enjoyed playing with Nutcracker, she had a hidden desire for weapons, it seems.

"Then, why not consider getting one? A Henesys longsword would suit you well," Logan suggested kindly, smiling. Amelia, wielding the slender longsword, looked quite convincing.

"That's a good idea. How long would it take to custom make one?"

"There probably aren't artisans in Delcross specializing in Henesys swords. However, I believe there are a few fine swords stored in the royal treasury. Maybe you could ask for one?"

"Really? But it's a treasured sword. Would His Majesty really give one to me?"

"I received a sword when I was very young. Back then, there was quite a fuss about giving a child a treasured weapon, but our Royal Father didn't even blink an eye."

Encouraged by his optimistic view, Amelia nodded with renewed enthusiasm.

"I see. I should ask about it."

"If you request it, why would a treasured sword be an issue? His Majesty might even gladly offer a sacred relic."

And so, the two of them looked at each other and shared a warm smile.

How heartwarming. Truly heartwarming, but...

Listening quietly to their conversation, Seongjin couldn't help but express his annoyance.

"That's all fine, but why are you doing this here, of all places?"

That is, Logan and Amelia were currently in the Pearl Palace. They were enjoying a conversation while watching Seongjin's etiquette lesson.

Looking at him with their innocent eyes, Seongjin sighed deeply.

Not all princes and princesses were idle. To Seongjin, who had almost no experience as a prince, an etiquette teacher had been unexpectedly assigned.

Even the laissez-faire Holy Emperor thought it necessary to teach him the basics when foreign dignitaries started to arrive.

As a result, Seongjin's time for martial arts practice significantly decreased, making him increasingly irritable.

He needed to transform this stress into training soon!

"Still, thanks to your sword training, your basic posture isn't bad. I don't think you need much correction," Amelia noted.

"Right. Morres has a natural presence just by standing still. With a few key etiquettes, you'll be an impeccable prince," Logan added, comforting Seongjin like soothing a child. The etiquette teacher watching nearby chuckled endearingly.

These people, really!

Seongjin's ordeal didn't end there. As soon as the etiquette lesson was over, dance lessons had to begin.

The birthday celebration spanned three days around the Holy Emperor's birthday, and princes and princesses over thirteen were required to attend the main banquet. He couldn't simply excuse himself from such an important event, despite his incomplete memories.

Additionally, there were social gatherings and formal dinners with foreign dignitaries planned in various palaces starting next week, as well as numerous smaller parties hosted by archbishops and nobles in the townhouses throughout the capital for three weeks.

Such social obligations of the upper class were truly bothersome.

"Despite everything, Morres seems to learn physical activities quickly. You picked up dancing just as fast as swordsmanship," Amelia said, smiling as she lightly stepped in rhythm, holding Seongjin's hand.

During the dance lesson, she had become his partner, and her skilled assistance made it easier for him to learn

"Is that so? That's fortunate. I used to struggle with dancing, causing my teachers much trouble..."

Logan, who was casually observing them, suddenly stopped speaking and closed his mouth, realizing he had momentarily forgotten that the current Seongjin was not the real Morres.

Amelia looked at Logan quizzically, and Seongjin quickly picked up the conversation.

"I used to be quite poor at swordsmanship as well."

"...Yes, that's true."

"People do evolve, after all."

"...Indeed."

Amelia sensed a brief awkwardness between the two but, failing to discern anything amiss, simply tilted her head in mild confusion.

Looking at Logan, who awkwardly fiddled with a fairytale book beside him, Seongjin recalled a conversation they had not long ago.

—Right. You're not just a simple spirit, Seongjin. I think we can have a friendly relationship moving forward.

After that late-night conversation, as Logan was about to return to the Blue Rose Palace, he spoke to Seongjin.

—However, I must find the real Morres. Even if our relationship isn't what it used to be, he's still my dear brother. So...

Hesitating briefly, Logan then looked directly at Seongjin, struggling to continue.

—So, if Morres returns... can you promise to give his body back?

It was merely a request to return his brother's body, yet Logan looked as if he was asking Seongjin to die, guilt written all over his face. Such a tender-hearted fool.

—Sure, it's no big deal. I'm technically dead, anyway.

Sensing Seongjin's sincere agreement, Logan smiled, relieved.

—...Thank you.

Since that day, Logan treated Seongjin as if he truly were his brother. Needless to say, Amelia and Masain were overjoyed, hoping their relationship would return to how it once was.

Yet, Logan never directly referred to Seongjin as Morres.

"What should we do about attending the banquet? Logan used to escort me, but since Morres doesn't remember, I'm a bit worried about leaving him alone."

As Amelia held Seongjin's hand and spun around, her light dress fluttered like flower petals, captivating even the dance instructor with her ethereal beauty.

After pondering her question, Logan replied.

"This year, Sisle will be attending the banquet for the first time. I think it's best if I assist her."

"Isn't Sisle just 12 years old?"

"She's officially recognized as a saint by the Holy Church. Although it's a bit early, the council decided it's time for her to make an appearance before the dignitaries."

The youngest princess, who had been on a pilgrimage, was soon to return.

Amelia nodded in understanding.

"I see. Herna and Gades will also be attending for the first time, but they should be fine since they'll be together."

Clever as snakes, those little ones. They wouldn't likely be overwhelmed at their first banquet.

"Then it's decided. This time, I'll escort Morres, right?"

"...Isn't it usually the other way around?"

Amelia laughed heartily, turning and stepping in rhythm to Seongjin's bemused expression.

"Don't worry too much. I'll make sure to protect you until the banquet ends."

"....."

"Morres will always be under my protection."

Seongjin was at a loss for words.

Is she really treating Morres, who is only a year younger than her, like a child?

Finally, the tedious lesson time ended in the late afternoon.

Feeling liberated, Seongjin excitedly headed to the training grounds, only to find that both Logan and Amelia had followed, idly lounging around.

Seriously, don't they have anything better to do?

"Dimlos, the lieutenant, suddenly had to go on a long-term assignment. So, there won't be any spear training for a while," Amelia explained, already seated in a meditative pose beside Seongjin.

"I decided to practice here while you train. Watching Morres practice is quite instructive."

Even Logan began his warm-up exercises in front of them.

"There's no training ground in the Blue Rose Palace. Using the Knight Order's ground feels like I'm intruding on the others' training, so I feel guilty."

Can't you see the Pearl Palace knights crammed in that corner?

Hoping for some intervention, Seongjin looked towards Masain, who turned his head away, tears welling in his eyes.

"It's like returning to childhood. To see Your Highness getting along so well with your siblings, I have no more regrets."

Ah, it was my mistake to expect anything from him.

Seongjin grumbled inwardly as he prepared for meditation.

As Seongjin had been eagerly anticipating to build the seventh layer of his aura, he found it hard to concentrate with the company around him. However, once he settled down, he surprisingly found himself immersed in his inner world.

Wrapped in a small whirlwind, as usual, Seongjin completed his meditation satisfactorily, just like any other day. He was slightly startled when he opened his eyes to find both Amelia and Logan staring intently at him.

Amelia looked somewhat proud, while Logan appeared surprised.

"I thought only our Royal Father could materialize aura so effortlessly..."

Aura materialization?

"Isn't it amazing? I was really shocked when I first saw it," Amelia chimed in.

"Indeed. Despite not having exceptional aura affinity, the speed at which you've built layers is remarkable," Logan said seriously, nodding his head.

More sensitive to the flow of aura than others, Logan could clearly discern what was happening with Seongjin.

Commonly, those who build aura layers quickly are said to have good aura affinity, but strictly speaking, this isn't entirely accurate. Even if one naturally absorbs aura easily, without proper control, they can't build layers quickly. The challenge lies in stabilizing the aura in a fixed state.

On the other hand, even if one's affinity is slightly lower, if they become adept at manipulating aura, they can accelerate the layering and cultivation process.

Morres's body wasn't inherently gifted with high aura affinity.

Even though the Holy Emperor had forced a massive amount of aura into him, improving his affinity significantly, he still couldn't absorb aura as naturally as Logan, or compared to the Holy Emperor, whose body seemed to be made of aura.

Yet, the ease with which he was building and moving aura layers indicated that he was already at a level where the aura moved according to his will.

Amelia piped up, her lips puckering like a chick's.

"You'd be really surprised to know how he manipulates aura on a whim. Recently, he nearly died by ignoring the cultivation method and stirring the aura inside his body recklessly. He got a severe scolding from His Majesty for that."

"...Is that true?"

Logan looked at Seongjin with wide, astonished eyes.

What? Why?

"You really need to be careful when using aura in the future. I don't know why, but the way you manipulate aura seems different from others. It's as if your body lacks basic control."

"Isn't it supposed to be controlled? Why?"

Wasn't it just a matter of releasing the flow differently than the cultivation method?

However, Logan's expression was more serious than expected.

"Of course. Normally, you can't just ignore the flow like that because it's bothersome. The body naturally resists such movements."

"Why? It's just letting flow what's already moving in the body, right?"

"Think about it. Can you rip off and swing around your skin just because you feel hot? Can you vomit out all your internal organs because your stomach feels uneasy?"

"Uh..."

Seongjin blinked, momentarily lost for words.

That analogy hit home...

Wait, actually imagining it is kind of terrifying.

Aura is a force akin to the source of life.

In the Main Dimension of Delcross, any living being naturally generates a small amount of aura simply by existing. The fundamental nature of aura is inherently preservationist concerning the body. Unlike external energies which may be tumultuous, an aura user is instinctively incapable of using aura destructively within their own body.

Therefore, Seongjin's handling of aura—as if it were an alien force similar to the energy of monsters—might fundamentally differ from the residents of the Main Dimension.

"There might be only one solution to this problem," Logan stated calmly. His demeanor as a former Sword Master seemed to instill confidence.

"And what's that?"

"Just become so strong that such force isn't necessary anymore."

"....."

Oh, that's straightforward. But why do I feel cheated?

Unaware or indifferent to the slight sense of betrayal on Seongjin's face, Logan smoothly began to promote the aura cultivation method of his homeland.

"How about learning the Henesys cultivation method? Banahas may have been a genius, but his method is too intuitive and simple. For depth and finesse in operation, there's nothing like the Henesys method."

Until recently, Logan had strictly concealed anything related to Ortona. It seemed that now, with his identity revealed to the Holy Emperor, there was nothing left to hide.

Seongjin snorted.

Trying to sell me something? Masain once said Banahas's cultivation was the strongest on the continent, right?

However, someone was intrigued by his words.

"Is that cultivation method so powerful? More than Weilo?"

"Absolutely, sister Amelia. Unlike the complex Weilo, the Henesys method encompasses both spear and sword techniques magnificently."

"Can it destroy walls if channeled through a spear?"

But why is this sister so keen on destroying walls?

"Walls? With mastery, you could even demolish entire fortresses."

"Wow..."

Amelia's grey eyes sparkled with excitement. Logan, seizing the moment, offered her a convincing smile.

"Why not try learning it, sister? After all, you'll be receiving a Henesys longsword from His Majesty."

Henesys longsword!

Immediately, Amelia nodded eagerly, falling for his persuasion.

Seongjin looked at her with pity.

Struggling with Weilo and now seeking to delve into another discipline – her path ahead seemed fraught with hardships. But what can be done? One must climb out of the grave they dig themselves.

He drew his Nutcracker and focused his mind.

After Logan's warning, Seongjin decided to strictly adhere to the Banahas cultivation method for the time being, putting aside his habit of manipulating monster energy.

Speaking of monster energy...

"...I regret not trying something with the monsters I've killed. There was something I always wanted to do after capturing a monster..."

[What did you want to try?]

Seongjin had long harbored a curiosity about utilizing the energy of monsters.

Could he use monster energy in this world, as he did in others? After capturing monsters at the Diggory mansion and during the heresy trials, he lost consciousness both times, so he never got the chance. Perhaps he could absorb energy from a monster's corpse to strengthen his body, as before?

But upon hearing this, the Demon King was horrified.

[Hey, hey! You're a human of Delcross now, with an aura! Do you know what kind of impact monster energy might have on you?]

'Why? It's just energy. What could possibly go wrong?'

Seongjin may have thought lightly of it, but the Demon King's concerns had valid grounds.

[Think about it. That knight, Haven, was implanted with an egg that died within a day. But the others survived for days, right?]

'...Now that you mention it.'

The difference between those two cases seems to be that Haven was an aura user.

[Why do you think the Gray Plague primarily affects the sick and elderly? Could it be because they have weaker auras? And if the egg's quick death was due to aura, couldn't the opposite also be true?]

Monsters might be vulnerable to exposure to aura.

Then, could the energy absorbed from a monster also act as a poison to Morres's aura-endowed body?

'That's a possibility, but...'

Even if something went wrong, wouldn't his father take care of it? Trying it out once might be worthwhile.

The Demon King grumbled in annoyance.

[Do you want to cause trouble again after already worrying the Holy Emperor? Of course, your father will save you. But first, he has to keep you alive to punish you, right?]

That's a bit frightening.

Seongjin involuntarily shuddered, recalling the Holy Emperor's icy gaze.

Let's just focus on training.

* * *

That evening, Logan left Pearl Palace and visited the administrative building for the first time in a while. Following the conclusion of the sea demon subjugation, he typically visited the office of the Saint Aurelion Knights, as was his custom.

Besides his affiliation with the Saint Bastian Order, Logan had separate assignments from the Saint Aurelion Order mainly to compile and report any demon activity encountered during subjugations.

Though it was late and most people had left for the day, Lieutenant Francis, who was still in the office, seemed in good spirits. He was the type of person who'd happily work overtime if it meant reducing the burden on his commander, though he'd likely apply for a day off the next morning.

"This subjugation took unusually long. I heard you went as far as the borderlands near Count Ziegsmundt's domain."

At Francis's comment, Logan nodded.

"My request to investigate inside the domain was denied. The Count was quite obstinate. But it wasn't entirely fruitless."

"You mean..."

"As the exorcists reported, we spotted demonkind near the Black Forest, close to Ziegsmundt's domain."

Logan, with one of the strongest divine powers in the Liliu Special Force, was highly sensitive to demonic presences.

He quietly entered the forest while the force was encamped, explaining to Francis how he had single-handedly dealt with a demon he encountered there.

Francis clicked his tongue in response.

"You took such a risk? Why bother having a special force if you're going to act alone? If His Majesty learns you're doing this, he won't just stand by."

"It was a solitary demon known as the Witch of the Forest. There was hardly any danger. Besides, the Liliu knights are noble souls who willingly lend their strength to aid the people, not a personal army of mine."

"Really? I thought they were just a fan club for Your Highness."

"....."

After staring incredulously at his tactless lieutenant for a moment, Logan took something out of his pocket and handed it to Francis. It was a small, rusted medal.

So worn that it was difficult to make out the spider emblem etched on its surface.

"What's this?"

"After defeating the demon, I found traces of a summoning ritual nearby. This was buried within the summoning circle. The demon worshippers had already fled the area."

Francis adjusted his glasses and examined the medal, scraping off some of the rust.

After a while, he put the medal down on the desk and said to Logan.

"It's from the Dark Order. This appears to be the symbol of the 'Order of Repentance.' However, its poor condition and crude design mean we need further investigation to confirm its authenticity."

Logan nodded.

Leading the special force across the continent for years, he realized there were more covert demon-worshipping factions active than he initially thought. A prominent example was the remnants of the Dark Order, who had escaped the purge.

Even in the former territories of Ortona in the east, where he went for sea demon subjugation, traces of such orders were found in every village visited.

Something he never noticed as Sword Master Gale.

The prevalence of the Dark Order's remnants in the eastern region suggested a deeper secret behind Ortona's dissolution, beyond just Delcross's machinations. Recently, Logan had begun to suspect this.

"How about the investigation in the east?"

"Recently, Commander Syllus led a detachment of the 3rd Imperial Knights to the east. Exorcists from Saint Terbacchia also joined, forming a substantial investigation team."

Again, the 3rd Imperial Knights.

Logan's expression grew complex.

Why was the 3rd Knights, composed mainly of excellent lance knights, frequently deployed on such mismatched, minor investigations?

Especially since Commander Syllus Agen, quite senior in years, shouldn't be traveling long distances ahead of major events like the Emperor's birthday.

"The 3rd Knights seem to be dispatched often."

Francis sighed.

"Of course. His Majesty is really pushing it. But with the 3rd Knights being specifically targeted, what choice does the commander have?"

With Commander Syllus away, training for new lance knights of the 3rd Knights became difficult, so Lieutenant Dimlos of the 1st Knights had to step in.

This also delayed Amelia's lessons.

"Lady Syllus's mother complains that in the last few years, Commander Syllus has never spent the Emperor's birthday leisurely in Delcross."

Commander of the 3rd Imperial Knights, still Syllus Agen, a relative of Francis Agen and a well-known figure to Logan.

The tall knight who had claimed Gael's life in Ortona a decade ago.

"Could it be..."

Logan thought of a new possibility and furrowed his brow.

Had it not been for a recent conversation with Seongjin, he wouldn't have suspected it.

How many times had Logan encountered Commander Syllus in the palace? Especially during the Holy Emperor's birthday celebrations, wasn't he always away on assignment?

It seemed improbable, but could the Holy Emperor be deliberately sending the 3rd Knights away from the capital each time Logan returned?

Could it be... No, it can't be.

"Is that all you have to report?"

Lost in thought, Logan was jolted back to reality by Francis's question.

"Oh, actually, besides the demonkind, I saw something strange in that forest."

"Something strange?"

"It wasn't demonic energy, but something ominously unsettling."

Logan slowly recalled his encounter with the demonkind in the Black Forest.

The demon, wandering the snow-covered forest in flowing robes, and a single blue butterfly it cherished.

"That Witch of the Forest was holding a butterfly dearly. Just before I slew the demon, the butterfly vanished without a trace. I still can't figure out what that sinister aura was, different from the demonkind."

"....."

Francis blinked for a moment, then straightened his glasses and smiled meaningfully.

"I have a feeling I might know where to find that answer."

* * *

The next day, after morning training, Seongjin visited the Monster Special Task Force office for the first time in several days.

"Your Highness! You're here!"

Red-haired Inquisitor Valerie greeted him warmly as usual.

Seongjin skillfully dodged Jibril, who rushed at him with a rose-scented spray, and waved casually to the grim-faced Dame Sharon, who stood in a corner of the office.

He then stopped abruptly, startled by a familiar face sitting upright and reading a book in the back of the office.

Why is he here?

"Hmm? You're late."

Logan, always impeccably groomed, looked up from his reading of the Otherworldly Apocalypse.

"I've decided to help out with the Monster Special Task Force while I'm in the capital. So, how far has the investigation into the Gray Plague progressed? What can I help with?"

"....."

Still reeling from not avoiding Jibril's enthusiastic greeting, Seongjin was enveloped in a strong rose scent.

No help needed, but first, do something about that perfume smell!

"I'll likely stay in the capital and help the Monster Special Task Force even after the Emperor's birthday celebrations. I've already discussed this with Sir Leandros."

Logan explained while carefully turning the pages of the worn book of Otherworldly Apocalypse.

"Besides, His Majesty has promised to reimburse part of the subjugation team's operational funds from my personal finances while I'm in the capital."

Is that like saying, 'I'll increase your allowance, so stay home nicely'?

"I've always focused solely on subjugation and never bothered with operations, but it turns out, organizing a subjugation team costs quite a bit of money. It seems the funds for Ortona's reconstruction will increase significantly."

Logan whispered to Seongjin with a slightly pleased expression.

Seongjin was incredulous.

You, man, were quite mature before dying, and now you're completely playing into the Holy Emperor's hands, aren't you?

"What are you looking at?"

Seongjin's gaze shifted to the pages Logan was turning.

Unlike the flamboyant Sir Valerie, it was curious to see this knight, as precise as a painting, casually browsing the Otherworldly Apocalypse, which until recently was a forbidden book.

After all, isn't Sir Masain the only one who finds the Otherworldly Apocalypse creepy?

Sure enough, as Seongjin showed interest in the Apocalypse, Masain behind him visibly grew uncomfortable.

Logan nodded and explained.

"While subjugating demons in the northern region, I encountered something strange. It wasn't demonic energy but something else, emitting an ominous aura. Sir Francis speculated it might be a monster. I thought it might be mentioned here, so I'm looking for it."

"A monster? From somewhere other than Delcross?"

Seongjin asked, startled.

Could it be that another gate has opened somewhere?

If so, monsters should be pouring out by now, so why is it so quiet?

Just then, Logan pointed to a page.

"Ah, this is it! It really was an otherworldly creature!"

Everyone from the Monster Special Task Force crowded around to look at the book.

"The Blue Flower of the Demon Realm, Dilelaria..."

Jibril read aloud from the page.

Contrary to the description of a flower, the page featured an illustration of a small, blue-dyed butterfly.

It looked more like a moth than a butterfly, with a plump body and wide, feather-like antennae. Nonetheless, the accurate depiction of its core suggested it was indeed a monster.

"A beautiful creature that became my companion many times as I wandered through a thousand dreams. A traveler across dimensions and a monster that enchants other monsters. Monsters, drawn to its dream-like blue wings and mirage-like supreme beauty, follow Dilelaria as if intoxicated. And what awaits them at their destination is only pale rest."

Hmm. Is Seongjin's sense of beauty off, or is it the author Sigurd's mediocre artistic skill?

To Seongjin, it looked like a simple, unattractive pale blue moth. Moreover, the black pattern on its wings uncomfortably resembled eyes.

The Demon King's opinion was that Sigurd was exaggerating.

[As always, so full of flair. Monsters are simply attracted by its scent. They just want to eat its eggs.]

Wait, that sounds familiar.

Seongjin tilted his head in curiosity, and the Demon King grumbled.

[Have you forgotten after all that commotion? I told you before, there's a butterfly that travels dimensions alone while channeling.]

'...The one you said all bug-type monsters commonly like? The egg?'

[Right. The scent Lophellum imitates is that of Dilelaria's eggs. Monsters are indeed drawn to it like drugs. But that's just a storyteller's interpretation who doesn't know the details.]

The Demon King explained.

It might seem like monsters are entranced by Dilelaria's butterfly, but in reality, they are both moving in the same direction.

Monsters are attracted to the scent of the eggs, and Dilelaria's butterflies are there because of...

[Females. Dilelaria's butterflies travel across dimensions in search of females. They're so rare that the butterflies move great distances, even across dimensions, to find them.]

Seongjin had heard of moths traveling long distances to find females.

But traveling across dimensions? How is that even possible?

"Are you sure you saw this? The Apocalypse contains illustrations of other butterfly-type monsters as well."

To the red-haired inquisitor's question, Logan nodded.

"Yes. The illustration and hue are slightly different, but blue butterflies aren't that common. Plus, the strong black pattern on the wings is vividly etched in my memory."

"I see."

It seemed they didn't have to worry about a gate being opened somewhere else, as this monster apparently moves across dimensions on its own. The concern, however, was that this butterfly was in possession of a demon.

"So, the recent sudden appearances of monsters might be the work of demonkind?"

Masain, sharing Seongjin's thoughts, asked with a trembling voice.

It was a plausible theory.

Seongjin remembered what Commander Bruno had told him earlier – about being charmed just before contracting the Gray Plague. He had suspected the one who implanted the egg might be a demon.

And Logan had witnessed a demon and a monster butterfly together during a sea demon subjugation.

To consider them separate incidents seemed too coincidental in timing.

Moreover, could it be mere coincidence that both Dilelaria and Loperum, two types of monsters, emit similar scents from their eggs?

"It's overwhelming."

As Jibril sighed, a silence fell over the entire Monster Special Task Force.

The investigation of the Gray Plague, the investigation of the butterfly monster, and their potential link to demonkind.

It was indeed hard to figure out where to start.

"...Let's tackle it step by step."

Seongjin, after organizing his thoughts, spoke up.

"We don't have enough evidence to link the Gray Plague and the butterfly monster yet. Before hastily connecting them, let's treat these as separate cases to minimize errors. First, the Gray Plague."

Everyone in the Special Task Force listened intently.

"It's safe to say that the recent monster turmoil has essentially exposed all the Gray Plague patients. Now, our focus shouldn't be on the plague itself, but on who implanted the eggs, and what their purpose was. Tracking down the perpetrator seems like the fastest solution."

Should we try a trap investigation? Like tying up aura in the dantian and wandering around in the slums.

Then Jibril chimed in.

"Your Highness, how about meeting with the academy students you mentioned earlier? They've recovered enough to be interrogated."

Oh, finally!

"That's a good suggestion, Jibril. I'll meet them today. Now, about the Dilelaria butterfly. Where did you say you saw it, Logan?"

"Near Count Ziegsmundt's domain in the north."

"Right. Investigating there directly now seems impractical. It might be better to check old records. Have there been previous instances of this butterfly appearing in Delcross, or cases where demonkind and monsters appeared together?"

Then Dame Sharon spoke up in a quiet voice.

"There are demonkind extermination reports submitted by exorcists from all over the continent. We can sort out previous cases focusing on Ziegsmundt's domain and Delcross."

"Good idea. Can I entrust that task to you, Dame Sharon?"

As Seongjin nodded, a slight flush appeared on Sharon's pale face.

"Yes, Your Highness. I will get started right away."

Dame Sharon, usually disengaged due to mundane tasks, responded with an unusually brisk voice and left the room.

Seongjin then turned to the red-haired inquisitor, who had been looking at him with sparkling eyes.

"Sir Valerie, can I ask you to continue the work you were doing? Please keep searching the Otherworldly Apocalypse for the monsters that appeared in the capital and categorize them."

"Yes, Your Highness!"

Sir Valerie responded eagerly and smiled broadly. It seemed an appropriate task for the young Paladin who enjoyed mysterious stories.

"Hmm..."

Logan, who had been quietly observing, muttered to himself.

"Just an advisor, but unexpectedly seems to be in control of the entire department?"

What is he talking about?

I merely offered my opinion as an advisor.

"Shall we head to the imperial hospital now?"

As Seongjin got up to leave, Logan followed suit. Seongjin quickly stopped him.

"Before that, you should take a shower to get rid of that scent. Hurry up!"

"Why? It seems like a decent fragrance."

"You're nose-blind right now; it's overpowering. Passersby will stare at you; how embarrassing is that?"

It's already bad enough that our department is nicknamed not the 'Monster Special Task Force' but the 'Rose Perfume Squad' in the administration!

Then Jibril protested with an aggrieved face.

"But this scent is for your benefit, Your Highness! You're going to see patients who had the plague, right? Wearing this fragrance should prevent any possible infection!"

"Jibril. I'm telling you, the plague doesn't spread because of bad smells."

Jibril retorted sharply.

"Are you disregarding the teachings of our esteemed Lyora School, Your Highness?"

"No, that's not what I meant... Ah, really...!"

Frustrated, Seongjin scratched his head, and Logan, smiling gently at Jibril, interjected.

"That's alright, Physician Jibril. We aura users aren't typically susceptible to ordinary plagues."

"Oh, is that so?"

"Morres is just concerned about giving the students a standoffish impression. Otherwise, there's no reason to refuse such a fine floral scent, a badge of honor for Lyora plague doctors who constantly fight against the stench of disease."

"That, that's..."

"Don't worry too much. Oh, and could you check if there have been any recent cases of the Gray Plague at the Plague Institute?"

"Of, of course! I'll look into it right away!"

Blushing, Jibril bowed shyly.

Seongjin unwittingly gaped in astonishment.

Wow, isn't he a real pro?

He's said to resemble the Holy Emperor the most, and indeed, a born charmer is right here.

Following Logan's cue, Seongjin and Masain quickly exited the task force office.

Before boarding the carriage, Logan performed an astonishing feat. A gentle breeze swirled around him, and suddenly the rose scent significantly diminished.

As the smell faded to just a faint after-scent, Seongjin blinked in surprise.

Logan looked back at the two with an amused expression, shrugging his shoulders.

"Why make a fuss? Just come out quietly like this and scatter it. What's the big deal?"

Wow, there's another person here whose aura follows his heart's desires!

On their way to the hospital outside the palace, Seongjin and Logan sat side by side, incessantly bickering.

"How did you do that? Is it different from releasing aura externally?"

"It's just materialization. Just do it well."

"Do it well? How?"

"Why are you asking me? You do it all the time, don't you?"

"I don't know how I do it! It's only possible during meditation; I've never done it consciously. Isn't there an easier way?"

"Well, if you're curious, why not try learning the Henesys cultivation method?"

Is he trying to sell me something again?

No way, I'm going to achieve greatness with the Banahas cultivation method.

Seeing Seongjin's flat expression, Logan clicked his tongue.

"Really, you too. Think about your real age, Lee Seongjin. Do you want to argue with a girl who could be your daughter?"

What, this guy?

"Where do you get off shaving years off your age? Jibril could be my granddaughter! Get it straight!"

"What about me? She's like my great-granddaughter. Daughter or granddaughter, it's all the same."

"What? Does that even make sense? There's a limit to exaggerating your age!"

"Who's exaggerating?"

"Who else but you? The great Logan, gallantly riding into battle at seventy!"

After bickering quietly for a while, Seongjin and Logan suddenly noticed Masain staring at them and immediately fell silent.

Right. Masain is also a skilled aura user. Despite their efforts to keep their voices down, he could not have missed their conversation.

Masain looked at them strangely for a moment before asking.

"What are you two Highnesses doing, exactly?"

"I fondly remember the times when you both used to argue over who was the older brother in your childhood, but this time, I can't understand your argument at all. Is this some kind of game?"

At Masain's words, Seongjin narrowed his eyes and glanced at Logan.

Pretending to be an adult all by yourself, and you had such fights with young Morres?

Logan's face turned a bit red.

"Why are you both arguing about who is Jibril's grandfather? You do realize that you're both actually younger than her, right? Despite her appearance, Jibril is already an adult who has graduated from the academy."

"No, that's, um..."

"I never thought I'd have to tell Prince Logan to act his age."

Logan hung his head in silence. Seongjin, watching with a smug expression, suddenly felt a strange sensation.

Sir Masain, why are you only scolding Logan?

Then Masain replied with an indifferent expression.

"Well, I didn't expect any such thing from Your Highness."

".....?"

"You haven't exactly acted your age either, have you?"

Seongjin's mouth dropped open.

Sir Masain, you've been hanging out with Francis and now you're picking up his habits!

The carriage continued in silence towards the outskirts of the palace.

* * *

Ashley Betcher and Jonathan McAlpin were receiving treatment at a medical facility operated by the imperial family. They were isolated in a remote room in a large building of the medical center.

As they were still technically prisoners, there were guards at the entrance, but the watch wasn't intense since they were just young students.

The guard, standing idly in a bored stance, straightened up and opened the room's door as Seongjin's group approached.

"...Your Highness! I can't express how happy I am to see you again!"

Entering the room, a boy who recognized Seongjin's face shouted with brightened features. He was a slightly plump and smart-looking boy, but Seongjin had never seen him before.

Who are you?

As the boy staggered out of bed to approach, Seongjin, startled, stepped back out and then re-entered the room. This has to be the right place, right?

The boy's face, once filled with joy, quickly fell, and his eyebrows drooped.

"I'm Jonathan. Didn't Your Highness call me an old friend?"

What?

"...Jonathan? Jonathan McAlpin?"

"Yes, Your Highness."

Jonathan McAlpin, the link between Morres and the Black Prophets.

And possibly, an accomplice who might have secretly supported Morres's heretical group.

He was a chubby boy when he was groaning in jail just a few days ago, but what happened to him in such a short time?

Even considering the bloodletting treatments by the plague doctors, is it possible for someone to become this emaciated so quickly? He looks like he's lost a significant part of his body mass.

"...Shouldn't you be the last one to say that?"

Logan spoke from behind with a slightly incredulous tone.

No, what. I've been through aura storms and all sorts of things!

Seongjin tried to hide his confusion and smiled awkwardly.

"Wow, Jonathan. I hardly recognize you. I was worried because you were ill for so long, but it seems my worries were needless."

"It's all thanks to Your Highness. You discovered that parasite, right? Thanks to you, I was able to escape the horrific bloodletting treatments."

Remembering his ordeal, Jonathan shivered.

This guy, he seems more relieved to have escaped bloodletting treatments than to have recovered from the Gray Plague. What exactly did the Lyora Plague Association do?

"Yes. It's good to see you're looking better now."

"Haha, actually, I feel much lighter than before the plague. I think I might be even healthier now."

Jonathan scratched his cheek with a slightly embarrassed look.

"The problem is with Ashley..."

Jonathan turned his head towards a corner of the room, and everyone's gaze followed.

Ashley Betcher.

The other victim of the Gray Plague was sitting on a small bed in the corner of the room.

Her condition was markedly different from the lively Jonathan; she sat there with a vacant expression, staring blankly into space. She had lost so much weight in just a few days that she looked almost skeletal.

"Why is she like that?"

"She's been like this ever since she regained consciousness. She doesn't talk at all. She barely eats when food is spoon-fed to her."

"Is it because she hasn't fully recovered yet?"

To Masain's question, Jonathan shook his head with a gloomy face.

"The doctors say it's a lingering aftereffect. It seems that as the Gray Plague progresses, it eventually irreversibly damages the brain."

Irreversible aftereffects.

[It's the mind crystals, Lee Seongjin.]

'Yeah. I thought it might be.'

Even in the case of Commander Bruno, didn't the salt crystals continue to increase for a while after the parasite was removed? Considering it took him a long time to regain consciousness, it's likely these two couldn't entirely avoid the formation of crystals either.

Seongjin then heard a detailed explanation from the Demon King about the condition of the two.

In Jonathan's brain, a few small mind crystals could be seen, but fortunately, they seemed to have avoided any critical areas. However, in Ashley's case, a significant number of crystals had spread mainly in the frontal lobe.

"Actually, Ashley was interrogated before me. She was exposed to the parasite longer, I suppose."

Listening to Jonathan's explanation, Seongjin slowly approached Ashley.

The girl didn't even notice someone approaching and just sat there with a vacant look, staring blankly into the corner.

"...Ashley."

"....."

There was no response.

Remembering Ashley's keen and passionate criticism of the Empire's injustices during the Black Prophets' meetings, Seongjin felt a pang of regret. A promising young talent was lost.

Considering that all those afflicted with the Gray Plague eventually die, it seemed somewhat fortunate that they were able to remove the parasite and save their lives. But is being barely alive like this truly living?

As Seongjin silently observed her, Logan stepped forward and spoke.

"So, you're Jonathan, right? It's unfortunate what happened to your friend, but since things have come to this, we need to ask you some questions. Can you cooperate with the Special Task Force's investigation?"

"Y-Your Highness Logan? Why are the two of you together...?"

Jonathan, finally recognizing Logan, stared alternately at Seongjin and Logan with wide eyes, his expression revealing his bewilderment. Apparently, the discord between the second and third princes was well-known.

"We're both part of the same Monster Special Task Force."

"Ah, yes..."

As Seongjin shrugged and answered, Jonathan nodded with a look of confusion.

And so, they were finally able to hear a relatively detailed account from Jonathan about what happened at the Heresy Tribunal.

"I was beaten senselessly. The scariest part was that the interrogators started by hitting us without asking anything."

Jonathan's face turned a bit pale as he recounted the terror of the interrogation.

According to his explanation, both Ashley and Jonathan were the main targets of the Heresy Tribunal from the start. Kenneth Diggory, the mastermind of the incident, was being treated for serious injuries at the time, and the other three had significant backing from high-ranking officials.

Thus, the two of them were thrown into a jail crowded with other prisoners.

In the cell, mainly prisoners accused of devil worship were detained, already brutally tortured to near destruction.

And they all appeared to have lost their minds, drooling while staring blankly into space.

"Looking back, it seems all of them were suffering from the Gray Plague. Despite the dark prison, it was clear their complexions were not normal, and none seemed sane."

Jonathan, who initially thought this was all due to the interrogators' torture, felt he would lose his mind from the fear of what awaited him.

Then, Ashley Betcher was taken away, and soon after, her screams were heard.

Having said this much, Jonathan glanced at Ashley, huddled in a corner, with a look of pity.

"After a while, she returned to the cell, completely out of her mind. I guess the parasite was implanted by then, but soon after, I was dragged away, so I couldn't pay much attention to her."

Subsequently taken away, Jonathan, upon reaching the interrogator, was immediately beaten with a club.

The interrogators asked nothing, yet Jonathan was soon spilling everything he knew, tears and snot streaming down his face.

"During that, I probably... talked about the support... you gave..."

Jonathan suddenly trailed off, sneaking a glance at Seongjin.

"No, about that help... I think I spoke of it too."

"....."

"Sorry, sorry, Your Highness! I knew I should have kept quiet, but back then, I was just..."

Seeing him shrink back, tears welling up, Seongjin couldn't bring himself to blame the boy.

This crazy Heresy Tribunal, how ruthlessly they must have beaten this bright young student to break him like this.

"I never want to go back there. That's why I was so relieved when I heard about the accident."

Jonathan wiped away a tear and took a deep breath, raising his head.

"That's why I am even more grateful to Prince Morres. Your Highness saved my life, even though I betrayed your trust. And above all, you utterly destroyed the Heresy Tribunal while hunting the monsters. How can I ever repay this kindness..."

"...Huh?"

Seongjin felt the gazes of Logan and Masain on him.

What? Why? What?

Wait, this is a misunderstanding. It wasn't me who destroyed them!

Why is Masain looking at me like that too? He was there that day!

Just then, an eerie voice sounded from behind them.

"Prince Morres..."

A voice that was slightly hoarse, yet strangely compelling.

Turning around, they saw Ashley Betcher, who had been sitting vacantly until now, turning her head towards them.

Her previously unfocused eyes now held a clear hostility as they stared directly at Seongjin.

"Ashley! Are you back to your senses?"

Jonathan tried to approach with delight, but Seongjin quickly raised his hand, stopping him.

Although he hadn't known Ashley long, Seongjin sensed a distinct alien feeling from her.

That gaze was definitely not Ashley Betcher's!

Logan also seemed to sense something, reaching for his sword, Arjuna, while blocking the group from Ashley. Ashley glanced at Logan, then focused back on Seongjin, speaking.

"So, it was you who did that to the Heresy Tribunal..."

A fierce hostility surged from Ashley, the atmosphere in the room suddenly becoming tense and heavy. For a moment, a peculiar yellow glow seemed to flicker in her eyes.

What exactly is happening?

The Demon King urgently warned Seongjin.

[It's a channel, Lee Seongjin! Someone has opened a channel using her as a medium, though it's quite unstable!]

'...A channel?'

Seongjin's face turned grave.

Seongjin couldn't help but feel that the Arenja weren't involved. They had cautiously communicated their intentions through Commander Bruno, but had not yet attempted direct contact with Seongjin.

Yet, knowing about the mind crystals in Gray Plague patients and using it for channeling?

If so,

"The culprit involved in the Gray Plague or perhaps the one who brought the monsters to Delcross!"

Seongjin, with a hardened face, reached for his Nutcracker, watched closely by Ashley. Then, Ashley, with a sinister voice, again addressed him.

"You ruined everything. What are you, exactly?"

"...Me?"

"Yes, the new horse of the guardian. Do you even know on whose stage you are playing, in whose hands you are being played?"

"....."

"Foolish one!"

Ashley sneered with a twisted smile, showing a grotesque expression.

Then, suddenly.

She twitched as if electrocuted and began shaking.

And suddenly, she started shouting at thin air.

"Such a persistent nuisance! These tiny beings!"

".....?"

"And you are no different! Do you even know who you are helping right now!"

While Seongjin's group looked on bewildered, Ashley staggered to her feet from the bed and began gesticulating at thin air!

"Get lost!"

"Don't interfere!"

"Get lost!"

"You creatures too!"

She seemed to be fighting with herself, shouting and responding alone, appearing utterly mad.

"How long will you keep this up!"

"Get the hell out of the palace, you wretch!"

"Disappear far from the palace, you villain!"

".....?"

Seongjin blinked in confusion.

Huh?

This oddly repetitive manner of speaking, it felt familiar somehow?

112

In the midst of the Imperial Hospital, an extraordinary scene unfolded.

"How long do you intend to obstruct me! Do you fiends truly wish for death?!"

"Your feeble tricks are futile, you wretched fool!"

"Your petty schemes won't work, you despicable creature!"

Ashley Betcher was in a frenzy, angrily ranting and mocking all by herself, seemingly in a state of delirium on her bed.

Masain, holding his sword anxiously, quietly asked Logan.

"Is it a demon... Your Highness?"

Ashley's face, or rather the entity using Ashley's form, was contorted in a demonic fury.

Her eyes were so bulging with rage that the blood vessels seemed to burst, turning the whites into blood-red. She looked like a vengeful demon just risen from hell.

However, Logan, observing her intently, shook his head.

"It's different from the aura of a demon."

"What do you mean?"

"It seems like another soul, perhaps. It's as if multiple spirits are fighting inside this student's body."

Jonathan, shivering behind the group, whispered in a trembling voice.

"Then we should perform an exorcism..."

"That seems necessary. However, these spirits don't seem entirely malevolent, so I'm not sure if they'll be susceptible to holy power."

In the midst of this grave conversation, Seongjin alone was sweating profusely, his eyes darting around.

Wait... am I the only one thinking this way?

Aren't some of the spirits possessing Ashley Betcher those twins, Herna and Gades?

How they ended up here, I don't know, but should we really just exorcise them like this?

"Aargh!"

"Uugh!"

Ashley Betcher now appeared to be strangling herself, groaning in pain.

Her lips turned blue, and her eyes rolled back in her head, looking dangerously close to suffocating.

Seongjin involuntarily swallowed hard.

'Wow, this is intense...'

This isn't a horror movie, but her self-convulsing behavior is seriously spine-chilling.

Then the Demon King scoffed.

[Heh, you're a demon possessing Morres, and you're scared of this?]

'...Shut up!'

Isn't it natural to be creeped out? I can't even fight it with fists!

Besides, it's unfair to treat me the same. Even if I am a spirit, I am officially recognized by the Emperor!

"Your Highness! Please hurry! If we don't act now, she might truly die!"

At Jonathan's tearful plea, Logan steeled his expression.

He released the hilt of Arjuna and slowly approached Ashley Betcher, extending his hand enveloped in sacred white light.

"I'm not a formal exorcist, but I think I can mimic one poorly enough. Sir Masain, just in case, could you request support from a real exorcist?"

As Masain nodded and quickly left the room, Ashley, still strangling herself, rolled her eyes to glare at Logan.

"In the name of the Holy Emperor, I command you. Release this girl and return to where you belong."

"....."

Ashley, who had been calmly observing Logan's increasing divine energy, suddenly grinned maliciously, her eyes gleaming a strange yellow.

"Hahaha, you fool! There is no name for the great Holy Emperor here!"

Yet Logan remained undeterred, stepping closer with a firm voice.

"The Holy Emperor's power is the evidence of His presence in this world and His name!"

"Don't waste your time! The will of a nameless being is as hollow as the non-existent!"

"The will of the Sovereign exists clearly through His vicars. Lost and pitiful spirit, vanish!"

"Kuhh....."

Ashley gritted her teeth and glared at Logan.

Seongjin watched them with wide eyes.

The Holy Emperor had mentioned that the deity of Delcross wasn't a personal god, and now it seems they don't even have a name?

Seongjin made a belated resolution to actually read the introduction to theology sometime.

"I, I am..."

Ashley Betcher's momentum seemed to falter under Logan's unwavering demeanor.

She let go of her own neck and staggered back a step on the bed.

"I am not a mere spirit! Not a petty human soul! I am a demon!"

But Seongjin had doubts about that claim.

Though the entity claimed to be a demon, it seemed unaffected by Logan's increasingly bright holy power. Unlike the demon in Seongjin, who is terrified of holy power, Ashley's reaction was distinctly different.

Logan pressed on her but kept his distance, observing, likely for this reason.

"By the power of the Sovereign, I command. Disappear from here, spirit."

"I'm not a spirit!"

Suddenly, Ashley screamed violently.

A strong shockwave blasted through the room. The bed curtains fluttered, and the windows burst open rattling. Startled, Jonathan screamed and tumbled backward.

Angry over something, Ashley glared at them with furious eyes and spat out.

"I am the great Demon King that rules all of the demon world! The Demon King of Dreams who will become a great tale!"

"....."

"You all can struggle to erase me, but I am not one to be trapped in a mere psychic scar like a spirit!"

Suddenly, Seongjin flashed back to a past memory.

The Demon King of Dreams aspiring to become the king in the tales.

And the masked puppeteer who calmly narrated that story.

[What? The Demon King of Dreams?]

Not only Seongjin reacted. The demon roared in his head.

[Seongjin! Could that be the same one from the puppet show you mentioned?]

'Uh? I'm not sure... Hey, hey! Wait!'

Before Seongjin could say anything, the demon's presence vanished from his head.

Then, the next moment.

Ashley Betcher, who just flinched, started moving even more bizarrely.

"Grrrrr..."

Now she was holding her own collar with one hand and shaking her head violently with the other.

"Is it you? You little rat, did you launch that pathetic attack on me?"

"Who's this now! Why would a demon be wrapping itself in a holy barrier?"

"Alright, you! Let's settle this today!"

"Ah, it's you? You've become so insignificant I hardly recognized you!"

What are you doing still alive, suddenly showing up like this!"

"What, who are you? Do you know me? What are you?"

Ah, another voice has joined the chatter from Ashley's mouth.

They are now distinctly split into sides, engaging in a brawl with each other.

"Yeah! Go, our Red!"

"Wow! Hang in there, our Red!"

"Who's calling me Red?!"

It was an unprecedented chaotic mess.

Fortunately, this chaos didn't last long.

Just as Seongjin was tilting his head, wondering if the temperature in the ward had suddenly dropped...

[...Eek!]

The demon king in Seongjin's head returned, utterly terrified. Trembling and barely able to speak, its reaction was oddly familiar. Could it be?

Logan also seemed to sense something unusual. He looked up, puzzled, and said, "...Where is this holy energy coming from all of a sudden?"

Ashley Betcher, too, noticed the anomaly.

She stopped her soliloquy and blankly stared into space. For the first time, a look of fear appeared in her wide-open eyes.

"You... You are!"

Cough.

At that moment, Ashley spat out blood and collapsed to the floor.

* * *

Cough, cough.

In a dark basement, a man hunched over and coughed. Small droplets of blood sprinkled on the floor along with a metallic smell.

"...This is indeed a spectacle of self-destruction."

A girl watching the man crawling on the floor scoffed.

She was a petite girl, probably not yet ten, with long golden hair tied in twin braids, looking quite adorable.

However, her expression was excessively impassive and dark, as if she bore layers of sediment from countless years.

Romaine, the masked man, after struggling on the floor for a while, finally stopped coughing and wiped the blood from his mouth, smiling.

"It's alright. I did take some damage, but that's because I'm still not adept at this trickery."

"Trickery?"

"Yes. A certain clan's secret technique of creating phantoms by detaching a part of the soul."

He had used a technique known to the Cornsheim clan, adept in handling souls.

[TL/N: Refer to Chapter 42 on Cornsheim]

They created phantoms by detaching unnecessary parts of their souls, using these phantoms to channel while preserving the individual's ego.

It was a method that allowed the clan, which otherwise could have been engulfed in a collective consciousness like channeling monsters, to maintain their humanity.

The fragment of the soul that had possessed Ashley Betcher and then died was just a tiny part detached by Romaine, imitating the Cornsheim clan.

Ha. The girl let out a hollow laugh.

"No wonder it was floundering like a fish out of water. It wasn't even a proper soul fragment."

"Well, not exactly. That was still a part of me, albeit a clumsy one. I too had my emotional moments in my youth."

Romaine shrugged nonchalantly.

"Of course, it was insufficient to deceive the Holy Emperor of Delcross. I attempted to divert his attention, but the moment he realized the channel wasn't connected to my main body, he immediately destroyed the phantom without a word."

"Thinking of deceiving him... I wonder whether that's bold or foolhardy..."

The girl shook her head in disbelief.

The Holy Emperor of Delcross.

How could such a being exist among humans? She still couldn't comprehend it.

Just when she thought she had almost successfully eroded the continent, he suddenly appeared in the Imperial City, swept away her forces, and became its sole Holy Emperor.

And since then, for a considerable time, he has successfully held Delcross under his influence. A feat unthinkable for the previous Holy Emperors.

Under his protection, demonkind couldn't even approach Delcross. It was so severe that even though she was in a human girl's body, she dared not enter the Imperial City, merely lurking around.

Currently, Romaine was the only ally capable of freely moving in and out of the Imperial City.

He was an enigma, making her hesitant to keep him close, but she had no other choice.

"It's truly a man without any openings. For now, all we can hope is that Prince Leonard will play his part during the Birthday Celebration. If he really manages to seduce the princess, it would be ideal."

Romaine, nonchalantly dusting off his robe, seemed remarkably calm, a stark contrast to his earlier anger over their foiled plans.

"Yes. But was it necessary to enter the Imperial Palace using the last semi-bloomed seed?"

The girl's question was legitimate.

Ashley Betcher, had she been left alone with the egg, might have eventually blossomed. Even in its premature state, she could have been a valuable asset for the next plan.

But Romaine shook his head.

"The Grey Plague plan was already exposed to the Holy Emperor. It's impossible to execute a failed plan again. While I could exert influence, I needed to see someone with my own eyes."

The Third Prince, Morres.

For the first time, Romaine had clearly seen the true nature of the prince the Holy Emperor had been hiding in the Imperial Palace. A self-assured smile unknowingly spread beneath his half-mask.

The girl stepped forward, gently wrapping her hands around his chin.

"What did you see? You seem quite certain. It's good to see."

"Indeed, it's an honor."

"Your voice is also very pleasing. Tell me more, Romaine."

Her small, cherry-like lips exhaled a sweet breath.

"At least you can tell me, can't you? Where is the labyrinth? Where is your main body now?"

But Romaine gently pushed away her [Temptation], smiling.

"That's a conversation for when we've made more progress. Oh, Sovereign of [Greed]."

Bertrand Street.

Located in the western part of the Imperial City, this beautiful street, originally started as a logistics warehouse area, is now the cultural hub with a series of splendid theater buildings. Although most of the old warehouses behind these grand buildings are now used for storing theater props or hosting temporary performances by foreign troupes, a significant number still stand empty.

One of these warehouses served as a meeting place for a group from Rohan.

Late evening.

When Romaine entered the building, he paused upon finding Prince Leonard, unusually sober and sitting quietly. The prince, typically dressed casually, was now neatly attired in traditional Rohan garments and had his hair neatly combed with fragrant oil.

"Hey, Romaine. Where have you been wandering at this late hour? I thought you quit playing with drunks at Darron."

Romaine, sensing that the impatient prince must have been up to something during his absence, asked cautiously, "Did you go somewhere, Leo?"

Leonard's attire, though tidy, was hardly fitting for royalty. He shrugged nonchalantly and picked up a bottle of liquor.

"It's nothing. I was frustrated with how long it was taking to get permission to enter the Imperial Palace as a guest."

"Surely you didn't..."

"Yes, I disguised myself as part of a diplomatic delegation and went to the palace."

Leonard took a swig from the bottle and wiped his mouth with his sleeve.

"The palace might stop the royal family of Rohan at the gates, but they allow entry to diplomatic delegations bearing gifts. So I followed the Rohan delegation into the audience chamber."

Romaine was at a loss for words.

Despite the disguise, Leonard's face was too well-known to risk such exposure. What a scandal it would be if someone recognized him.

"Don't worry. I stayed hidden among the crowd and kept my head down. I shouldn't have been noticed."

His voice lacked the usual confidence.

"Just wanted to see the princess's face out of sheer frustration. Unfortunately, I didn't meet her, but I did get a close look at that damned man causing all the trouble."

"The Holy Emperor... You met him?"

"Yes. That man, his temperament is..."

"What happened?"

"Oh, nothing much. Just the way he glared at me..."

Leonard suddenly shivered, as if recalling something frightening.

Even amid a crowd of diplomatic envoys, Leonard's striking appearance seemed to captivate attention. As he fumbled for words and took another swig of his drink, Romaine realized something.

He had been recognized.

And deep down, Leonard seemed to regret this realization a bit.

"He couldn't have known my face," Leonard mused.

"You should not have underestimated him as a mere human," Romaine reminded him, sighing and sitting opposite the prince.

Considering the water had already been spilled, and fortunately, Leonard hadn't embarrassed himself in front of the foreign delegates, it seemed best to just feign ignorance and return to the palace as a dignitary.

"If Your Highness plans to approach his daughter, who knows how he will react. It's better to be cautious from now on."

"Should I really stop then?" Leonard's uncharacteristically timid response contrasted sharply with his usual bold demeanor, but Romaine wasn't overly concerned. He knew well enough that by tomorrow morning, Leonard would likely regain his confidence and nag him to arrange another meeting with the princess.

"Oh! Speaking of which, there was something odd during the audience."

Leonard, now flush from alcohol, rested his chin on his hand and continued.

During the presentation of gifts from Brittany and other regions, just as a page was about to announce the envoy from Asein, the Holy Emperor suddenly raised his hand to stop him.

Amidst a sudden, heavy silence in the audience chamber, the Holy Emperor slowly touched his forehead and closed his eyes. Everyone, puzzled by his actions, watched in confusion. Leonard, standing relatively close to the throne, distinctly heard the Holy Emperor's low murmur.

—So noisy...

In the vast audience chamber, filled with silent, attentive people, it was perplexing what he found so noisy.

After a moment, the Holy Emperor opened his eyes and the audience resumed as if nothing had happened.

But Leonard was already left with an indelible impression of the Emperor as a remarkably unpleasant and unfathomable man.

Hearing this, Romaine came to a new realization.

His own soul fragment, which had possessed Ashley Betcher, was it destroyed not because it was discovered but simply because it was noisy?

After a while of silently sipping his drink, Leonard suddenly hung his head and spoke in a subdued voice.

"Listen, Romaine. I always took your words lightly, but seeing the Holy Emperor of Delcross up close, he was truly different."

"..."

"Just sitting there, I could feel how terrifying he was."

Leonard then looked up, casting a somewhat desperate gaze.

"Tell me, Romaine. Can we really do anything against someone like him?"

Romaine silently met his gaze, then gently placed a hand on his shoulder.

[He has been alone until now and will continue to be. He is surrounded by enemies, and they are extremely powerful. He has nowhere to retreat and will slowly wither away here in Delcross.]

Hearing Romaine's mystically charged voice, Leonard's expression visibly relaxed. He nodded and took another drink without a word.

Yet, behind the mask, Romaine's eyes were shaded with a hint of darkness.

At the same time, a long procession of carriages was heading towards the northern gate of Delcross. Despite the late hour, these were the priests who had been on far-reaching pastoral missions, now returning for the Birthday Celebration, thanks to the support of the Orthodox Church.

"We are approaching the gates of the capital, Sister Sisle. My heart flutters, which shows how long we have been away."

Inside the gently rocking carriage, a young girl, engrossed in a book, lifted her head. Her long, silvery hair flowed softly, adding to her angelic appearance, like a celestial being from a sacred painting.

"I didn't realize you missed the capital so much, Sister Ursula," she remarked.

"Me? Didn't I tell you how much I love Delcross?"

Sister Ursula, slightly dramatic, peered out of the carriage window with excitement. "If it weren't for our mission to spread the grace of the Divine across the continent, I wouldn't have left home for so long."

The girl tilted her head, puzzled. "Weren't you the one who always complained about being stuck in the capital, longing to travel on pastoral missions?"

Sister Ursula chuckled, admitting that her recent experiences had reaffirmed her love for Delcross.

Closing her eyes, she deeply inhaled, savoring the air of Delcross. "Indeed, nearing the capital feels different! I thought the sisters were exaggerating, but returning after a long absence, I can sense the immense influence of His Majesty the Emperor."

Sister Ursula wasn't particularly powerful in divine energy, but even she could feel the strong holy aura intensifying as they neared Delcross. It was no wonder that visiting clergy from distant lands often stopped near the gate, overwhelmed with tears of emotion.

She clasped her hands together, overwhelmed. "Such a powerful presence! Truly, Delcross under the care of the Divine's representative is a blessed holy nation, Sister Sisle!"

Sister Sisle's expression darkened slightly. Ursula, puzzled by her subdued response, was soon distracted by the commotion outside.

The inspection at the gate was unusually stringent, causing the procession to slow down.

"Today's inspection seems particularly strict."

Indeed, armed knights and guards swarmed out, checking each carriage and its occupants. Usually, a quick confirmation of the identities of the leading knights and priests sufficed, but the heightened security seemed excessive, even considering the upcoming Birth Celebration.

Soon, it was the turn of the carriage carrying Sister Sisle and Sister Ursula. The inspection officers arrived at their door.

He knocked politely on the carriage door and cautiously opened it. The knight was from the 5th Knight Order, assigned to guard the gate.

Seeing two people in radiant religious attire, he quickly bowed his head. Every citizen of Delcross would recognize the face of the young Saintess with her long silver hair.

"The grace of the Divine descended upon Delcross is before us!"

The knight respectfully greeted them, prompting Sisle to inquire, "Is there a problem in the capital?"

"Yes, Saintess. Recently, a creature called a 'monster beast' appeared in the capital, causing some disturbance. This has made the inspection process at the Birthday Celebration more stringent."

Monster beast? What's that?

Sister Ursula blinked in confusion, while the young Saintess asked with a trembling voice, "A monster beast? How can that be?"

Sisle's clear grey eyes reflected her dismay. She quickly flipped through her small diary, found a page, and stared intently at it.

"It can't be. A major gate opening in the capital was not due for several more months..."

"Huh?"

Sisle's incomprehensible murmur left Ursula and the knight exchanging confused glances.

"What's... what has changed?"

The knight, noticing the young girl's face turning pale, quickly reassured, "But don't worry! The Holy Knights of Delcross quickly exterminated the demon beasts. The capital is now safe."

Sisle remained silent, contemplating.

"Moreover, Prince Morres, the 3rd Prince, personally slew the largest of the demon beasts. He is leading a special task force called the 'Monster Special Task Force', so such vile creatures won't dare tread in Delcross anymore!"

"His Highness... Morres?"

Sister Ursula's expression turned awkward, but the knight vigorously nodded, adding, "Yes, indeed! It's the second time His Highness has slain such a creature. Previously, he saved students from an attack at the Academy. Despite various rumors about the Prince, he is truly a noble member of the imperial family..."

"Morres..."

Sisle repeated the somewhat unfamiliar name, flipping through her diary again.

Certainly, around this time, it was noted that the chubby troublemaker had decided to focus on swordsmanship.

Monster Special Task Force.

She couldn't recall reading about such a unit, and unsurprisingly, her diary had no mention of it either.

"Sisle," Sister Ursula said softly.

Sister Ursula's worried voice reached her from beside her.

"The Monster Special Task Force."

The Saintess's eyes settled with a calmness beyond her years. If something differed from what she knew, it likely wasn't unrelated to this unfamiliar unit.

She closed her diary and held it tightly against her chest.

Let's not panic.

Once back at the palace, she planned to thoroughly investigate this Monster Special Task Force. And then...

"...I need to meet him, Morres."

To her knowledge, Morres, who should have been wandering aimlessly for a long time unable to accumulate aura, was now a skilled warrior capable of slaying monster beasts. Wasn't he leading the Monster Special Task Force too?

Perhaps.

He might just be the crucial wildcard that could help her escape her destined fate.

Staring quietly in the direction of the palace, a resolute light flickered in the young girl's grey eyes.

"There should be no issue with those students."

That evening, while observing Seongjin's complexion, Masain cautiously opened the conversation. It was after he had already briefed the Saint Aurelion Knights about the incident at the Imperial Medical Wing.

Suddenly, Ashley Betcher, who had collapsed vomiting blood, was in a state of severe shock due to the exorcism of the evil spirit that had possessed her.

Fortunately, Logan quickly healed him with his divine power, but afterwards, Ashley reverted back to her initial state, resembling an empty puppet.

Jonathan called for a doctor, and soon after, Masain and the Saint Aurelion paladins rushed into the infirmary.

The plan was to request the help of an exorcist, but Francis was already on his way, leading the paladins urgently.

Considering how the Saint Aurelion paladins usually operate like the limbs of the Holy Emperor, Seongjin speculated that it was probably influenced by the Holy Emperor's intervention.

Taking into account the interference from the twins, who were suspected not to be twins, and the deployment time of the paladins, it seemed reasonable to assume that the Holy Emperor had intervened the moment Ashley's possession began.

"Anyway, in the capital, it seems impossible to avoid the eyes of that gentleman, no matter what happens..."

Upon arrival, Francis briefly examined Ashley's condition and then, along with the paladins, took her and Jonathan away.

Jonathan, who kept looking back anxiously, seemed to be of some concern.

"The involvement of the Saint Aurelion paladins means that the students are now under the care of Dame Katrina. So, please set your worries aside, Your Highness."

Masain reassured Seongjin again.

"Dame Katrina is a person of excellent character. Any matter she handles will undoubtedly be dealt with fairly and justly."

Yes, if it's Dame Katrina, somehow, I do trust her. After all, she is the Knight Commander who even the fierce Francis deeply respects.

Finally feeling a bit relieved, Seongjin could focus his thoughts on other matters.

It seemed that the Holy Emperor himself had exorcised the evil spirit that had possessed Ashley Betcher.

Even after returning to Pearl Palace, the Demon King, who had been shivering in Seongjin's head for a long time, later admitted it.

[Yeah, your father came and went. Wow, that soul, even seeing it again, really...]

'What happened to the evil spirit?'

[Of course, it died! I just touched it, and that pathetic thing's soul was instantly crushed, leaving no trace.]

But at the same time, the Holy Emperor was said to be meeting foreign diplomats in the audience chamber. So, his body must have been in the main palace while his soul briefly visited the infirmary.

Last time, he followed Seongjin to the boundary of dimensions, so it seems the Holy Emperor has some easy method of astral projection.

Indeed, being a divine proxy, he is an individual who transcends normal understanding in many ways.

But leaving aside that almost inhuman individual, what about the twins who suddenly intruded during Ashley's possession?

Herna and Gades. Could those extraordinary children also perform astral projection like the Holy Emperor?

However, the Demon King's explanation was slightly different.

[Well, it's hard to say those were proper souls...]

After pondering for a moment, the Demon King then gave an unexpected answer.

[There were certainly two different soul auras at that time. Thinking about it now, it seemed somewhat similar to the souls of those twins we've seen before. But it wasn't a complete soul. Rather, it felt more like a fragment of a soul that had broken off from somewhere.]

'...Soul fragment?'

Seongjin blinked.

Huh? That sounds familiar, doesn't it?

[Yeah, right. It was a similar feeling to them.]

Arenja.

The spiritual surveillance network that watches over the capital from beneath the surface.

And then the Demon King strongly affirmed Seongjin's speculation.

[Moreover, one of them was someone we've already met. Remember? When you climbed over the wall of the Imperial Palace, that one who told us to follow you.]

'.....!'

And then, the words the Demon King had said before flashed through Seongjin's mind.

—Another one has appeared. A more powerful one... Huh? This one seems to understand us?

—That guy is asking you to follow him for a while. What will you do?

Was it one of the twins?

Herna and Gades are part of Arenja?

'Whoa, wait a minute...!'

Seongjin felt his mind suddenly become alert.

'No, think about it, it makes sense, doesn't it? Why didn't I suspect this earlier?'

The twins had known about the existence of the Demon King for a long time, and Arenja was also aware of the Demon King.

The twins are speculated to be high-level channelers, sharing quite a bit of information with the Holy Emperor.

Then, wouldn't it be strange if they had no connection with the secret organization of channelers operated by the Holy Emperor!

As Seongjin grasped his head in self-reproach, the Demon King offered some consolation.

[Well, they are minors, after all.]

'.....'

He couldn't deny that he had let his guard down because they were just kids.

Anyway, now that he knew, verifying the truth of this matter was simple.

Without delay, Seongjin called for Commander Bruno to his room.

"Yes, Princess Herna and Prince Gades are unofficially part of Arenja."

Soon after arriving in Seongjin's room, the commander, gazing into the air and channeling for a while with Arenja, eventually nodded.

"It's an internal secret known only to the insiders, not well-known publicly. Oh, and..."

The commander, focusing as if listening to something, added more.

"Yes, yes. They were also the ones who named that Reddy 'Red.'"

"...Huh?"

[What?]

The Demon King was shocked.

[They did? Those little...! I'll never forgive them! Aaaargh!]

As the Demon King noisily fumed, Commander Bruno provided Seongjin with a more detailed explanation.

"All internal agents of Arenja are high-level channelers capable of creating terminals of souls. They not only receive thoughts but also move parts of actual souls to survey every corner of the capital."

Terminals of souls.

The incomplete soul fragments that the Demon King saw were actually small terminal devices created from parts of these psychics' souls.

They used such devices for safety reasons. If something happened to the terminal, their souls preserved inside the palace would remain safe.

Moreover, Commander Bruno added that completely detaching and moving one's soul involves significant risks.

"Then why does the Holy Emperor, unlike other members of Arenja, roam around using his soul directly instead of creating terminals?"

If it's possible for the twins, wouldn't it be possible for the Emperor as well?

Lost in thought, Seongjin was interrupted when Edith entered the room and quietly set down a teacup. She had brought tea without being asked, sensing the conversation might be lengthy.

'Edith is improving!'

Seongjin felt a sense of pride.

Edith, who used to be oblivious to such nuances, seemed to have learned a thing or two after the recent increase in the maid staff at Pearl Palace.

"Today's soul terminals you encountered are likely belonging to Princess Herna and Prince Gades. They are stronger channelers than other internal agents and are quick to detect anomalies in the palace," said Commander Bruno, lifting his steaming teacup.

"They mainly live outside the palace, so they are on the boundary between internal and external agents and do not have official duties. After all, they are still quite young."

Seeing the noticeable cheer on his face as he spoke, Seongjin couldn't help but ask, "Do you like tea, Commander?"

"Haha. Embarrassingly so, Your Highness. I often enjoyed it when I worked in the palace. It was a rather simple pleasure."

The hardest part of living outside the palace was not being able to drink good tea, the commander said while idly stroking his sharply angled mustache.

Indeed, the more he was observed, the more he seemed to possess noble characteristics.

"Of course, I didn't like it from the beginning. Just touching the tea would stir up various gossip. Those who mocked me for my humble origins, saying I didn't even know how to drink tea, later scoffed that I was pretending to be a noble."

"How did you come to like it?"

"If I was going to be ridiculed anyway, I thought it was better to enjoy what I wanted. Once I thought that way, suddenly the tea tasted good."

Indeed. He was a person of strong mentality, having endured in the palace all the way to becoming a commander despite his commoner background.

"Anyway, Your Highness. The same goes for the soul that possessed the academy student today. Arenja says it was not a complete soul but closer to an incomplete terminal made from a fragment of a soul."

"What does that mean?"

"Yes, the art of creating soul terminals. Whoever that person is, they must also be a high-level channeler."

Seongjin frowned.

"And their real soul is still alive and well."

"Exactly."

Commander Bruno nodded, took a sip of his tea, and...

"Pffft!"

He dramatically spat it out!

"...Edith?"

As droplets of tea splashed everywhere, Edith silently sweated and avoided eye contact.

Edith, it seemed, had made no progress in the art of making tea.

* * *

The most admired young ladies among the Delcross noblemen recently were two people.

The beautiful rose of the palace, Princess Amelia.

And the elegant flower of the social circles, Isabella Scarcepino.

All the noblemen hoped to be chosen as their partners at the ball, and they would spend sleepless nights just to brush past their gowns once.

However, just for one day.

On the main banquet of the annual birthday celebration, no gentleman dared to ask them to be their partners, as their partners for that day were always predetermined.

But now.

"...You're attending with a different partner this year?"

Isabella's face contorted oddly as she read the reply from Pearl Palace. She had sent a letter to coordinate dress codes, only to receive an unexpected response.

"Oh my, really? Isn't that a good thing? Our beautiful Isabella with that unsightly prince, even if it's Her Majesty the Queen's command, how could that be appropriate?"

"....."

A naive maid chattered without understanding the situation.

Indeed. Since Prince Morres reached the age to attend the ball, Isabella always accompanied him to the birthday banquet as a sign of respect for the engagement talks.

Of course, it wasn't pleasant. The prince was not only unsightly in appearance, but his manners towards ladies were atrociously bad.

The only reason she accompanied Prince Morres was due to the intense pressure from Queen Lizabeth.

Passing this role to another fiancée wasn't feasible either.

Julia Meyer would come to the ball in knight's uniform, more like a farmhand, and Lady Balua was merely a child who had just weaned off her mother's milk.

"Finally free, Miss! Now you can truly enjoy the grandest ball in Delcross!"

'Freedom...'

It was true.

But the mere thought of that disgusting prince ruined her appetite.

Yet, oddly enough, her pride was hurt to attend with someone else.

"So, Miss, who will you go to the ball with now? Perhaps the renowned Young Master Siegmund... Eek! How wonderful!"

Ignoring the jumping maid, Isabella left the room.

As the most famous person in social circles, she didn't like the idea of proposing a partner first, and with the ball approaching, she had no suitable candidate in mind.

So, in a rush, she thought about asking her older brothers for help, but...

"I can't leave Olivier alone. Sorry."

Her eldest brother, Dominico, who was already engaged, refused.

"You know, don't you? I don't attend the birthday celebration every year."

Riccardo, her second brother, also gently refused with a kind smile.

"Why not?"

Isabella asked, puzzled.

The second brother she knew was extremely sociable. He enjoyed drinking, romancing, and engaging in conversations with people from various fields.

He was the most welcomed guest in all the salons of the capital, and the regular meetings he organized were coveted gatherings that the influential heirs of Delcross eagerly sought invitations to.

At his sister's question, Riccardo lifted his head, his eyes briefly unfocused, as he stared off into the distance. Then, with a smile that was somewhat ambiguous, he answered.

"Regrettably, I cannot enter the palace."

"Yes, that Prince Morres, you see..."

After hearing the whole story from Isabella, Riccardo nodded.

"My, my. To turn down the flower among flowers, endowed with both beauty and intelligence, my beautiful Bella, the fairest of them all in the capital! It seems that the fellow hasn't yet recovered from the aftermath of his fever."

Rubbing her arms, which were prickling with goosebumps, Isabella scowled.

"...Brother, sometimes you say the creepiest things so nonchalantly."

"Why not just say I'm rich in sensibility? And it's not like I'm wrong, is it? Even among the foreign dignitaries, there are whispers. In the salons of Delcross, there's an elegant one who captures everyone's attention..."

"Brother Riccardo!"

Unable to bear the cringe, her eyes narrowed at her smirking brother.

"Well, speaking of which, there have been rumors lately that he's changed quite a bit. Perhaps he's had some sort of change of heart. He hasn't been coming around to the townhouse these days."

"Brother, haven't you seen him lately either?"

"Unfortunately, that's the case. I can't go to him, so he has to come to me, but there's no reply at all, even though I send him invitations to our weekly gatherings."

Prince Morres used to visit the Scarcepino mansion often at Riccardo's invitation.

What Isabella found curious was this: Prince Morres and Riccardo were quite consistently friends, despite not only their age difference but also their completely opposing reputations. It was beyond her guess as to what had brought these two seemingly unrelated people together.

"Why do you associate with such a rascal, Brother?"

Her question was met with Riccardo's hearty laughter.

"So you see him that way too. But even if you knew what the Prince sees, would you still say such a thing? The more I get to know him, the more interesting a friend he turns out to be."

Riccardo, having dropped this somewhat mysterious remark, stroked his smooth, handsome chin, lost in thought.

"Anyway, what's important now is finding you an escort partner. It's a bit awkward to say he's my substitute, but how about Young Master Siegmund? The top flower of the social circle, a partner who might be suitable for my beautiful Bella?"

"....."

Isabella was at a loss for words.

For a moment, she suspected that her playfully teasing older brother was making fun of her again.

...Really, that Young Master Siegmund?

"Yes. I recently had the opportunity to build a friendship with him. If it's my suggestion, he won't refuse. What do you say?"

If Riccardo's words were true, Isabella naturally had no reason to refuse.

If the most sought-after individuals by the noblemen of the capital were Princess Amelia and Isabella, then for the ladies, it was Prince Logan and Siegmund.

She didn't like to admit it, but frankly, Siegmund was in a different league from her.

Though she was the daughter of a nouveau riche who had sought asylum in Ortana and was subtly looked down upon, he was the eldest son of a great noble, the foremost knight of the continent, and a disciple of Balthazar.

A genius swordsman who had conquered swordsmanship tournaments in many countries, he was an idol to the young lords of Delcross and aspiring knights. He was a celebrity, ranked alongside Prince Logan, a likely future Emperor.

If she could be with him, Isabella would surely become the most noticed lady at her birthday celebration!

The fact that Prince Morres had rejected her was no longer even in her mind.

"...Yes. If my lovely sister likes it, then I am happy too."

Riccardo smiled knowingly, looking at Isabella's excited face.

And the next day.

Isabella, having received a letter from Orden Siegmund expressing his wish to match dress codes, headed to Deste Street with a fluttering heart.

The atmosphere in the palace was strangely excited from the morning.

It was because the third Princess Sisle had returned the night before.

Although there was no grand parade like when Logan returned, the return of the empire's proud young saintess was a welcome news to everyone.

And Seongjin, meeting the little girl who had come to him with Amelia that morning, blinked his eyes.

Those clear gray eyes seemed familiar.

The long hair shining in silver.

The girl, looking like a delicately carved piece of crystal with her beautiful face, held a small book dearly in her hands and stared intently at Seongjin's face.

"It's been a while, Morres-orabeoni. You've changed a lot."

Brother.

This extremely unfamiliar term made Seongjin feel strangely. It reminded him that Morres indeed had a sister.

All the twins he had met till now always tried to compete with him.

"Uh, hello."

Seongjin waved his hand awkwardly at the girl.

"So... you were Sisle, right? Sorry. Actually, I've been suffering from a fever recently..."

"I know. You lost your memory, right? Amelia told me. You must have had a hard time."

"....."

Her bland expression as she uttered kind words created a strange sense of dissonance.

"I heard a lot on the way here. Brother, you've been quite active lately, haven't you?"

"Huh?"

"Remarkable. Despite having just recovered from illness, you've been training and managing the Monster Special Task Force. Impressive."

"....."

He just couldn't get used to the discordance between her thoughtful words and expressionless face!

What's with her? Is she a robot?

Then, tilting her head, Sisle asked curiously.

"But Brother, what is that thing next to you?"

".....!"

Oh no! I forgot, she's a saintess!

He could feel the Demon King inside him quiver.

It seemed that high-ranking clergy, like cardinals, could faintly sense the presence of the Demon King, even with the Emperor's barriers.

Even Logan once mentioned to Seongjin that he felt a sinister aura by his side.

If so, the saintess, boasting the highest divine power among the Emperor's children, would definitely notice the Demon King!

What should he do? What if she immediately tries to exorcise the Demon King?

Seongjin was tense, but contrary to his worries, the girl continued in an indifferent tone.

"Brother, it's strange what you carry around. I don't remember reading about such a thing."

"....."

"Anyway, be careful of the high priests. Especially Archbishop Benitus. The old gentlemen will probably notice it right away."

Leaving the Demon King alone, Sisle didn't seem like the most devout servant of the Lord, despite being a saintess.

Well, maybe that's the same for the Emperor, the representative of God.

While he was silently acknowledging this, Sisle suddenly asked an out-of-the-blue question.

"By the way, Brother Morres, what's your ideal type like?"

...Huh?

"Do you like women who are pure and tender, who can understand your pain?"

...Huh?

"Do you find yourself attracted to women with exotic, black hair?"

"...What?"

He couldn't understand the context at all!

While Seongjin was confused, Sisle continued to speak with her inorganic, statue-like expression, as if she had a lot to say. Her face was as expressive as the Emperor himself.

"Be careful of such women. Understand? Clinging desperately to a popular woman will only be a loss if she doesn't pay attention to you. It's the tragedy of being second-best."

"...Um?"

"Oh, I just stopped by to say hello today. I have to go to the main palace and then to the Orthodox Church for work, so I'll be going first."

"Ah, okay. Take care."

"Goodbye then. See you later, Brother."

With that, Sisle left as quickly as she came, still clutching the small book in her arms.

...What was that all about?

Stunned, Seongjin gazed in the direction where the girl had disappeared, while Amelia, who had been silently watching them, smiled brightly.

"It seems like the first time you two have talked so affectionately. Family is indeed a wonderful thing."

...Glad it seemed affectionate, Sister.

With the birthday celebration approaching, the busiest place in the capital was undoubtedly Deste Street, where the tailoring shops were clustered.

Designers and seamstresses with dark circles under their eyes worked through the night, feverishly altering and adjusting outfits, making Deste Street as lively as a night market even in the early hours.

Typically, party dresses are ordered well in advance, but the problem arises when many events overlap, requiring last-minute changes to already finished outfits. Whether due to personal reasons or family circumstances, it was not uncommon for party partners to change just before the event.

In such cases, typically, the design and alterations revolve around the one with the higher status. And for Isabella Scarcepino, touted as the flower of high society, this was no exception.

Isabella, along with her own dress designer, entered the Salon de Merci, a men's tailoring shop.

"Oh my, Miss Scarcepino!"

Several young ladies, who were chatting in the salon, were startled and stood up upon noticing Isabella. Like her, they too had their partners changed unexpectedly.

They seemed to guess why Isabella was visiting a men's tailoring shop.

"Are you not attending the birthday celebration with Prince Morres this year?"

"Yes, that's how it turned out."

"Oh my..."

The ladies' eyes sparkled.

Whoever had brought Isabella to a men's salon must be of no low standing.

"I wonder who the lucky gentleman is who will escort the beautiful Miss Scarcepino."

"Ha ha, you'll see soon enough, so let's save the excitement for later."

Isabella smiled and took a seat gracefully.

Reading a certain confidence in her demeanor, the ladies refrained from prying further and resumed their conversations.

"By the way, have you heard the news? About the young lady from the Balua family?"

"Ah, the little girl who's rumored to be in talks for an engagement with the Third Prince?"

"Yes, apparently she sends flowers to the Pearl Palace every day with utmost devotion."

"Really?"

Although pretending to be uninterested and flipping through a design book, Isabella's ears perked up, attentively listening to the ladies' conversation.

One young lady, with a look of pity, asked, "Oh dear, has she ever met Prince Morres in person? I wonder if that poor little girl is under some kind of misunderstanding..."

"That's not entirely the case. Rumor has it that she visits the Jinju Palace weekly, having tea and warmly chatting with the Prince."

"Oh my! That's true love that transcends appearances!"

"The young lady is truly admirable."

And with that, they burst into giggles, finding the situation cute.

Isabella swallowed a bitter smile as she listened to their chatter. She felt like she was being equated with that adorable little girl.

Despite being known as the flower of society and one of Delcross's most beautiful women, Isabella knew she could never be matched with someone like Prince Logan.

A refugee noble from Ortana, who amassed a fortune through civil war.

Lacking notable lineage, her only claim to fame was wealth, often derogatorily nicknamed as a nouveau riche who profited from selling her country.

The only reason she was even considered for a match with the imperial family was because Prince Morres was seen as a disgrace and a worthless troublemaker of the imperial line.

And Prince Morres himself, aware of this, had always looked at Isabella in such a way.

With a gaze devoid of any emotion, as if looking at a lesser being.

Unwittingly, Isabella bit her lip hard.

But her thoughts were abruptly interrupted.

One of the young ladies gasped in surprise and pointed towards the entrance of Salon de Merci, creating a stir.

"Oh my! What's happening? Look, there's Princess Amelia and Prince Morres!"

Initially, Isabella didn't recognize Prince Morres at once. The tall, handsome boy who entered with Princess Amelia seemed very unfamiliar to her.

"...Huh? Eh?"

The young lady, who had shouted out that it was Prince Morres just by seeing the royal carriage and hair color, now stood gaping, having forgotten to cover her mouth with her fan. Even the lady beside her rubbed her eyes so hard that her eye makeup began to smear, oblivious to it.

There, stood a prince like something out of a fairy tale!

Had it not been for the sharp eyes resembling those of Queen Lizabeth or the unique hair color, no one would have easily realized that the boy was Prince Morres.

"Shouldn't I be the one matching my outfit to my sister?"

"Not necessarily, Morres."

"Is that so?"

"The hierarchy in the salon is also important. Salon de Merci is the most famous in Delcross."

The Third Prince was known for his discord with the other princes and princesses, but now it seemed like a baseless rumor. The way they entered, arm in arm, chatting amiably, looked very affectionate.

The moment the beautiful siblings entered, it seemed as if the interior of the salon brightened up instantaneously.

".....!"

Leaving the young ladies, who were petrified with shock, behind, the prince and princess proceeded towards the private room, receiving Madame Justine's excessive hospitality.

And as they disappeared from view, the young ladies finally let out the breath they had been holding, bursting into exclamations.

"Oh my! Goodness, what in the world!"

"How can someone change so much in such a short time? I can't believe my eyes even though I'm seeing it right in front of me!"

"Now that I see, the prince is definitely a true member of the Imperial family! He resembles both His Majesty and Queen Lizabeth!"

"There was a reason why the little lady of Balua was so smitten!"

And then, all eyes turned towards Isabella.

Their gazes had now shifted from seeing her as a plump, ill-mannered girl, rumored to be betrothed as a match of convenience, to the heroine of a romance novel, poised for a rise in status after being chosen by the prince.

"....."

Isabella, too, was almost losing her mind due to the sudden turn of events, but in front of the young ladies, she had no choice but to hide her startled heart and force a calm smile.

"As you can see, His Highness has completely recovered from his illness."

"Oh, yes."

"Hehe, that's good to hear....."

However, even afterwards, Isabella's heart, which had started pounding shockingly, couldn't easily calm down.

The embarrassment of not knowing the recent situation of the one she was rumored to be betrothed to.

The feeling of betrayal when, as soon as his appearance changed, he blatantly rejected her.

The prince's affectionate gaze towards Princess Amelia, so different from the way he looked at her.

Thus, even when Young Master Siegmund arrived, and the young ladies burst into another round of intense exclamations, Isabella couldn't genuinely enjoy their envious gazes.

"How about lightening the tone of both your outfits a bit?"

The designer suggested, laying several pieces of high-quality fabric in front of them.

"This year's trend for party dresses is to avoid bright reds and use lighter fabrics. Otherwise, the red gold buttons and accessories will look like ordinary gold."

"Red gold?"

"Yes, Your Highness. It's a precious metal recently imported from the Duchy of Asein. We've only received a very small quantity in our salon. Considering its noble value, I believe it would be the perfect ornament to enhance both of your high statuses."

"Alright, just handle it appropriately."

While the Young Master was nodding carelessly, Isabella quietly observed him from the corner of her eye.

Orden Siegmund.

Heir to the Duke of Siegmund and a famous disciple of the renowned Sir Balthazar. A young and formidable genius swordsman.

Although they had no personal acquaintance and had only seen each other at major events, up close, he appeared even more stoic than the rumors suggested. He seemed like a man who brought the cold air of the northern territories to Delcross.

His attitude towards Isabella was relatively polite, but that was all.

The occasional glances Orden cast her way were nothing but indifferent.

How could that be?

In the barren north, it would be difficult to find a beauty as captivating as Isabella.

"But, can it be altered in time?"

"As for the Young Master, since he must wear the family's grand attire, we can keep the basic structure of the outfit and just modify the sash and epaulettes slightly. However, for Lady Scarcepino..."

The designer, having said that much, covertly glanced at Isabella.

"To match with the Young Master's attire, it would be better to replace almost all parts of the fabric, except for the flounces. This would mean starting from the cutting again and scheduling a new fitting, which might be a bit..."

"....."

"Oh, of course, our salon will do our utmost to meet the schedule! If Lady allows us some leeway, perhaps at this year's birthday celebration, the two of you will be the best couple in the capital....."

As Isabella remained silent for a moment, Orden turned his head to look down at her.

"Do you have any objections, Lady Scarcepino?"

It probably wasn't really a question about whether she had any objections.

Over the years, ruling the social circles of the capital, Isabella had become adept at dealing with people and could clearly sense it.

The desolate gaze that looked down on anything lesser than herself.

In Orden's eyes, there was neither affection nor respect for her, not even a trace of warmth.

'Yes, just like Prince Morres had been...'

The belle of the ball, the greatest beauty of Delcross.

Despite such praises, in the end, what others thought of her amounted to just this much.

Isabella managed to barely lift the corners of her trembling lips and responded.

"Yes. I think it would be best to follow the designer's opinion. Let's do that."

Perhaps it was because of the unexpected events happening one after another recently.

Despite her long experience in the social world, she felt as if she might burst into tears at any moment.

It was Amelia who first brought up the topic of the dress code.

It seemed like a hassle, but aligning the party dress designs a little was apparently a matter of courtesy to one's partner.

And so, she personally came looking for him, bringing a dress designer to match her design to Seongjin's.

That's how Seongjin ended up visiting Salon de Merci side by side with Amelia.

"Shouldn't I be the one matching my outfit to my sister?"

Wasn't it customary for the one of lower status or younger age to follow the lead of the one who's higher or older?

However, Amelia replied with a gentle smile.

"Not necessarily, Morres."

"Is that so?"

"The hierarchy among the salons is also important. Salon de Merci is the most famous in Delcross. From the perspective of other designers, it's difficult to order Madame Justine around."

At this, Amelia's designer chimed in agreement.

"Yes, Princess, you're absolutely right. It's so considerate of you to take our salon's position into account! Moreover, Madame Justine is primarily a men's clothing designer, but he is also renowned for his discerning eye in dress design. Following his advice will surely not disappoint."

Well, considering what Madame himself wears, I'm not entirely convinced of his so-called discerning eye.

"I've also wanted to meet him. I've always been curious. What kind of person could the most famous designer in the capital be?"

Amelia said this with an angelic smile.

"Especially that butterfly patterned dress you showed me last time was truly a masterpiece."

That dress was quite daring.

But when they actually faced Madame Justine, Amelia seemed greatly disconcerted and quietly clutched Seongjin's sleeve without saying a word.

"Morres..."

And as soon as Madame stepped away for a moment, Amelia whispered cautiously in Seongjin's ear.

"Why is it? I find that person a bit unsettling."

Huh?

"...Do you feel that way too, Sister?"

"Do you also find it strange? I keep getting this uneasy feeling around him, like I'm scared. It's strange because I can't sense any aura activation from him, but why do I feel this way?"

"Hmm, I see."

According to the Demon King, Madame Justine is speculated to be a human with a soul from the original world in a body from the structured world. But Amelia wouldn't know such details.

Perhaps, like how Seongjin's instincts sharply alerted him when he first saw Madame, Amelia also instinctively sensed some inherent danger through a certain perception.

Seongjin looked at Amelia anew.

Considering the extraordinary beings like the Holy Emperor, Logan and others he had encountered, it was easy to forget that Amelia herself was an immensely talented individual.

Additionally, her training methods were extremely efficient.

"I know my limits well, Morres."

She quickly accepted that no matter how hard she trained all day, she couldn't become like Seongjin. So, despite her love for training, she didn't invest more than a certain amount of time in it.

She practiced meditation in her spare time and asked the Emperor to directly impart aura during audiences, a clever tactic to increase her cultivation efficiency.

She then devoted the time saved to other pursuits.

She invited tutors in politics, diplomacy, economics, and social studies.

She played musical instruments, recited poetry, and attended lectures at the academy.

Even if she deeply focused on swordsmanship, at this pace, she could eventually reach the ranks of the continent's strong.

What exactly did Amelia want? Did she aspire to become a superhuman?

"It's a long journey towards a goal. A process of building a tower called revenge, brick by brick."

When asked if she found it hard, Amelia responded with a smile, different from her usual demeanor, somewhat eerily chilling.

"Yes, you were right, Morres. I find this journey towards revenge quite enjoyable."

Well, it's good that she's enjoying it, at least.

Feeling somewhat regretful about her untapped potential, Seongjin softly advised her.

"Who knows? Perhaps his real weapon isn't aura. In any case, that person is probably strong, in many ways."

"I thought so."

"But don't worry. He is under our father's control, after all."

Considering that it was the twins who first introduced Madame, Arenja might still be keeping an eye on him.

Amelia visibly relaxed at Seongjin's words.

So, when Madame returned to the private room with new fabrics and design books, Amelia, unlike before, began to express her opinions more freely.

"The trend for this year's party is light colors. Perhaps cream or aqua blue..."

"I am drawn to this black fabric."

"Oh, this is just an accent fabric for flounces or ribbons. Now, Your Highness, please don't and take a look at these fabrics..."

"But Madame, somehow black seems stylish."

"However, Your Highness. If you're pairing it with red gold accessories, perhaps this light emerald fabric would be better..."

"I think it would be nice if Morres and I matched in black."

"Your Highness! For the celebration of the day the Lord's envoy arrived on this land, wearing black that resembles mourning clothes... Someone might mistake it as devil worship!"

Madame Justine exclaimed seriously, his tone not trailing off as usual, indicating his utmost sincerity.

However, Amelia, with slightly flushed cheeks, bore a wide smile.

"Wow, a demon of Delcross, that sounds cool..."

"....."

Ah, I had forgotten about this.

Sister have always had a taste for the 'teen rebel' style...

After some back and forth, the two finally reached a dramatic resolution.

Seongjin's formal attire was adjusted to a somewhat somber color. Amelia had not given up on that 'Black Demon of Delcross' concept after all.

However, in Amelia's case—due to Madame Justine's vehement opposition, arguing that a completely black dress would be too pitiful—a bold red fabric was chosen.

Regardless, it was certain that what Madame described as this year's trend was about thirty million years removed from their choice.

"I am... I am the top designer of Delcross.... I absolutely must not be branded as outdated! Think! There is no concept I can't match, no design I can't bring to life. I will definitely make it work.....!"

Madame, usually dragging his words in a teasing manner, was now absent of such tone, frantically scribbling in his design book with heavy eyes. Meanwhile, Amelia, with a satisfied expression, was sipping her warm tea beside him.

Amelia-noona, you're strong!

In many ways.

"The initial design was pretty good too, wasn't it, Sister?"

Seongjin pushed a cookie towards her as he spoke.

In fact, to Seongjin, who was a layman in design, Amelia in the initially fitted dress looked as lovely as a white blossom blooming.

Then, Amelia responded with a smile that felt somewhat bitter.

"Yes. He said the same thing. On the day I wore that dress, he told me I looked like a single rose wet with dawn's dew. Back then, I firmly believed it was sincere."

Her eyes darkened, as if recalling a distant past.

"...It's hard to explain, but, Morres. This birthday celebration is very important to me. That's why it has to be different from that time. I don't want to be the same as I was back then, doing something I would regret over and over again."

"....."

Occasionally, Amelia was like this. Worrying about things that hadn't even happened yet, speaking as if regretting a mistake from long ago.

Wondering if it might stir up a deep, unhealed wound, Seongjin found it hard to casually ask her about it.

"...This outfit will turn out well too. It will surely suit you, Sister."

"Yes, I trust Madame Justine's judgment. Anyway, I think it will take me a bit longer, would you go ahead?"

"No, I'll wait. I'll just take a look downstairs for a moment."

Leaving Amelia and the escort knight behind, Seongjin left the special room.

[Why? Is something wrong?]

The Demon King, puzzled, asked Seongjin, who moved decisively as if he had a specific goal in mind.

'Uh, there's someone downstairs who's bothering me.'

His statement about taking a look around wasn't just a casual remark. He had been feeling an irritating presence from downstairs for a while now, making him restless.

It was the presence of a rather strong aura user.

The aura activation was quite useful. It hadn't yet reached the level of a high-ranking knight, but its wild momentum was such that even the high-ranking knights of the imperial palace might have to yield.

But this wasn't a training ground or battlefield. To so openly exude a challenge, what exactly is he doing? Is this a call to fight?

As the saying goes, the heavier the ear of rice, the lower it bows, and the higher the level of cultivation, the more cautiously one tends to conceal their momentum.

Yet, in this imperial city dominated by strong aura users, the audacity of someone flaunting their presence so unabashedly was astounding. What kind of confidence did this person have?

Surely he must have sensed me or the escort knights, yet he behaves like this, is he picking a fight with me? Is that it?

[...Hey, why are you smiling like that? It's making me uneasy.....]

'What am I doing?'

[.....]

Why is this guy trembling?

As he followed the presence for a while, he heard a woman's voice shaking with fear.

"...I don't understand why you're doing this to me all of a sudden. What exactly are you asking me to say?"

A man's voice, cold enough to chill the bones, followed.

"I'm here to get a definite answer about your promise to keep silent."

"What do you mean?"

"Don't play dumb! You must have received some kind of hint from the young prince, right?"

At the end of the deserted corridor, a young man and woman faced each other.

The woman, pale with fear, was pressed against the wall, while a robust young man, emanating a strong aura, was aggressively pressing her.

"It would be wise not to test my patience, Miss Scarcepino."

Seongjin was momentarily taken aback.

Is that guy harassing a regular person? Someone who's not an aura user would be completely intimidated without even understanding why.

Look at that, she's almost crying.

'Should I just leave it be?'

[Don't get involved. It's a matter between a man and a woman, right? Despite appearances, it could be a simple matter of jealousy.]

'...Huh?'

Sometimes, I feel the Demon King's sense of common knowledge is surprisingly close to that of humans.

'Even if it is a scene of jealousy, it seems like it could turn into a crime scene any moment, doesn't it?'

However, there was no need for Seongjin to ponder whether to intervene.

Suddenly, the young man turned around with a murderous look and growled at Seongjin.

"Stop sneaking around like a rat and get lost!"

Sssh.

A momentary surge of intangible killing intent from the man.

It was so violently aggressive that a lesser aura user might have frozen like a mouse before a snake, or even wet themselves.

Seongjin slightly stepped forward, adjusting his stance while curling the corner of his mouth.

'...Look at this guy?'

Still, seeing the young man in person, Seongjin somewhat understood his confidence.

The guy was quite young for his level of cultivation.

Moreover, the strength emanating from this young man far exceeded mere aura activation.

He belonged to what's commonly called a genius. The kind who does twice the work with the same amount of aura as others.

"Squire... no, maybe a low-ranking knight. Not bad."

The young man, surprisingly, opened his mouth as Seongjin reacted calmly, contrary to his expectations.

Turning away from the woman, he stepped forward, placing his hand on the sword at his waist, and continued.

"I commend your courage for not running away. But you're no match for me. Take the good advice and leave this place before you get in over your head."

No, but that seemed unlikely. The woman's eyes widened like lanterns, as if she recognized Seongjin.

She must be someone familiar with Morres, though he didn't know who she was.

"Why don't you ease up a bit? What are you doing, harassing someone who's not even an aura user?"

"...You'd better understand your place and pick the right battles, kid."

The young man took another step forward, increasing his intimidating presence.

The woman behind him seemed to want to say something, her face pale, barely opening her mouth, but she seemed completely overwhelmed by the man's aura, unable to speak properly.

"Hmm..."

I'm not fond of this kind of warning, but I suppose I should at least say it as a matter of courtesy.

"A warning for you. If you knew who I am, you wouldn't be acting like this."

At that, the young man let out a scoff of ridicule.

"How laughable. That's my line."

Even considering that he didn't recognize Morres' face, his confidence suggested he must be from some significant noble house.

"I never expected there to be someone in the imperial city who wouldn't recognize me. Are you a foreigner?"

"...And here I was wondering what kind of confidence you had. Turns out you're just another delusional celebrity wannabe."

"Delu... what?"

"You're not right in the head."

"...I don't give warnings twice. I don't want to waste my energy on a kid, so take the friendly advice and leave!"

Though he spoke thus, the young man, Orden, was quite flustered internally.

Externally, he seemed to be merely staring down his opponent, but inside, Orden's aura was constantly weaving and unwinding, shifting repeatedly.

From the 5th form, 8th pattern to the 7th form, 2nd pattern, then back to the 5th form, 5th pattern, and to the 8th form, 8th pattern...

Of course, he had no intention of drawing his sword right away; he merely intended to crush the arrogant youth with his presence alone.

'...It's not reaching him!'

No matter how intensely he exerted his aura, and meticulously he observed, he couldn't find an opening.

It was incomprehensible. The aura activation he felt from the boy was clearly at best that of a low-ranking knight.

The absolute difference in aura between a low-ranking knight and a high-ranking knight is more than the gap between a child and an adult.

And yet...

The boy was countering Orden's pressure effortlessly and responding appropriately. Even experienced knights within the Siegmund domain couldn't handle Orden's intensity so flexibly.

Moreover, what was most peculiar was...

'The gap is different...!'

Orden realized that the truly dangerous zone felt different from the boy's sword range.

The boy's most confident range wasn't actually the range of his sword.

'Who is this boy? Where did such a person suddenly come from?'

Orden, sweating coldly, quietly gripped the handle of his sword.

On the other hand, despite appearing relaxed on the outside, Seongjin was also internally searching for a way to resolve this uncomfortable situation.

'I still lack enough aura!'

The fact that he couldn't easily overpower such an obvious opponent was a blow to the pride of Hunter Lee Seongjin.

He had thought that he had built up his aura quite rapidly until now, but perhaps it was still too soon to confront those who had undergone years of rigorous training.

Already, he began to feel minor pains throughout his body just from responding to the man's intensity. It meant he was overexerting his aura usage.

To face someone near the level of a high-ranking knight, Seongjin simply didn't have enough absolute aura quantity.

-The only solution to this problem might be one. Just become incredibly strong so that such exertions aren't necessary.

At the time, he thought Logan's words lacked sincerity, but in the end, Logan was right.

If the other party were to attack outright, Seongjin could have managed somehow, but this kind of battle of intensity was gradually becoming disadvantageous for him, requiring increasingly strenuous effort.

'...Damn it!'

As he adjusted his aura to match the changing intensity of the opponent, gathering aura in both arms and left leg, now his shoulders and knee joints started to creak. Seongjin became anxious.

'Will I end up getting a severe scolding from His Majesty again today?'

Swish!

Just then, as Seongjin forcefully gathered aura and momentarily experienced aura depletion, he felt a small ripple, as if lightly drenching the area around his chest.

'This is...!'

The aura filling Seongjin's pathway.

Previously, when a storm of aura was caused in the imperial palace's rear garden, His Majesty had drawn in a tremendous amount of aura. Interestingly, this aura maintained a water-like property, filling the pathway completely. It remained distinct, not mixing with the surrounding aura or the aura Seongjin was moving, maintaining its own unique characteristics.

However, this was still aura.

Until now, Seongjin had left it untouched, considering His Majesty's words.

'Maybe, just maybe...'

As Seongjin introspectively focused his will, a gentle wave rippled on the surface of the aura, and small droplets splashed up. And then,

Smoothly.

The droplets quickly dissolved into Seongjin's body, which was in a state of aura depletion.

'It's possible!'

If Seongjin so decided, he could melt these water-like auras into his own! It was as if he had an extra tank of aura to draw upon whenever needed.

-Remember, if you pull water from the canal, things on the opposite side get drawn in as well.

His Majesty had warned him so.

But,

'If it really comes down to it...'

Staring down the young man, who showed no signs of relenting, Seongjin steeled his resolve.

"Young Master Siegmund."

Suddenly, a chilling voice came from the other side.

Seongjin and the young man, who had been completely focused on each other, flinched in surprise and simultaneously turned their heads toward the direction of the sound.

".....!"

"...Sister Amelia?"

There stood someone completely unexpected.

Amelia, without any escort knight, had appeared at the end of the corridor. She surveyed the standoff for a moment before slowly beginning to walk towards them.

Click-clack.

In the quiet hallway, the only sound was that of her heels striking the floor, and the sharp aura emanating from her felt piercingly close.

"Cease your threatening posture towards my brother immediately, Young Master. Otherwise..."

Amelia stared directly at the young man, issuing a warning.

"I'll personally demonstrate how an aura-infused dress pin can become a lethal weapon."

Her voice was not just cold, but seemed to carry an icy chill.

[TL/N: Young Master Siegmund → Eldest Young Master Siegmund]

A gentle tone of voice and a compassionate smile.

Princess Amelia, who usually brought a warm breeze to the palace like a single spring rose, was now approaching them with a very unfamiliar expression on her face.

"...Princess Amelia?"

Click-clack.

Her figure, wrapped in a sharp aura as if to pierce through, resembled an ice flower extending its frosty petals in all directions. Her mineral-cold eyes bore a striking resemblance to those of the Emperor.

And so, Princess Amelia approached.

She stepped into the space between Seongjin and the young man with an indifferent expression.

Click.

".....!"

An intense, invisible clash filled the air, fraught with tension.

Even for Amelia, who had exceptional talent in aura cultivation, it must be incredibly difficult to withstand this pressure, considering she had only just surpassed the level of a beginner.

Having exchanged glances, Seongjin and the young man, as if by agreement, gradually reduced their intensity in accordance with her movements.

Thus, when Amelia walked up to the two men, they completely withdrew their fighting spirit and ended their confrontation.

"I greet Your Highness."

The young man bowed stiffly to Amelia.

It was impossible for a noble of Delcross not to recognize this beautiful princess, especially known to be dearly cherished by the Holy Emperor.

Amelia, who had been observing him for a moment, replied in a cold voice.

"Have you forgotten whom you should first pay your respects to? If you show further disrespect to a member of the imperial family, I can no longer overlook your circumstances, Young Master."

Caught off guard by the unexpected situation, a complex look briefly crossed the young man's eyes.

The answer should be simple if it's about Amelia's brother and a member of the imperial family. Yet, he couldn't come to a quick conclusion, probably because the impression of the chubby troublemaker had changed too drastically.

After briefly gauging Amelia's mood, the young man stiffly bowed slightly to Seongjin.

"...I greet Your Highness, the Prince."

Such a stiff fellow.

"Oh well."

".....!"

Seongjin, after briefly mocking the twitching of the young man's eyebrows, turned to Amelia and asked.

"Why did you come all the way down here, sister?"

Then, she smiled softly at Seongjin.

"How could I not know when you were spreading such a presence? Sorry for interrupting at such an interesting moment, Morres. But if you had crushed the face of Eldest Young Master Siegmund like that, people would surely have blamed you for being inconsiderate against the promising heir of a border count."

".....?"

At her reply, Orden Siegmund's expression turned strange.

Although he was known among the young Delcross as the most promising genius swordsman, the princess genuinely believed her younger brother could have beaten him.

'Wow...!'

And Seongjin was purely amazed.

'Princess Amelia is so kind, even when she's angry, just like an angel!'

[...What exactly is your standard for kindness?]

Thud!

At that moment, the sound of someone collapsing to the ground was heard. It was the woman who had been threatened by the young man until recently.

Now freed from the terrifying aura, her legs had given way without her realizing.

"Ah... Ahh!"

She was completely drained, unable to even speak properly.

As she trembled and sweat, a pitiful sight, Amelia approached Seongjin and whispered in a low voice.

"Morres. I will take the Siegmund aside, so please take care of her.

Once she calms down, it would be best to take her to a private room for protection."

"...Wouldn't she feel more reassured with you, sister, if she knows you?"

At Seongjin's question, Amelia smiled awkwardly.

"I know you don't remember her. But Morres, this time, it's better for you to help her, both for her sake and in the eyes of others. After all, you are in talks of marriage with her."

...What?

"Isabella Scarcepino. Lady Scarcepino had been your fiancée for years, celebrating birthdays together."

".....!"

Ah, right, that Scarcepino!

No wonder the name sounded familiar!

While Seongjin was in shock, Amelia gracefully walked past the young man, saying,

"Then, Eldest Young Master Siegmund. Would you have a moment with me?"

The young man, who had been frowning with his mouth tightly shut, glanced at the woman on the ground with disdain before reluctantly turning away.

Please take good care of her.

Amelia gave Seongjin one more pleading look before leading the young man away.

"....."

Well, this is awkward.

Left alone with the woman, Seongjin scratched his head awkwardly before turning to her.

"Um... hey, are you okay?"

The woman, who had been staring blankly ahead, slowly refocused her eyes. She lifted her head and looked straight at Seongjin.

"So... Lady Isabella? Can you stand up?"

As Seongjin bent down to ask, the woman's eyes widened in surprise. Then, hesitantly, she stammered,

"Ah, since when....."

"Huh?"

"Since when have you started treating me as a lady...!"

What's this? I'm trying to help, why the quarrel?

Confused, Seongjin watched as the woman suddenly started to shed tears like raindrops.

"Uh-huh-huh!"

Seongjin was startled.

Crying? Why all of a sudden? What did I do wrong?

But her words, amidst the sobbing, were astonishing.

"Why, why are you pretending to be so kind all of a sudden? Are you mocking me? Why are you doing this to me!"

"Huh?"

"Always ignoring me like that! As if I wasn't even human!"

"....."

"Why only to me? Why are there rumors that you treat that little girl so well, and not me! Uh-huh-huh!"

...I'm not sure, but it seems like another victim entangled in the troublemaker Morres's karma.

Isabella continued to cry for a while.

Seeing her state, Seongjin offered a handkerchief, which she used to blow her nose loudly.

Then she began to ramble incoherently.

"Sniff! Uh-huh! As Your Highness knows... I'm not usually like this! But just now, I was so scared and couldn't calm down... Sniff!"

It's impossible for an ordinary person to maintain composure when exposed to such a menacing aura. However, instead of explaining, Seongjin just quietly listened to her.

"Of all people, to show such a side of me to Your Highness, sob, it's just the worst! Sniff! Anyway, you must never tell anyone about today's incident, okay? Sob."

"....."

"Sob! But don't misunderstand! You know, right? I am the flower of the social circles! The elegant and noble Scarcepino!"

Wow, is that something you say about yourself?

Noticing Seongjin's evident expression, Isabella blushed and muttered.

"Ah geez! It's so embarrassing to say this myself... Thinking about it, Ricardo orabeoni seems to be out of his mind, sob."

After some time, her sobs gradually began to subside.

Just then, Seongjin sensed the approach of several people in the corridor. The chatter of guests in the dressing room was faintly audible.

Judging the distance from them, Seongjin extended his hand towards Isabella and said.

"Lady Isabella. People seem to be coming this way; you don't want to stay here, do you? It would be better to leave this place for now."

Isabella looked at Seongjin with doubtful eyes.

However, the prince's gaze, unlike before, met hers directly, fully capturing her appearance.

"...Then, let's best leave, Your Highness."

After hesitating for a moment, Isabella, fiddling with her hair and clothes, embarrassedly held Seongjin's hand with her reddened face.

Meanwhile, Amelia was leading Orden towards the entrance of Salon de Merci.

Walking in silence, Orden finally couldn't hold back and spoke first.

"Amel... just how far are we going....."

"Even in a private setting, you should maintain proper etiquette, Siegmund."

Without turning to look at Orden, Amelia cut him off with a cold voice.

"Don't be mistaken. I am now a member of the imperial family. I'm no longer that little girl locked in the attic of the count's house."

A fleeting look of dejection crossed Orden's stoic face.

"That was... all grandmother's orders. We had no choice then. I do feel sorry for you."

"....."

"But not everyone in the family agreed with that. We still cared for you....."

"I won't warn you twice. Maintain proper etiquette."

Stopping in front of the entrance, Amelia slowly turned to face Orden.

"It seems unlikely that we will ever have a private meeting again, so let me be clear now. There's no need to explain the Count Siegmund family's position to me at this point. No need to apologize either. I won't make an issue out of anything."

"....."

"Anyway, the time I spent there holds no meaning for me."

Orden's eyes wavered.

"But, I....."

"Since we seem to share the same sentiment, let's end the conversation here. I was of no significance to you either, wasn't I? Until His Majesty my father took me from there, I might as well have been non-existent in the count's family."

"....."

"Then, I'll see you at the birthday celebration. Take care on your way."

It was a cold dismissal.

Orden, with a rigid face, looked at Amelia for a moment before obediently bowing and turning away.

Ting.

After he left and the door of the entrance closed.

Only then did Amelia, her tension released, clasp her trembling hands and bite her lip.

Although she had faced him as if nothing was wrong, the shock of being exposed to the fierce clash of auras, if only for a moment, still lingered within her.

Most of all, the memories of her childhood that surfaced the moment she faced Orden.

She had said those memories meant nothing to her now, but that didn't mean the events of those times simply ceased to exist.

So, Amelia stood there for a long time, staring at the entrance where Orden had disappeared.

Until Seongjin, who had come looking for her, called her.

"Sister, why are you standing here?"

"...Morres."

Amelia turned around, her eyes wide.

"What about Lady Scarcepino? How did you come here?"

"She seemed to have calmed down, so I left. It seemed like you were taking too long."

"Were you worried? Why?"

"Why? What kind of question is that? You went off with such a violent man, how could I not be worried?"

"....."

Amelia looked at Seongjin thoughtfully for a moment.

"...I see. Right."

Soon after, as if a small realization had dawned on her and the ice was melting away, a gentle smile spread across Amelia's face.

"So, to you, I have such a clear meaning. Back then, and even today."

".....?"

"Thank you for worrying about me, Morres."

Amelia's hand, which lightly wrapped around Seongjin's arm, had completely stopped trembling by now.

Together, the two of them, arm in arm, arrived at the special room.

But when they opened the door, an unexpected scene unfolded inside. Lady Isabella was in front of the mirror, thrusting a hairpin forward with a grimace.

"Put down that aura right now! If not, I'll just use this dress pin!"

Then, seemingly dissatisfied with something, she squinted at the mirror and tilted her head.

"Hmm, this isn't right..."

She switched the hairpin to the other hand and, placing one hand on her hip, lifted her chin defiantly.

"I'll show you how this hairpin can become a weapon! So immediately... Gasp!"

She gasped in surprise upon seeing Seongjin and Amelia reflected in the mirror and hurriedly hid the hairpin behind her back. Then.

"Yikes!"

She screamed at the sight of the hairpin stuck in her arm.

"....."

Wasn't she said to be the flower of the social circles?

Could it be that standing comedy is the latest trend in the Delcross social scene?

* * *

That evening, upon returning to the townhouse, Isabella immediately sought out her second older brother, Riccardo.

Sitting in the study flipping through a book, Ricardo greeted her with his usual sly smile.

"So, you're back? How was it, my beautiful Bella, the fairest in the capital?"

"...Ah, really! Stop doing that, will you!"

Isabella, brushing off the goosebumps on her arm, opened her mouth with a serious expression.

"Actually, brother, something strange happened at the dressmaker's today."

"Strange?"

"Yes, it was about Eldest Young Master Siegmund..."

She poured out the whole story to Riccardo.

How, while fitting her dress smoothly, he suddenly demanded a clear answer. When she tried to avoid responding, he changed and began to threaten her.

"...I'm sure he must have heard something about you, brother... Are you listening, brother?"

Noticing Riccardo's unnaturally calm demeanor, Isabella asked with puzzlement.

Then, as always, he smiled gently and whispered quietly to his younger sister.

"Yes, I'm glad you're back safe. Now, let it all go and rest easy. Isabella."

"Here is the list of the missing persons from the Heresy Tribunal you asked for, Your Highness."

Seongjin, flipping through the documents Dasha handed him, remarked,

"The number is smaller than I expected?"

"Yes. Considering the scale of the incident, there were almost no unidentified bodies."

Seongjin nodded his head as he reviewed the materials.

Initially, he had requested her to investigate Priest Hayes, but even after several days, the results were not as fruitful as expected.

It was said that he came to the capital with only a single letter of recommendation from a rural countryside church. And, since he was assigned to the Heresy Tribunal almost at the end of the Dark Sect's purge, it was impossible to find any significant connection between him and the remnants of the Dark Sect.

Moreover, Hayes was known to be extremely taciturn. Not only did he lack personal connections, but he also hardly communicated for work purposes, being thoroughly isolated even within the Heresy Tribunal.

'However, it was definitely not a feat he could have accomplished alone...'

Considering Jonathan's case, at least four people were involved: one heresy interrogator, two guards who beat him, and one priest who was recording the statements.

Furthermore, considering that most of the prisoners in the underground dungeon were Grey Plague patients, it's possible that more than one or two teams were involved.

There were undoubtedly colleagues of Hayes, or perhaps a separate group unrelated to him, existing within the Heresy Tribunal.

'And now that their plan has gone awry, they've likely already fled.'

With Cardinal Benitus fervently rooting out the Dark Sect, remaining in the Heresy Tribunal was tantamount to suicide.

Seongjin focused on the list of missing persons for this reason.

"Wolfgang, a junior priest, Clemens, a junior priest, Inquisitor Fabian... Hmm."

After reviewing the list of nine missing persons, Seongjin picked out five and handed them to Dasha.

"Let's start by looking into these individuals."

Among the missing was one Inquisitor, plus a list of four priests assigned before and after the outbreak of the Grey Plague.

"Yes, Your Highness. I'll get started right away."

"Ah, honestly, I wonder what good all this is..."

"Pardon?"

"...Ah, never mind. Just talking to myself."

In truth, his motivation for the investigation had hit rock bottom lately.

The Holy Emperor and the Twins probably knew the whole story. He even thought that Arenja, despite being a part of their group, might know their identities or at least the extent of their organization.

But when he asked Bruno, the leader of Arenja, for information about this, the response sent by Arenja was as follows:

– It's not yet the time.

According to Bruno, who had a short career as Arenja, it seems there's some kind of backlash involved in revealing information that goes beyond mere manpower. And the resulting consequences could never be good.

'So, they mean to say, do what you can for now, right?'

No, it's like digging in vain while the answer is right in front of him.

Seongjin was grumbling to himself when Dasha, who was gathering the documents and about to stand up, suddenly hesitated and turned back to Seongjin.

"Your Highness, this is purely my personal curiosity, but..."

"Yes?"

"You've been wearing that outfit a lot lately. Is it your preference?"

"Oh, this?"

Seongjin tugged at the hem of his garment.

"Does it look a bit flashy to you too, Dasha?"

Indeed, Seongjin was wearing the latest creation from Madame Justine. It was a splendidly colorful outfit adorned with vibrant butterfly patterns.

"It may look a bit much, but it's surprisingly comfortable."

Excluding the banquet clothes tailored for his birthday celebration, this was probably the most recent outfit he had tailored.

Madame Justine's craftsmanship was quite exceptional, so despite the numerous elaborate decorations, it was the most comfortable and best-fitting among Seongjin's clothes.

'Besides, I've been growing lately.'

Regrettably, though it hadn't been long since it was made, the ankles and sleeves were already showing signs of becoming too short.

That's why, determined to get his money's worth, he wore it constantly within the Pearl Palace.

"Why? Does it look that bad?"

"No, not at all. I just thought it was a very futuristic design and got curious."

Dasha backed away, dripping cold sweat.

"You can be honest with me, Dasha."

Seongjin gave her a warm smile.

"Like a crazy Brittanian, or a clown from Bertrand Street, or a heretic if I just add flowers to my head..."

"...Ah, no, not at all! I'll report back as soon as there's progress in the investigation! Please rest easy, Your Highness!"

As Dasha hurriedly left the room, Seongjin tilted his head and examined his outfit.

'Do you think it looks that strange too?'

[It is a bit avant-garde, isn't it?]

Certainly, to Seongjin, who was no expert in design, the butterfly pattern did seem overly modern.

He had heard that Salon de Mercier had a separate staff member who specialized in drawing designs, but he wondered who could have created such a design.

* * *

"Wow! Did you guys see? Eldest Young Master Siegmund himself visited our dressmaking room today!"

Inside the sewing room, brightly lit as if it were midday, even at night.

The employees of Salon de Merci were busy gossiping while catching up on their overdue overnight tasks.

"Isn't he as splendid as the rumors say? He has an aura that's just different from ordinary people."

"How can the wolf crest of his family suit him so well?"

"I'm so jealous that he was escorted by that person. I would love to be Isabella Scarcepino, even for just one day!"

Then, a young lady, who had been quietly listening to their chatter, let out a soft laugh.

"Hehe. You guys have nothing to be envious of."

"Yi-seo, aren't you jealous?"

"No, not at all."

Yi-seo, as she was called, put down the design she was working on and lifted her head.

She had an exotic appearance with uncommon black hair and deep brown eyes, a rarity in Delcross.

"Unfortunately, the chance will not come to Miss Scarcepino. She's cast in the role of the jealous villainess."

"Jealous... what?"

The employees looked at her, baffled.

Seo Yi-seo. She was a new recruit at Salon de Mercier, having settled in the Imperial Capital not long ago. Sometimes, she would make strange remarks that were hard to understand in the context of Delcross's common sense. The employees usually brushed them off as her hometown's style of humor.

"Most importantly, she's not the Eldest Young Master's type."

"...And how would you know Eldest Young Master Siegmund's ideal type?"

"Yeah. The lady from the Scarcepino family is one of the most beautiful women in the capital."

The employees' questions, tinged with disbelief, were met with a relaxed smile from Seo Yi-seo.

"The type that someone like him likes is always specific. Someone pure and kind-hearted, yet occasionally surprising in unexpected ways."

"...Surprising? How so?"

"Hmm, let's see? Maybe by falling in front of him at an unexpected moment, or spilling tea."

"What?"

"Or perhaps by getting drunk and crying, or suddenly slapping his cheek?"

The employees, who had been eagerly listening for any useful information, let out a deflated sigh.

What? Slapping the youngmasters' cheek just like that?

He's one of the most promising swordsmen on the continent and a noble from the North. They'd be lucky not to be beheaded on the spot.

"Kikiki. Yi-seo sometimes says really weird things."

The employees burst into laughter at the seemingly absurd joke, then picked up their sewing materials again.

"Remember? Yi-seo did the same during the last parade. What did she say? That Prince Logan is really handsome but his character is too good, which makes him unattractive?"

"What? Is that true?"

"Hmph. It's a matter of personal taste. Please respect it."

Seo Yi-seo replied demurely and buried her nose back into the design she was working on.

"So, Yi-seo, do you prefer someone like Eldest Young Master Siegmund then? The cold, bad-boy type?"

"Well, maybe? He did look quite handsome today. But it was unexpected that the cold Northern young lord didn't have black hair."

"...?"

What does the Northern young lord's hair color have to do with anything?

The employees were confused, but then, as if struck by a sudden thought, Seo Yi-seo chuckled.

"More than that, I was surprised to see Prince Morres today. Reading about someone and seeing them in person are quite different. Maybe he's more my type? Looks like I've got a case of the second male lead syndrome."

"What?"

The employees stopped their sewing in unison and stared at her.

Is she serious right now?

"Do you even know what kind of person Prince Morres is?"

"Well... there's a difference between someone with bad-boy charm and a total scoundrel, right?"

They realized that Yi-seo, being new to Delcross, might not be aware of all the local nuances.

Pitying glances were thrown Yi-seo's way.

"Hehe, who knows?"

Undeterred, Yi-seo went back to her sketching.

"He might act like a scoundrel on the outside, but deep down, he could be someone who has carried great inner wounds since childhood. Eventually, he might be drawn to a woman who truly understands his pain."

"...Inner wounds?"

The employees exchanged bewildered glances.

Her fabrications are getting more elaborate with every telling.

"Oops! I might be causing character destruction here. I'm just too chatty today."

"...?"

"Well, talking about this now is pointless."

After completing another butterfly wing in her design, she added with a confident smile.

"Anyway, you'll all find out after the birthday celebration ends."

* * *

Emerald Palace.

This splendid detached palace, where the Second Queen Melody resided, was a beautiful place with a lush green garden and a small glass greenhouse.

Having returned to the Imperial Palace after a long time for some rest, Sisle lay sprawled on a couch in the greenhouse, idling away the entire morning.

"Hey, Sisle."

Melody, gently stroking her daughter's silver hair, spoke soothingly.

"It's nice to spend time with you after so long, but shouldn't you start getting ready soon? Your audience with His Majesty is approaching."

However, Sisle, with her face buried in the pillow and eyes closed, did not move an inch.

"It's not just today, is it? We can postpone it."

"But, dear. You've been away from the palace for so long. It's a rare audience, and His Majesty might feel neglected."

"I already paid my respects upon my return. Besides, His Majesty is busy with audiences with diplomatic delegations and such. Seeing him once should be enough."

Unable to persuade her stubborn daughter, Melody sighed softly.

"Really, when did children grow up so fast? It feels like just yesterday you clung to His Majesty's robes all day."

"....."

"You know, Sisle? When you were little, you hardly wanted to walk on your own. You always insisted on being in your father's arms. His Majesty had such a hard time separating you from him whenever he had to attend state meetings."

Lying still, receiving Melody's caresses, Sisle slowly blinked her eyes.

Her childhood memories were always similar.

Herself, toddling after the sunlit, gleaming hem of the imperial robes.

And occasionally, the Holy Emperor turning back to check on her.

If only she could return to those times.....

"Your Majesty, Your Highness."

At that moment, a servant approached swiftly, bowed, and said,

"A letter from the southern front."

He then respectfully presented a small tray with a white envelope to Sisle.

Melody, visibly excited, asked,

"Oh my, is it from Prince Owen again?"

"Yes, it's a letter personally addressed to the Princess."

Sisle sat up on the couch and, with a slightly eager heart, unfolded the letter.

+ + +

—To Sisle.

I heard you embarked on a long journey. With the birthday celebration approaching, you must have returned to the Imperial Palace by now.

Regrettably, I won't be able to return for the celebration this time. The situation in the southern front is stable, but the atmosphere here is still a bit too tense for me to leave.

We've just started interacting with the Volanta tribe.[1] Chieftain Chikutaruku seems quite dignified and wise, and I believe we can maintain a good relationship with them.

However, the response from other tribal leaders around us is not so friendly, and there's always a risk of conflict reigniting.

It's not much of a consolation, but I'll send a gift to father and you soon.

P.S. Always take care of yourself. If anything happens, don't forget to consult with Imperial Father.

+ + +

Melody, who had been reading the letter alongside, smiled gently.

"How thoughtful of him to care for you so deeply. It's truly heartwarming."

However, Sisle's expression darkened as she finished reading the letter.

Owen-orabeoni, did you know this?

Sometimes I'm terribly afraid of His Majesty.

T/N:

1. First mentioned in Chapter64[↔]

120

Crack! Whoosh!

The last Nurumachi on the plains fell to the ground, scattering thick blood. Boom!

Woohoo! With a long, drawn-out cry, the massive beast struggled briefly before shivering and collapsing into silence.

Owen gasped for breath as he watched the scene. Soon, a notification window blinks into existence before him.

[Daily Quest – Nurumachi Hunt (Completed)]

[Quest Grade: D]

[Summary: Just because the quest is completed with one Nurumachi, you've been sparingly hunting one per day. Don't you think it's a waste of time and energy to travel back and forth to the hunting grounds? How about showing more initiative in improving your surroundings, rather than just focusing on rewards?]

[Completion Grade: D]

[Reward: 320(-40)P Cash]

[*This item can be used in the Pangea Chronicle Shop.]

Owen closed the window, suppressing the surge of anger within him.

This damn status window. If it initially offered 360 cash, it should give 360!

Why reduce the reward for a daily quest?

'I almost spent all my cash on the gift I'm sending...'

He wanted to vent, but this capricious status window could reduce rewards further if it sensed his displeasure.

Once, thinking it wouldn't understand if he swore in Varsha instead of the imperial language, still deducted his reward. Frustrated but unable to express it, Owen kicked the lifeless Nurumachi.

It had been three years since he left the Imperial Palace, guided by the whims of the status window.

Once a naive country boy, Owen had now grown into a robust young warrior. Years under the hot southern sun had toughened him, his physique intimidating even to seasoned Varsha warriors. Who would believe he was just over 17?

As he was tying back his disheveled hair, someone called out his name from a distance.

"...Owen! Owen!"

It was a Varsha warrior, his long braided hair ornately decorated with cormorant feathers.

Chikudanka of Volanta.

He was Chikudanka, the son of the tribal chief Chikutaruku and a recent friend Owen had made. Considering the number of feathers in his hair, signifying his valor, Chikudanka was undoubtedly a strong warrior himself.

As Chikudanka approached and noticed the massive beast lying dead on the ground, his eyes widened in awe.

"Did you hunt the Nurumachi alone again today! I hurried to lend a hand, but you are truly remarkable!"

"Haha. This marks the end for today, Chikudanka. There are no more Nurumachi left on these plains now."

The Nurumachi, ferocious beasts, had ravaged the plains and decimated prey populations. The Volanta tribe had suffered from these beasts since childhood, so Chikudanka's emotions, as he gazed at the last Nurumachi, seemed especially poignant.

"Owen, you once said that alongside the warriors of our Volanta tribe, we would reclaim the glorious hunting grounds of our ancestors."

"Yes, I did say that. We will drive away the beasts of this land and expand the horizons of Volanta."

"That's why our tribe decided to stand with you. Having single-handedly eliminated all the Nurumachi of the plains, even the skeptical elders can no longer doubt your words."

"I assure you, Chikudanka. You will witness even more astonishing feats in the future."

As he spoke, a new notification window blinked into existence before Owen.

[New daily quests available.]

[new! Daily Quest – Koratila Hunt (Repeatable)]

Well, following these quests, it seemed he would inevitably have to eradicate all the beasts of this land.

Soon, Owen and Chikudanka began to dismantle the beast. Skilfully, they cut off the Nurumachi's horns, skinned it, and extracted its tendons and marrow.

As his hands moved repetitively, Owen's thoughts wandered.

He had hoped to visit Delcross at least once this year, now that the front had stabilized...

'I wonder if the gift I sent has arrived by now?'

He missed the Holy Emperor, his siblings, and Sisle back in Delcross.

Ah, except for that rascal Morres.

However, the small window in his peripheral vision continued to display a dishearteningly low achievement rate.

[Main Stream 2 – Progress 13%]

It seemed his return to the Imperial Palace was still far off. Owen sighed softly.

As Chikudanka peeled tendons from the Nurumachi's leg, he spoke up.

"I always think this, Owen, but for someone from the Empire, you're surprisingly adept at hunting. I've seen many Imperials, but none as skilled in handling prey as a Delcross warrior like you."

"Those warriors you're talking about are probably mostly knights dispatched from the capital."

"So, you're different?"

"My parents were both skilled hunters. Although I was young, I must have learned a lot by watching them."

Chikudanka, puzzled, asked, "But Owen, aren't you the eldest son of a tribal chief? I heard the current tribal chief of Delcross isn't a hunter, but the most powerful shaman of the tribe."

"Haha, yes. The tribal chief of Delcross is another father to me."

Owen paused his work and looked up at the distant horizon.

"My parents passed away when I was young. My father now, the tribal chief of Delcross, is my esteemed foster father."

[Chikudanka called the Holy Emperor as tribal chief here and shaman probably because Nate has the most divine powers in the entire Delcross.]

Tap, tap.

Seongjin quickly stepped back to dodge a sword strike, then hesitated, halting his movement too late. Masain, who had been pressuring Seongjin, also stopped his attack and stared at him perplexedly.

"You're widening the gap too much again, Your Highness."

Masain tilted his head in confusion.

"It's strange. I haven't had much practice in sparring, so I wonder where this habit comes from."

"Hmm....."

Seongjin scratched his head with an awkward expression. It seemed challenging to completely shake off the habits developed over decades of battling giant monsters in a short period.

Recently, Masain had started giving him swordsmanship lessons and occasionally sparring with him.

While sparring with Masain, Seongjin realized that he still found hand-to-hand combat more comfortable in a one-on-one fight. When facing an opponent with a sword, he involuntarily tensed up, often disrupting the flow of the exchange.

Moreover, when he wielded a sword, he found himself reverting to habits formed while battling giant monsters, swinging it as if it were a monster's tentacle.

It appeared Seongjin wasn't a natural swordsman like the Holy Emperor or Logan. While he found sword practice enjoyable, his progress in swordsmanship was slower compared to his advancement in aura cultivation.

'And when I think about it, even my aura cultivation feels like I'm using some kind of shortcut..'

Logan had mentioned it. Seongjin's way of manipulating aura seemed different from that of other Delcross people.

His rapid accumulation of aura layers might be because he handled aura more easily than others, almost like a monster's energy.

'Well, there's only one solution.'

Repetitive practice.

Resolute, Seongjin gripped his practice sword tightly and charged at Masain again.

"...The more I watch, the more perplexing it gets."

Kurt muttered as he observed the sparring session between the prince and Masain. Vincent, a knight recently dispatched from the 1st Knight Division, looked at him curiously.

"Is there a problem? Initially, he seemed a bit lost, but now he seems quite accustomed to sparring."

Kurt crossed his arms, deep in thought, responding to Vincent's question.

"Not sure if that can be called being lost..."

Kurt often found Prince Morres's training sessions peculiar. Although Morres appeared to be a beginner in handling a sword, there were moments when an odd sense of experience shone through him.

There was a familiar ease in combat situations, a comfort in the midst of battle.

Kurt initially thought that the prince's previous unruly behavior might have included some fighting. He didn't consider it significant at first.

His suspicion that something was unusual started when the prince began sparring with Sir Masain. Specifically, after recognizing the distance Prince Morres maintained during combat.

Prince Morres had a habit of suddenly closing the gap from a seemingly safe distance, diving deep into the attack at what he perceived as the right moment. His swordplay might have been clumsy, but this agility was indeed impressive.

Additionally, when Sir Masain attacked, instead of clashing swords, the prince would swiftly move backward, significantly widening the gap.

It seemed more like a movement pattern familiar with fighting something much larger than a human, not a person-to-person combat style.

Yes, it reminded him of the movements of hunters who roamed near the Northern Demon Borders, hunting large beasts.

Initially, the sparring sessions did not progress well. Before the swords could clash, the prince reflexively kept widening the distance.

After several repetitions, the prince slowly adapted to the new distance. Soon enough, he was able to exchange blows with Sir Masain, an advanced knight, for extended periods.

What Sir Vincent perceived as 'wandering' was actually the prince diligently adjusting to the combat distance.

"...And yet, His Highness has never been completely overpowered."

Despite the absolute gap in skill and experience between an advanced knight and a junior knight, the prince strangely seemed to have an ease in dealing with Sir Masain.

Even in situations where he was overwhelmingly on the defensive, Sir Masain couldn't completely break down that last bit of composure from the young prince.

However, Kurt had witnessed firsthand how Prince Morres's demeanor changed when he truly intended to strike with his sword.

In the basement of the Digory estate, he had seen the young prince thrust his sword like lightning into the vital spot of an indescribable monster.

What would happen if the young prince turned that clear intent to kill and the tip of his sword towards a person?

After an intense morning training session, Seongjin couldn't help but chuckle as he entered the dining room for lunch. There, as if it were the most natural thing in the world, Logan and Amelia were already seated together.

At this rate, Sisle might become a regular at lunch too.

And Logan's eyes visibly shook with shock upon seeing Seongjin's flamboyant butterfly-patterned indoor robe for the first time.

"That... What bizarre thing is that?"

Ah, seeing his disgusted face makes me want to tease him a bit.

Seongjin, with a mischievously wicked smile, approached Logan and spread his arms wide to display the butterfly pattern more prominently.

"How about it? Pretty cool, right?"

"Are you serious?"

"Of course. Don't you see this trendsetting fashion sense? Just wait and see. By next year, the whole capital will be covered in these butterfly patterns!"

"...Good heavens, Almighty."

Logan murmured with a pale face.

That guy, not particularly devout, is invoking the Almighty. I'm somewhat looking forward to his reaction if the Brittany-style volant skirt becomes a trend in Delcross soon.

Seongjin chuckled and turned around.

But he had to stop abruptly as Logan suddenly reached out and swiftly grabbed the hem of his robe.

"Hey!"

Caught off guard by the sudden pull on his robe, Seongjin grabbed his throat, struck by the collar.

"What the hell, Logan! What's with the sudden move?"

As Seongjin turned around in irritation, Logan's face had hardened into a rigid expression.

"Where did you get this robe from?"

"Huh?"

"Why does it have the Dilerial butterfly on it?"

"...What?"

Seongjin blinked, slowly realizing the implication of Logan's words, and was shocked. Quickly flipping the hem of his robe to inspect it, he soon let out an incredulous laugh.

"...It really is?"

The unique patterns, hidden among the wings of the tiger butterflies, were hard to notice at first glance.

But those eye-like patterns amidst the various wings closely resembled the wings of the Dilelaria butterfly mentioned in the apocalyptic texts of another world.

"...Salon de Merci."

Facing Logan's serious gaze, Seongjin spoke with emphasis.

"We need to find the designer of these patterns there."

[TL/N: I've never once thought that any mention of butterflies would even be important until now. When Madame Justine was 1st introduced in the story, you can find that he had already shown his preference for butterflies patterns in his design as early in Chapter 59. Also, read Chapter 110 again for description on Dilelaria butterfly, if you can't remember about it.]

Seo Yi-seo halted in surprise as she opened the newly spawned white door in front of her.

She had just installed and launched the MyHome mode, but unexpectedly, there was a stranger in the room that should have been empty.

"Who are you? How did you get in here? I haven't invited anyone..."

However, the intruder did not respond to her questions and, seemingly enchanted, looked around the room, murmuring.

"...Sturdy and beautiful."

His voice carried a heavy resonance.

The man was tall, wearing a half-mask, with long, partially grey hair and draped in flowing robes resembling a priest's garb. The wrinkles on the lower part of his face, visible below the mask, suggested he was not particularly young.

Fluttering around him were a couple of blue butterflies.

"...Are you from Impulse Soft? Even if it's an internal alpha test, illegally entering a private space is not allowed! Hey, are you listening?"

Seo Yi-seo called out, wary.

But the man ignored her and walked towards a bookshelf on one side of the room. He started to gently caress the books as if they were precious treasures.

"Amazing. A dimension formed by just a small house. To think such a tiny Imaginary World could actually exist. I've traveled through dimensions for so long, but this is a first for me..."

After enjoying the texture of the books for a while, the man finally looked directly at Seo Yi-seo and asked,

"Are you the ruler of this dimension? How exactly did you create this space?"

What? Ruler?

"...I just installed the MyHome expansion pack. If you're from Impulse Soft and interested, why not apply for the alpha test yourself?"

"Speaking as if anyone could do it. Then why didn't such tiny Imaginary Worlds exist until now?"

Not fully understanding what the man meant by 'Imaginary Worlds', but assuming he was referring to virtual spaces, Seo Yi-seo responded thoughtfully.

"Well, the MyHome expansion pack was just recently developed."

"Heh..."

The man let out a hollow laugh, seeming incredulous.

The number of butterflies had increased, fluttering and rising as if responding to his laughter.

"Then, one last question for you. Why are the laws that govern this world the same as those over there?"

"Over there?"

"That noisy and flamboyant world. I'm talking about the dimension of Pangea Chronicle. The scale and mass of objects, their texture, the flow of time... everything is identical."

Seo Yi-seo frowned.

What? Isn't this man from Impulse Soft?

"That's because it uses the same Homunculus Integrated Engine. The physics engine is the same."

"Engine... yes, they call it an engine... Such sturdy and beautiful rules!"

The man sighed softly and then closed his eyes, deeply inhaling as if to savor every particle of air in the room.

Maybe I should report this to the company first.

As Seo Yi-seo pondered this, the man opened his eyes and strode toward her. Startled, she instinctively stepped back.

"What are you doing all of a sudden?"

"This meeting must be some kind of fate. I'd like to make you the protagonist of my new chronicle."

"...What?"

Confused by his statement, Seo Yi-seo questioned him, and the man's lips curved into a long smile beneath his half-mask.

"Seems like a fortunate coincidence, as you appear to enjoy such stories quite a bit."

Surprisingly, the man now held several books taken from the shelf, all of which were Seo Yi-seo's linked e-books.

– The Obsessive Male Lead and the Fake Saintess.

– The Saintess Tames the Demon King.

– I'm an Unintentional Saintess Managing a Love-Harem, Is There a Problem?

Seo Yi-seo's cheeks flushed red.

These were her cherished collections, but her skewed reading preferences weren't something she was particularly proud to show others.

However, the man's next words made her eyes widen in disbelief.

"Recently, I've become quite sensitive, so I believe I can create a story well-suited to you. How about it? Would you grace my new story by becoming its saintess?"

...Saintess?

And then.

Suddenly, a swarm of blue-winged butterflies filled her vision, appearing as if from nowhere.

* * *

Summoning a citizen of the Imperial Capital as a reference in an investigation requires certain procedures.

It must be done through specific law enforcement agencies such as the Capital City Guard or the Heresy Tribunal, and the reason and basis for the summons must be clearly stated in a document.

Although they could directly go to Salon de Merci and inquire, Masain explained the potential for it to look like wrongful harassment in the eyes of others. Additionally, if the designer attempted to flee, having a legal method to detain them was crucial.

'Masain, always sticking to formalities...'

Seongjin found it a bit cumbersome but agreed that it was likely necessary to use force in bringing the person in question.

So, he, along with Masain and a few resident knights, visited the Capital City Guard.

"So you suspect that an employee of the dressmaking shop might be linked to the previous monster incidents?"

The captain of the City Guard asked with reluctance upon Seongjin's request for deployment.

"Yes. This is a matter of great importance, potentially threatening the safety of the Imperial Capital, so I earnestly request the active cooperation of the City Guard."

Masain, adding weight from the side, and Seongjin firmly pressed the issue.

"Most importantly, the use of a monster from the banned book 'Otherworld Apocalypse' in the design is critical. Depending on the investigation, it might even need to be escalated to the Heresy Tribunal."

The mention of the Heresy Tribunal prompted the City Guard captain to straighten up and nod in agreement.

"Understood. We will deploy the City Guard. But..."

"Yes?"

"Whose peculiar garment is this?"

The City Guard captain looked at the butterfly-patterned outfit Seongjin had brought as evidence, his face slightly queasy.

"Oh, it's mine. Why?"

"....."

The captain's gaze on Seongjin shifted from seeing him as a troublesome ruffian to regarding him as an eccentric of the highest order.

What? Can't he recognize this high-level fashion sense? Huh?

[...You were the one who despised it the most at first.]

I grew fond of it after wearing it a while. After all, comfort is key in clothing.

In any case, the captain provided Seongjin with ten personnel, including three armed knights.

Thus, leading the City Guard troops arrayed at the entrance of the building, Seongjin couldn't help but smile contentedly.

'Feels quite reassuring to have the force of law on my side, doesn't it?'

But then, the very guards who seemed so sturdy were startled upon seeing Seongjin's face, each avoiding his gaze!

What's with them?

[Have you forgotten how you roughed up some City Guards recently?]

Tsk, did I unknowingly make enemies with the law enforcement?

While heading to Salon de Merci, Seongjin soon joined up with Logan waiting for him at the entrance to Deste Street.

"The Orthodox Church suggests that it would be better to directly transfer the employee to the Heresy Tribunal for interrogation."

Despite his status, Logan was currently affiliated with the Saint Bastian Paladin Order. Therefore, his official activities had to be reported and approved by the Church and the Knight Order Commander.

Having left earlier to visit the Knight Order, Logan returned not alone, but followed by a group of paladins dressed in the white uniforms of the Knight Order.

The blue swords and lilies embroidered on their uniforms indicated they were from the Saint Bastian Order, and their faces were uniformly stern, lips pressed into straight lines. They were as serious as rumored, notoriously hard to communicate with.

"And thankfully, the Knights of Lilium have voluntarily come to assist."

As Logan began to explain about them, the faces of the Knights of Lilium seemed to soften from their previously rigid expressions.

"I tried to decline their offer, but they insisted on stepping forward for the sake of the capital. They truly are exemplary paladins, serving the citizens."

"Uh, right..."

Seongjin's response was lukewarm. The knights' gazes towards Logan's back seemed to shine with admiration, almost as if they were shooting beams of light.

Rather than exemplars of paladins, they seemed more like fervent fans of Logan. Or was that just his impression?

In any case, leading a larger group than expected, Seongjin arrived at Salon de Merci.

The sudden appearance of numerous knights in front of the capital's most famous dressmaking shop caught the attention of passersby, who stopped to watch curiously.

With Madame Justine absent, a manager appeared instead and politely inquired about their purpose.

"Ah, you mean the designer of that pattern. That would be an employee named Seo Yi-seo."

Apparently, she was an employee Madame Justine had brought in out of the blue, with no significant credentials.

Her hiring seemed suspicious, almost as if Madame himself might need to be questioned.

"She's currently on duty. I'll bring her right away, Your Highness."

The manager bowed respectfully and left.

Seo Yi-seo.

Seongjin furrowed his brow with a sense of unease as he heard the name 'Seo Yi-seo,' which sounded familiar yet somewhat foreign to him.

Soon after, guided by another employee, a woman appeared at the shop entrance. She paused briefly upon seeing the people lined up in front of the shop, then gently lifted the hem of her skirt in an elegant manner.

"My name is Seo Yi-seo."

The pattern designer was younger than Seongjin had expected.

She had a modest yet pretty face with black hair and a distinctly familiar Asian appearance. Her demure approach, eyes cast down as she walked towards them, made her seem almost pious, causing Seongjin to doubt for a moment if she really could be involved in the monster incident.

'...Wait a minute?'

Seongjin was struck by an odd sense of déjà vu.

—"Do you have a type, brother? I think I'm a bit attracted to women with black hair and exotic looks."[1]

Suddenly, he remembered Sisle's words.

As he stared at the woman with a strange premonition, she turned her head towards Seongjin and smiled faintly.

'What's this?'

Feeling inexplicably irritated, Seongjin frowned, but the woman had already approached the group and bowed her head politely.

"I always thought the Imperial Palace would come looking for me someday. All this is guided by Saint Gracia."

At her words, a tingling sensation seemed to prick Seongjin's heart.

'...What's this?'

Confused by the sudden turn of events, Seongjin clenched his jaw and glared at her.

Meanwhile, passersby began to gather around Salon de Mercier, drawn by the commotion.

Seongjin, sensing a strange shift in the atmosphere, looked around to find not only the passersby but also the City Guards and the Knights of Liliun, as if entranced, staring at the woman.

With an uneasy feeling, he turned back towards her just as she spoke again.

"However, it seems there's a misunderstanding, and I wish to prove my innocence first. I swear to the [Supreme Deity] that I have done no wrong."

Another peculiar wave rippled through Seongjin's chest as she spoke.

"....."

In the suddenly quiet Deste Street, as if a spell had been cast, everyone around, including Seongjin's group, stared at the woman with their mouths agape. Even Masain seemed entranced, his usually alert face blank with bewilderment.

Only Logan looked at the woman with a shocked expression, quickly turning to Seongjin with a grave look.

"Haha..."

The woman, Seo Yi-seo, wore a serene smile as if she had anticipated this situation. After briefly scanning the group, she declared in a melodious voice,

"To prove my innocence, I request a trial of ordeal here, with all present as witnesses. I am willing to undergo the 'Saintess's Trial'."

Another subtle ripple spread out. Amidst the stunned silence of the crowd, Seongjin blinked in confusion.

Why? What exactly is the 'Saint's Trial'?

[Seongjin.]

Then, the Demon King whispered softly.

[It's clear. That woman, she's a being from an Imaginary World.]

...What?

T/N:

1. Chapter 115[↵]

122

Saintess Gracia of Servitude.

She lived over 700 years ago, a woman likened to an angel for devoting her life to serving those in need. She shared her bread with the poor and, with her limited knowledge, prepared herbal remedies for the sick.

One day, a plague struck her village. Despite Gracia's best efforts to care for the people, some tragically died. Subsequently, a villager accused her of witchcraft, leading to her being reported to the heresy tribunal.

"What? Why accuse someone who helped?"

"Well, it was a long time ago. They believed the plague was a curse from a witch, and falsely claimed she was the source from the start."

Gracia faced three trials ordered by the inquisitor. She was thrown into a cold riverbed, made to walk over hot coals, and submerged in boiling oil.

However, due to the divine care of the merciful Lord, admiring her pure heart, Gracia safely passed these trials and was eventually acquitted, returning home. The villager who falsely accused her was struck by lightning as punishment from the Lord.

Even after this ordeal, Gracia continued to serve people throughout her life. On her deathbed, she left this testament:

"Should danger ever befall blessed Delcross, I will be reborn time and again to serve the Kingdom of the Lord."

Her noble will was recognized by later generations, and the Orthodox Church canonized her as a saint.

Currently, one of the five orders of knights, inheriting her legacy and valuing [Sacrifice] as a virtue, conducts missionary work. This is none other than the Order of Saint Gracia.

The trials she faced—of water, fire, and oil—became known as the "Trials of the Saintess."

"Since then, occasionally, some challenge these three trials to prove their faith and innocence," Logan explained.

Seongjin frowned upon hearing this.

Not even a triathlon, and they choose to challenge this? That's insane.

"So, are these trials actually passable?"

To Seongjin's question, Logan shook his head.

"Since her time, no one has successfully completed these trials. The very first trial is impossible to endure."

The trial of water requires one's body not to float to the surface when submerged in a river. The logic is that those whose souls are pawned to the devil weigh less spiritually, and thus, cannot help but float.

Well, one might think that with adept use of aura concealment or strong divine power, it could be possible, but the real challenge is the duration. A person is thrown into the water and must be submerged for two to three hours.

"Even if someone is skilled in using aura or possesses strong divine power, no one can survive without breathing underwater for more than two hours."

Inevitably, they either come up for air or drown. Those who survive this face the trials of fire and oil, only to suffer terrible burns and death.

So why do people still request these trials?

The reason is clear. Rather than dying slowly under the prolonged torture of the heresy tribunal, they prefer a swift suicide.

"The problem is that the will to undertake the Saintess's Trials is still respected. Once a woman declares her intention to undergo the trials, she cannot be interrogated or tortured until the trials are over."

Seongjin looked up at Seo Yi-seo, who was walking ahead at a distance.

Surrounded by the capital's guards, she maintained a demure posture, her hands clasped over her chest, even while being escorted. For someone seeking suicide, she was remarkably composed.

What could her true intentions be?

"Seongjin, do you know this?"

Logan, who had been gazing at him, suddenly asked.

"The reason why Sisle was unanimously declared a saint by the Orthodox Church despite her young age?"

"Huh? I heard it was because of her strong divine power. Is there another reason?"

As Seongjin looked puzzled, Logan continued in a calm tone.

"It probably happened when Sisle was around seven. One day, stigmata appeared on her body. These were the same marks said to have been acquired by Saintess Gracia during her trial by fire."

After Gracia's death, there had been several instances where young women developed such stigmata.

Since these women possessed immense divine power, the Orthodox Church believed it to be the realization of the saintess's will to be reborn. Therefore, each of them was consecrated as a saintess and dedicated their lives to serving the faithful.

Then one day, a clear divine symbol was engraved on the soles of the youngest princess, who had peacefully woken from her sleep. The Orthodox Church acknowledged Sisle as the reincarnation of Saintess Gracia.

"If, by some rare chance, that woman actually passes all of the Saintess's Trials..."

Logan's voice trailed off, worry evident on his face.

I have a feeling I know what he's worried about.

"Needless to say, that woman will be regarded as the reincarnation of Gracia and become a saintess. And then..."

"She might be required by the Orthodox Church to prove the same thing, right?"

"Yes."

Logan nodded towards Seongjin, his eyes deepening with concern.

"I just hope it's an unfounded worry."

[Yi-seo's POV]

Hi? My name is Seo Yi-seo.

I'm just a regular employee at a gaming company who loves romance fantasy novels!

One day, I found myself inside the world of a novel.

It's a high-class romance action fantasy adventure, where the beautiful and strong protagonist, the reincarnation of the noble Saintess Gracia, teams up with charming male leads to save the world from menacing enemies!

...Or so it was supposed to be.

But this story isn't complete yet and hasn't been published.

"Huh? But if it's not published, isn't it not a book yet? How can you call this a world inside a book?"

"Hmm, since it's destined to become a novel anyway, let's not fuss over such trivial details."

The reason this story is unfinished is that the very foundation of this world is shaking.

Sadly, due to the schemes of high-level demon lords targeting Delcross, this world in the novel faces an unprecedented crisis.

The protagonist meant to be reincarnated as a saintess hasn't been reborn, and the divine representative meant to protect this world has long been corrupted.

And a false saintess, who has appeared in place of the protagonist, is causing chaos by ensnaring the male leads!

She is about to turn into a key for summoning high-level demon lords into this world.

That's why the creator of this story came to me, asking me to complete the story and save the world in place of the protagonist.

But what should I do?

I'm just an ordinary girl without any divine powers or abilities.

"Wait a minute. If you work at a gaming company, you're already an adult, right? Why suddenly a girl? There's no consistency!"

"Doesn't a girl sound more appealing? It's cuter, no?"

"...Are you a lolicon?"

So, how should I navigate this unfavorable situation?

Can an ordinary me successfully impersonate a false saint and defeat another false saint?

Everyone, watch my journey to save the world! Teehee!

"Teehee? Why is the writing style like this? Teehee?"

"Huh? I thought it was trendy, but maybe I'm mistaken?"

"No, it's too frivolous! As a lover of romantic and poetic fantasy, I cannot forgive such poor writing!"

"Let's overlook that. To become a part of a grand narrative, it first needs to be read by many. But more importantly..."

"...?"

"Can't you become a bit prettier? You are the female protagonist, after all."

"Argh! How much more customization do you expect me to undergo?"

Seo Yi-seo. She is a human from the regular world.

According to the demon king, she, like Madam Justine, emanates a vast order fundamentally different from this world.

'...Hmm, maybe I should have tested her?'

Seongjin was skeptical. Even after observing her closely, he hadn't felt any particular sense of incongruity.

[It's not surprising you felt that way. Her body was intricately constituted. It might be slightly heavier, but her weight wouldn't be much different from the humans of this world.]

Compared to Seo Yi-seo, Madam Justine's body was almost like an empty can.

Indeed, unlike Madam with his almost non-existent aura activation, Seo Yi-seo had a level of aura activation similar to an average person.

[If her soul hadn't had the typical characteristics of a human from the regular world, I wouldn't have noticed so quickly.]

The demon king explained that the souls from the regular world don't take on the complete human form like those from the world of appearances or the original world. They usually have the characteristics of a round sphere or a hard crystal.

It's somewhat reminiscent of the soul terminals that the Arenja creatures create, isn't it?

'Anyway, if it's confirmed that she came from the regular world to here, it's not strange for her to know about Dilelaria butterfly, which crosses dimensions.'

She might even know how to open gates between dimensions. It's worth investigating.

The problem is, since she publicly declared her intention to undergo the Saintess's Trials, the heresy tribunal, which oversees the trials, has swiftly taken her into custody.

[If she's gone there, isn't she as good as dead?]

'Well, the Saintess's Trials are supposed to be public. She'll be safe until then. Just get a cooperation document and barge into the heresy tribunal.'

Seongjin thought so, but the information Dasha brought him that evening was unexpected.

"Already in the torture chamber...?"

Wait. Wasn't it that nobody could touch her before she underwent the three trials?

As Seongjin expressed his shock, Dasha shrugged her shoulders.

"As you know, Your Highness, that place is a den of high-ranking clerics. Probably by the time she's presented to the public, all her wounds will be meticulously healed."

"....."

Seongjin felt a chill run down his spine.

The idea of a den full of clerics filled with divine power felt terrifying in a way he hadn't expected. They torture, heal, and then torture again.

It made sense now why those who underwent the heresy trials would go mad if they didn't die.

"So, there are rumors within the heresy tribunal itself that she might indeed be a saint."

According to the information brought by Dasha, Seo Yi-seo was enduring the torture remarkably well. Despite having her flesh cut and being branded with hot irons, she maintained her devout demeanor, continuously praying to the Lord.

The inquisitors, notorious for their cruelty, were reportedly so moved by her devotion that they even joined in her prayers.

'...Could she really be a saint? That can't be, right?'

Seongjin slightly furrowed his brows.

A true saint should possess strong divine power. However, both the demon king and Logan had asserted they couldn't sense any divine power from her.

Furthermore, Logan had said this with apparent disgust:

—Everything she says is a lie; it's hard to know where to begin questioning. Her guidance from Saintess Gracia and her oath to the Lord, none of it is true!

The unsettling feeling Seongjin had when Seo Yi-seo was first taken into custody still lingered.

That strange, tingling sensation in his chest, as if being enchanted, and the odd reactions of the people around her, mesmerized by her face.

Lost in thought, Seongjin eventually looked up.

"...Has there been any word from my father?"

Indeed, the emergence of a suspicious saint candidate who might threaten Sisle's position was significant.

What would His Majesty, the emperor, think of this situation?

"Hmm..."

Dasha's response to this question seemed a bit stiff.

"It's that... His Majesty didn't say anything but just gave a slight smile."

Smiled?

"But... they said it was incredibly frightening."

"....."

Ah, I think I understand what that means.

123

[Yi-seo's POV]

Every story needs a background, right?

In Delcross, there is a powerful ruler known as the Holy Emperor, essentially the divine representative. He guides the citizens on behalf of God and governs the Kingdom of the Lord, being the most noble cleric.

However, years ago, the Holy Emperor fell into the schemes of high demon lords, committing an irreversible sin.

The corrupted Holy Emperor is now a source of evil, shaking the very foundation of the world and threatening its existence. He has disrupted the boundaries between dimensions, exposing Delcross to invasion, and obstructed the reincarnation of the saint, the world's protector.

Yes, to save this world, I must ultimately confront this powerful Holy Emperor.

"But how can I, devoid of divine power, stand against him? Who would support me if I suddenly declare myself a saintess?"

"First, request to undergo the Saintess's Trials. If you pass, you can find the [Scepter of the Holy Emperor] in the Saint Bastian Church."

The Scepter of the Holy Emperor.

It's a precious relic where the body of the first demi-god Holy Emperor is enshrined.

If a worthy person prays before the scepter, the soul of the first Holy Emperor bestows upon them the blessing of divine power.

Only one person in each generation can receive this blessing. Once bestowed, no one else can receive it until the blessed one dies.

"Uh... But the trial of the saint, isn't that like some medieval witch trial? Do I really have to do that? It's kind of scary."

"What's the problem? People from the regular world can adjust their sensations at will, can't they?"

"Sure, I can turn off my sense of pain, but that's still a world within a book, right? What if I can't control it there?"

"Don't worry about that. The rules of the regular world that apply to your body will be transferred over there."

That's also possible thanks to the Holy Emperor weakening the dimensional boundaries.

Hmm, but just to be safe, I should still pack plenty of potions in my inventory.

"But I'm curious. Isn't the Holy Emperor a sub-male lead?"

"He's a married man with many princes and princesses. But, didn't I just explain he's the mastermind behind the world's peril?"

"Huh? In romance fantasy, isn't the mastermind as important a sub-male lead as any?"

"....."

Screech.

With a faint whiff of smoke, the acrid smell of burning flesh assaulted the nostrils.

"Confess the truth now, you witch!"

As the jailer pressed the branding iron against Seo Yi-seo's body, Cardinal Benitus watched with fierce eyes, growling in anger.

Due to the unprecedented situation where several inquisitors had thrown in the towel, Cardinal Benitus, the head of the heresy tribunal, was personally interrogating her.

Already agitated from hunting remnants of the dark cult, he was infuriated by this madwoman claiming to continue the legacy of the saintess.

"What sort of trickery is this! You, devoid of even a speck of divine power, how dare you pretend to be a saintess! Confess your schemes now!"

Despite Cardinal Benitus's furious shouting, Seo Yi-seo, enduring the excruciating torture, remained calm, hands clasped in prayer, without so much as a whimper.

"I am but following the will of God. He decreed that a true crisis is impending over Delcross, and we must all unite to overcome this challenge."

"This is still—"

"I am not seeking the burden of [Saintess] for any selfish reasons! Everything is for the blessed Delcross!"

Zing. Her words carried a deep, moving resonance.

Her devout demeanor, concerned only for the welfare of Delcross, even caused one of the jailers, who was heating the iron, to involuntarily make the sign of the cross, earning a stern glare from Cardinal Benitus.

At that moment.

"His, His Majesty has arrived."

A jailer's trembling voice announced from outside, and the Holy Emperor, unannounced, strode into the torture chamber, accompanied as always by the Commander of the Saint Aurelion Knights.

"Your Majesty! To what do we owe the honor of your presence here...?"

Everyone in the chamber, including Cardinal Benitus, hastily bowed their heads in shock.

The Holy Emperor surveyed the chaotic scene in the cell for a moment before sighing softly.

"...Engaging in futile actions."

Seo Yi-seo, sneaking a glance at the Holy Emperor with one eyelid slightly raised, involuntarily swallowed hard.

'...Wow, incredible!'

Why! How! Why isn't he the male lead?

Hey, dear author! Are you listening? Huh?

Can't we change the course of the story now?

As Seo Yi-seo internally screamed in silence, the Holy Emperor continued to scrutinize her, his eyes occasionally flashing a mysterious silver glow in the dim light of the dungeon.

"Do you wish to become a saintess?"

After a while, the Holy Emperor, in a quiet tone, broke the silence.

"Yes? Y-Yes... that is my intention..."

As Seo Yi-seo stuttered in surprise, the Holy Emperor nodded gravely.

"Very well, let it be so."

"...What?"

"Huh?"

Seo Yi-seo, along with everyone else in the dungeon, was visibly startled by the Holy Emperor's declaration. The Holy Emperor then turned to Katrina and commanded.

"Inform Archbishop Wesker immediately. Say that she is recommended by me, and there will be no need for further verification. Ensure she is officially inaugurated before the Birth Festival."

He was making a monumental decision with an air of nonchalance, as if he were merely approving a minor expense report!

"...Gasp!"

Cardinal Benitus, who had been deflating in shock, suddenly snapped back to attention, his eyes bulging.

"Your Majesty, what do you mean! How can you elevate this witch to sainthood!"

"She is not a witch. She has expressed a firm intention to live her life in service as a saint, and such resolve should be respected."

"But this woman has no divine power whatsoever!"

"The virtues of a saint are not in divine power, but in steadfast faith and unyielding will. Saint Gracia, too, was not a priestess in her lifetime. This woman has shown her dedication to the people, enduring harsh torture for them. Haven't we seen enough of her faith and will, or is more verification needed?"

"But, but... the Trials of the Saintess are still..."

As Cardinal Benitus stuttered, pale-faced, the Holy Emperor slightly clicked his tongue.

"Tsk, still harping on ancient customs? From now on, no one is permitted to undergo public trials under the pretext of proving their faith."

Cardinal Benitus stood there gaping. Meanwhile, Seo Yi-seo, who had managed to collect her thoughts amidst the shock, was quickly processing the situation.

Wait a minute. What does this mean for me?

What about my plan to be acknowledged by the citizens and the Orthodox Church, to be elevated to sainthood amidst everyone's cheers?

What about my plan to seize the Scepter of the Holy Emperor and triumphantly defeat the false saintess?

"But, this cannot be!"

As Seo Yi-seo raised her voice in protest, everyone in the torture chamber looked at her in disbelief.

She was being offered sainthood on a silver platter, and yet, why was she objecting?

"I haven't proven anything! If it ends like this, no one will recognize me as a true [Saintess]! I won't be able to fulfill [God's] will! I can't complete my mission!"

"....."

"Please consider! Allow me to undergo the trial and emerge as a true servant of [God]!"

"...Is that so?"

After intently observing Seo Yi-seo, the Holy Emperor softly responded, then faintly curled the corners of his mouth.

A chilling sensation crept over her, permeating her entire body.

As Seo Yi-seo felt an ominous atmosphere and clamped her mouth shut,

"Katrina, a moment."

The Holy Emperor suddenly swayed and tilted forward. Katrina quickly supported him.

"Your... Your Majesty?"

Then, as if sensing something, Cardinal Benitus's eyes widened in shock. He quickly prostrated himself on the ground, bowing his head.

What's happening? What's going on?

Confused, Seo Yi-seo looked around, only to suddenly notice something and jerk in surprise.

"What? What's this? Why is the control panel acting up? Hey, wait... just a minute?"

Her eyes widened in horror.

And then.

"Kyaaaaaaaaak!"

A piercing scream echoed through the torture chamber.

"It hurts! It hurts! Ack! Please! Don't touch! Don't mess with the sensitivity settings! Aaaaack!"

"....."

"Kyaaak! Potion! Potion! Sob! Why? Why won't the shortcut work? Potion! Sob! It hurts!"

Seo Yi-seo, who had maintained a dignified demeanor just moments ago, suddenly erupted into hysterics, rolling on the floor.

Everyone in the chamber was bewildered, looking at her in confusion. How could someone change so drastically, so suddenly!

"No! No! Aaack! Stop! Don't go over 50%! Stop increasing it! Aaaaak!"

Now, Seo Yi-seo's face was terror-stricken, tears and snot streaming down as she pleaded.

"Please! I was wrong! Just let me have a potion! It's all a lie! I'm not a saintess! I'm not! Waaah!"

"....."

"Sob, sob! It hurts so much! Please stop! Please, hiccup."

"....."

"Sob! Hiccup! Hiccup! I won't do it! I won't, just let me go! I really regret it! Hiccup!"

In the silent torture chamber, only Seo Yi-seo's sobbing filled the space.

As her sobs gradually subsided, the Holy Emperor, who had been leaning on Katrina's shoulder, opened his eyes.

He slowly stood up and walked over to Seo Yi-seo, who was crouching flat on the floor, trembling.

Looking down at her, he said,

"The Scepter of the Holy Emperor. That must be what you desire."

".....!"

Noticing Seo Yi-seo's body flinching, the Holy Emperor gently touched her head.

Suddenly, a sacred white light burst from his hand. The numerous wounds on Seo Yi-seo's body began to heal without a trace.

"There's no need to worry. I will make you a proper saintess and present you before the people. However..."

The Holy Emperor then whispered softly into the ear of Seo Yi-seo, who was still trembling and unable to raise her head.

"Stay quiet, live as if you were dead, according to the will of the Orthodox Church. Do not wander about claiming to undergo the Trials of the Saintess or serve the citizens."

"....."

"Do you understand?"

"Hiccup!"

Seo Yi-seo, hiccupping uncontrollably, nodded her head in a daze.

Tap tap. After indifferently tapping her head a couple of times, the Holy Emperor stood up and, just as he had come, briskly exited the torture chamber. Katrina quietly followed behind him.

"...Your Majesty!"

Cardinal Benitus, stunned by the sudden turn of events, snapped back to reality and hurried out of the chamber after the Holy Emperor.

"Your Majesty, the Scepter of the Holy Emperor, surely you don't mean!"

He quickened his pace, trying to catch up with the Holy Emperor who was striding ahead.

"Do you really intend to bestow the Holy Emperor's family blessing upon that witch? That's preposterous!"

Not all Holy Emperors were born with immense divine power like Nate. Sometimes, when a successor without divine power had to assume the throne, the Scepter of the Holy Emperor was the highest treasure of the Holy Emperor's family, empowering them to stand as a worthy representative of God.

"Your Majesty! There must be a more suitable recipient for that blessing...!"

"Cardinal Benitus."

The Holy Emperor, pausing for a moment, continued speaking without turning around.

"You were probably thinking of using it for Masain."

Startled, Cardinal Benitus's face turned ashen as he was caught off guard.

He deeply respected the current Holy Emperor, who was befitting of the title of God's representative more than anyone. However, he was always concerned about the ominous blood inherited from the current Holy Emperor's mother.

In his mind, it was only right for Masain, the eldest legitimate heir, to succeed the throne next. But to think his intentions were already known?

As Cardinal Benitus's face twisted with confusion, guilt, and shame, the Holy Emperor looked at him with a cold gaze and added softly,

"However, let it be clear. That is not a blessing, but a curse."

Archbishop Wesker massaged his throbbing head as he closed the letter. His headache was so severe, he almost felt as if his long-gone right eye was about to pop out again.

The sudden orders from the Holy Emperor were not new, but still perplexing.

'A saintess out of nowhere...'

It wasn't a request to verify a potential saintess candidate.

Instead, it was an order to present an ordinary person as a dignified saintess in just a few days.

'What does His Majesty really think of the Orthodox Church and the Holy Council?'

However, it was a command from the Holy Emperor himself. There must be a reason behind His Majesty's actions.

Having decided this, Wesker began to quickly plan his course of action.

'First, find a suitable rural church to issue a recommendation letter, hire a couple of witnesses who would testify to miracles performed by the saint, convene the bishops this afternoon for a quick decision, submit the paperwork to the Holy Council, and casually drop a hint to Cardinal Mayer...'

It was a plan that blatantly disregarded doctrine and regulations, but Wesker and the Holy Emperor had always been in sync in such matters. Unlike Cardinal Benitus, who always insisted on principles, Wesker prioritized practicality.

He remembered concocting similar schemes with the Holy Emperor during the early years of his reign. Recalling Cardinal Mayer's frantic efforts to manage the aftermath always brought a wry smile to his face.

Chuckle. Suppressing his laughter, Wesker was about to move on when he noticed a small girl standing quietly in a corner of the hallway.

Saintess Sisle.

With her long silver hair and white priestly robe, she looked like a pure and faultless creation of the Lord. The girl, glowing with an ethereal light, stood dazed, staring down the forbidden corridor.

"Saintess Sisle."

At Wesker's call, Sisle slowly turned around, clutching a small diary to her chest as always.

"...Archbishop Wesker."

"Why are you here alone? What about Sister Ursula?"

Wesker thought of the talkative sister who usually accompanied the saint and touched his forehead.

Leaving the small blessing of the Lord alone in such a place was a serious negligence of duty.

However, Sisle, with her innocent eyes, looked up at Wesker and asked an unexpected question.

"I heard from Sister Ursula that a new saintess candidate has appeared."

"....."

"Will she become a saintess?"

Her question wasn't about the authenticity of the new candidate's sainthood.

She was asking if the Holy Emperor had approved her.

Wesker was silent for a moment, but then slowly nodded.

"Yes, Saintess Sisle. It seems that will be the case."

"Then, unlike me, will she have the opportunity to meet the first Holy Emperor?"

Wesker recalled the instructions he had just received from the Holy Emperor.

Make Seo Yi-seo an impeccable saintess in the public eye. Arrange for her inauguration before the Birth Festival, along with the bestowal of the [Scepter of the Holy Emperor].

"...It appears so."

As soon as he answered, tears fell from Sisle's clear gray eyes.

Her face, always expressionless like a doll, made her sadness even more poignant to Wesker.

"Why... Why are you crying?"

Wesker, startled by her sudden tears, awkwardly bent over and put his arm around her shoulder.

"Archbishop Wesker, I have served the citizens earnestly. I did my best for Delcross. But why does His Majesty still not recognize me?"

"Saintess Sisle..."

Wesker looked at the quietly weeping girl with a heavy heart.

It wasn't unreasonable for the young girl to think that way. When the Orthodox Church initially motioned to consecrate Sisle as a saintess, the Holy Emperor had categorically refused.

If it hadn't been for Sisle's firm determination, her elevation to sainthood would never have occurred.

Even though the Holy Emperor reluctantly allowed Sisle's consecration, he never permitted the bestowal of the [Scepter of the Holy Emperor], a ritual that all saintess traditionally underwent.

The young girl seemed to interpret this as a sign of not being fully recognized by her father.

"Your Highness... Saintess. It's not just you. His Majesty has forbidden the bestowal of the Scepter of the Holy Emperor to all members of the Holy Emperor's family. Don't you know?"

Indeed. Even Masain, now Clanos, was prohibited.

During the reign of the previous Holy Emperor, it was almost an annual event for the entire Holy Emperor's family to visit Saint Bastian Church. The current decision was indeed inscrutable.

But as always, Wesker assumed that the Holy Emperor had a valid reason for his actions. However, convincing this deeply saddened young girl was another matter.

"Saintess Sisle. Don't you know? You were the first child His Majesty embraced. I was there that day. I had never seen His Majesty so joyously smiling in my entire life."

"....."

"How could he not recognize someone like you? That's impossible. One day, we will all understand His Majesty's intentions."

Wesker comforted her, gently patting her shoulder.

[Yi-seo's POV]

What do you think is the most important element in a romance fantasy novel?

Yes, that's right. The existence of a charming male lead.

This novel also has a magnificent main male lead.

He is the eldest son of the Northern Border Duke, a genius swordsman with a cold charm, Prince Orden Siegmund!

He unravels the dark secrets of his family, fighting internal enemies, and at the same time, protects his domain from external threats. A truly capable man.

But despite his seemingly indifferent and cold demeanor, he's actually a pure-hearted person who still cherishes the memories of his first love.

And soon, he will fall for the saintess female lead and transform into a man of immense obsession.

Ah, I just wanted to save this world from peril, but now I have a male lead who's obsessed with me and won't let go. How troubling is that?

"So, what does this Young Master Orden Siegmund look like? Are there any illustrations of him?"

"Very handsome."

"That's it? What about his skin? His hair and eye color? Is he ruggedly handsome, or a more delicate beauty? Does he have the wild charm of a wounded beast, or the elegance of a flower blooming on a cliff?"

"...Is that really important?"

"Of course, it is! In a proper romance fantasy, you should be ready to spend pages praising the male lead's appearance!"

* * *

Recently, Orden's feelings were complicated.

He was busy tracking down suspicious forces hiding in the Siegmund territory, but the cold words Amelia had thrown at him a few days ago kept swirling in his head, disturbing his thoughts.

—Was I ever of any significance to you? Until the day His Majesty rescued me, I was as good as nonexistent in the duke's family.

No, it's not like that, Amelia.

I've always...

"What are you thinking about, sir Orden?"

Startled by the voice calling him, Orden looked up to find Herman, his face full of dissatisfaction, thrusting a stack of documents at him.

Herman, virtually Orden's right-hand man, was a cheeky subordinate, not exactly known for his loyalty.

"Isn't it a bit urgent for you to be daydreaming? Once the Birthday Celebration is over, you won't have the chance to move around the capital without the head of the family knowing."

Orden wiped his face with his hand before taking the documents.

"We've got a rough idea anyway. There should be some progress in the investigation."

"A rough idea? Are you referring to your speculation that Scarcepino is the link connecting Lord Siegmund and the Milo Trading Company?"

"It's not speculation. It's a conclusion I've reached through our investigation."

Herman looked incredulous.

"Your own investigation? Surely, you're not referring to the recent incident where you harassed an innocent lady, are you?"

"What innocence. She was utterly despicable."

Orden scoffed.

Isabella Scarcepino.

A prominent figure in social circles, she was indeed skilled at feigning ignorance.

Despite knowing she had been frequenting the Milo Trading

Company with young Count Riccardo, she pretended to have no memory of it, shaking in fear.

Orden then tossed a small medal he had been fiddling with onto the desk.

A crude medal with a spider engraved on it.

Recently found in various parts of the territory, Orden was secretly investigating it without the knowledge of the head of the family.

The strange occurrences in the Siegmund territory had deep connections with the Milo Trading Company, which had started dealings with the head of the family years ago. Orden had been suspecting Asein or Scarcepinio as the backers of the Milo Trading Company.

During this investigation, he received a letter from young Count Riccardo, enclosed with the spider medal. It was a veiled threat asking him to attend the celebration with his sister as a partner, with an agreement to keep silent about this matter.

After witnessing Isabella feigning ignorance at the Salon de Merci, he was convinced that the Scarcepinos were deeply involved in the events occurring in the Siegmund territory.

"This spider symbol seems indeed to be a mark of the dark cult. I got this information from an exorcist I know personally. Recently, the 'Cult of Repentance' has been frequently appearing across the northern and eastern regions."

Herman glanced at the medal and added with a hint of concern,

"Sir Orden, if this situation is indeed related to the remnants of the dark cult, it's too much for us to handle alone. Wouldn't it be better to seek the help of inquisitors or exorcists?"

Orden let out a bitter laugh.

"Herman, these are matters orchestrated by the head of the Siegmund family. If the heresy tribunal gets wind of this, do you think our family would remain unscathed?"

"But considering it's an internal whistleblowing, wouldn't they take that into account? If the Siegmund family falls, the defensive wall guarding the border would collapse. The authorities in the capital wouldn't want that."

"No, we'd be lucky just to escape with our lives. The heresy tribunal doesn't consider the repercussions; they only focus on eradicating heresy. Whether our family is destroyed by devil worshippers or smashed by inquisitors, the outcome will be the same."

"...Sigh. I spoke out of frustration due to the dire situation."

Herman sighed.

"We should have contacted Prince Logan when the Lilium Squad was passing by our territory. He seemed to have noticed something."

At that time, returning from a sea monster hunt, Prince Logan had requested a formal investigation of the territory, which the head of the family promptly refused.

"The head of the family was uncomfortable even with the squad staying briefly in our territory. Keeping an eye on Prince Logan, it would have been impossible to meet him without the head's knowledge."

"That's true."

Besides, Lilium was a detachment of the Saint Bastian Knights, known for being tightly controlled by the Orthodox Church, hardly better than the heresy tribunal.

Well, since there's been no significant reaction so far, it seems Prince Logan didn't find any crucial evidence.

"If only there were another force not under the church or tribunal, with some flexibility..."

As Orden sighed and mumbled, Herman suddenly brightened up, as if he remembered something.

"Oh, speaking of which, I heard the administration recently established a special division for handling magical beasts. Did you know about it?"

"A division for magical beasts?"

"Yes. It's led by the Third Prince and operates independently of the church, investigating malign entities. It's a new division, so it hasn't made any significant achievements yet."

"Prince Morres..."

Suddenly, the image of a young boy who had stood beside Amelia that day flashed through Orden's mind. The boy with fierce eyes and an annoyingly smug smile, who had seemed unusually skilled.

Orden frowned.

Hadn't their first interaction been rather unfavorable? Would the prince really agree to help if requested?

But with no time and limited options, involving the magical beast division seemed the only feasible course of action. After much deliberation, Orden, accompanied by Herman, decided to visit the administrative annex.

To his surprise, the prince listened quietly to Orden's explanation. When he finished speaking, the prince curled one side of his lips into a mischievous, almost sinister smile.

"Just with words?"

125

[Yi-seo's POV]

In other worlds, isn't it important for a saintess to have some romantic tension with charming secondary male leads?

Of course, my mind is filled only with thoughts of saving the world, but how can one not be swayed when surrounded by numerous male leads, each whispering words of love?

- "I engaged a woman I do not desire for the sake of the throne. But the true owner of my heart is you, the noble saintess."

Prince Leonard of Rohan.

Though he has a flirtatious nature, he ultimately becomes irresistibly captivated by the saintess. He's an attractive, ambitious character who will forsake a beautiful queen for the saintess.

- "Strange, isn't it? The free winds lead my soul, but in the end, I always find myself returning to you."

The wandering knight, Fernand.

A romantic swordsman, currently creating a love epic across the continent. He's seen as a frivolous playboy destined to follow the saintess.

- "I cannot leave Delcross, worried about your safety. From now on, my duty is not to fight the sea monsters, but to protect the saintess."

Prince Logan, the genius paladin.

A cool, calm beauty, who would give everything for his beloved saintess... a sucker, perhaps?

"Wait a minute, 'sucker' might be a bit too much, don't you think?"

"If you capture his heart, you'll receive the most devoted love. What, don't you like him?"

"Ah, that's a contrarian statement again. Remember! These days, male leads who are cruel to everyone else but kind to the female lead are popular!"

"...He's very handsome though?"

"...Of course, appearance is the most important plausibility."

And in this novel, there's even a hidden secondary male lead.

"Everyone has rejected me. My royal father and mother abandoned me long ago. But you, you're the only one who truly sees me."

Prince Morres, the overweight troublemaker.

Recently, he's undergone a transformation after deciding to mend his ways and train his body. However, unable to overcome the emotional scars from childhood, he's drawn to the saintess's warmth like a chick to its mother...

"What's this now? This underdeveloped kid? Isn't saving the world enough, now I have to take care of a baby bird too?"

"So, it's about the face..."

"Okay. Noted!"

Yes, in romance fantasy, the most important thing is ultimately the appearance.

A fool's actions are seen as folly, but when a charming man does the same, it becomes a poignant appeal to maternal instincts.

Ah, I am such a slave to appearances, alas!

"Ah, if you happen to capture his heart, there's something you should be careful about."

"Something to be careful about?"

"Yes. This prince has his peculiarities. If handled incorrectly, the world within the novel could face the worst bad ending."

"Ah! So there's a reason he's a hidden character? What should I watch out for?"

"Well, the thing is, he actually is..."

* * *

Seongjin blinked his eyes.

'What is this now...'

After finishing his morning training and starting his work at the Monster Special Task Force office with a refreshed feeling, that unpleasant guy he thought he'd never see again had brazenly shown up at the task force office.

Orden Siegmund, with a stoic face, bowed his head slightly, showing the bare minimum of courtesy.

"Greetings, Your Highness."

Still as stiff-necked as ever.

"Well then."

"...!"

Still, seeing his flustered face was somewhat amusing.

Seongjin, with a smirk, asked,

"But what brings you to our department?"

Orden soon composed himself and spoke with a calm face.

"Actually, I've come to report a grievance to the Monster Special Task Force."

"A grievance?"

"Yes, about the atrocities of a large trading company called Milo."

Seongjin tilted his head in confusion.

Isn't he at the wrong place? If there's illegal activity, it should be reported to the judiciary, and if it's a matter of trade ethics, it should be taken to the commerce-related department within the administrative branch, right?

"The Siegmund territory, indeed the entire continent, is under a threat that can jeopardize our safety. Since corrupt elements are involved, resolving this internally in the territory seems difficult, so I earnestly request that the royal palace take some action."

"..."

Corrupt elements.

Seongjin silently observed Orden's expression. It was hard to read due to his usual stern face.

'He's not requesting an Inquisitor or an Exorcist, but he's come straight to a department that has no record of dealing with such matters...'

This must be a case involving his family.

There are differing stances within the family, making internal resolution difficult, and if it goes to the heresy court, they won't be able to escape responsibility.

"...Let's hear it then."

As Seongjin settled into his seat, Orden glanced uncomfortably to the side.

Ah. He's worried about Inquisitor Valerie.

"Don't worry about him. He is entirely a part of the Monster Special Task Force, and without my permission, he won't disclose anything to the heresy court. Right, sir Valerie?"

At this, the red-haired Inquisitor weakly smiled with a bitter expression.

"Of course. I could never go against Your Highness's orders."

Why is he secretly smuggling out forbidden books and hiding in the Monster Special Task Force office to read them, this maverick Inquisitor?

"Hmm hmm. The same goes for me. Your Highness's words are the future of the Monster Special Task Force."

Dame Sharon snickered on the side, worsening Orden's complexion.

He seemed to regret coming here, probably thinking Sharon doesn't seem all that sane.

With no choice, Seongjin had the Monster Special Task Force members step back. Then, with a warm smile on his face, he quickly reassured Orden before he could escape.

"Come on, don't hesitate to tell us. Our Monster Special Task Force is always open to help the empire's citizens."

At that moment, Orden visibly tensed up and froze.

Huh? Why's he reacting like this all of a sudden?

[Wow, you just looked really evil. Like a broker pressuring someone to sign an organ trafficking contract!]

...Shut up, unnecessarily detailed and realistically patched-up demon king!

After much persuasion and overcoming the Eldest Young Master's wariness, the situation in the Siegmund territory that he finally heard about was quite serious.

Recently, a suspicious drug has been circulating in the territory, and since then, there have been frequent instances of people behaving strangely or suddenly disappearing.

"...Is it a drug?"

"We suspect so, but it's not a type known throughout the continent."

A few years ago, the Siegmund Border Count signed an exclusive contract with a large trading company, Milo. Given the barren environment, the territory relied heavily on the company for many necessities. The company offered goods at low profit margins, aiming for volume sales, so there was no reason for the territory to refuse the deal.

Along with cheap, high-quality goods, a suspicious herbal powder began circulating in the territory.

Those who brewed and drank tea from this powder began to talk nonsense and go mad, or suddenly ventured into the Black Forest and disappeared.

"Why not just ban its distribution?"

"That's a bit complicated. Initially, it only gives a slight euphoria and well-being, and Milo is marketing it as a tea that boosts vitality."

The man explaining all this, showing various documents, was Herman, a subordinate of Orden. Unlike the rigid Eldest Young Master, this man seemed more reasonable and articulate.

"To legally ban its distribution, we need clear evidence that the herb is a narcotic. But it doesn't have a particularly strong analgesic effect, nor does it cause a state of extreme mental or physical debilitation..."

"Hmm."

Listening to the explanation, Seongjin could roughly guess the underlying situation.

Whether it's legal or not, if the Border Count simply bans it, that's the end of the story. Thus, needing to request a ban with legal justification implies that someone in the family, in cahoots with Milo, is a powerful figure pushing the drug's distribution.

And if the official heir, the Eldest Young Master, finds it too overwhelming to handle, it must be the work of.

'The Border Count.'

Perhaps he is acting in opposition to the head of the family. That must be quite a burden for him.

"The Eldest Young Master was away from the territory participating in a martial arts tournament in another country recently. Upon his return, he found that everyone in the territory was drinking this tea. But since it's distributed in powder form, it's impossible to identify the ingredients."

As he said this, Herman took something out of his pocket. It was a few flat, seed-like objects wrapped in a handkerchief.

"We've only recently been able to track down the distributors and obtain these, the original ingredients of the tea."

Seongjin, feeling a strange premonition, closely examined the objects.

Although they were flat and dried, these were clearly not herbs but rather.

'Hey, demon lord. Doesn't this look familiar?'

[Yeah? It's actually the dried seed of Lophellum!]

What? Where did this come from?

As Seongjin looked at Orden with newfound surprise, Orden seemed to sense something ominous and shivered.

"So? You're saying this tea suddenly flooded the territory, causing severe harm to its people. But why do you suspect that corrupt elements are involved in its distribution?"

Responding to Seongjin's question, Orden and Herman exchanged a glance, remaining silent for a moment.

But then, as if making up his mind, Orden let out a sigh and placed a small medallion on the table. It was a small, red-tinted medallion with a crudely engraved spider symbol on it.

"This is a mark of the Dark Cult, found during our investigation of the distributors."

As Seongjin picked up the medallion, Herman added to the explanation.

"In the process of investigating Milo Trading, we frequently encountered this mark. It's clear that Milo Trading is connected to the remnants of the Dark Cult."

This means the force spreading the seeds of Lophellum in the Empire is also linked to Milo Trading. The trail of the Dark Cult, which had disappeared after Priest Heiz, has resurfaced.

The Dileraria butterflies seen near the Siegmund territory by Logan might not be entirely unrelated to them either!

'I thought he was just a troublemaker, but turns out, this guy is a goldmine.'

As Seongjin grinned, Orden jolted in surprise, then scowled disdainfully.

But what does it matter? To Seongjin, Orden no longer seemed like a brash, arrogant youngster but rather a plump lamb, innocently awaiting its turn at the table.

"Alright, the Monster Special Task Force will assist in this matter."

Seongjin smiled contentedly.

"But just like that?"

"...Yes?"

As the two men looked bewildered, Seongjin explained calmly.

"As you know, our department is short-staffed, and we're already overwhelmed with investigating the Grey Plague. Even so, we're stepping up for the Siegmund territory."

"..."

"Of course, we're doing this for the Empire's citizens, so we're not asking for a labor fee. But at least, the expenses for our department's activities should be covered by you, right?"

Orden, looking stunned, nodded.

"Yes, that's only fair."

"And let's make one thing clear,"

Seongjin said, looking him in the eye.

"I'll let this go this time. You owe me for this one."

"..."

"Whenever the time comes, in whatever form, you'll have to repay this debt to me. Understand?"

Orden's pupils quivered slightly.

"Of course... As soon as this matter is resolved, I will find a way to compensate you..."

"No, that's not it. That's just another debt that will arise after the resolution. We need to settle this one now."

"...?"

"Don't you get it? I'm keeping quiet about the Siegmund family's collusion with the Dark Cult. I'm hiding your family's misdeeds from the heresy tribunal. Surely, you aren't planning to just let this favor slide?"

There seemed to be a draining of color from the Eldest Young Master's face.

Given the gravity of the situation, both men appeared shocked and out of sorts. Hence, not only Herman but even Orden failed to notice the whispers of the task force members behind them.

"Wow... Creepy. I didn't see that coming from His Highness Morres. He's really good at playing it cool. Did you see? His expression didn't change at all."

"Jibril-nim, we should refrain from disrespectful remarks."

"But, sir Masain, wasn't His Highness just deliberating on how to send an investigation team to the Siegmund territory? This seems like a good opportunity, so why is he now pressuring the Eldest Young Master like this?"

"His Highness must have his reasons. We just follow his lead."

"Hmm hmm. I... I knew it all along. His Highness's potential is truly remarkable."

"Dame Sharon? You're not implying that this potential is about being a con artist, are you?"

126

Hello? My name is Seo Yi-seo.

I'm a regular employee at a gaming company who loves romance novels.

One day, during the alpha test of the [Homunculus Integrated Engine] in my personal space [My Home], I met a man.

He introduced himself as a storyteller who travels through dimensions, aspiring to become a grand rule that governs all stories, eventually reigning as the king of tales. At first, I thought he was completely insane.

But then, he told me an incredible story.

Our company's finely crafted integrated engine had become a great rule that composes various dimensions. The first MMORPG created with this engine, [Pangaea Chronicle], became one of the most splendid and vast dimensions among many others.

After that, I traveled through various dimensions with the storyteller, engulfed in blue butterflies.

He showed me various constructed worlds like Pangaea Chronicle, countless natural worlds, and even a few small natural dimensions created by his stories.

After witnessing those vivid scenes, I had no choice but to believe him. If his words weren't true, I'd be suffering from severe schizophrenia, lost in perfect hallucinations.

The dimension's storyteller said,

He wished for the stories he created to gather and become a massive rule that shapes dimensions, just like this [Homunculus Integrated Engine].

But he mentioned that one of his most important stories, which he had been working on diligently, was falling into disarray.

So, he asked for my help. To become the new saintess in a world where the main character had vanished and the villain ran rampant, and to save the world within the book.

I had no reason to refuse. He guaranteed my safety, and besides, as a romance fantasy enthusiast, who wouldn't dream of stepping into a novel's story at least once?

But I had forgotten an important fact.

Many protagonists struggle to return to reality. And in most cases, they gradually assimilate into the world, eventually reaching an ending with the novel in some way or another.

Time flew by incredibly fast.

Seo Yi-seo was suddenly released from a torture chamber and brought to a large church. Guided by the hands of kind-hearted priestesses, she received extraordinary treatment.

She was bathed, dressed in white, luxurious clothing, and fed refined meals. Every day, she joined the priests in the chapel for mass and memorized thick, incomprehensible scriptures.

In this whirlwind of activities, she suddenly found herself sitting demurely in a grand church, donning a white veil, waiting for some ceremony.

Judging from the circumstances, it seemed to be her inauguration as a saintess.

The majestically decorated church was filled with a multitude of people. Nobles in luxurious clothing and dignified high priests continuously approached to offer their congratulations.

'What is all this...'

So many things were happening one after another, it was dizzying. Seo Yi-seo couldn't even begin to guess how her future would unfold.

As she stared blankly into space, a man quietly approached and spoke to her.

"What happened? Isn't this very different from our plan? Why have you suddenly become the saintess?"

Seo Yi-seo's eyes widened in shock.

The man was clad in a lavish robe that covered his body and face, leaving only his smooth lower jaw exposed. However, she recognized his voice distinctly.

He was the young man who had guided her to Salon de Merci when she first arrived in this world, another avatar of the storyteller.

"...Writer!"

Tears welled in Seo Yi-seo's eyes.

"Why, why did you only appear now? Writer!"

"Shh!"

The man glanced around cautiously and whispered softly.

"Many eyes are upon us. I'll read your thoughts, so just think your responses, don't speak them."

Seo Yi-seo swallowed hard and nodded.

"It was unavoidable that I couldn't contact you sooner. You were detained within the palace, a place where I had no means to reach you independently. The palace is the absolute realm of the Holy Emperor. A space where I can neither enter nor interfere."

Seo Yi-seo, having personally experienced the Holy Emperor's terrifying powers, understood that the storyteller must have had no other choice.

"But our plan has gone seriously awry. Why were you suddenly taken to the palace? Weren't we supposed to lay low until the Grand Festival Mass of the Nativity?"

I don't know. Suddenly, Prince Morres came to the dressing room looking for me. He said he had something to ask about a butterfly design.

"Prince Morres... as expected, he was the unpredictable factor!"

Yes. He came with a group of knights and insisted on taking me to the palace. I had no choice but to agree to undergo the Trials of the Saintess right there.

"But why didn't you undergo the Trials of the Saintess? How did you suddenly become a saintess without doing anything?"

I don't know, Writer.

Suddenly, the villain of this world appeared and turned me into this.

But listen. Do you know what the Holy Emperor did to me?

He completely blocked my inventory and arbitrarily manipulated my sense of pain. I thought I was going to die from the pain that day!

".....!"

The man swallowed hard.

"...I never imagined he could tamper with the rules of the constructed world like this. My predictions were slightly off. Proceeding with the plan as is seems to be too risky now."

What do we do now?

What should I do next?

"Just follow the original plan for now – reveal the Holy Emperor's scheme and become the saintess. The [Minor Edict] I placed on you seems to still be intact, so use it judiciously. It should ensure that those around you won't treat you too harshly."

What? Writer! What are you talking about?

You're not going to rescue me from here now?

"Stay within the Order for the time being, and another opportunity will arise soon. I will find time to come back for you. Until then..."

"Wait!"

"Farewell, and good luck!"

Seo Yi-seo, in a panic, reached out to grab him, but just like when he arrived, the man quickly disappeared into the crowd.

No, Writer! Wait! If you leave like this, what am I supposed to do!

"....."

Overwhelmed, Seo Yi-seo aimlessly gazed at the church entrance where he had vanished.

"...You jerk..."

With no one to hear her feeble reprimand, tears streamed down her face.

You jerk! How can you just leave someone like this?

Who did I trust to come this far? Who suffered all those hardships because of you!

"...You irresponsible... Such a jerk!"

Sobbing bitterly, Seo Yi-seo clutched at the veil covering her face, rubbing her face in despair. Her sudden, reckless behavior caused a stir among the people, but what did she care!

Left alone in this strange world, a world lurking with a terrifying villain!

That's when it happened.

"Why are you crying? Are you hurt?"

Startled by the question, Seo Yi-seo instinctively turned and was shocked into silence.

"A... fairy?"

There stood an ethereally pale girl.

With a porcelain doll-like innocent face and shimmering silver hair, a white lace veil similar to Seo Yi-seo's was delicately draped over her.

The girl's clear grey eyes, like polished crystals, looked at Seo Yi-seo with concern.

"The inauguration ceremony will start soon, followed by a long ceremonial mass. You won't have much time to rest for a while, so if there's anything wrong, you should tell me in advance."

Gosh, even her voice is so clear and pure!

She was shockingly, almost dangerously heartwarming.

"I, I am just..."

As Seo Yi-seo stuttered without forming coherent words, the girl tilted her head, then moved closer.

Soon, her tiny hand gently grasped Seo Yi-seo's. As Seo Yi-seo felt the frail warmth of her touch, a white light suddenly burst from the girl's fingertips.

'Oh...'

The soreness from rubbing her eyes with the coarse veil eased, and she felt an overall improvement in her condition.

Above all else.

'...It's comforting.'

Wrapped in this warm light, Seo Yi-seo felt a sense of solace.

'This is divine power...!'

She had experienced a similar force in the torture chamber not long ago. However, while the Holy Emperor's use of it felt like a merciless trap constricting her tightly, the power emanating from this girl felt like unbounded affirmation and encouragement.

As her sobbing subsided, the little girl examined Seo Yi-seo quietly before speaking up.

'This girl must be the false saintess!' Seo Yi-seo realized.

But why? Contrary to what she had heard in stories and read in texts, this little girl seemed to radiate with all the goodness of the world, shining so brilliantly.

Her turning evil? Becoming a key for the Demon King's advent?

That's ridiculous!

'I... I knew nothing, and I was about to fight against such a kind child...'

Tears began to flow again.

Then, once more, the girl's hand emitted a white light, enveloping Seo Yi-seo in its warmth.

Confused, Seo Yi-seo sniffled and asked,

"I don't feel any physical pain now, so why do you keep using your divine power?"

The girl tilted her head.

"Hmm. Someone said that when our hearts are hurt, our bodies recognize this pain and actually feel it. So, if we heal the body whenever it feels pain, wouldn't the heart feel a bit less pain too?"

"....."

"If we warm the body, wouldn't the heart feel a bit less cold too?"

"Uh... um..."

What is this? A healing girl who seems like the ultimate healer in the realm of recovery?

Is this what a saintess is supposed to be?

Seo Yi-seo blinked her eyes.

Hey, Mr. Writer. Are we sure we're on the right track here?

This novel might actually be about something else. You know, like those clichés where the youngest princess adores me! Or, I received the youngest princess's favor, and now everyone is obsessed with me!

"Are you feeling better now?"

The girl tilted her head and asked Seo Yi-seo, who had finally stopped crying.

Charmed anew by her adorable demeanor, Seo Yi-seo made up her mind.

Let's protect this girl!

I will care for her, and then become her friend!

If the world inevitably revolves around this false saintess, perhaps clinging to her and surviving till the end is a viable option.

It's not about finding another way to save the world. It's about protecting this girl from turning evil.

'Let the Demon King and the villain come at us! I'll protect her! Think I can't do it?'

Seo Yi-seo clenched her fist towards the sky.

Listen up, Holy Emperor, Mr. Villain from another world!

If she comes to like me, can you still treat me the same way?

If I protect her and she cares for me, can you still harm me carelessly?

Hmph! No way!

Nate, who had been gazing into his teacup, suddenly looked up in surprise.

"Hmm? Why are you asking? Is something wrong?"

"No, nothing..."

He felt an inexplicable chill.

Why? He had preemptively dealt with those intending to harm Sisle, but why did he have this unsettling premonition that something was going awry?

"Did you do something again this time?"

"...Me?"

His troublemaker son appeared momentarily confused before breaking into a cheerful smile.

"Oh, yes. I just mentioned that I'd be going on a business trip. After the birthday celebration, I'll be heading to the north."

"The north..."

"Yes, to the Border Count of Siegmund's territory. There's something I need to investigate for the Monster Special Task Force."

"....."

Nate looked at his son enveloped in a sense of unease.

Then, his naive son added with a proud look,

"Oh! You don't need to give me any expenses for the trip. I've already secured them. Leave it to me!"

Did I do well?

With a smug expression, his son gulped down his tea and then added with a sigh, "I'll bring back souvenirs too!"

"....."

Really, is everything going to be alright...

Nate slowly raised his hand to his forehead.

From a very young age, little Sisle was always a child on the move.

She constantly ran, trying to catch up with her ever-busy father.

"Your Highness! You'll fall if you run like that!"

The maids chased after her, stomping their feet in frustration, but Sisle paid them no heed.

Even if she stumbled, she knew that a gust of wind would always come from somewhere to catch her before she fully fell.

"Appa-mama!"

She loved the way he would stop and turn around quietly when she called out like that. Embracing him and feeling the rustling sound of his white robe was her favorite moment.

"Think of those who must run with you, Sisle. They cannot keep up with your recovery rate."

He would caution her, tapping her forehead affectionately, and she loved that.

Indeed, the maids often collapsed from exhaustion in front of His Majesty the Emperor without even having the chance to properly greet him, but Sisle didn't care. Being by her father's side was all that mattered to her.

She clung to the Holy Emperor so much that even the Second Queen Melody seemed envious.

If she fell asleep in the office, she would wake up in the Silver Rose Palace the next morning. As soon as she woke up, Sisle would start running again to find her father.

However, there were times when she had to return early to the Silver Rose Palace alone, especially on the days when the Holy Emperor retreated to the prayer room.

Occasionally, he would spend the night in the heart of the main palace, away from everyone else.

Though it was called a prayer room, it was actually a huge hall with an artificial pond. Sisle thought of it as a glamorous yet somehow lonely place.

"Why does Appa-mama have to be alone in the prayer room?"

As she parted ways with him at the entrance of the prayer room and was carried out of the main palace by the Knight Commander Katrina, Sisle asked.

"His Majesty bears many heavy burdens that we cannot know, Your Highness."

"Wouldn't it be better if we all stayed in the prayer room to help Appa-mama?"

To this, the gentle Knight Commander replied with a slightly bitter smile.

"How wonderful it would be if it were something we could help with. For now, the best we can do is to quietly avoid disturbing him. Just knowing that Your Highness cares so much for him will surely be a great strength to His Majesty."

Katrina said this, but Sisle couldn't agree.

She pouted, thinking to herself.

Mother always said not to disturb Father and kept a tight watch on my visits to the office, but Appa-mama always seemed happy when I did show up. So, if I'm with him in the prayer room, wouldn't he be happier? I'm sure of it!

Then, one night happened.

That day, she had separated from the Holy Emperor and returned early to the Silver Rose Palace, falling asleep. But in the middle of the night, she felt as if someone was shaking her awake.

"...?"

Rubbing her eyes, Sisle woke up.

Was it an illusion? As she sat up, she found herself alone in her bedroom, with no sign of anyone who might have shaken her awake.

No, it wasn't her being shaken; perhaps it was the world itself that trembled.

She tried to sleep again, but her mind wouldn't settle. An intense unease enveloped her, a strange alienation as if the world around her had completely changed overnight.

Unable to sleep, Sisle eventually slipped on her slippers and left her bedroom. Strangely, that night, none of the maids woke up, and the palace guards stood asleep on their feet.

Tip-tap.

Unconsciously, Sisle found herself walking towards the Holy Emperor. Then, remembering he was in the prayer room, she hurried towards the main palace.

Despite the warm spring night, a chilling coldness gripped her, forcing her to stop and rub her hands together now and then.

Finally arriving at the heart of the main palace, Sisle hesitated before the prayer room door.

'I shouldn't enter; I was told no one should...'

But then, a voice inside her head said,

[Open the door. Go inside and see what is happening.]

It sounded like someone else's whisper, yet it seemed to be her own thought. She opened the door slowly, in a daze. Creeeak...

Suddenly, a strong smell of blood hit her.

Sisle's eyes widened as she took in the dark interior of the prayer room.

There, in the center of the blood-red pond, stood her father. But something was off.

Under the dim moonlight, the Holy Emperor stood with a blood-soaked Nutcracker in one hand, staring intently at something. His usually pristine white robe was splattered with blood.

And sensing her presence, the Holy Emperor slowly turned his head towards Sisle.

In the dark hall, only his bright gray eyes emitted a chilling silvery glow.

"...!"

Sisle was utterly shocked. The eyes that always looked at her with warmth were now cold and indifferent.

Is that person... Is that really Appa-mama?

As she stepped back in fear, a voice whispered in her ear,

[Yes. That is his true nature. He ruthlessly cuts down those he deems useless. Soon, you too will meet the same fate at his hands, just like them.]

...Appa-mama, would do that to me?

[Yes. What do you think? Don't you want to see the future prepared for you?]

A soft, mocking laughter echoed.

Staggering backward, Sisle turned and fled back to the Silver Rose Palace. The Emperor simply watched her go without saying a word or following her.

Once back in her room, Sisle dived into her bed in a frenzy. She soon fell into a deep sleep, only to be tormented by disturbing nightmares.

The next morning, a Saintess's mark suddenly appeared on the beloved youngest princess's body.

The Silver Rose Palace was thrown into chaos, and high priests from the Holy Church rushed over, proclaiming it the return of the Saintess.

Hearing the news, the Holy Emperor also visited the Silver Rose Palace. His face, full of tender concern, was no different from usual, making Sisle doubt if the events of the previous night were just a nightmare.

However, the scene from that night, the Holy Emperor's cold gaze, remained a vivid afterimage in her mind. It resurfaced from her subconscious, repeatedly evoking the sensations of that chilly spring day.

And since that day, Sisle no longer ran after her father.

* * *

Good news often comes in succession.

Feeling elated from the achievements of his meeting with Eldest Young Master Siegmund, Seongjin visited the main palace to report his business trip to the Holy Emperor. Returning to the Pearl Palace, he was greeted by Commander Bruno with more news.

"A message from Arenja. Two of the missing persons you've been investigating are currently detained at the Milo Trading Company's capital branch."

Bruno detailed the identities and current locations of the two individuals, Jonathan and Ashley, the theological academy students who apparently were beaten up by the jailers.

"...This is unexpected?"

Arenja, who had agreed to close cooperation but often made excuses like 'the time isn't right' and was reluctant to share information, had unexpectedly come through.

Caught off guard, Seongjin murmured, and Commander Bruno shrugged his shoulders nonchalantly.

"I'm not entirely sure about their criteria either. It's just that, based on what Your Highness discovered today, this information would have naturally surfaced once we intensified our search efforts."

"So, it was crucial to understand the connection with the Milo Trading Company?"

"It seems so. Of course, I get the feeling that's not all there is to it."

Then, Commander Bruno stroked his mustache lightly.

"Your Highness, this is just my personal opinion based on our interaction with them. Arenjar seemed to assume that there's another force behind the Milo Trading Company."

"Eldest Young Master Siegmund said something similar. He mentioned a high likelihood of involvement from Asein or Scarcepino."

Originally, the Milo Trading Company was not known for its activities in the North.

Thus, it must have been operating across the continent with the tacit approval of Assein through the merchants' union, or closely connected with Scarcepino, who has deep ties with the northwestern lords and border counts.

And he strongly suspected Scarcepino.

"Hmm?"

Commander Bruno suddenly furrowed his brows, focusing on something, then continued.

"Yes, exactly. I just asked whether Asein or Scarcepino is behind this, but they said they couldn't answer that. However, they suggested that Scarcepino is someone Your Highness should keep an eye on, in some sense."

...Is that so?

"Scarcepino..."

More than being the mastermind behind the grey plague, perhaps it's related to the past actions of Mores. Come to think of it, didn't they say a young lord from the Scarcepino family had ties with Mores?

"But why is my so-called only friend not in touch?"

With everything that had been happening recently, it had slipped his mind, but now that he thought about it, it was strange. A lot of time had passed since the fever, and the restrictions on visiting the Pearl Palace had been lifted long ago.

At that moment, Edith, who was tidying up the bedding behind Seongjin, chimed in.

"Maybe Your Highness is just ignoring his contacts?"

"Huh? What do you mean?"

"Well, doesn't the young lord send you an invitation like this every week?"

Edith rummaged through the pile of letters on the desk and held up a golden envelope.

"...Huh?"

Had such things been coming in?

"Yes. They've been arriving every week without fail, but since Your Highness told us to dispose of all the social gathering invitations, I've been taking care of them over time."

"....."

Ah, now he remembered.

The memory of the first social gathering was so strong that he had decided to live in voluntary seclusion and ordered all the letters to be discarded.

Seongjin took the glittering envelope from Edith and examined the sender.

Ricardo Scarcepino...

– Ricardo, a prince of the Scarcepino family, is known for his sociability and regularly hosts gatherings with the scions of influential families.

He remembered hearing this description from Sir Masain.

The person who hosted the most mainstream gatherings in Delcross was really the only friend of the notorious Morres?

Seongjin rubbed his chin, pondering.

The date on the invitation was tomorrow. Maybe it was worth attending to meet him in person?

"Shall I prepare for an outing tomorrow?"

Edith, noticing his hesitation, quickly asked.

"...Hmm, yes. Let's do that."

Ignoring the weekly invitations didn't seem right, and the gatherings didn't appear suspicious.

As Seongjin made up his mind, Commander Bruno suddenly tensed and looked into space with a troubled expression.

"...Is that possible? I'm not keen on it."

"...?"

"Yes, I will convey that."

Confused by the commander's grimacing and incomprehensible words, Bruno turned to Seongjin and spoke.

"Your Highness, the leader of Arenja has a direct message for you."

Direct? How? Is he coming here?

"No, he's not coming. He can temporarily 'possess' me through an open channel."

"...Possess?"

Is it something like that? Like when the twin possessed Ashley and grabbed her by the collar?

As Seongjin nodded in agreement.

Suddenly, Commander Bruno's demeanor drastically changed. The aura of the former Decalon Knight, which had been softly blending with the surroundings, shifted to a distinct, slightly sharp unfamiliar presence.

Most notably, his deep green eyes turned a light gray with a strange glow.

[Your Highness.]

His voice was different too.

It sounded layered, almost genderless and ageless.

Kneeling on one knee and bowing his head, Commander Bruno – or rather, the leader of Arenja – greeted Seongjin.

[Nice to meet you. I am the leader of Arenja, currently acting as the Oracle of Cornsheim.]

...Oracle?

"I am the leader of Arenja, and currently, I'm acting as the Oracle of Cornseim."

Seongjin blinked in surprise.

The Oracle, whom he had tried but failed to find any information about, had suddenly appeared.

But what did it mean to be acting as the Oracle?

Anticipating Seongjin's confusion, the leader quickly added an explanation.

[The Oracle is a prophet of the Cornsheim tribe, guiding the tribe towards the right future and the path they should follow. However, unfortunately, our tribe has long lost such a prophet. Thus, I, with my albeit limited ability to understand causality, am serving in their stead.]

In essence, it meant that Arenja was the ultimate decision-maker regarding what information to share.

"So, what about the most important part you left out in your introduction?"

Puzzled by Seongjin's question, the leader asked in return.

[What important thing are you referring to?]

"What's your name?"

[Ah!]

Caught off-guard, the leader's face showed a moment of surprise before he promptly responded.

[In our clan, one's position is their identity, so I apologize for the discourtesy. My name is Rebecca. I have come to speak to you, albeit in this manner, due to an urgent message that suddenly arose.]

As the leader spoke, faint gray lights occasionally flickered in Masain's eyes.

That strange glint in his eyes. Seongjin thought it felt eerily familiar.

[Your Highness, there is much I want to explain, but time is short. His Majesty probably does not appreciate my interference.]

Father?

"Yes. the Holy Emperor wishes for Your Highness's path to be laid upon complete uncertainty."

...Complete uncertainty?

Before Seongjin could inquire about the meaning, the leader of Arenja hurriedly continued.

[The reason for this abrupt meeting is to minimize the repercussions of the message I'm about to deliver.]

According to the leader, there would be a total of three instances of information disclosure: from him to an internal agent, from that agent to Commander Bruno through channeling, and finally, from the commander to Seongjin.

The consequences of this chain of communication could be quite unwelcome. This, too, was a side effect of tampering with uncertainty.

"So, what is this important message you're so eager to convey?"

[Yes, Your Highness. It is to urge you to meet the Saintess before visiting the Scarcepino estate.]

"The Saintess? Do you mean Sisle?"

[.....]

However, no further response came.

With that final remark, the leader bowed his head as if to say goodbye and then seemed to stagger for a moment before lifting his head. By then, his eyes had returned to their original deep green color.

Seongjin asked skeptically.

"...Commander?"

"Yes, Your Highness, it's me."

Commander Bruno frowned and rubbed his forehead.

"It seems difficult to maintain this state for long with my abilities. Having someone overlay my body... it's not a pleasant feeling."

After massaging his temples for a while, as if suffering from a severe headache, the commander added.

"Hmm, the leader of Arenja asks for understanding for not properly saying goodbye before leaving. And he insists that you remember the message."

Meet the Saintess before encountering Scarcepino.

"Why such an out-of-the-blue message?"

"Who knows. Perhaps the predictions seen by Arenja have suddenly changed."

Bruno, straightening his slightly disheveled attire, continued.

"It's just my guess, but it seems to be because Your Highness has just decided to meet Scarcepino young lord in person."

"...What?"

Just for that?

"If Your Highness intends to do something, it happens... or so they say. I'm not quite sure of the exact meaning."

"Wow, that's some detailed prediction. Was the young lord of Scarcepino that important a figure?"

If so, they should have hinted at meeting him earlier!

"But Commander, about the Saintess that the leader mentioned earlier..."

Seongjin started to say something more but then abruptly closed his mouth as Commander Bruno silently brought a finger to his lips, signaling for discretion.

"Please, Your Highness. Understand that the whole process that just occurred was meant to minimize the repercussions of the message."

"...."

This is complicated.

Referring to her specifically as [the Saintess] rather than Sisle – was that an intentional avoidance of naming a specific person, or...

'Could it be referring to that suspicious woman?'

But if it really means Seo Yi-seo, how can I arrange a meeting so suddenly? Now that she's grandly inaugurated as the Saintess, it's not easy to just call her over.

Besides, for some reason, I don't feel too keen on meeting her.

[Why? Something bothering you?]

The Demon King, who had been quiet until now, suddenly chimed in.

'Well, I have this strong feeling of dislike and annoyance.'

[Is that so...]

The Demon King seemed to ponder for a moment before cautiously suggesting.

[Hmm... In my opinion, if Arenja hadn't mentioned it, you wouldn't have known, right? How about just doing nothing and see what happens?]

'...Huh?'

[I'm not an expert in causality, but matters involving it are often too complex to judge in a single moment. The guy from before must have thought it wouldn't cause a big problem and thus advised you, but maybe there's a reason your father insists on such uncertainty?]

'.....'

[As you know, he's a character who recklessly meddles with causality, balancing on a fine line. Who else could be more adept at judging causality than him? If your father says not to do it, then don't. Whatever is meant to happen will happen eventually.]

Hmm, the Demon King's words sounded quite convincing.

Seongjin glanced at Commander Bruno, still grimacing and clutching his head, and made up his mind.

It might be a bit unfair to the commander who had struggled with this unexpected role of medium, but...

'Alright, let's just ignore it!'

Deciding this, he felt an unexpected sense of relief.

'Ah! That reminds me of a thought.'

[What is it?]

So, the leader of Arenja believed that his message wouldn't cause a major issue in causality, right?

Doesn't that mean he thought that even if he told me, I wouldn't have taken it seriously anyway?

[Oh? That's true.]

Whether it's an acting Oracle or whatever, that side must have a capable prophet too.

* * *

"Really? The Milo Trading Company and the Grey Plague, that's an unexpected combination."

That evening.

Dasha, who had visited Pearl Palace, tilted her head in confusion upon hearing the new information from Seongjin.

"I couldn't have imagined their involvement with the Grey Plague. After all, Milo is a foreign trading company that mainly distributes liquor in Asein and Rohan. Besides supplying wine to some taverns, they aren't known to be very active in Delcross."

"Since they are a foreign-based company, perhaps the remnants of the Dark Cult, who fled Delcross, might have found refuge with them?"

"That does seem plausible."

Dasha nodded and said,

"Anyway, let's track the activities of the Milo Trading Company. I'll focus on their connections with the Dark Cult and gather information as quickly as possible to report back."

Seongjin nodded with a satisfied expression.

Always so competent, no matter when.

"Ah, and about the two individuals tipped off by Arenja, if their information turns out to be true, just keep them under surveillance for now, without taking any rash actions."

Dasha then asked with curiosity,

"Aren't they just minions of the Dark Cult we've finally found? Shouldn't we interrogate them for information?"

"Well, I don't think they are the kind to have valuable information. If we capture them rashly, it might alert the Milo Trading Company, making our investigation even more complicated."

The fact that they are loosely held by the company itself might indicate they are just low-level underlings who know nothing. The whereabouts of the key Inquisitors or priests among the missing are still unknown.

If there's any sign that the company might kill them to silence them, then it won't be too late to extract them.

"That makes sense. I'll proceed as advised."

Dasha responded briskly.

Despite the increasing workload with various investigations, Dasha didn't seem overly burdened. Seongjin hadn't even brought up the investigation into the heretical organizations, given how much he had already requested.

But as Seongjin had limited manpower, he had no choice but to rely heavily on Dasha.

The tasks Seongjin personally undertook often ended up entangled in odd situations.

A visit to the Judiciary led to the discovery of the plague, opening a gate at the Heretical Judiciary, and the woman he sought information about the Dileraria Butterfly suddenly became the Saintess.

"Ah, why do my endeavors always end up like this..."

"Your Highness?"

"Oh, it's nothing. By the way, how is my mother doing these days?"

Queen Lizabeth hadn't visited Pearl Palace recently. Seongjin had asked Dasha to keep an eye on her, so he only heard about her through occasional updates.

The queen, usually active in various social engagements, has been busy recently hosting dignitaries from Asein.

"Any particular patronages?"

"It's well-known that Her Majesty enjoys ballet. Besides her longstanding support for the Chatellet Theatre, she has recently long-term rented the Oranje Theater and is inviting famous ballet companies from Brittany to perform."

"Hmm..."

So it seems Empress Elizabeth wasn't the one sponsoring the heretical groups in the name of Morres?

In any case, it was reassuring to hear that she seemed to be doing relatively well.

"That's a relief, though."

He had been quietly worried, not seeing her for so long and wondering if she might be ill.

Then, Dasha asked with a hint of curiosity,

"Why don't you just send a servant to Ruby Palace to check on her? Don't you usually visit the Ruby Palace personally for such matters?"

...Oh? Now that she mentioned it?

Seongjin blinked in realization.

'Why haven't I thought of visiting the Queen myself?'

Even with the Holy Emperor, he had been keeping in regular contact lately.

Although it had been quite some time since the regular audience due to the upcoming birthday celebration, Seongjin often visited the main palace to share news and see the emperor.

'Have I been too indifferent towards the Queen all this time?'

Seongjin felt a deep sense of self-reproach.

He was hardly in a position to criticize Mores for being unfilial. There might be some dubious aspects, but still, she was someone who believed in him as her son and showed affection.

"Yeah, visiting the Ruby Palace directly..."

As Seongjin unconsciously made a blank expression, the Demon King inquired,

[What now? Something bothering you?]

But then, what should I do?

Feeling guilty is one thing, but I still can't help but feel it's a huge hassle and annoyance, right?

[...Indeed...]

The Demon King seemed to ponder for a moment before cautiously continuing.

[Then don't go? You're extremely busy yourself, so it's understandable if you can't spare the time for this. Besides, if you visit, you might just end up being a disturbance.]

'...That makes sense, doesn't it?'

Right. I don't know the Queen well, but she always seemed somewhat obsessive-compulsive. Hearing about her recent activities, it seems she's tightly scheduled every day. What if my sudden visit disrupts her plans?

'I'll see her at the birthday celebration anyway.'

Seongjin felt convinced.

With that thought, he felt an unexpected sense of relief again.

* * *

Whatever will happen is bound to happen, regardless of what I do.

Yesterday, the Demon King said something along those lines, but Seongjin had taken it as a mere excuse, not seriously considering it.

However, the next day, after finishing his morning training and entering the palace, he was greeted by unexpected visitors.

"Hello? Big brother, if it's alright, can we talk for a moment?"

""

Sisle, dressed in her white priestly robes, greeted him with an expression as blank as a sculpted doll. Like before, she was carefully holding a small book-like object.

And standing behind her.

"Shaaak!"

It was Saintess Seo Yi-seo, hissing at him like a cat on high alert.

The leader of Arenja had indeed said to meet the saintess, but he never specified who she was.

But who would have thought that two saintesses would visit Seongjin at the same time?

"Look, I knew this would happen. I had a feeling something like this was coming."

The Demon King boasted for the first time in a while.

[How about it? Behold my foresight! Things that are bound to happen, do happen, after all.]

"Yeah, right. That's interesting."

Seongjin observed the doll-like little girl and Seo Yi-seo, who was closely following her, growling and guarding against everyone.

Anyway, having a conversation was also what he wanted. Seongjin nodded agreeably and said,

"Alright, let's go inside. Shall we have some tea together?"

But no sooner had he spoken,

"Be careful, Princess Sisle! This man is the worst time bomb, pretending to be the best gentleman!"

".....?"

So, what has this woman been doing all this time?

"You say I carry something strange, but what you have is quite formidable too."

"...Um, Orabeoni (elder brother). It's complicated to explain, but there are some intricate matters here."

A rare look of contemplation appeared on the poker-faced Sisle's face.

The three of them sat facing each other in the Pearl Palace reception room.

Again, Seo Yi-seo clung tightly to the hem of Sisle's dress and sat close to the girl. She began to be wary of everything around her.

She was wary of Seongjin, the sofa, the cookies on the snack table, and even Bruno, the commander serving tea... Wait, Commander Bruno?

"What are you doing here?"

Seongjin looked up in disbelief at the manager neatly filling the tea cups, and Bruno cleared his throat.

"I happened to see this maid dragging a tea tray into the reception room! If I had been a bit later, it could have been a real disaster, Your Highness."

He looked proud as if he had preempted some grand conspiracy.

Sure enough, behind the commander, Edith was seen sweating and avoiding eye contact.

"Thank you, Commander."

When Seongjin sincerely expressed his gratitude, Commander Bruno lightly tugged at his mustache and replied,

"It's nothing. I'm just fulfilling my duty to assist Your Highness."

Ignoring Edith's resentful gaze, Seongjin gulped down his tea.

Ah, indeed. As expected from someone who prides himself on his tea knowledge. The taste is on par with Louis's Melbourne tea.

In this manner, Seongjin and Sisle quietly sipped their tea for a while.

"Actually, there's a serious matter I want to discuss with you, brother."

After some time had passed, Sisle, placing her teacup down on the table, finally spoke.

"A serious matter?"

"Yes."

After broaching the subject and pondering for a moment, Sisle, as if having made up her mind, looked straight at Seongjin and continued.

"It's a significant issue involving you, me, and Miss Seo Yi-seo."

"What's the matter?"

"Before I tell you, there's something you should know in advance. It might be hard to believe, but Miss Seo Yi-seo here is no ordinary person."

Seongjin nodded seriously.

That makes sense. An ordinary person wouldn't have a staring contest with an innocent teacup like that.

"Miss Seo Yi-seo isn't from this world. She's a dimensional traveler who crossed over from another dimension to this place."

"Oh, really?"

That's quite believable. She actually is a human from the Regular World.

But, interpreting Seongjin's nonchalant attitude in her own way, Sisle added with a slightly anxious voice.

"It's true, brother."

"I know, I know. But how did you come to know about it?"

"....."

At Seongjin's question, Sisle's eyes widened in surprise. Following suit, a startled Seo Yi-seo quickly turned to Seongjin and exclaimed,

"See, Sisle-nim! What did I tell you? There's something suspicious about this man! He might even be the second mastermind, you know?"

Mastermind, really? What do they take me for!

I'm just a benign spirit who accidentally possessed a body in this world.

[Mastermind... Right. So that's what it was! There was a reason behind this damn personality after all!]

'No, what's this Demon King convincing himself of now?'

"Really, it's dangerous! Shouldn't we reconsider involving this person, Sisle-nim?"

"Who are you to talk? Who's the one casting strange spells to charm people?"

"What? How do you know about the [Minor Command]? Writer Lee said ordinary people can't sense it."

"And who is this Writer Lee?"

"Why are you trying to extract information from me? Before, you were unnecessarily making a fuss about a perfectly fine blueprint, and now you're suspicious too!"

Due to Seo Yi-seo's constant nitpicking, it took some time for Sisle to finish explaining to Seongjin.

And the facts she revealed were quite astonishing.

This world was actually a world within a book, and Seongjin and Sisle were characters from that book. Moreover, Seo Yi-seo was a dimensional traveler summoned from another dimension through the book's author.

"...This is a world within a book?"

Seongjin asked, finding the explanation somewhat unbelievable.

[How could that be?]

The Demon King also seemed puzzled.

[A world created solely from the contents of a book isn't impossible, but such a place would naturally be a world of imagination. However, this place is unmistakably the Main World!]

The Main World could be the basis for imagination, but it wasn't something that could be recreated through it. Could there be some misunderstanding?

Seongjin tilted his head, but it was clear that Sisle firmly believed this place to be a world within a book.

"In fact, when I was young, I read the novel Seo Yi-seo mentioned. Since then, I've had lingering doubts that this world might be the one from the book."

Sisle continued, her eyes settled and somber.

"But I couldn't be completely sure until recently, when Seo Yi-seo, the protagonist of the book, actually appeared. Sharing various information with her made me certain that it was true."

"Well, let's assume that's the case for now. But, you know..."

Seongjin glanced at Seo Yi-seo, who was perched on the back of the sofa hissing, and then asked Sisle again for confirmation.

"Is she really the protagonist?"

"Um..."

Sisle seemed at a loss for words to that question.

Who would have known? The new saintess destined to bring about his doom turned out to be someone with such a severe distrust of people.

In fact, Sisle's visit to the Pearl Palace with Seo Yi-seo had its complications. When she arrived at St. Sebastian's Church in the morning, she found Seo Yi-seo causing a commotion over a bunch of letters that had been delivered to her.

All these were nothing but swift moves by the influential people of the Imperial City to impress the new saintess.

"These suspicious invitations, what are they all about? Throw them all away!"

"But, Your Holiness, you should at least look at this one. Cardinal Diggory is the head of the administration. He must want to meet you personally to offer his assistance in various matters."

Sister Electra, newly assigned to assist her, tried to calm her down, but Seo Yi-seo was adamant.

"They invite me with pure goodwill? Even if I had no value to them, would they make such offers? I find it all suspicious! I won't meet anyone who suddenly sends me an invitation like this!"

Then, she eventually started hissing at the tray piled high with letters.

"Shaaa!"

Is this really the main heroine consecrated as a saintess, or just a stray cat picked up from somewhere?

"Ah! Sisle-nim!"

Noticing Sisle, Seo Yi-seo's face lit up, and she quickly ran over and clung to her.

"You're the only one I can trust now, Sisle-nim! From now on, I'll protect you!"

Refusing to leave her side, Seo Yi-seo ended up accompanying Sisle all the way to the Pearl Palace.

"So, what's this serious issue involving you and me?"

"Yes. Don't be shocked, brother. According to the book, a great crisis is approaching this world soon. Powerful high-ranking demon lords will descend, Delcross will lose the blessing of the Supreme God and fall into ruin, and a terrible calamity will finally befall this world."

"Uh..."

Surprisingly, this information was not new to Seongjin.

At Seongjin's composed reaction, Seo Yi-seo frowned and exclaimed,

"See! He already knew all about it, this mastermind!"

...What exactly is the problem with her?

"Anyway, Miss Seo Yi-seo is here to save the world from that crisis. A storyteller who travels between dimensions, the writer of this book, came to her and asked her to become a saintess and save the world. He said he's a storyteller of dimensions, destined to become a great ruler, the king of stories one day."

[What? A storyteller of dimensions?]

The Demon King exclaimed in surprise.

Could it be Sigurd Sigurdson? The self-proclaimed Dream Demon King, who wanders through a thousand dreams and speaks with a thousand voices.

As I was blankly looking at Sisle, Seo Yi-seo asked with suspicion,

"Don't tell me, you already knew about him?"

"Well, not exactly 'know,' but there is someone I'm slightly suspicious of..."

At that response, Seo Yi-seo clung to Sisle in shock.

"Wow! I'm really scared of him now, Sisle-nim!"

What is she talking about?

As I stared in disbelief, she pointed at me, trembling,

"Writer Lee said so! If you mess with him, it'll be trouble! He could be the greatest benefactor who bestows everything in this world, but if you step on his toes even slightly, he could become the worst disaster that destroys everything!"

...Was I such a variable character in the story?

While Seo Yi-seo's gestures swayed back and forth, Sisle let out a small sigh.

"Anyway, that writer is said to have different bodies, traveling between dimensions. He has an avatar here in Delcross Imperial City, but sadly, Miss Seo Yi-seo doesn't know his true identity. He's carefully hidden his appearance."

Sisle looked at me and continued seriously,

"But the book I read had some clues that might hint at his identity."

This feels like the main point now.

"And my guess is, the writer's avatar might be Prince Riccardo Scarcepero, brother."

".....!"

"Your friend."

...So this was why the leader of Arenja insisted I talk to the saintess first!

Sisle stayed in the Pearl Palace almost until lunchtime, conversing with Seongjin.

Returning to St. Sebastian's Church somewhat weary, Sister Ursula was waiting for her with a small box.

"Sister Sisle! A gift has arrived from Prince Owen."

"A gift?"

Oh, that's right. A letter came from dear brother recently.

—"I'll send a gift to father and you soon."

Sisle, curious and excited, opened the box.

But what popped out of the box was a small, pink piece of cloth, its purpose unclear. It was slightly longer than a palm, adorned with peculiar embroidery, and had an elastic band attached to the back.

...What is this?

Sister Ursula, who had been observing the gift with curious eyes, suddenly cringed and exclaimed,

"Ugh, what is this? It looks like some kind of underwear. How scandalous!"

"Could it be....."

Did Prince Owen really send something like this after such a long time?

As Sisle was tilting her head in confusion, Seo Yi-seo peered over and remarked,

"Huh? This is a sleep mask, isn't it? It's incredibly cute, but seems a bit out of place for our times, doesn't it?"

"A sleep mask?"

"Yes, you wear it over your eyes to sleep comfortably."

Wow, it's shaped like a bunny! Absolutely adorable!

As Seo Yi-seo kept admiring the mask, Sister Ursula, who had mistaken it for underwear, awkwardly averted her eyes.

But then, as Seo Yi-seo was inspecting the mask, her eyes suddenly widened in astonishment and she blurted out,

"Wait? What? There's item information appearing here?"

"Information?"

"Yes, I'm sure of it. This is an item from our world, Sisle-nim!"

Seo Yi-seo then gently caressed the mask, seemingly reading something invisible in the air.

"...Pangea Chronicle?"

Upon entering the imperial office early in the morning, the chief chamberlain and administrative officers were already deeply engaged in a serious meeting.

"What exactly is this?"

"Since it's a gift sent by the prince, it must surely be no ordinary item."

What they were examining was an eye mask in a small box.

The eye mask, shaped like a white rabbit, was delicately embroidered with cute eyes and a mouth. Of course, no one there could recognize it as a character merchandise, which was the real problem.

"This is serious. We need to find an answer before His Majesty arrives."

As Louis pondered deeply with a serious expression, stroking his chin, the young administrative officer Dorian offered a plausible explanation.

"Perhaps it's a folk craft from the Varsha tribe. Prince Owen has been engaging with Volanta recently, hasn't he?"

"Hmm..."

His suggestion didn't seem to convince everyone. For something supposedly made by southern pagans, the material was too luxurious and the finishing too neat. It was undoubtedly custom-made by a renowned fashion house.

Amidst this discussion, a priest spoke up with a somewhat peculiar expression.

"It's strange. I don't know what this embroidery signifies, but looking at it makes my heart flutter and feel ticklish. Isn't it somewhat cute?"

At this, the others jumped back in alarm from the eye mask.

"A charm?"

"Heart arrhythmia?"

"It might be an object of witchcraft!"

Just as one of the anxious priests was about to bless the eye mask,

"What are you all doing now?"

"...Your Majesty!"

As the emperor strode into the office, everyone awkwardly bowed their heads.

Observing the priest with a holy book in one hand and a rosary with the divine emblem in the other, the emperor seemed to quickly grasp the situation. He glanced briefly at the box surrounded by the crowd and nodded understandingly.

"Don't worry. There's no magical energy detected. It's merely a creation of the mundane world."

Phew. The administrative officials let out a sigh of relief.

Although they were unsure about the mundane world His Majesty mentioned, it seemed it wasn't anything dangerous.

"So, it's a birthday gift from Owen, is it?"

The Holy Emperor pondered over the profound intention of the 1st Prince who had sent him such an obscure item, tilting his head in contemplation for a while.

And finally, the conclusion he reached was:

"It's concerning. It seems that this child has been on the frontline for too long. It's about time he returned to the capital."

"....."

It appeared Owen had shown a temporary lapse in judgment due to fatigue accumulated on the frontline.

"Anyway, isn't it quite cute? Since it was sent with good intentions, maybe I should display it as a decoration."

Thus, the adorable rabbit eye mask was carefully hung on one side of the Holy Emperor's office wall.

* * *

That evening, Seongjin prepared to go out for the first time in a while.

As he was lazily putting on his coat with the assistance of Edith, his attendant sir Masain, who was waiting nearby, smiled brightly and said:

"The gathering at Count Scarcepino's is famous as a social event for promising young masters. The future bearers of Delcross will surely exchange brilliant and sharp insights. I'm truly looking forward to it!"

He seemed uncharacteristically excited, as if he himself were attending the event.

It wasn't surprising, considering the prince who had been cooped up in Pearl Palace for training was finally engaging in a social activity. Masain must have been worried in his own way, despite his usual silence.

"Well, I guess it'll just be some casual chat until we get there?"

Seongjin was focused solely on dealing with the Scarcepino young master and had little expectation for the gathering itself.

What else could a group of vigorous young men do when they get together?

In a world without idols, perhaps they would gossip about actresses on Bertrand Street or critique famous courtesans. At least, it wouldn't be a serious discussion like the ones Sir Masain imagined.

However, Masain's thoughts were a bit different.

"It's a gathering of high priests, central nobility, and the offspring of wealthy merchants. Even in casual conversations, valuable information is exchanged. Spending time there will give you a feel for the overall trends in Delcross society and economy."

"Really?"

"Yes, and I've heard that sometimes small performances are held there too. Inviting the most famous minstrels and musicians from the continent, it would greatly benefit your cultural knowledge."

"Hmm..."

Considering Sir Masain's words, who had received the finest education as a royal prince in his youth, it seemed worth heeding.

That was all well and good. The problem arose when the oblivious Edith casually mentioned as Seongjin was about to board the carriage.

"Will Sir Masain be accompanying you today? Usually, Your Highness goes alone, quietly."

"...Alone, without an escort?"

"Yes, you always rode alone in the carriage."

Masain seemed profoundly shocked. He asked again, his voice trembling.

"...You've been going out of the palace, all this time, without any escort?"

As his excitement visibly plummeted, clueless Edith nodded and innocently replied.

"Yes, it's just a visit to the townhouse. And the Scarcepino family's mansion, after all. Why would there be a need for an escort?"

".....!"

Masain's pupils violently trembled.

He climbed onto the carriage with a stiff face and remained silent, lips tightly sealed, throughout the ride as the carriage left the imperial palace and sped along the main road.

'It looks like he might explode if I so much as touch him....'

In the uncomfortable silence, Seongjin cautiously observed him. Though sitting quietly, Masain's face was a sight to behold, turning from red to pale in rapid succession.

Wow, I wouldn't be surprised if the knights get a collective scolding tomorrow.

The Scarcefino, known as one of the wealthiest families in Delcross, like other central nobles, had their main mansion in the capital.

However, it was known that they primarily stayed in a separately arranged townhouse for convenience, owning the largest number of houses in the area and using them like several annexes.

The social gathering this time was held in one of those annexes.

Arriving at the mansion surrounded by bright lights, visible even from afar, an elderly man who appeared to be the butler came out to greet Seongjin.

He seemed momentarily startled by the completely changed appearance of the prince and the presence of a robust knight standing firmly by his side.

However, as a seasoned servant, he quickly managed his expression and bowed politely.

"I am honored to meet you, Prince Morres. The young master has been eagerly awaiting your visit."

Instead of leading the way, the butler quietly glanced at Masain, who was about to follow Seongjin, giving him a subtle hint.

"What insolence..."

"Sir Masain."

Seongjin stopped Masain, who seemed ready to charge at any moment with a menacing aura.

"I'm fine, so don't worry and wait here."

Meanwhile, carriages carrying other young nobles also began to arrive.

Seeing the princes entering the mansion alone, without their escort knights, Masain's expression finally softened a bit.

Having recently engaged in frequent sparring and sensing the prince's extraordinary combat skills, Masain was aware of Seongjin's progression to the full aura of the seventh level, a presence he too found far from light.

However.

"Your Highness, should anything happen, you must, absolutely must let me know! Do you understand?"

Still harboring a nanny's instincts, Masain embarrassingly clung to Seongjin, earnestly admonishing him in front of the elderly butler.

Goodness, man. Take it easy. If something really happens, will I even have a moment to inform you?

Having parted with Masain, Seongjin finally managed to step into the mansion.

But as he followed the butler, Seongjin soon noticed something odd. Instead of leading him to the main entrance of the banquet hall where other nobles were entering, the butler guided him through a dark corridor leading to a narrow staircase.

Seongjin glanced at him, but the elderly butler seemed perfectly calm, as if this was the usual route.

[Hmm, blood pressure and pulse are normal? Doesn't seem nervous.]

The Demon King murmured to himself.

Seongjin heightened his senses, but aside from the occasional passing servants, he detected no unusual presence.

'Was it always like this?'

It did seem odd that a prince, notorious for being an irredeemable reprobate, was attending a mainstream gathering. Perhaps it wasn't a conventional visit.

"Then, have a comfortable time."

Eventually, Seongjin arrived at a small resting area on the second floor. It resembled an open balcony within the building, offering a panoramic view of the brightly lit banquet hall.

Conversely, due to the dim lighting, it seemed unlikely that this area would be visible from the outside.

Seongjin sat in a small armchair beside the railing and looked around. It seemed that the only thing to do in this space was to observe the banquet hall.

'...Could it be that I'm just supposed to watch the gathering from here? Really?'

What on earth was Morres doing previously? The more he knew, the more inexplicable his actions seemed.

Meanwhile, the atmosphere in the banquet hall was becoming pleasantly lively.

On one side, there was a long table with refreshments, drinks, and finger foods, and in the center, an exotic-looking minstrel with slightly dark skin was singing a gentle song.

And a fair number of youngsters were gathered in small groups, enjoying light conversations in the relaxed atmosphere.

'Well... Better to hang out here than to laugh and build pointless connections down there.'

[Sigh, as if someone only focused on training would be a recluse.]

'Shut up!'

With nothing much to do, Seongjin leaned languidly against the railing, watching the scene below, when he suddenly felt someone's gaze on him.

Turning his head towards that gaze, Seongjin immediately recognized him.

Eldest Young Master Orden Siegsmund.

The man was looking precisely in Seongjin's direction, having sensed him from afar.

He too seemed to recognize Seongjin right away, furrowing his brow momentarily, but then realizing the delicate situation, he turned his head away, pretending not to know him.

Around him were gathered young nobles with noticeably active auras.

In the Salon de Merci, Seongjin had teased him for having celebrity syndrome, but now it seemed clear he was indeed a person of fame. Looking at the excited faces approaching him to talk, Masain's description of him as an idol among the martial family's children came to mind.

'For someone like him, it would be odd not to be invited to mainstream gatherings...'

As Seongjin continued to observe the banquet hall, he noticed a few other standout individuals. Those who were the center of their conversation groups, receiving admiring glances.

Over there, judging by the colorful clothing, were probably heirs of merchants or wealthy families. A slightly chubby man, laughing more than others, seemed to be the main figure in his group.

And on this side, there was a young man in neat attire, reminiscent of Kenneth DiGory, passionately discussing something with the people around him.

While Seongjin was casually surveying the atmosphere, someone approached him from behind and started a conversation.

"It's always a heartwarming sight to see. There's something special about young people of this age, something that only they seem to possess. Each one of them carries a small ember, ready to burst into flame at any moment. Isn't their potential truly dazzling?"

Turning around, Seongjin saw a rather tall and handsome young man walking towards him, smiling. Under the dim light, his deep teal eyes somewhat resembled Isabella's.

Is this guy that Riccardo Scarcepino?

"Do you know? I've been eagerly awaiting news about you. Why haven't you been in touch?"

But setting aside his identity for a moment.

No matter the age difference, did this guy just address a prince so casually?

"Are you that young Scarcepino Lord?"

"...Hmm?"

As Seongjin asked sternly and glared at him, Riccardo appeared confused for a moment, tilting his head.

"I've heard rumors that you've changed a lot or lost your memory, but this is really unexpected. You seem like a completely different person."

The young man, who looked quite youthful, spoke with a heavy tone, as if he were an elder. If he really were Sigurd Sigurdson's avatar, it wouldn't be entirely incomprehensible.

However, Seongjin was genuinely surprised by his next words.

"But the important thing is that you have returned to this place. Now, what interesting story will you share with me today? My old friend, the young oracle of Delcross."

...Oracle?

131

Young oracle of Delcross.

Before Seongjin could respond, taken aback, Riccardo strode over and settled himself in the chair opposite.

Crossing his legs and leaning comfortably into the plush seat, his demeanor was the epitome of a carefree scion of wealth.

"Hmm? What's with that look? Wasn't that the reason you sought me out? I thought you'd spend time with me as always, sharing various prophecies."

Seongjin's mind became cluttered.

Wait a minute, Morres was an oracle? What kind of nonsense is that?

[Lee Seongjin]

Then, the Demon King murmured as if a bit tense.

[There's no significant change in that guy's blood pressure or pulse. It's a bit unsettling how overly relaxed he seems, but he doesn't appear to be lying. It's just...]

'Just?'

[No matter how much I observe, I can't be certain if that guy is Sigurd Sigurdson. And it makes sense, because his body and soul belong to a human from the real world. A proper human!]

What does that mean?

[I'm not exactly sure what this avatar concept entails. But if we assume it's merely like a puppet being controlled, could someone like him maintain such a pristine state of soul?]

'...That makes sense.'

So, was Sisle's speculation wrong after all?

Frowning, Seongjin turned his gaze to Riccardo, who continued to smile broadly, observing Seongjin's face as if amused.

With no other choice, Seongjin decided to methodically ascertain the facts.

"I told you prophecies?"

"Indeed. Hmm... It seems the rumors of your lost memory are true."

With a look of regret, Riccardo stroked his smooth chin while gazing at Seongjin.

"You seem quite perplexed, my precious friend. Does this mean I won't be able to hear your stories today?"

"That's right. I didn't come here to talk today, but to listen. So, you need to cooperate with me."

"Of course. Ask anything you're curious about. Aren't you a rare gem in Delcross, the only one of its kind that's alive and vibrant? For you, there's nothing I wouldn't do."

A chill ran down my arm for a moment.

What's with his way of speaking since a while ago? Is it some kind of mental attack?

"...Do people often tell you that you come off as creepy?"

"Even if it's meant as a harmless jest, hearing it continually can be hurtful."

He hears it a lot, then.

"Very well. Today, I'll make special time for you, setting aside other engagements. Think of it as a gesture of respect for the days we've spent together."

"Then, to start, tell me what I've mainly been doing here."

"I shall do so."

With that, Riccardo stroked his chin as if organizing his thoughts.

"How shall I put it? You and I mainly shared stories about people."

"People?"

"Yes. We crafted narratives about the many possibilities they hold and the various futures that could unfold from those, while overlooking the banquet hall. It was a thoroughly fascinating and meaningful endeavor."

"Does that mean I made prophecies about the people attending the banquet?"

"Well, to put it simply, yes."

Riccardo added with a furrowed brow.

"But I wonder if there's any point in you asking me anything. Regardless of what your memory holds, if you decide to know something, wouldn't it be possible for you with your capabilities? Your mysterious eyes still haven't lost their shine."

"Eyes?"

At Seongjin's query, he nodded.

"Yes. Those oracle eyes that penetrate the truth."

"Oracle..."

Wait a minute. Wasn't the oracle mentioned as a prophet of the Cornsheim clan? It was said to be extinct now.

So why is it coming up here?

Riccardo tilted his head, observing Seongjin's complex expression.

"...You really don't know anything, do you? Yes, the oracle. Shall we start from there?"

"..."

"Ah, by any chance, do you know about the Cornsheim clan?"

The Cornsheim clan.

Seongjin had heard a brief mention of them from Commander Bruno before.

"I am the leader of Arenja, currently acting as the oracle of Cornsheim."

The leader of Arenja, who had possessed the commander back then, introduced himself in such a manner.

After he was quickly expelled, Commander Bruno had provided additional explanations about things Seongjin hadn't managed to hear from him.

"The Cornsheim clan has been a secluded minority clan in Delcross from ancient times. Rumors say that they all possessed exceptional abilities to manipulate souls, using bizarre sorcery beyond the imagination of ordinary people. Looking back, it seems the entire clan might have been channelers.

They were also said to possess many extraordinary technologies that seemed not of this world. As a result, they were branded as devil worshippers and most were executed by the Inquisitors years ago.

The internal agents of Arenja are among the few Cornsheim clan members who survived that purge.

"...But now, with no oracle, I heard someone is acting in their stead?"

At Seongjin's question, Riccardo nodded.

"Indeed. The Cornsheim clan lost their prophet decades ago. However, strictly speaking, the oracle hasn't disappeared. It's just that they decided to go into hiding to avoid their clan."

Having said that, Riccardo lifted his head and gazed into the void with unfocused eyes for a moment, then smiled meaningfully.

"The same goes for the oracle of this era. He is still alive. He has simply chosen to seal his prophecies and opt for complete silence."

...Why is it that upon hearing those words, Seongjin momentarily envisioned the familiar face of someone flickering through his mind?

"Could it be?"

"But do you know this?"

Focus gradually returned to Riccardo's eyes. He looked down directly into Seongjin's eyes and continued.

"An oracle who does not prophesy is like a bird that does not sing, utterly useless to this world. And the natural order of the world never lets those who defy their true calling go unpunished."

"..."

"The oracle of the previous era met a very lonely and miserable end. And the oracle of this era was destined for the same. How he has managed to escape thus far is beyond me, but it won't last long."

Riccardo then stretched his lips into a suspiciously eerie smile.

"Now, there lies the riddle. What fate awaits you, the next in line?"

"..."

"If you can no longer share prophecies with me, what do you think will happen to you next?"

Seongjin felt increasingly disgusted.

It was clear that Riccardo was referring to Morres as the next oracle.

Regardless of whether that was true, Riccardo's intentions were clear. He might pretend to be cooperative, but in fact, this guy...

"Are you threatening me right now, you bastard?"

"..."

"Let me ask you straight. Are you that Storyteller from another dimension?"

Riccardo, momentarily taken aback by Seongjin's blunt accusation, soon burst into laughter, finding the notion highly amusing.

"Ahahaha! A threat, you say? Such words are truly disappointing between us."

At least he's not denying knowledge of the Dimensional Storyteller.

"Are you Sigurd Sigurdson?"

"Hahaha, well, what do you think?"

What do I think? You're the culprit.

Despite the lack of solid evidence, Seongjin was convinced. It was a kind of intuition that was hard to explain.

How a person from the real world with a sound soul could become an avatar for another was beyond him. But this man was Riccardo Scarcepinio, and at the same time, Sigurd Sigurdson.

"Was it also you who showed that butterfly demon to Seo Yi-seo? Why did you tempt her into becoming a fake saintess?"

"Ahahahaha!"

Riccardo burst into laughter as if he found the whole situation truly delightful. Despite his loud laughter, it was strange that no one in the spacious banquet hall seemed to pay any attention to them.

Feeling an ominous premonition and glancing down towards the lower floor, Riccardo, now with tears in his eyes from laughing so much, spoke up.

"Yes, it seems you've heard something from her. Despite appearing naive, she's a woman with more caution than one might expect. How exactly did you manage to sway her?"

Not bothering to hide the fact that he knew Seo Yi-seo.

Feeling uneasy, Seongjin stood up, prompting Riccardo to look up at him and ask, "Leaving already? It's a pity we haven't fully enjoyed our time. Will you grace this friend with your presence at the next gathering?"

"I doubt that'll be possible."

"And why is that?"

Is this guy really asking because he doesn't know?

Turning towards the corridor, Seongjin retorted sharply, "I have no use for unlucky friends. Our ties end here!"

"How regrettable..."

"Better not engage in any more foolishness. The imperial palace will soon conduct a formal investigation, so don't even think of running away. Be ready to face it sincerely. I'll make sure to report everything about you to my father."

At that, Riccardo smiled with an air of confidence.

"Well, we'll see about that. Do you really think the Holy Emperor is unaware of my existence? There are certain unspoken rules in this world that sometimes cannot be violated. It's something even he cannot help."

Something unavoidable.

Suddenly, Seongjin recalled something the emperor had said before, flashing through his mind.

"Do as you wish. If you seek to rectify such injustices, so it shall be."

And Katrina also said:

—"His Majesty cannot help everyone unconditionally."

—"Would my request serve as a [condition] for my father to help the Commander?"

—"Sometimes, even words spoken casually can shake and crumble the very foundations, Your Highness."

[TL/N: Refer Chapter 81]

...It feels like I'm onto something.

"How about this?"

Now, it was Seongjin's turn to smile at Riccardo.

"What if I want it? What if I ask my father to deal with you properly?"

"..."

"Would he still leave you alone as he does now?"

The expression drained from Riccardo's face like a receding tide.

Gone was the ease, and a slowly burgeoning menace began to flicker in his eyes as he looked at Seongjin.

"That's it!"

Just as Seongjin was about to turn away, he suddenly felt as though he had bumped into something.

'...Huh?'

The corridor was clearly visible ahead, but something invisible was blocking his way forward. What on earth?

As Seongjin puzzled, feeling the air with his hand, the Demon King's voice, tense with alarm, shouted in his mind.

[Seongjin, this is a barrier!]

A barrier?

[Yes. It's not governed by the laws of this world, which is why I didn't notice it sooner! I don't know since when, but this area is now under the dominion of the rules of the Imaginary World!]

The rules of the Imaginary World.

Seongjin turned back to the one he suspected was the root cause of all this.

- "It's truly regrettable that things have come to this."

Riccardo, having risen from his armchair, approached Seongjin with a voice that resonated oddly as he spoke.

- "In this halted world, you were the only unique friend who could understand me."

Then, fluttering from somewhere, a blue butterfly circled around Seongjin.

Dileraria's butterfly?

- "It would be wise not to think of escape. You already know, don't you?"

Fluttering. Meanwhile, the number of butterflies continued to increase.

And then.

- "I am the Demon King of Dreams."

Like a storm, a swarm of blue butterflies surged towards Seongjin.

Inside a dilapidated warehouse on Bertrand Street.

Romaine, who had been clumsily stitching a shabby yellow plush doll, suddenly jerked his head up in surprise.

"What's the matter? Pricked yourself with the needle again? That's what you get for fussing over such pointless puppet shows."

Leonard, who had been swigging from a bottle of liquor beside him, chided.

"...Leonard-nim."

Excitement, though faint, tinged Romaine's voice as he addressed Leonard.

"The [Puppeteer] has finally opened the entrance to the labyrinth!"

"...What?"

Leonard, blinking in confusion for a moment, gradually showed a look of astonishment on his face.

"Is that for real?"

"Yes, it is."

Romaine threw aside the crochet hook and doll, standing up abruptly.

"Hahaha. After all this time of hiding, to think he'd commit such an act of suicide now!"

"Where is it? Shouldn't we hurry before he slips away again somewhere?"

"Don't worry, Leonard-nim. Even if he somehow manages to escape before we find him, it won't be a problem."

The eyes within the half-mask stared into a distant, unseen place, gleaming fiercely.

"After all, the guardians of Delcross will never let him slip through their grasp."

Riccardo hurried out of the mansion, throwing on his overcoat as he went. Time was running out for him.

"Young Master? The gathering is still in full swing, where on earth are you off to?"

The old butler, taken aback, rushed over, but Riccardo, without so much as looking back, responded, "An urgent matter has come up; I must step away for a while."

"But what about the guests you've invited...?"

"Ask my brother Domenico to handle the gathering and wrap things up appropriately!"

Flustered, the butler stuttered in response, but Riccardo couldn't afford to delay any longer. He was so rushed that he almost let slip a curse out loud.

Damn Sigurd Sigurdson!

Despite Prince Morres's threatening provocation, how could he stir up such a huge mess all of a sudden, leaving him to deal with the aftermath?

He didn't even have time to gather travel expenses. How long would it take for the imperial authority to catch on and reach out here?

'First, I need to dash to the carriage and get out of the capital. Then, in the morning, I'll stop by the nearest Hayden Bank to withdraw some money!'

Riccardo hastened towards the back gate, where the Scarcepino family's carriage, ready for departure at any moment, awaited him, having been brought from his family home.

'Once out of the capital, the imperial surveillance will lax. Should I pass through Asein to Carthago? No, better to head for one of the secluded rural estates in Anatolia...'

That's when it happened.

Suddenly, someone from behind grabbed him by the nape of his neck and slammed him forcefully to the ground.

With a whoosh, Riccardo was lifted into the air, then pressed down from above with such force that he fell back-first onto the ground.

Crash!

"Ugh!"

Riccardo, having fallen squarely without any technique to break his fall, felt a sharp pain as if his spine had shattered. As he swallowed a groan from the tingling agony, he realized someone was grabbing his collar and squinted to see who it was.

The one who had pinned him to the ground was a paladin.

A tall woman dressed in the dark ash-colored uniform of the Holy Order of Saint Terbacchia stood before him. Her pale face was framed by crow-black hair[1] that cascaded down smoothly.

"An Inquisitor?"

Where did an Inquisitor come from all of a sudden?

As he looked up at her with bewildered eyes, the woman lifted one corner of her mouth in a chilling smile.

Then.

[Speak now.]

A voice that seemed to bore into his head and resonate, gender indeterminate, reached his ears.

[Where has he sent my son?]

"You are...!"

As night fell and darkness enveloped them, a cold silvery light, brighter than the moon in the sky, flickered in the woman's eyes.

Seongjin was never one to believe in superstitions.

That's why he used to find it hard to understand when his fellow Hunters would make a fuss about accidentally stepping on a crack before a battle, or predict the success of their mission based on the color of their underwear for the day.

Take, for example, a junior from his university days who was also a Hunter.

That guy had a peculiar habit of needing to stare at the monster with his left eye right before combat, despite the fact that his left eye was relatively weaker than the right!

What a case of irrational and superstitious behavior arising from an inability to shake off such faulty conditioning.

"You idiot! How is using an eye that barely sees supposed to help in defeating monsters?"

Seongjin never hesitated to smack him on the back of the head whenever he did that.

'Looking back, I might have been too narrow-minded...'

Lying on the damp floor, Seongjin pondered this for a moment.

By now, it wouldn't be unreasonable to believe that he was cursed with bad luck whenever he attended social gatherings.

Yes, 'The Curse of Social Gatherings' sounds like an apt name for this jinx.

[Seongjin, are you alright?]

'...Yeah.'

At the sound of the Demon King's voice, Seongjin blinked for a moment before getting up. Since he could feel his arms and legs properly, it seemed he hadn't been ejected soul-first like before.

After patting the handle of the nutcracker at his waist, Seongjin slowly looked around.

'Where am I?'

Seongjin found himself in a dark corridor.

It was wide enough for about four men to walk abreast, but it was so dimly lit that it was hard to tell where it led.

The floor was damp stone, suggesting moisture, and the walls were also made of flat stone. There seemed to be some sort of relief on them, but it was too dark and covered in moss to make out any details.

—"I am the Demon King of Dreams."

After Riccardo's sudden change in demeanor and these words,

Seongjin found himself enveloped by a swarm of blue butterflies that seemed to appear out of nowhere, and before he knew it, he was falling into this predicament. Considering where Seongjin was just moments ago, the only plausible place to fall into would have been the ballroom downstairs.

'...But this clearly isn't the ballroom, is it?'

[This might very well be a completely different world, Seongjin. I can sense the laws of a vast, governing realm here.]

The Demon King cautiously suggested.

Given that Dileraria's butterflies have the ability to traverse dimensions, the theory that Seongjin was swept into another world by them isn't far-fetched.

One thing, however, was certain.

'Sigurd Sigurdson, you cowardly bastard...!'

Though it's unclear what method he used, the moment Sigurd felt at a disadvantage, he sent Seongjin flying to who-knows-where and made a quick escape!

[Why did you have to provoke him, losing your temper like that? You could have slipped away to inform your father, or at least tried to coax some information out of him more subtly.]

The Demon King scolded, but Seongjin shook his head.

'Do you think he would have just let me go? That bastard had been setting up that barrier from the start.'

That probably explained the unease Seongjin felt several times during their conversation.

'The moment he realized I wasn't the same Morres from before, he must have been preparing for this situation. Do you really think such a guy would've just spilled the beans if I asked?'

[Still, that's no excuse.]

Moreover, Seongjin had been feeling an odd sensation since a while back.

"The Oracle of the previous era met a very lonely and tragic end. And the Oracle of this era was destined to meet the same fate."

Hearing those words, Seongjin couldn't understand why a surge of anger suddenly welled up inside him. The thought that everything was that bastard's fault crossed his mind, and he felt an involuntary urge to throw a punch, his fist tightening with the impulse.

Why did I react like that at the time?

Puzzled, Seongjin scratched his head for a moment.

[What's the plan now? If this really is another world, we might not be able to return to Delcross.]

"Hmm..."

Well, to be honest, he wasn't overly worried.

First, he'd look around for an escape route, and if that failed, he could always call on the emperor.

After all, wasn't he the same person who had followed Seongjin all the way to the Sigurd-34, and even across the distant dimensional boundaries? Surely, he'd manage to find him this time too?

Of course, he was prepared to receive at least a light reprimand.

"Let's start moving in one direction."

With that resolution, Seongjin drew out the Nutcracker and carved a large X on the stone wall.

The stone dust flew up as a shallow mark was etched into the wall.

"Alright. This will be the starting point."

Then, Seongjin surveyed the corridor to his left and right, pondering which direction to take. Both were shrouded in deep darkness, making it hard to decide.

"...Right."

Was it just a feeling? It seemed like there was a faint presence of someone beyond the right corridor.

Without hesitation, Seongjin added a small arrow next to the X to indicate the direction and then turned to walk towards the sensed presence with determined steps.

For a while, Seongjin and the Demon King were silent, each lost in their own thoughts.

The sudden drop into this strange place had left them disoriented, but the conversation they had with the storyteller from another dimension had provided them with a wealth of information that needed to be sorted through.

Firstly, regarding the Oracle.

Assuming what the storyteller said was true, Morres might have been the next Oracle, endowed with the power of prophecy. Then, it was quite clear who the current Oracle was.

The Cornsheim clan, known for skillfully manipulating souls and being channelers.

And the secret organization Arenja, where the surviving members of that clan were active.

Then, wouldn't it be strange if the Holy Emperor, who freely moves as a soul and directly leads Arenja, had no connection to that clan?

"He is still alive. He merely sealed the prophecy and chose complete silence."

Right. Now that he thought about it, the Holy Emperor always clammed up whenever sensitive topics arose.

No matter how he thought about it, it seemed too coincidental for what he had said to match up so perfectly.

"Setting that aside..."

What was that other thing he said?

"In this halted world, only you were the unique friend who could understand me."

What did it mean by the world being "halted"?

As Seongjin pondered this, he suddenly stopped in his tracks, noticing something odd.

"Huh? What's this?"

[What? What's going on?]

"..."

Narrowing his eyes, Seongjin carefully examined one side of the stone wall. Although it was faint due to the darkness, there appeared to be some sort of rectangular gap in the corridor wall.

Surrounded by a rectangle about the size of a person, the gap looked almost like a door at a glance.

As Seongjin approached to get a better look, he instinctively touched the stone wall. Suddenly, a clear window appeared before his eyes.

☐The conditions to open this ☐ have not been met.☐

Seongjin stepped back in astonishment.

What is this?

"Hey, Demon King, did you see that? What is this? Some kind of text appeared out of thin air?"

The Demon King let out a thoughtful hum.

[It seems we are indeed in a realm governed by rules, Seongjin. Such notices are common features in such worlds.]

"...A notice?"

[Yes. Depending on the laws that govern the world, messages like this can appear frequently. In places where the influence is strong, even minor details like an individual's abilities, vitality, fatigue levels, and so on can be displayed numerically.]

"Wow..."

When Seongjin cautiously touched the gap again, the broken text reappeared before his eyes.

☐The conditions to open this ☐ have not been met.☐

Doesn't this feel somewhat like a game?

While Seongjin was amusingly touching and detaching his hand from the wall surface, the Demon King spoke in a slightly more serious tone.

[This isn't the time to find it amusing. The problem is that this notice is completely broken, Seongjin.]

"Huh? Why is that an issue?"

[A properly functioning realm governed by rules operates under a set of standardized laws, making it an extremely stable world. It's uncommon for notices like this to be broken.]

The Demon King then continued in a soft voice.

[There are only two explanations for this. One is that this place is a dead world, no longer maintained or cared for. The other is that it's surplus space, abandoned and never integrated into any world from the beginning.]

...Surplus space?

[Yes. I've heard rumors about it. Somewhere within the gaps between dimensions, there's a place like a cosmic junkyard, where fragments of old, useless realms governed by rules gather.]

Seongjin slightly furrowed his brows.

A junkyard, huh? That doesn't sound too promising.

[It's a place created by the laws of a realm governed by rules, but since it's already broken, it's not bound by those laws. Once you enter, it's a nightmare from which it's nearly impossible to escape under normal circumstances.]

"....."

[Another term for it is 'Labyrinth.']

Just then,

"Hey, wait a minute!"

Seongjin suddenly tensed up, his senses on high alert.

The sound of rapid footsteps approached, signaling the presence of someone unknown moving quickly towards them. It was the same faint presence Seongjin had initially felt.

But as the presence grew closer and became clearer...

"Huh? This feels strangely familiar?"

Swoosh.

As Seongjin reflexively drew his Nutcracker, contemplating this, a figure emerged from the dark corridor. It was a young man with a notably robust physique.

He had his sword pointed in their direction but gradually halted his steps. Upon seeing Seongjin, he startled, then lowered his weapon and said,

"...Your Highness?"

Seongjin blinked in surprise.

Wait a minute, why is Orden here?

T/N:

1. It's Sharon[↔]

"Why are you here?"

Seongjin couldn't hide his astonishment, and Orden retorted as he brushed his bangs aside.

"That's what I'd like to ask you. Where exactly are we?"

"I don't know. Why are you asking me?"

"I ended up here chasing after Your Highness, so naturally, I thought you might know best, wouldn't you?"

"You followed me? Why?"

At Seongjin's question, Orden frowned.

"Well, when the presence of someone who was just fine upstairs suddenly vanishes without a trace, wouldn't it be normal to go looking for them?"

"..."

Essentially, when Sigurd Sigurdson activated the barrier, to Orden, who was downstairs, it felt as though Seongjin's presence had suddenly popped out of existence.

It was already bothering him why the prince wasn't attending the banquet and was on the second floor instead. And when the presence of someone who was just fine disappeared, he had no choice but to go look for him.

"But when I finally got to the second floor, Your Highness was surrounded by something like butterflies. So, I ran towards you, but suddenly I fell somewhere, and when I came to my senses, I was here."

"Ah..."

This guy, really got himself involved in something completely unnecessary.

Seongjin clicked his tongue.

"You should have just left it alone."

At those words, Orden's expression soured significantly.

"How can you say that? Of course, I had to!"

"Hm?"

"Of course, I had to..."

As Seongjin stared intently, Orden trailed off and subtly averted his gaze.

"...pay back the debt I owe to Your Highness."

Seongjin blinked for a moment.

Could it be, this guy thought something was wrong with me and tried to help in his own way?

"I appreciate the sentiment. But what's the use if you end up falling here with me?"

It would have been better if he could have dealt with Riccardo somehow.

"That's..."

"And remember this. If we get out of here thanks to me, you'll be owing me even more. Got it?"

"...!"

His indignant face is kind of amusing to see.

[What are you, a loan shark? Why does it feel like the principal grows the more he struggles to repay the debt?]

'Did you think anyone could easily clear their debt to me?'

Well, since we're here together, might as well try to be of some actual help.

Seongjin chuckled and patted Orden's shoulder lightly.

At that moment.

☐Would you like to invite %rd☐10 to your party?☐

☐Accept / ☐ecline☐

A broken text window appeared in front of him.

...Huh?

As Seongjin suddenly looked into the air and tilted his head, Orden asked nervously.

"What's... Is there something?"

"Huh? You can't see this?"

"What are you talking about?"

"Hmm..."

After a moment of thought, Seongjin extended his arm towards him and said.

"Hit it."

"...Excuse me? What do you mean by..."

"Just give my arm a hit."

"...?"

Orden looked at Seongjin skeptically. But, seeing Seongjin's clear and unhesitant expression, he hesitantly extended his hand and lightly tapped Seongjin's sleeve.

And then.

"...What is this?"

It seemed that the text window had finally appeared before Orden's eyes as well. Since Seongjin couldn't see it this time, it seemed likely that only the person involved could read it.

"Accept... what?"

As Orden muttered 'accept', a new window popped up in front of Seongjin.

Presumably, Orden had read out the part of the text that was legible enough for him.

☐ %rd□10 has sent you a party□ invitation. Would you like to accept?□

☐ Accept / ☐ ecline□

This really feels like a game.

"...Accept."

Saying so, just in case.

☐ You have formed a party□ with %rd□10.□

Oh, it actually worked. So then?

With a somewhat triumphant expression, Seongjin shouted towards the void.

"System!"

"...?"

"Minimap! World map! Status window! Stats! Party! Quests! Logout! Logout!"

Unfortunately, nothing happened afterward. Perhaps because it's a broken world, as the Demon King explained, it didn't function properly.

Even a map would have been greatly helpful in finding our way out of here.

"Your Highness? What exactly are you..."

Confused by the prince's sudden eccentric behavior, a look of realization dawned on Orden's face after a moment. It was clear what he was thinking.

Ah, this guy was famously a troublemaker. He must think I've lost my mind. Something like that, perhaps.

"Why must embarrassment always fall to my lot!" the Demon King lamented.

Nonetheless, Seongjin felt the need to offer some explanation to Orden, who had inadvertently become entangled in his affairs and was thoroughly bewildered.

"I'm not sure where we are either. But one thing's for certain: the person who sent us here is none other than Young Master Scarcepinio. He cast some unknown spell on me."

Explaining to Orden that this was another dimension wouldn't make any sense to him. So, Seongjin started by mentioning the person responsible for their current predicament.

Orden's demeanor instantly became more aggressive.

"Scarcepinio! I knew it had to be him!"

Now that he thought about it, Orden had been suspecting Scarcepinio as the mastermind behind the Milo Trading Company.

Seongjin recalled the time Orden had threatened Isabella with a fierce demeanor. Back then, he thought of Orden as someone who lived recklessly on confidence alone.

However, having encountered Orden a few times recently, the impression Seongjin got was that Orden was more rational than initially thought.

"Ever since Riccardo threatened me with the Dark Cult's emblem, I've been suspicious. What does it mean for someone to possess such a suspicious object if not proof of their involvement with the Dark Cult? It wouldn't be strange at all if such a person resorted to some deceitful trickery."

Orden's attendance at the event, despite usually skipping such gatherings, was also for the sake of investigation.

"Especially his sister, Isabella, is even more suspicious. What I discovered while investigating the Milo Trading Company is that the person who frequently interacts with them on behalf of the Scarcepinio family is none other than Isabella herself."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. And when I subtly brought up the Milo Trading Company and various other matters to her, she brazenly acted as if she knew nothing!"

...That's unexpected.

"And that's not all. I happened to meet her at the mansion today, do you know what happened? After acting so scared the other day to gain Princess Amelia's sympathy, today she approached me with a beaming smile, pretending as if she had no recollection of our previous encounter. Truly a repulsive woman!"

Indeed, that does sound strange.

Seongjin recalled Isabella, who had been hopping around with a sewing pin stuck in her arm.

Hmm, she didn't seem like someone who could adeptly hide anything.

"...So, what will you do now?"

Having vented his suspicions and seemingly calmed down from his excitement, Orden asked in a slightly subdued voice compared to before.

"Well, we'll have to look for an exit first."

Whether it involved dealing with Riccardo or investigating Isabella, they needed to return to Delcross to proceed with anything.

After a brief exchange of opinions with Orden, Seongjin decided to head back in the direction from which Orden had come. Partly because Orden, who had arrived later, might have landed closer to an exit, but more importantly,

"There was a body where I first arrived. I only caught a glimpse, so I'm not certain, but it seemed to be wearing the uniform of the Imperial Guard."

He too had been in a hurry, detecting Seongjin's approaching presence and running fast, so he hadn't had the chance to properly examine the body. That's why they concluded it would be best to go back and investigate more thoroughly.

Orden seemed to take this rather casually, but for Seongjin, who knew this place wasn't the main dimension of Delcross, the body held significant implications.

'If it was the Imperial Guard, does that mean someone from Delcross had crossed over to this place before?'

[Yeah. It's unlikely that the Dimensional Storyteller moved us here randomly.]

Given the suddenness of the event, it's probable that they were sent to a place most familiar to him.

Mazes aren't places one can easily wander into and out of.

It seems likely that the Dimensional Storyteller has an easy means of connecting Delcross with the labyrinth, and such shortcuts are usually anchored to a specific location.

"If we can just find that path, we might be able to return more easily than expected," the Demon King mentioned, his tone slightly brightening.

With that, Seongjin and Orden started trudging down the dark corridors together.

'But the more I think about it, the more absurd it seems, doesn't it?'

[What's absurd?]

'Sigurd, that bastard. Inviting the prince of the Holy Empire to his mansion and then openly trying to eliminate him there...'

Especially since sir Masain had clearly seen Seongjin entering the mansion.

Even if they sent the prince to another dimension and completely erased his traces, they couldn't possibly escape responsibility for his disappearance.

No matter how you looked at it, it seemed like an incredibly impulsive decision, even more so considering Riccardo Scarcepino's standing afterward.

[Hmm. Maybe the Dimensional Storyteller decided to completely abandon the avatar named Riccardo.]

'Just like that?'

[It might not have been as simple a matter for him as we think.]

There's a possibility that Seongjin's provocation was more fatal to him than expected.

The sudden change in the usually composed demeanor of the Dimensional Storyteller might have been because of what Seongjin said:

—What if I want that? What if I ask my father to deal with you properly?

Just because of that?

[If that becomes a condition where your father can act freely, would you still say 'just because of that'?]

'...Fair point.'

Wait, does this mean...

Just like with Commander Bruno's case, it seems the decisions I make might be more significant than I thought?

Indeed, Dame Sharon had mentioned something along those lines as well.

—"From now on, every single action of Your Highness will serve as a significant milestone determining the course of our Monster Special Task Force."

Seongjin had an epiphany.

'Me, somewhat remarkable? Perhaps I'm not just an ordinary person?'

At that, the Demon King snickered.

[Most kids who were born to good parents fall into that kind of delusion.]

'...What, did you say?'

[Moreover, you've been light-years away from ordinary from the start, you psychopath.]

'Shut up!'

How long had they walked, guided by Orden?

The passage, which seemed like it would be straightforward, surprisingly had forks and sharp turns. The farther they went, the moss on the stone walls seemed to lighten, and the surroundings appeared to gradually brighten.

It felt like they were making the right choices in direction.

"This place is quite complex, but you seem to remember the way you came pretty well."

To that, Orden replied with a peculiar answer.

"Whenever I came to a fork, I just ran down the middle path."

"..."

He was unexpectedly simple.

"We just need to turn at that corner."

And finally, they arrived in front of a vast cavern. The entrance was open, allowing a clear view inside.

Delicate carvings surrounded the entrance, exuding an atmosphere that was anything but ordinary.

"I was inside there."

With those words, Orden strode towards the entrance.

Seongjin glanced inside the cavern, but it was too dim to discern its full extent. However, judging by the echo of air returning from the empty space, it seemed to be quite spacious.

Orden, noticing Seongjin's hesitation, reassured him once more.

"It's alright. Earlier, there was nothing but a single corpse around."

"Hmm, alright then."

In that case.

Pushing aside an uneasy premonition, Seongjin followed Orden.

But just as they crossed the entrance together, Seongjin's vision was suddenly interrupted by a notification sound and a text window popping up.

□Party□ □ntry detected. Lai□□roph Lord has been regene□ed.□

"...Huh?"

Whatever it was, it didn't feel promising.

Orden, too, seemed startled and halted, indicating he might have seen the same window.

"What is this..."

And both Seongjin and Orden tensed up simultaneously, drawing their swords from their waists.

Grrrrr...

In the cavern, where there had been nothing just a moment ago, a low-frequency growl resonated from its depths. Suddenly, two glowing red eyes appeared, emitting a fierce light from beyond the darkness.

In the annex of Scarcepino, brightly illuminated as if it were broad daylight.

In the dark shadows of the deserted rear garden, slightly away from the splendid lights, Riccardo was helplessly caught by an unidentified inquisitor.

Creak. The joints of his elbow, pulled back as far as they could go, creaked ominously.

"Argh...!"

Riccardo attempted to scream, but suddenly, a gust of wind from nowhere sealed the sound from his vocal cords.

"...!"

Riccardo, his face pale with terror and pain, twitched as the exorcist looked down at him with an utterly expressionless face.

After a while, just as Riccardo was about to lose his strength and slump, the wind blocking his mouth disappeared.

[I will not ask again. Speak. Where did that person send my son?]

Finally regaining the ability to breathe, Riccardo gasped for air for a moment. Then, before this frightening visitor ran out of patience, he quickly exclaimed.

"The labyrinth! It's the labyrinth!"

[Where in the labyrinth?]

"I do not know the exact location! But I caught a glimpse of it in the memory of that storyteller. I am not sure when, but you have definitely been there before!"

[.....]

The inquisitor's grip relaxed.

Riccardo, barely freed in his upper body, struggled to turn around and asked.

"...But why? Why do you ask me this? Surely you can find out everything you want to know!"

The woman looked down at Riccardo silently.

In that cool face, from which no expression could be read, the only sign of life was the gray eyes that occasionally flickered silver.

And this individual with unique eyes could be no one else but that person.

'As expected! This woman is currently possessed by the Holy Emperor!'

Given her waxen pale face and raven-black hair, she must be of the Cornsheim clan or a descendant bearing their blood. A channeler with enough capability to host the Holy Emperor would likely not have such diluted lineage.

This must be one of the temporary measures the Holy Emperor has put in place to avoid leaving the palace.

'Then... if I can just find a way to escape from this place, does that mean the Emperor will no longer pursue me?'

If he heads to the labyrinth in search of his son, it means there is still a chance left for him.

While he was pondering, the inquisitor, who had been quietly observing him, spoke in a calm tone.

[Alright. If that's the case, then the child will safely return.]

".....?"

[It seems accidental that he sent my son there, but surely the child must find something in that place.]

...What?

"...You're not going to the labyrinth?"

Riccardo's voice quivered with shock as he asked this question.

"Why on earth? I can't understand you or the prince at all! Why do you keep doing this instead of taking the clear path that's right in front of you..."

[.....]

"...No, that's not it. That's not the issue."

How long has it been since Sigurd Sigurdson dispatched Prince Morres, and now this inquisitor appears before Riccardo?

It was clear that she was ordered to stand by nearby in anticipation of any unfortunate incident that might occur during the prince's outing.

But why? If they knew something like this could happen, why didn't they prevent his outing in the first place...

".....!"

Riccardo's eyes widened with sudden realization.

"Could it be! Not looking at all?"

Could it be that it's not just the prophecies that are sealed, but they are not making any predictions about the prince at all?

Was that what the storyteller meant by complete indeterminacy?

"But how, how is that possible? How can you do that? Especially since you are..."

However, Riccardo's voice trailed off as he inhaled sharply. His body stiffened as if frozen, feeling the cold and eerie gaze that seemed to pierce through his thoughts and soul in an instant.

Those peculiar eyes.

The woman's bright, silvery-gray eyes scrutinized Riccardo for a moment.

[Seeing that you know so much, it's clear you were willingly cooperating with that person.]

".....!"

[To voluntarily become a slave to such a wicked being, isn't that a grave sin that deserves immediate execution?]

An ominous premonition flashed through his mind.

The Holy Emperor has no intention of letting him go just like that!

"Your Majesty! I am... I am a member of the Scarcepino family! You cannot just harm me recklessly like this!"

[Your lineage background will not shield you as you serve the corrupt. Do you think I am unaware of who you are?]

The inquisitor, or rather the Holy Emperor, drew a sword from his waistband, responding ominously.

A deadly curved sword with a significantly bent blade, resembling a hook. The sharp shotel, considered a symbol of inquisitors, reflected the moonlight, casting a sinister silver sheen.

"Wait! Then remember the pact... Do not forget your constraints, Guardian of Delcross!"

Trying to control his trembling jaw, Riccardo desperately shouted.

"The unforeseen incident caused by Sigurd today was never my intention! I have not defied the rules of the main world thus far, nor have I acted beyond the bounds of humanity. Then, then you have no right to blame my free will!"

[.....]

"Please, do not ignore the consequences stemming from your own mistakes!"

The Holy Emperor paused for a moment and quietly observed Riccardo.

As Riccardo swallowed dryly, looking at that terribly inorganic face devoid of any emotion, the Holy Emperor eventually nodded and said calmly.

[Yes. Indeed, that was the promise.]

Did it work?

[So rest assured. Severing you from that person is nothing other than the free will of this inquisitor.]

'...What?'

Sweating cold sweat from an ominous premonition.

[Is it not so, Dame Sharon?]

".....!"

Riccardo was shocked. The eyes looking down on him had turned a deep, dark black.

A chilling shiver ran down his spine.

"Hehehe."

And the emaciated inquisitor split his lips into a grin.

"Yes, indeed, Your Majesty."

The woman's shotel, raised high into the air, shone round like the crescent moon in the night sky.

https://cdn.shopify.com/s/files/1/0048/5988/7672/files/BladesPro_Shotel_480x480.png?v=1630542105

And before Riccardo could say anything else.

Crash!

The shotel, flying like lightning, struck down on his crown.

* * *

Beep, beep, beep-

A series of loud notifications assaulted his ears.

Text windows, difficult to comprehend, flashed incessantly before his eyes, disorienting his vision.

Party recognized. Lairophe Road is regenerating.

Error! Unable to recognize accurate information of the party!

Requesting update of target entity's from the street.

Requesting scale adjustment from the street.

Ah, this.

Although unclear, there's a feeling that something significant has been messed up again?

[This is serious, Lee Seongjin!]

The demon king shouted, tense with anxiety.

[For some reason, it seems a condition tied to this place has been met! Something dangerous might appear, so we need to escape from here before it's too late!]

'Ah, right.'

Seongjin, sweating profusely, began to backpedal towards the entrance when he felt a thud as if his body hit a wall.

'.....!?'

Feeling around with his hands, the entrance to the cave was completely blocked by something invisible, similar to the intangible barriers created by Sigurd Sigurdson.

"...What is this?"

Orden, like Seongjin, murmured in confusion as their retreat was blocked.

And then.

Suddenly, within the deep cave that had been empty just a moment ago, the presence of a gigantic creature appeared, emitting a terrifying aura.

Two flickering red eyes in the darkness shone with a chilling light.

□Lai□□rophe Lord recognizes the intrusion□ into the bor□lum.
Clear ho□tile response!□

'Hey, demon king. It seems like we're doomed, right?'

Grrrrr...

The extreme infrasound emanating from it made all the hairs on their bodies stand on end for a moment. Seongjin and Orden, as if by agreement, drew their swords and glared straight ahead.

Then, thud. The sound of something heavy stepping.

Simultaneously, whoosh, the surroundings lit up brightly. Though the principle was unclear, torches encircling the cave walls were all lit at once.

□Error! Unable to recognize accurate □ information of the party□!□

□Requesting update of target entity's □ from the stre□.□

What appeared before them was a gigantic beast with a blue hue.

Despite having a head resembling that of a canine, its rough-furred torso and the way its hands clutched at its stance were eerily similar to a human form.

In contrast, its legs were clearly those of a quadrupedal animal, bent backward, yet it moved with an eerie grace on two legs, a bizarre sight indeed.

"A Lycanthrope? But of such size?"

Orden, observing the creature with a pale face, exclaimed softly.

Indeed, the beast's appearance closely resembled that of the Lycanthrope, occasionally spotted in the northern demonic frontiers.

Only, everything about this creature was significantly larger than those Lycanthropes. Its height surpassed nearly 4 meters, and each of the two blades it wielded seemed to be over 2 meters in length.

☐Requesting scale ☐ adjustment from the stre☐.

☐Error! Unable to ☐ a clear standard for adjustment!☐

Another curiosity was that, unlike ordinary Lycanthropes, this one adorned intricately crafted metal ornaments.

Contrasting its seemingly mindless red eyes, the elaborate adornments gave it an appearance akin to an intelligent being with a civilization.

Clank.

With each step the creature took, the metal ornaments hanging from various parts fluttered, reflecting the blue flames of the torches.

'...What exactly is that?'

While Orden was plunged into utter confusion, Seongjin's assessment of the beast was rather straightforward.

'Ah, a boss mob. We've entered a boss room.'

[...Is that all you have to say?]

'What else? You fight the boss in a boss room. What's there to ponder?'

Roar!

At that moment, the beast let out a thunderous roar and charged forward.

Simultaneously, whoosh. The creature's blades swung with lightning-fast speed, incongruous with its massive size.

Seongjin, moving out of habit, easily dodged, while Orden, who had been expecting a Lycanthrope of usual speed, couldn't react in time to the unexpected velocity.

'Damn...!'

Reflexively raising his aura-infused sword above his head, Orden braced for the impending impact, clenching his teeth.

Then, clang! The sound of weapons clashing!

".....?"

Orden blinked in surprise.

It was quite heavy. However, the impact was not as severe as Orden had anticipated.

❑Error! Unable to calculate dama❑ due to an unidentifiable ❑!❑

❑Requesting scale ❑ adjustment from the stre❑.❑

The beast's weapon swung again, a strike accompanied by a terrifying sound of cutting air, yet threatening as it was.

Thud! Again, it was repelled by Orden's sword with a relatively light impact sound.

Grrrr.

The beast paused its movement, growling at Orden with evident displeasure.

During this moment, Orden quickly retreated to Seongjin's side. However, his eyes were filled with unprecedented confusion.

❑Error! Unable to ❑ a clear standard for adjustment!❑

❑Requesting update of target entity's ❑ from the stre❑.❑

"Hmm, to confront with your sword so boldly without scouting first, you're quite brave, aren't you? Seems like it's manageable after all?"

As Seongjin spoke with a relaxed face, Orden retorted with a burst of frustration.

"Do you think so? But what can I do? I can't predict that thing's movements at all!"

"Really?"

"Yes! It's strange, Your Highness! Although it resembles a Lycanthrope in appearance, its strength, speed, and movement patterns, none of them are proper!"

At that, Seongjin tilted his head in wonder.

"Hmm, I see. I've never actually seen a real Lycanthrope, so I just assumed it'd be similar to a Blatta Mantis. It's about the same size, after all."

"Blatta... What is that?"

"Ah, a demon beast from Gehenna. Quite a grotesque one. Compared to that, this one here looks downright adorable."

As Seongjin spoke,

Beep. A clear notification sound rang out.

❑Stre❑ confirms the registration of the target entity.❑

❑Player ■■■■ ■■■.❑

❑Adjustment base entity❑ Blatta Mantis.❑

□Stre□ initiates scale □ adjustment.□

And then,

Flash! The beast, scattering red glares from its eyes, charged at them again, slamming both of its blades downward simultaneously.

Feeling an eerie sensation different from before, Orden, this time, did not rashly block with his sword but rolled to the side along with Seongjin.

And that was the correct response.

Roar!

With an enormous impact that shook the entire cave, a trench at least 1 meter wide was gouged into the floor.

Facing the terrifying destructive power, Orden's face turned ashen, realizing he had almost taken the beast's attack head-on.

"See? Since it's about the same size, the attack style and power are similar too. It's just like watching that thing's foreleg slam down, right?"

Amid the rising dust, only Seongjin maintained a calm demeanor, offering such an assessment.

With a thunderous roar, the cavern was filled with the sound of a massive beast.

Gone was its initial awkward appearance, and the menacing aura it now exuded could easily rival that of a Glacier Troll hiding deep within the demon realm.

Orden, with a pale face, stepped back cautiously, keeping his eyes on the enormous Lycanthrope.

He had already slashed at the beast several times with his sword. However, whether it was due to the creature's thick hide or not, it seemed completely unscathed, without a single visible wound.

Despite the clear feeling of his blade cutting through, he couldn't understand why there was no apparent damage.

".....!"

With a resounding crash!

Without a moment's respite to think, a gigantic blade once again aimed for him, crashing down into the ground. Stone shattered, sending fragments flying in every direction.

Orden narrowly dodged the attack, maneuvering to the side of the Lycanthrope. Seizing the moment when the beast was momentarily distracted by its embedded blade, Orden quickly thrust his aura-imbued sword into the creature's leg.

Thunk!

Yet, the beast, without even flinching, swung its fist towards him.

"...It doesn't react at all?"

Ducking swiftly, Orden's eyes widened in shock.

Was it not feeling any pain? Despite his sword deeply piercing its thigh, why did it seem as if not a scratch was left on the beast!

While he pondered, Prince Morres, who had leaped into the fray, used the deeply embedded blade as a step and ran up the thick forearm of the beast. With a light jump, he drew his blade downwards in a long arc.

Swoosh!

The long gray blade deeply sliced through the creature's carotid artery.

'This has to be a fatal blow!'

Orden thought so, but astonishingly, the beast turned towards the prince, seemingly unharmed, with not even a mark on its neck where the blade had touched.

The Lycanthrope then swung the blade it held in its other hand violently towards the prince.

"...Your Highness!"

Despite the unexpected counterattack, the prince, as if anticipating it, kicked off the beast's shoulder and leaped away.

Landing safely next to Orden, he commented, "It seems there's no recognition of vital points? It looks like only the damage is being reflected quite straightforwardly."

At that dry assessment, Orden was dumbfounded.

"Your Highness, this is strange! This Lycanthrope seems to be regenerating like a Troll. We can't even tell where its vitals are, so I'm not sure how we're supposed to fight it..."

But the prince simply tilted his head at him, seemingly unbothered.

"Hm? No, your last attack was quite good. It took off a significant amount of HP."

"...What?"

"Look above the creature's head. There's an HP bar showing its life force. Don't you see it?"

Above its head?

Only then did Orden notice a glowing bar above the beast's head, which had slightly decreased from its original length.

He had ignored it, not knowing what it was.

"...That represents its life?"

"Yes. Given the lack of visible wounds or bleeding, it seems we're in a world with rules akin to those of an old game."

"Old games... what are you talking about?"

"Or is it because we're minors, and some kind of minor protection mode is activated?"

Orden couldn't grasp the meaning of the prince's words.

But more importantly,

"You're the only one here who's not of age!"

Orden exclaimed, unable to hold back his frustration, to which the prince looked at him as if the remark was absurd.

"Is that really what's important right now?"

"...No, I mean..."

"...Here it comes!"

Before Orden could finish, the prince whispered a warning.

The massive body was swiftly approaching them.

Its red eyes left a long trail as it swung its blade horizontally with a whoosh! Orden narrowly ducked to avoid it, but the wind pressure alone from the blade passing overhead was enough to send tingles throughout his body.

As Orden rolled on the ground to gain some distance, the prince had already retreated far away.

The way he maintained a safe distance and engaged in minor skirmishes didn't seem like it was his first time dealing with such a colossal beast.

'...How can he do that?'

Orden thought to himself as he quickly regained his posture.

He had been a prodigious swordsman since his youth, accustomed to facing the demons of the demon realm, but this strange battle was particularly draining for him.

The giant beast seemed to shift its center of gravity unpredictably, displaying bizarre movements that were difficult for Orden to comprehend. Even the range of motion in its joints appeared slightly off from what was visible.

Moreover, every time it swung its weapon, the length of its reach seemed oddly different, as if its shoulder joint was dislocating and then popping back into place. Given the size of the beast, these differences resulted in significant changes in distance.

These uncomfortable gaps constantly wore on Orden's nerves.

"Sigh..."

There was another problem.

Every time he swung his sword, the aura he expended seemed to slip away hopelessly.

Whatever trick Scarchapino had used, the aura spent here was not easily replenished.

"No need to rush. Even small attacks are steadily accumulating damage."

Prince Morres approached the heavily breathing Orden, offering a gentle reminder.

"So, don't push yourself too hard and conserve your aura. The aura is extremely scarce in this environment, making it difficult to recover normally."

Orden looked at him with a somewhat incredulous expression.

What in the world? Those overly calm eyes.

He had thought of him as a pampered prince, hardly ever leaving the palace, yet now the prince seemed as seasoned as a veteran from the Sigmund territory, who had spent his life subduing demons.

That's when it happened.

With a deep rumble, as the Lycanthrope took a step towards them, its aura grew even more intense.

Then, a sharp warning sound pierced their ears.

□The Lyc□□thrope Lord is greatly enraged!□

With a thunderous roar, the staggering beast suddenly arched its body backward and let out a terrifying howl.

* * *

The vast cavern was already in shambles.

The beast, wielding the blades in its hands, had rampaged through the cavern with the intent to bring it down. The rounded walls and stone floors were almost entirely destroyed.

Amidst the chaos, it was miraculous how the torches lighting the interior remained unscathed, still burning in their places.

"...Huff, huff."

Seongjin gasped for breath as he watched Orden trying to regain his composure.

He had to admit, facing an unfamiliar boss mob and holding his ground proved the man was indeed formidable. However, due to several hits from the Lycanthrope during the ongoing battle, his clothes were torn, and blood flowed from various parts of his body.

And that wasn't all. He seemed to stagger occasionally, likely having expended most of his aura.

'It looks like we can't drag this out for much longer...'

On the other hand, Seongjin was relatively at ease. His habit of keeping a wide distance from giant demons, dodging, and looking for opportunities to strike deep had served him well.

The demons of Gehenna were known for their unpredictable movements, after all.

Take, for instance, the larvae of the Bantra Moss. The range from which their tentacles extended from their highly adaptable exoskeletons was incredibly diverse.

'The more I think about it, the more it resembles the movements of the Blatta Mantis...'

Ah, excluding its appearance, of course.

At least this 'cute' dog didn't have more than four legs.

Most of the demons of Gehenna, except for some cephalopods, had the form of arthropods, typically having more than six legs.

The Blatta Mantis, too, was a giant insect-like demon, wielding two powerful forelegs like a praying mantis. But its streamlined form covered in dark chitin was more reminiscent of a cockroa...

'...Ah, I need to stop thinking about it. It's making me lose my appetite again.'

After facing that creature, the entire superhero squad suffered from a lack of appetite for days.

[Are you sure you can handle this? I know you keep comparing it to the Blatta Mantis, which was a fairly strong demon.]

'As long as they don't swarm, I can handle one.'

Although Seongjin's stats had significantly decreased from his prime, strangely, he didn't feel any sense of danger facing this creature.

Feeling a baseless confidence as if, somehow, he could manage even if things went awry.

'I've really become quite laid-back...'

Considering Seongjin's personality during his hunter days, this was indeed baffling. Back then, he was meticulously thorough in approaching battles.

He would accurately assess the enemy's strength, organize combat personnel, and plan operations based on objective data.

He had a disdain for those who rushed in thoughtlessly.

[What are you talking about, going berserk yourself when things get tough?]

'That was a different story. I was always well-prepared.'

[Really? Maybe it's because you believe that no matter what happens, your father can handle it.]

'...Is that so?'

Seongjin blinked.

Thinking about it, it did make some sense, didn't it?

'Yeah, maybe you're right.'

It was an interesting realization.

Is this how people with parents generally feel?

As he pondered this, a sharp warning beep echoed again.

□The Lyc□□thrope Lord is greatly enraged!□

Simultaneously, the dog-like creature started trembling violently as if electrocuted.

As its aura grew stronger, it suddenly let out a thunderous roar towards the sky.

With a deafening roar, the Lycanthrope's blue fur began to turn purple, and its body started to swell dramatically.

It was too dramatic a change to be merely flexing its muscles. How could its volume increase so suddenly from thin air?

While Orden was shocked by the transformation, Seongjin's observation remained simple.

'Ah, looks like it's phase 2 of the boss fight.'

[...It must be nice to be so laid-back.]

'Well, take it positively. Considering its remaining health, it doesn't seem like there'll be a phase 3.'

Before their eyes, a purple dog, now about 1.5 times larger, slowly rose.

Its long, white fangs protruded more prominently, and white steam rose from its elongated, sharper snout.

The red glow in its eyes, fixated on Seongjin and his group, brightened ominously, as if its eyes were ablaze.

"...What in the world."

As Orden opened his mouth to speak, the Lycanthrope's ears twitched.

And then.

"Hey! Watch out...!"

Before any warning could be given, Orden was slammed against the stone wall. The purple beast had swung its blade at an incredible speed, sending him flying with the flat of the blade.

"Ugh..."

Impaled into the wall like a siege ram, Orden let out a faint groan.

Fortunately, he seemed to have wrapped himself in aura to protect his body, preventing him from losing consciousness, but the impact was so severe that it seemed impossible for him to get up immediately.

With a low growl and the creature slowly advancing towards him, Seongjin steeled his resolve.

'...Can't be helped.'

He had intended to take it slow this time, given the sharp eye of the higher-ups, even if it meant pushing himself a bit.

Sighing, Seongjin wrapped his legs with aura and, with a burst, kicked off the ground.

Before the startled Lycanthrope could react, Seongjin flew onto its back, swinging his blade in a wide arc.

Slicing through the beast's back, he landed on the stone wall before the creature could turn, and launched himself again towards its legs.

With a deep slash, he targeted the bent knee joint, stirring it deeply with his blade.

The beast swiftly swung its blade diagonally, but Seongjin, keeping low to the ground, narrowly dodged and struck the ground, following up with a long slash across its belly.

The creature, unable to keep up with Seongjin's movements, swung its blade irritably.

Then, using the handle of his blade as support, Seongjin spun around and deeply cut into one of the giant creature's shoulders.

Orden, sitting slumped in front of the stone wall, watched the scene in a daze, the intense pain piercing his body momentarily forgotten.

It was like witnessing a dream.

What seemed like mere hit-and-run tactics were actually precise attacks by the prince, who didn't waste a single movement escaping, constantly stabbing the beast with his sword.

As evidence, the Lycanthrope's remaining health steadily decreased.

The prince's spacing.

When Orden first faced him, he felt that the prince's spacing was incredibly narrow compared to his sword strikes.

Now, however, Orden realized he had been greatly mistaken.

The prince's spacing wasn't just a domain that could be defined by distance. The bounced-off stone walls became his foothold, and the trench created by the beast's strike immediately became a barrier protecting him.

Everything within the prince's view became his domain.

The entire surroundings were within the prince's spacing.

"Sigh..."

Finally, as the prince settled back to the ground, letting out a long breath he had been holding.

With a thud!

The massive beast that seemed impossible to defeat collapsed to the ground.

That colossal purple beast was undoubtedly a formidable opponent even for Seongjin.

Upon entering Phase 2, it displayed an attack power that far surpassed Blatta Mantis. Moreover, it possessed incredible speed that even Orden, who was close to being a senior knight, couldn't react to it in time.

Thus, Seongjin had to draw upon every ability he had.

He maximized his aura concealment to prevent any leakage of aura to the outside.

He gathered all the aura he could muster, focusing it on the smallest area possible to supplement his lacking strength.

By employing assassination techniques to blur his presence, he made it difficult for his opponent to detect his location, compensating for his comparatively slower speed.

And he utilized every aspect of the surrounding terrain.

"The more I see, the more incredible your movements seem. What kind of spatial awareness do you have?"

Hadn't one of his comrades, with whom he fought during his early days as a hunter, made such a remark?

True to that comment, during combat, the most straightforward paths for attack and evasion would vividly form in Seongjin's mind in three dimensions.

All he had to do was follow those images, and he would hardly ever get hit, and most of his attacks would land.

And that meant, as long as Seongjin's body moved correctly, there was always a chance for victory.

Boom!

Finally, the massive body of the Lycanthrope collapsed to the ground.

"Huff..."

Only then did Seongjin stop and release the breath he had been holding.

'I really ran around to my heart's content for the first time in a while.'

The battle had been quite intense.

He had used his aura so cautiously that, despite the reckless swinging, his muscles didn't burst as they had before.

Of course, there was no helping that his legs, having been busy darting in every direction, were worn out and had stiffened up, barely moving now.

Yet, by the end, his aura was completely depleted, and he had no choice but to draw upon some of the aura blocking the passageway.

[Did you really take that down all by yourself?]

The Demon King expressed admiration, a rare occurrence.

'See? I told you it seemed doable.'

After all his efforts, Seongjin was now faced with a barrage of new text windows popping up incessantly before his eyes.

[Clarity!]

[You have successfully defeated the Lycanthrope Lord!]

[Calculating rewards...]

Huh? Is something like a game reward actually coming up?

[Your achievement exceeds the registered records.]

[Requesting update from the system.]

[The system's adjustment function will be activated.]

[Currently loading...]

And beep. A cheerful notification sounded, and for a change, a perfectly legible text appeared.

[Some systems have been successfully restored.]

Oh, this is the first time the text isn't broken.

[You have been granted rewards appropriate to your completion grade.]

[A return portal has been generated.]

And whoosh. Suddenly, a long beam of multicolored light appeared in the middle of the cavity.

"...Portal?"

Does this portal means that it's a shortcut back to Delcross?

[Hmm...]

The Demon King seemed to scrutinize it carefully for a moment before affirming.

[I'm not sure where it leads, but it's definitely some kind of gate. As expected, it's a product of the main world, seems very stable, doesn't it?]

Alright, let's take it and see.

[But we don't know where it leads. Isn't that a bit risky? Better to just call your father.]

"Tsk, ts. Knowing only one thing and not the other."

Seongjin shook his head in disapproval.

Think about it, Demon King.

If this portal is connected to Delcross, we can avoid getting caught by my father for causing trouble.

And if it leads somewhere else?

Then we can call my father at that time. Whether we're here or there, calling him once is all the same.

At Seongjin's utterly logical explanation, the Demon King was immensely impressed.

[...Wow, are all kids like this? Going to great lengths just to avoid getting scolded by their parents?]

A scolding is just a scolding, but a slap is just a slap!

Meanwhile, the Lycanthrope that had collapsed on the ground had returned to its original size at some point.

As its body gradually became fainter, it seemed like it might just evaporate into thin air, just like in a game.

As he slowly approached, thinking this, the creature suddenly turned its head towards Seongjin. Its eyes, clear as glass and blue, stared intently at Seongjin with a discernible purpose.

'...?'

Caught off guard by the sudden turn of events, Seongjin stared back at the creature when an unfamiliar voice echoed in his head.

[■■■■ ■■? Why are you here...?]

...What?

Seongjin listened intently, puzzled, but the beast, which seemed like it wanted to say something, soon weakly closed its eyes.

Soon after, its massive form faintly shimmered and then disappeared without a trace, turning into a small cluster of light.

Stunned, Seongjin watched the scene unfold and then asked the Demon King.

"Hey, did you just hear that?"

[Huh? Hear what?]

The Demon King seemed genuinely clueless.

'...Was it just my imagination?'

Where the creature had vanished, only a small accessory remained, twinkling.

As Seongjin picked it up, a beep sounded, and the name of the item appeared before his eyes.

[Lycanthrope Lord, Nebraska's Summoning Amulet]

Could it be that the creature's name was Nebraska? Or was it just the name given to the item?

It almost seemed like the creature recognized Seongjin at the end, but what was that about? Was it just his imagination?

With those thoughts, he examined the item, and small texts began to pop up one after another.

[There are 4 souls bound to player ■■■■ ■.]

[Open list]

...Bound souls?

Puzzled, Seongjin hesitated for a moment before saying, "Open."

Then, a selection window rolled down in front of him.

[List of souls available for summoning as familiars 2/4]

[1. □□□□ (Inactive)]

[2. □□□ □□ (Inactive)]

[3. Hayes Martin (Active)][1]

[4. Red (Active)]

[Would you like to select a soul?]

[Accept / Decline]

...Huh?

Huff huff huff!

Amelia, who almost seemed to leap off her trotting horse, entered the Scarcepinio mansion with a worried expression.

'Morres...!'

Strangely, today was a day filled with heart flutters and an inability to concentrate on anything.

This wasn't the first time something like this had happened.

There had been days in the past when a bad premonition had tormented her all day, and on such days, something would invariably go wrong, resulting in Morres getting seriously hurt.

Eventually, in the evening, Amelia put down the book she was reading and went looking for Morres. Hearing from Edith that he hadn't returned from his outing yet made her heart sink.

That's why she had ridden her horse to the townhouse, leaving her escort knight behind.

'Why? Why do I feel so anxious?'

Trying to suppress her trembling heart, Amelia was led by the servants to the second-floor lounge.

There, she found Masain-orabeoni shaking the poor old butler by the scruff, demanding answers.

"Can you not speak the truth at once! The meeting has been over for ages; why has His Highness not shown himself? Where exactly is His Highness now!"

"I'm sorry, but I too am not sure..."

"Then summon Young Master Scarcepino at once! Wasn't it said that he was accompanying His Highness?"

"That's the thing, his excellency Riccardo has also unexpectedly left..."

"What? Left His Highness alone? Does that even make sense!"

Normally, Marquis was a kind older brother who only showed a gentle face to his siblings.

But now, baring his teeth and growling at the butler, he seemed like a completely different person, exuding a menacing aura.

At this, Amelia realized.

'As I thought, something has happened to Morres!'

Biting her lip anxiously, a desperate voice called out to them from behind.

"Masain-hyungnim! Amelia-noona!"

Just then, Logan, dressed in the uniform of the White Knights, entered the lounge.

A long Henesys longsword was strapped to his waist, and on his left arm, he wore the small buckler used during the conquest of the Sea Witch, fully armed.

"I received a message from Sisle that something serious might have happened to Morres. I rushed over immediately upon request, but what in the world is going on?"

Since Sisle wasn't one to talk nonsense, he must have come fully armed, just in case.

And his response touched the heart of the Knight Commander, who had always been concerned about the discord between the two.

"Prince Logan, to come in person for Prince Morres like this..."

Masain's eyes reddened. Of course, he still had the old butler by the scruff.

And the butler, dangling from his grip, silently sweated as the situation began to escalate.

'Why... Why has it come to this?'

Until now, Prince Morres had been nothing more than a secretive guest who passed through quietly as if a mouse.

But now, with the appearance of the renowned Knight Commander from the imperial family pressing for answers, the Princess whom the Holy Emperor cherishes the most, and Prince Logan who is now the most probable candidate for the next Holy Emperor's seat, it was an unexpected turnout for the imperial family members to rally for that notorious prince.

"So, where is Morres now?"

As Logan asked again, a bright beam of multicolored light suddenly appeared before them.

"...!?"

The light quickly brightened and then vanished, but everyone's eyes widened in shock as they stared at the spot where the light had passed.

Incredibly, in a place where no one had been, the figures of two people appeared as if by magic.

"Sir Masain?"

What had happened in the meantime was unclear, but there stood

Orden, covered in blood, being supported by Seongjin.

"Huh? Amelia-noona? And Logan too? What's everyone doing here?"

Seongjin asked as he helped Orden sit on the ground.

Logan, noticing the severity of Orden's condition at a glance, rushed over with a stern face. As bright holy power burst from Logan's hands, Orden's face, which had been tightly scrunched up in pain, visibly relaxed.

After all, wasn't he a leading candidate for the next Holy Emperor? Seeing the wounds heal so quickly, it was clear that Logan possessed an extraordinary holy power.

Meanwhile, Amelia approached Seongjin with a worried face and asked.

"What exactly happened, Morres? Did he cause you trouble again?"

"...Excuse me?"

Feeling the nuanced misunderstanding, Seongjin asked back, and Amelia continued in a cautious tone.

"Of course, Young Master Siegmund isn't someone I'm particularly fond of, but I'm worried this might have been a bit too harsh this time."

Seongjin was so dumbfounded that he just gaped in disbelief.

Was the Princess under the impression that I had dealt with him?

Sure, it wasn't unreasonable to think that way since the two had disappeared together and one came back bloodied...

"..."

And Orden, having heard the blunt expression of disfavor from the Princess, sullenly lowered his head in silence.

Although his physical condition had greatly improved, his complexion seemed even worse than before.

"It's all a misunderstanding, noona."

Just as Seongjin was about to protest, Logan, who had finished the healing and approached Seongjin, glanced towards Orden and then whispered in Seongjin's ear.

"What exactly happened, Lee Seongjin? No matter what, why would you beat someone to that extent?"

"...Huh?"

"For now, I've done a rough patch-up job, so if the Siegmund family lodges a complaint, just deny that you hit him that hard, okay?"

"No, that's what I'm saying, I didn't do it!"

Seongjin was flabbergasted.

What do these people take me for!

And Orden, an exceptional aura user who had caught every whisper of the siblings' conversation without missing a beat, felt utterly dejected.

Of course, the actual skills he had witnessed of the Prince were indeed admirable.

But even so. He was known as the most promising swordsman on the continent, having swept through every prestigious martial arts tournament with authority!

Regarded alongside Prince Logan as the strongest youth in Delcross, did these people truly believe without a shadow of a doubt that Prince Morres had unilaterally beaten him?

"We just got caught in Riccardo's trap together!"

"Trap?"

"Yes. Orden did nothing wrong. He just got involved while trying to help me!"

Seongjin explained the situation while also defending Orden, who had suffered alongside him.

"Of course, it was needless effort, and he ended up being more of a burden that needed my help!"

Cough.

Orden's face turned a sickly shade of green as Seongjin's explanation dealt him a critical blow to his pride.

T/N:

1. The priest if you remembered him[↔]

"Traps set by the young master, what exactly does that mean? Could it possibly be related to His Highness suddenly appearing out of nowhere? Is it some sort of mechanism?"

"I'm not entirely sure what he did or how he did it. I was trapped somewhere with Orden and barely managed to escape. We'll have to find him and ask for details, won't we?"

"But what did you do to Young Master Scarcepino for him to resort to such measures?"

"Hey, what did I do, really? I'm innocent here! Listen, the truth is that Riccardo was the one who from the start..."

Prince Morres, growing heated in his explanation, was being watched blankly by Orden when his subordinate, Herman, approached and asked cautiously, "Are you alright, Young Lord Orden?"

On the usually not-so-loyal subordinate's face, a faint sense of guilt surfaced for having neglected his duty and letting the young duke end up in such a state.

It was something beyond his control, after all. He had orders to gather as much information as possible at this gathering and to stand by without any further instructions.

Besides, with Orden's strength, what danger could there possibly be at a mere social gathering?

"To think you would be beaten by that young prince..."

"That is..."

Orden opened his mouth to retort but eventually remained silent, unable to come up with a response.

He was unaware that he had been flung to another dimension and returned, but he understood that what Riccardo had done was not something a normal person could achieve. The involvement of the Dark Order or a demon race was suspicious.

The fact that the heir of the wealthy Scarcepino family was involved with such malevolent forces was, in itself, enough to cause a huge stir in the Imperial City.

Thus, until the connection with the Milo Trade Association was confirmed, he and Prince Morres had agreed to keep quiet about the detailed events that occurred there.

After pausing to rub his face with his hands, Orden asked, "And Riccardo Scarcepino?"

"He has been absent since the middle of the gathering. According to the butler, he had urgent business and said he would return shortly."

"Urgent business?"

"Yes. Of course, our people have been closely monitoring the surroundings, so it's certain he hasn't left the mansion."

Herman then looked at him with a slightly worried expression.

"I'll have someone investigate further, so for now, Lord Orden, please return to the mansion and receive proper treatment. Your current state is truly not good."

"Yes, let's do that."

Orden responded thus and lifted his head to look towards the people of the Imperial family gathered together.

More specifically, his gaze was on the beautiful face of Princess Amelia, who was smiling softly at her siblings.

"But Herman."

"Yes, Lord Orden."

"Do you know? Amelia's... Amelia's face looks incredibly happy..."

"Oh dear."

Herman sighed.

He couldn't fathom why his normally stern and taciturn superior would act so foolishly whenever it came to the princess.

As if feeling their gaze, Princess Amelia turned around. Then, to their surprise, she began to slowly approach them!

Orden froze in shock at the unexpected turn of events.

"Young Master Siegmund."

Princess Amelia, now close enough to look down upon him, had an unusually soft gaze.

"I heard from Morres. You tried to help him, didn't you?"

Orden replied in a disheartened voice.

"...In the end, I wasn't much help."

"But still, the fact that you tried to help my brother remains unchanged."

The princess said, her lips curving into a gentle smile. Although it was a faint smile, it was enough to momentarily take Herman's breath away, brightening the atmosphere around them.

"Thank you very much, young master."

"...!"

This was perhaps the first time Orden had received such a friendly response from the princess.

He was visibly moved, unable to hide his emotions.

Meanwhile, the reprimands toward Seongjin from the members of the Imperial family continued.

"It seems you're quite the troublemaker too. I'm starting to understand why Princess Amelia is always so worried about you."

"What, me?"

Seongjin bristled in response, and nearby, Masain frowned and clicked his tongue in disapproval.

"Exactly. It's truly impossible to let one's guard down around you. Despite my being here, you've managed to create such a mess in just a moment of inattention!"

"No, Sir Masain. Why do you always blame everything on me?"

Of course, if one were to delve into it, all of this was probably a result of the actions Morres had taken in the past.

In any case, Seongjin felt wronged.

"Let's not do this here. Let's head back to the Imperial Palace. I have things to report, so I need to meet with Father in the main palace for a moment."

As Seongjin started to walk away, Logan quickly stepped in front of him.

"Just a moment before you go. Sit down here for a second."

"...Huh?"

"I'll give you a quick treatment. You're quite injured, aren't you?"

Huh? Seongjin was somewhat taken aback.

His leg did hurt a bit. But he thought he was moving quite well, all things considered. How did Logan notice?

"No, I think I'll be fine after some rest..."

"Morres."

Amelia's cool voice cut him off from behind, and Seongjin looked back hesitantly.

Those quiet, gray eyes staring at him exerted an unspoken pressure, somehow reminding Seongjin of someone he knew all too well.

"With your leg like that, what are you even talking about?"

Really, she could see that?

Such keen observers!

"Anyone can see you have a serious injury right now. Just do as Logan says."

"...Yes."

Intimidated, Seongjin obediently sat down, and Logan placed his sword aside and laid his hands on Seongjin's leg.

Bright divine energy flowed down, beginning to ease the pain in his leg.

Masain, watching with a stern expression, asked, "Is it serious?"

"I've administered first aid for now. But it would be best if he refrained from any strenuous activity for a while."

"I see."

Masain nodded and then sternly admonished Seongjin.

"You heard what Prince Logan said, didn't you? How can you even think of going to the main palace in your condition? I'll carry you to Pearl Palace myself, so don't even think about walking on that leg today."

"What?!"

Seongjin was taken aback.

No, wait a minute, everyone. I'm already completely fine! It's not a big deal at all!

Why are you treating me like a baby?

"And that's not all, Your Highness. You are forbidden from training for the entire day tomorrow. Do you understand?"

"But Sir Masain? I really am..."

As Seongjin tried to protest, he was simultaneously scolded by the siblings.

"Be sensible and listen while you're being spoken to nicely!"

"Don't even think about training!"

"Uh..."

Seongjin blinked in confusion.

What's going on here? Why am I being scolded by them to this extent?

[Tsk tsk. Your character is so flawed that you lack extreme empathy for others. Can't you see your family is worried about you?]

I've been thinking about this lately, but somehow, this Demon King has an unnecessarily deep understanding of humans.

'No, but isn't this concern a bit too excessive?'

[Exactly. I don't understand why they're making such a fuss over this damn brat...]

'...'

Seongjin blankly looked up at his siblings and Masain.

Three different colored pairs of eyes were all looking at him with the same worried expression, as if they were looking at a child by the water.

"Ha ha..."

Perhaps it was the absurdity of the situation, but a laugh escaped him involuntarily. When had Seongjin, the strongest hunter of humanity, ever been treated like this?

—It's just that you have so many family members around you.

He remembered the Holy Emperor saying something like that once.

At the time, he thought it was a bothersome and annoying relationship.

Why, then, did he suddenly not feel so bad about being with them?

* * *

Young Master Scarcepero was found by people late into the night.

The old butler, finding it strange that the carriage was still there, had summoned the servants to search the entire mansion, leading to the discovery.

He was found collapsed in one corner of the garden, surrounded by an alarming amount of blood.

The servants initially panicked, fearing something dreadful had happened to the young master, but surprisingly, there wasn't a single wound on his body.

Riccardo, carried back to his room by the servants, regained consciousness only late into the night.

"The connection... the connection has been severed! Oh, no!"

Upon waking, Riccardo immediately fell into a panic.

"Ahh! I'm finished! It's all over now!"

The startled servants restrained him as he began to thrash about.

"Lord Riccardo! Your Grace! What's the matter?"

"The Guardian! He's destroyed my mind! He's completely severed me from the grand flow!"

"Lord Riccardo, what do you mean by...?"

"Sigurd! Sigurd! Where is he? Please, bring him to me!"

This behavior was uncharacteristic of the always gentle and refined young master.

The commotion prompted the attending physicians to rush over, and the pale-faced old butler quickly called for a healing priest.

Riccardo's outburst continued for a while.

And around dawn, when he had finally calmed down, he ended up cowering under his covers on the bed, still not in a normal state, trembling and with a haunted look in his eyes.

Unable to bear it, Isabella approached him with a worried expression.

"What's the matter, Riccardo-orabeoni?"

Riccardo clenched the blanket tight and gritted his teeth.

"Ah, I'm so afraid, Isabella. Terrified."

"What are you so afraid of?"

"The connection to the noble spirit has been severed. The link that was to lead to a grand tale..."

Riccardo's eyes, as he murmured, were unfocused, darting aimlessly.

"Now I see nothing. Everything that was once so clear is now obscured as if veiled in thick mist, so ambiguous..."

"Brother."

"Is a mere human's spirit so trivial? Not even able to see the world properly, let alone oneself, like a blind man with eyes wide open!"

"..."

"Ah, Isabella! What should I do? I have become nothing in this universe. I, who should have been a tributary connected to the grand flow, a pillar of the great order, am now but a speck of existence!"

Tears welled up in Riccardo's bloodshot eyes.

Isabella, who had been quietly watching this scene, cautiously took his hand and began to comfort him.

"I see. Yes. But don't be too sad, brother."

" ... "

"Being suddenly expelled from the grand order. It must be a tremendous loss. I understand all of your feelings, brother."

Her beautiful turquoise eyes looked at him with deep compassion.

"...Isabella?"

Riccardo turned his head towards Isabella, puzzled by his sister's reaction. Her face was unusually calm and peaceful.

She continued with an unprecedented gentle smile.

[But you need not be so sad. To dare to be a part of the grand order, that was never something you were permitted, brother, who were no more than a puppet at midday.]

Her lips, red as a flower, slowly approached and whispered sweetly in his ear.

[Since it was never there to begin with, you haven't lost anything, brother. What a fortunate thing, isn't it? So now, forget everything and rest easy, brother.]

"Sigurd Sigurdson. The maliciousness of that man lies exactly there. Even though the avatars he manipulates retain their consciousness, in many cases, they are unaware that they are merely puppets moving at his will."

At Romaine's explanation, Leonard asked with curiosity.

"They retain consciousness but fail to perceive it?"

"Yes. It's because of the cunning methods he employs."

Romaine continued after a brief pause.

"He usually manipulates the puppets in two ways. One is by drastically boosting the human ego, and stimulating the desire to become a more remarkable being, making the puppet accept itself as it is."

"Hmm?"

"The problem arises after acceptance. Once the connection is made, the extensive experience and knowledge he has accumulated, along with the mad desire to become part of a greater flow, all converge, elevating the puppet's spirit immensely. At this moment, the puppet believes it has become his accomplice, mistaking his strong desires as their own, and readily lends their body without hesitation."

Romaine and Leonard.

The two were currently walking down a long corridor made of stone.

The old stone walls, covered in moss, bore the clear marks of time, but the sporadic blue torches, seemingly just lit, illuminated the path brightly.

"The other method is even more malicious. It involves completely tearing down a person's self-esteem or driving them into a severe corner, making the puppet give up its sense of self entirely. The puppet then moves entirely according to his will. In extreme cases, the puppet might even come to believe that it is Sigurd Sigurdson himself."

Leading the way, Romaine glanced around at the fork in the road before deciding on a direction and proceeding.

"In this case, the puppet literally lives as Sigurd Sigurdson. Of course, the process of making them give up their self-consciousness is not exactly humane, so it's inevitable that there will be some gaps in the puppet's memory."

"Gaps in memory? But how can they not realize they are being controlled?"

"Because most of those gaps are filled the moment they fully connect with him. As I mentioned earlier, humans connected to Sigurd cannot escape the euphoria brought on by the intensely stimulated mental activity. The sensation is so strong and captivating that the disappearance of some human memories is hardly noticeable."

Romaine paused to let out a soft, hollow laugh.

With each smile, his lips twisted into a dark smirk.

"Such unaware puppets continue their delusions even after he leaves, pitifully believing themselves to be not merely human but, in fact, demons. They think they are demon lords who traverse dimensions, destined to become part of a grand tale someday."

"....."

"Deeply despairing over their own insignificance, they easily become engrossed in the brief euphoria bestowed upon them by another for convenience. It's truly a foolish thing, isn't it?"

Leonard, feeling a bit embarrassed by Romaine's words that sounded like a profound self-mockery, distracted himself with a cough.

Fortunately, before the atmosphere could become any heavier, they arrived at their destination.

Romaine stood in front of a large door adorned with elegant relief work and said to Leonard,

"This is my base of operations. For you to enter with me, Mr. Leo, you would need to become a member of my party. As I mentioned earlier, you simply need to agree."

As soon as he finished speaking, a broken text window appeared in front of Leonard.

☐■■■■ invites Mr. $ks□Rns to join the party. Do you accept?☐

☐Accept / ☐ecline☐

Startled, Leonard glanced at Romaine's face and then nodded.

"...I accept."

Then, another text window popped up.

☐You have joined ■■■■'s party.☐

"Phew."

Leonard shook his head in disbelief and took a swig from his flask.

"Well, I must say, even though you gave me a fair warning, it's still surprising. It seems this place really is another dimension."

The two were currently inside the labyrinth.

Due to Sigurd Sigurdson urgently accessing the labyrinth for some reason, Romaine was also able to successfully recover some lost connections.

With a heavy creaking noise, the door opened to reveal another corridor lined with multiple rooms.

Unlike the previous areas, the interior was brightly decorated, causing Leonard's eyes to widen in surprise. Romaine strode inside and said,

"Mr. Leo, I will grant you access to certain parts of this base. From now on, you will be free to come and go in the authorized areas."

"Wow, Romaine! I never imagined. This is really...!"

Leonard looked around excitedly, his face flushed with enthusiasm.

"Isn't this the perfect hideaway! Can I bring others here?"

Romaine looked back at him as if he had said something absurd.

"We deliberately came here to escape the eyes of guardian of Delcross and the high-ranking demon kings. If we blatantly bring women here, do you think our concealment will hold?"

"Wouldn't it?"

"Of course not. Besides, with all the hideaways you have scattered across the continent, do you really need another secret place?"

"There's always a shortage. I don't like to return to a hideaway I've used before. It smells of corpses."

"....."

Romaine fell silent.

On the outside, he appeared to be a perfectly normal young man, but in fact, this Leonard was a person with quite a brutal aspect.

As a child, the prince used to bring small animals into the palace to torment for fun. As he grew older, he created secret hideaways and lured people to them. Most of those he brought ended up as cold corpses, buried right there in the hideaways.

If it weren't for his status as a prince, he would have been branded a devil worshipper or a notorious murderer and executed long ago.

Indeed, such an extraordinary temperament must be why he is fated to become a conqueror of the continent someday.

Had Delcross fallen into [Famine]'s hands as planned, instead of wasting time drinking, he would have been fervently engaged in wars of conquest.

"By the way, if the labyrinth is so good at evading others' gazes, why doesn't the Storyteller of Dimensions flee here?"

Leonard, who was busily opening various doors and exploring the interiors, asked as he gulped down his drink.

"Sigurd Sigurdson cannot leave the dimension of Delcross."

"Why is that? Because his physical body died in Delcross?"

"Not exactly. The problem is that the moment his soul leaves the Delcross dimension, he would face the full brunt of the Holy Emperor's fury with all restraints removed. Didn't we just lose one of the puppets as an excuse for briefly opening the labyrinth?"

Sigurd Sigurdson has been a target of the Holy Emperor for years.

The reason he has been able to preserve even his soul thus far is by clinging to the bodies of puppets and not significantly deviating from human laws. He is exploiting the constraints of the Holy Emperor.

Now, there's only one way for him to be free.

He must bide his time within the few remaining puppets, waiting for the day the Holy Emperor, as a human, reaches the end of their life and dies.

"Even that would only be possible if the lifespan of the puppets is exceedingly long. Now, only two puppets remain, and creating new ones would clearly be an act beyond human laws."

In that brief connection, Romaine, who had fully grasped Sigurd Sigurdson's predicament, smiled confidently.

It was then.

"...Huh?"

Leonard paused in front of a door at the end of the corridor and said,
"Romaine, something feels off? I'm sure I've seen this place before."

"Really? That shouldn't be possible."

Romaine asked, puzzled, but Leonard silently opened the door, feeling an odd sense of déjà vu as if he frequently opened and closed this door in the same manner.

Creeeak...

The room revealed was modest.

Simple furniture including a small bed, and the walls were adorned with clean, pastel-toned wallpaper that conveyed a modern sensibility.

"That wallpaper..."

A strange memory flashed through his mind.

The faint warmth in his hands, and those eyes looking up at him.

Leonard stared down at his hands with a dazed expression.

Was it a misconception? He felt certain he had strangled someone here...

Noticing his unusual demeanor, Romaine opened his mouth with concern.

"In the labyrinth, numerous thoughts and sentiments linger, and sometimes they can affect people. But those sentiments surely aren't yours, Mr. Leo. This is your first time here, isn't it?"

"...Right. It must be."

It seems he confused it with one of the hideaways in Rohan.

Leonard tilted his head, puzzled, and closed the door.

Upon returning to the imperial palace, Seongjin immediately sought out the Holy Emperor's office.

Despite his siblings and Masain insisting he should rest, Seongjin persuaded them with the following argument:

"I'll just go to father and ask him to fix it! Won't that solve all the problems? I won't have to delay urgent reports, and I can continue training tomorrow without needing to rest!"

Of course, Seongjin thought he was relatively fine, so this was just an excuse to not miss out on his training.

Fortunately, this persuasion was quite successful.

"Is that so?"

"Indeed, that makes sense."

"Well, if it's His Majesty the Holy Emperor."

Yes, the Holy Emperor's cheat key is always an invincible logic.

Thus, when Seongjin arrived at the imperial palace, despite the late hour, the Holy Emperor's office was brightly lit as usual.

Perhaps due to working late, the Holy Emperor appeared slightly tired as he greeted Seongjin. He looked at Seongjin with an inscrutable gaze for a moment before slowly calling out to him.

"Morres."

"Yes."

"Morres."

"...Yes?"

"....."

As Seongjin responded again, puzzled, the Holy Emperor remained silent for a while.

Just when Seongjin was starting to worry if something was amiss, the Holy Emperor suddenly gestured for him to come closer.

As expected, a strong light poured down from above, and Seongjin could feel his condition improving instantly.

Had the Holy Emperor seen something lacking even after Logan's treatment?

Moreover, the difference in condition before and after the treatment was distinctly noticeable.

Indeed, the Holy Emperor's power is said to be different from ordinary divine energy.

"Sit down."

"Yes."

Seongjin sat down opposite, slightly amazed.

Then, as if waiting for the right moment, Louis served tea at the perfect temperature.

It seems this person had anticipated my arrival.

'Well, if he roughly knows, it'll be easier to report...'

As he thought this and was about to take a sip of tea,

"So, did you have a good trip to the labyrinth?"

Seongjin almost spit out his tea in surprise.

"...You knew?"

As Seongjin asked with a wary face, the Holy Emperor tilted his head slightly.

"I thought that's what you came to report. Was it supposed to be a secret?"

"No, it's not that..."

Sweating, Seongjin replied.

Of course, it was difficult to keep anything hidden from this person, but he had hoped to avoid mentioning the dangerous part of his trip to the labyrinth.

He had intended to report about the suspicions surrounding the Scarcepino family and the true identity of that Riccardo fellow.

And, while he was at it, to inquire about the Oracle.

"I apologize. It seems I've caused unnecessary worry again."

As Seongjin bowed his head in apology, the Holy Emperor responded with a serene face.

"No, it's alright. I wasn't overly worried. You once told me you had swiftly dealt with the monsters in the labyrinth."

"...Excuse me?"

Confused, Seongjin asked again, and the Holy Emperor's eyes deepened as if recalling something.

"Yes. I wonder how I could have forgotten that until now. You had clearly told me so."

".....?"

And the corners of the Holy Emperor's mouth lifted faintly.

"You said that you have become quite strong now, so I shouldn't worry about anything and just trust you."

Seongjin couldn't help but ask again.

"...Did I really say that?"

To believe me just because I've become stronger?

When did I ever?

Could it be, the old reckless Morres?

His mind was baffled, but the Holy Emperor nodded.

"Yes, you did. And you also mentioned there was something to be found there."

Something to be found.

Seongjin had a guess about what that might be.

But, that's not what's important right now.

"When did I ever say such a thing? Are you referring to before I fell ill with the fever?"

At that, the Holy Emperor closed his lips and cast his gaze down to the teacup before him.

The faint smile that had been playing on his lips disappeared, and the somewhat buoyant air settled into calm.

"....."

Seongjin was beginning to understand.

When the Holy Emperor is sparing with his words, it involves the future. That means it's something that hasn't happened yet, but why does he seem to dwell on the past like this?

Could it be that the occasional phrases from Sister Amelia are influenced by the Holy Emperor?

"...So, did you find what you were looking for?"

After a while, the Holy Emperor, breaking the silence, asked an unexpected question.

Seongjin, giving up on getting any more answers, silently pulled out two small accessories from his pocket.

The summoning amulet from Nebraska.

And a small pendant with a broken jewel, found in the dungeon.

* * *

Right after obtaining the amulet in the labyrinth.

A selection window popped up before Seongjin's eyes.

☐List of Souls Available for Summoning 2/4☐

☐1. ☐☐☐☐ (Inactive)☐

☐2. ☐☐☐ ☐☐ (Inactive)☐

☐3. Hayes Martin (Active)☐

☐4. Red (Active)☐

☐Would you like to select a soul?☐

☐Accept / Decline☐

Faced with the unexpected text, Seongjin couldn't even think about making a choice and just stared blankly at the words.

'Summoning a soul?'

If this was a game world, such an item wouldn't be incomprehensible.

But wait, it makes sense for the demon lord to be listed, but why is this one on the list too?

Hayes Martin.

A remnant of the dark cult that had wreaked havoc on the Heresy Tribunal before meeting his demise.

[Why? What is it? What's going on? Huh?]

As Seongjin stared blankly into space, the demon lord grew curious and urged for an answer.

'...Can't this guy see it?'

But then again, a Demon King as a summon?

I understand the concept, but I can't quite predict the outcome.

'It feels a bit uneasy to test this out on the Demon King right away...'

Maybe I should try summoning Hayes first? Just as he was considering this.

"Ugh....."

A soft groan next to him snapped Seongjin back to reality.

Ah, right, this isn't the time for this.

Seongjin hastily shoved the amulet back into his pocket and, with a slight limp, approached Orden.

"Hey, are you alright?"

Seongjin asked cautiously, looking at Orden who was embedded a good inch into the stone wall, bleeding profusely.

Then, the man gave a visibly frustrated response.

"Do I really look alright to you right now?"

"No. Sorry."

Seongjin apologized sincerely.

Indeed, the impact was so severe that it wouldn't have been surprising if his spine had shattered on the spot.

For an ordinary person, it would have been instant death. It was fortunate that he was an aura user close to an advanced knight, which probably saved his life.

Careful not to twist his cervical spine, Seongjin slowly helped him up from the wall.

".....!"

Orden grimaced and held his breath as he was moved.

His face rapidly paled as moving seemed to exacerbate the pain dramatically. It was commendable that he didn't scream out in agony.

After enduring the pain for a while, sweating profusely and groaning, Orden finally caught his breath and asked.

"So... what do we do now, Your Highness?"

"Well, I think if we go through there, we might be able to get back to where we came from."

Seongjin pointed towards the multicolored light pillar in the center of the dungeon, and surprisingly, Orden didn't question further and simply followed his lead.

Perhaps he thought since he was swept here by a whirlwind, there might be a chance to return through the light, albeit vaguely.

"This guy, the more I see, the more he seems surprisingly simple."

As Seongjin carefully supported him towards the portal.

Suddenly, something on the opposite side of the dungeon caught Seongjin's eye. A figure was slumped against the wall, leaning slightly.

Feeling Seongjin's startle, Orden followed his gaze and upon spotting it, opened his mouth.

"Your Highness. That's what I mentioned earlier. The corpse of an imperial guard knight."

"....."

"Would you like to take a closer look?"

Somehow, Seongjin felt compelled to do so.

He set Orden down on the ground and approached the corpse.

Was it an imperial palace knight? But the uniform on the body was slightly different from what Seongjin knew.

While the overall color scheme was somewhat similar and the knightly emblem was clearly embossed.

"Is this an imperial guard's uniform? It looks different?"

The current imperial guard uniform was a long coat with three splits. But this was a short, unsplit coat.

Then, Orden nodded.

"Yes. It's probably a fashion from over 10 years ago. Due to complaints about it being uncomfortable while riding, it was changed to the current design."

So, this body must be at least over 10 years old.

But for such an age, the decomposition doesn't seem too advanced. Is it because the inside of the dungeon is cool and dry?

'Or maybe it's just because this place is closer to a game dimension.'

Regardless, the body was that of a fairly robust man.

Considering he was dead in what appeared to be a boss room, one might think he fell to that giant Lycanthrope, but his sword was still neatly sheathed.

It likely means he didn't die in combat.

Overall, the body seemed quite intact.

Wondering why he died, upon closer inspection, a small metal rod-like object was found piercing exactly through the center of the corpse's Adam's apple.

'Wait, isn't this... a letter opener?'

An imperial palace knight killed by such a small, blunt knife?

Seongjin was baffled, but no other significant marks were found on the body.

The only peculiar thing was a piece of cloth tightly clenched in the corpse's right hand.

Curiosity piqued, Seongjin carefully pulled at it, revealing it to be a torn sleeve.

Judging by its size, it seemed to belong to a child's garment, finished with delicate embroidery at the hem and adorned with a rather luxurious button.

And then, with a clatter, a necklace hidden within the sleeve rolled out. It was a necklace adorned with a small gem shaped like a clear droplet.

It shone with a radiant crimson, quite beautiful to behold, but regrettably, the gem was completely split in half.

'...Huh?'

But this gem. It felt oddly familiar, was it just his imagination?

[Seongjin!]

Suddenly, the Demon King shouted sharply.

[We need to hurry! Something's off with the portal!]

Seongjin quickly turned around, and sure enough, the multicolored light pillar was becoming blurry and flickering.

[The gate is becoming unstable. It might close soon!]

'What?!'

Indeed, it might be too much to expect an interdimensional gate to remain stable for long.

So, Seongjin impulsively grabbed the necklace and, supporting Orden, dashed towards the portal.

* * *

"This item was obtained after defeating a monster in the labyrinth."

Seongjin pushed the amulet from Nebraska towards the Holy Emperor while explaining.

Initially, due to the confusion and the consecutive pop-up text windows upon touching it, he hadn't had a proper look.

Now, upon closer inspection, it was quite a finely crafted item. The flat metal plate was densely filled with intricately carved reliefs.

There were also small empty notches here and there, presumably once adorned with gems.

The Holy Emperor picked up the amulet and carefully examined it.

'Hopefully, no text windows pop up suddenly here.'

The initial test had already been conducted.

Curiously, when Seongjin took it out again upon returning to Delcross, it had become an ordinary ornament, unlike in the labyrinth where text windows would appear.

Perhaps because this place wasn't the Rule World but the Main World. If he had known, he might have tried summoning Priest Haze just for the sake of it.

However, the amulet seemed to appear somewhat different in the eyes of the Holy Emperor.

"This item adheres to the rules of the Imaginary World. It seems to require some special conditions to operate."

Ah, so this gentleman knew about other dimensions after all.

With that somewhat unsurprising realization, the Holy Emperor returned the amulet to Seongjin, continuing his thoughts.

"It seems to be an item that fundamentally alters the soul. It's undoubtedly valuable, but it would be wise to use it with caution."

That must mean he should keep it.

It seemed like a simple soul-summoning item at first, but to think it could cause fundamental changes.

It was indeed a great fortune that he hadn't experimented with the Demon King.

"And this is....."

Seongjin also pushed the broken necklace towards him, continuing.

It was a completely ruined trifle, but since it belonged to a royal guard, it seemed right to report it.

"It belonged to an imperial guard knight who died in the labyrinth. I ended up bringing it with me, somewhat inadvertently."

"....."

This time, the Holy Emperor didn't pick up the necklace. He just stared silently at the split gem with an inscrutable gaze.

Just as Seongjin was regretting showing it to him, the Holy Emperor uttered something unexpected.

"This belonged to your grandmother."

...What?

"Your grandmother gave it to me a long time ago. I always wondered where it had gone, it seems it ended up there."

Seongjin's eyes widened.

What did he say?

Wait, hold on? Then, the child's clothing that was with this pendant?

"Father, then is it possible that back there....."

Seongjin started to ask reflexively but had to trail off.

Because, true to form, the Holy Emperor had turned his gaze away and clamped his mouth shut again!

Father, are you really doing this?

Feeling frustrated, Seongjin gulped down his tea, and the Holy Emperor, in a dry tone, offered some praise.

"You said you had to find something important, and you indeed did. Well done."

But even as he said that, he made no move to touch the necklace himself.

Even though it was a relic of his mother?

"So what should I do with this now?"

"Keep it safe yourself. This is no ordinary item. Your grandmother was a very special person, and there must be a reason it has come into your possession."

A special person.

Suddenly, Riccardo's, no, Sigurd Sigurdson's words came to mind.

—"The Oracle of the previous era met a very lonely and tragic end. And the Oracle of this era was destined to meet the same fate."

(Chapter 132)

He had clearly referred to the Holy Emperor as the oracle of this generation.

That means.

"Grandmother... I mean, was my grandmother an oracle?"

At Seongjin's question, the Holy Emperor, who had been looking down and pondering for a moment, eventually nodded.

"Yes, there's no need to hesitate now. That was indeed the case."

The Holy Emperor's mother, Empress Bessheva II, was a woman from the Cornsheim clan.

Black hair and gray eyes. She passed on the characteristics of her clan to him in full.

From a very young age, she was aware that she was an oracle. However, knowing the weight of her prophecies, she kept this a secret from her clan until her death.

Therefore, the Cornsheim clan, oblivious to this fact, proceeded with her marriage to the Holy Emperor's family.

Had they known Empress Bessheva was an oracle, they would never have allowed the clan's treasure to be exposed to the outside world in such a manner.

But now, the clan has come to know.

What she was, and who the current oracle is.

"Then, is it no longer necessary to hide that fact?"

When Seongjin asked, the corner of the Holy Emperor's mouth twisted slightly.

"What would they do even if they knew? Who would dare."

That somewhat chilly smile.

Seongjin could easily guess the unsaid part of that statement.

Who would dare to coerce the current Holy Emperor into making prophecies?

"The jewel of that necklace serves as a milestone for the Oracle."

"A milestone?"

"Yes. It breaks and shatters, awakening the realization that this is not a prophecy, but reality."

The Holy Emperor did not deny being the Oracle and even went so far as to provide Seongjin with quite detailed explanations.

It was an unusual sight to behold.

"However, the fact that it remains in shape despite being broken suggests that its purpose has not yet been fully served. Its coming into your possession is likely no coincidence."

"That means..."

Seongjin paused for a moment before asking.

"Does that mean I am to be the next Oracle?"

"..."

The milestone of the Oracle must hold its meaning when in the hands of an Oracle.

The Holy Emperor gazed silently at Seongjin's face for a moment before nodding.

"...Yes. You must have heard it from him as well. That is indeed the case."

It seemed surprisingly straightforward for him.

Perhaps it was because Seongjin had already received a fair amount of information from Sigurd Sigurdson.

But to think that the reckless Morres could really be an Oracle?

How could a so-called prophet live such a reckless life without a care for the future?

"As you said, the storyteller of dimensions told me I am to be the next Oracle. But..."

Seongjin hesitated before continuing.

"As you know, I am different from who I was before the fever. I don't possess abilities like foresight."

I am not your real son. So, I'm probably not the Oracle.

But why would you, who know this best, entrust me with this jewel?

"Do you know this, Morres?"

The Holy Emperor looked at Seongjin with a deeper gaze.

"The Cornsheim clan possesses the eyes to see the truth. Many of them have the ability to foresee the future. Even if it's not a distinct foresight ability, they possess a kind of intuition to somewhat predict the future."

"..."

"In fact, it wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that the entire clan possesses the qualities of a prophet."

The entire clan as prophets? Then why is the Oracle so special among them?

Why could Morres, without any distinct foresight ability, surpass them to become the next Oracle?

"The most important quality for an Oracle is not foresight."

Seongjin blinked in surprise at this unexpected statement.

"Not foresight?"

"Yes. An Oracle is not one who sees the future, but one who lives through it. The path he contemplates and treads becomes the future he chooses."

It seems understandable, yet not quite.

Doesn't one need to foresee the future to make proper choices and live accordingly?

Then the Holy Emperor interlocked his fingers, appearing to organize his thoughts, before posing a question.

"Let's take an example. You've met him recently, right? Livga, the leader of the Arenja."

If he's referring to the time Seongjin was possessed by Commander Bruno.

"Yes, that's correct."

"Yes. He is quite adept at foresight. Apart from the occasional unnecessary actions, he can be considered quite capable."

Ah, so it seems.

Livga was cautious about being discovered by the Holy Emperor, but it turns out the Holy Emperor knew all along.

"So, how was it? Did his words seem helpful to you?"

"Hmm..."

If asked whether it was helpful, well, perhaps not so much?

Livga informed Seongjin that two of the missing people he was looking for were detained by the Milo trade association. He also advised meeting the Saintess before confronting Riccardo.

'Wait a minute.'

What was the information he provided again? Seongjin did instruct Dasha to keep an eye on them, but it wasn't information urgent enough to act upon immediately.

And what about his advice? Seongjin had ignored it, finding it bothersome, but then the Saintess unexpectedly sought him out without it being planned!

"...So, it really was utterly useless, wasn't it?"

As Seongjin expressed his astonishment, the Holy Emperor asked again.

"In living your life, do you need anything more than your own will?"

"..."

"Is it really that important whether you are the Oracle or not?"

At that question, Seongjin recalled something the Holy Emperor had said to him not long ago.

—"Do as you wish. If you seek to rectify such injustices, so it shall be." (Chapter 75)

Just do what you want.

What's important isn't seeing the future, but the will to live through the future.

This brought another question to Seongjin's mind.

"Then, why would the leader of Arenja go through such pointless efforts..."

Seongjin trailed off, furrowing his brows.

He claims to act on behalf of the Oracle. Surely, he must be aware of these things as well.

Yet, why would he go to the lengths of possessing Commander Bruno to contact Seongjin? His intentions seem quite peculiar.

Then, a fleeting silver glint passed through the Holy Emperor's eyes as he locked gazes with Seongjin.

"There's one thing we need to clarify first. Why didn't you act on the information he provided and investigate the trade association?"

"Uh, that's because..."

Perhaps stirring up the Milo trade association in search of some insignificant missing persons would bury more critical matters even deeper?

"Yes, that would be the case."

The Holy Emperor nodded, continuing the conversation.

"Consider another point. Let's assume you followed his advice and sought to meet the Saintess. How do you think you would have approached it?"

"Hmm. I probably would have tried sending a letter to arrange a meeting?"

"Indeed. But if you had done that, do you really think the Saintess, who is currently declining all invitations from the imperial court due to her wariness, would have agreed to meet you so easily?"

"Uh..."

"Did Livga, truly not know this? Do you think he genuinely wanted you to meet the Saintess beforehand and thus gave that advice?"

A chilling realization washed over Seongjin.

As his expression turned stern, the Holy Emperor calmly continued his explanation.

"Remember this well, my son. The Cornsheim clan are the most untrustworthy beings in this world. I keep them close in the imperial court and make use of their talents because they are as useful as they are dangerous."

"..."

"The words spoken by the Cornsheim clan to anyone are all manifestations of their will to predict and alter the future. Therefore, everything they say carries a clear intent, and without exception, it's all deceptive."

The Cornsheim clan are all liars.

That's what the Holy Emperor said, in a voice so calm and even that it almost felt like anger.

Suddenly, Seongjin's gaze fell upon the broken pendant lying on the table.

But Father, what about Grandmother?

What about your mother, who was from the Cornsheim clan?

* * *

"I want to go home!"

With a booming shout, the hefty body of a Varsha warrior was thrown onto the sandy ground. Boom!

A moment of silence.

Then, a massive roar erupted.

Woaaaah!

"Is that Owen? Quite the fighter for an Imperial."

"He's certainly a formidable warrior! But wasn't it said that today is his first time at Varsha-style wrestling?"

"What of it? He's undefeated so far! And his next opponent is last year's wrestling champion, Azjatur!"

The youths of the Volanta tribe exchanged excited words in an animated tone.

Caught up in the heat of the wrestling ring, their attention was focused on a particularly standout man in the center of the sandy arena. Among the sizable Varsha warriors, he was a young man of tall stature who was in no way inferior.

Owen of Delcross.

The son of the tribal chief and a formidable warrior of the battlefield, he was fundamentally different from the warriors of Delcross, who were like sandmen.

Unlike the cowards of the Empire, wrapped tight in hard iron armor like turtles, the young man always moved freely across the battlefield in light armor.

Contrary to the empire's young soldiers with their short, baby-like cropped hair, the young man rode his horse with long hair flowing behind him, much like a Varsha warrior.

Even now, tied up tightly, his bright, tawny hair was adorned with several cormorant feathers, each symbolizing his splendid battle achievements.

"Can you believe that he accumulated such battle honors in just a few days? He's an excellent warrior! No matter how strong the enemy, he never backs down!"

True to those words, Owen's unyielding eyes were steadily fixed on the fierce-looking Varsha warrior who had just stepped into the arena.

And then, the resounding cry echoed once more.

"I want to go hooome!"

With a powerful throw, the previous year's wrestling champion was spectacularly slammed to the ground.

Boom!

Woaaaaah!

The cheers pouring out solely for him vigorously shook the cool air of the beach.

+ + +

[Special Quest – Achieve more than 5 victories in the beach wrestling tournament! (Completed)]

[Quest Grade: B +]

[Summary: You have effectively impressed your toughness upon all members of the Volanta tribe. This has earned you the favor of the aggressive youths and some of the stubborn elders. This minor achievement will serve as a foundation for further solidifying alliances with the Volanta. Your record of complete victories beyond 5 wins is commendable. If not for the somewhat lacking battle cry, you would undoubtedly have received a higher completion grade, perhaps by two levels. As a token of this slight regret, a bonus cash reward is provided.]

+ + +

Receiving a bonus was rare enough, but a mere 20 cash seemed rather stingy.

Owen pursed his lips at the thought, but he dared not voice his opinion. After all, there had been instances where the system, seemingly taking offense, had reduced rewards by up to 50%.

[Main Stream 2 – (Progress 19%)]

Nonetheless, this quest had significantly increased the overall progress.

As Owen wiped the sweat off his brow and sighed, his friend Chikundanka[1] approached him.

"You were truly magnificent today, Owen."

"Well, it's all thanks to you for properly teaching me the wrestling techniques beforehand."

Owen replied with a broad smile.

As he turned towards Chikundanka, the sole crimson jewel hanging around his neck, exposed due to his wrestling attire, sparkled and shone brightly.

Chikundanka's eyes lit up with interest at the sight.

"Is that stone some kind of talisman protecting you? You always wear it."

"Ah, this?"

Owen lifted the necklace to show it off, grinning.

"Pretty cool, isn't it? I heard it was a gift from my godfather on the day I was born."

"The chieftain of Delcross? Then it must indeed be no ordinary item. It makes sense that you always carry it."

Chikundanka nodded in understanding.

"But I'm curious about something. What's that chant you always shout?"

"...Haha."

Owen laughed awkwardly, scratching his cheek.

"That? It's the Delcross victory chant. Quite magical, really."

Yes. At least for Owen, it was an invincible battle cry.

He was getting so homesick for the Holy Emperor and his siblings that he was even starting to miss that reckless Morres.

"Looks like all the warriors are already gathered. Since we've caught the chieftain's black sheep today, you should rest up and join the feast soon."

Chikundanka patted his shoulder and turned away.

After waving back lightly, Owen checked the small window that persisted in his right field of vision with a slightly gloomy face.

[Main Stream 1 – Defend the Southern Front! (Completed)]

[Main Stream 2 – Form an Alliance with the Volanta Tribe! (Progress 19%)]

Truth be told, regardless of quest achievements, Owen really wanted to return to Delcross.

But here lay the cruelty of the system. It subtly revealed subsequent quests that Owen couldn't ignore.

[Main Stream 3 – Rescue the Holy ☐!]

[Main Stream 4 – Rescue the Holy ☐!]

[Main Stream 5 – Defeat the ☐☐☐ ☐☐!]

Owen wasn't a fool; he knew what those blanks implied—either the Holy Emperor or the Saintess.

And it was unlikely that a quest to rescue the same person would appear twice.

In other words, the more Owen delayed, the greater the risk to both the Holy Emperor and the Saintess. How could he possibly return to Delcross with peace of mind under these circumstances!

"Damn it! I miss Sisle! I miss the kids! I miss Father!"

Under the star-filled beach sky, poised to spill over, the mournful cry of a young man unable to return echoed long and far.

T/N:

1. First mentioned in Chapter 120[↔]

"Indeed, Your Majesty mentioned so..."

Commander Bruno stroked his mustache with a troubled expression.

"I had simply thought His Majesty gathered psychics to form a useful secret organization. I never imagined the reason for organizing and keeping Arenja close was such."

The next day, Seongjin briefed Commander Bruno about the conversation he had with the Holy Emperor the day before.

Since he was also close to Seongjin, he thought it necessary to have a more accurate understanding of the organization he was a part of.

Of course, he left out slightly sensitive topics like the Oracle or the sarcophagus of the previous empress.

"His Majesty never quite reveals his intentions clearly. So that's what you were thinking."

Masain was also present here.

Feeling left out in recent conversations with Commander Bruno, it was decided to openly share everything with everyone. However, Masain seemed more anxious than pleased.

"When I was the captain of the guard, I also didn't properly know about the organization Arenja. I only vaguely guessed that something existed. Is it really okay to inform me of such critical secrets now?"

This was a noticeably cautious attitude, different from the past.

"What are you saying? It's just that there hasn't been a proper opportunity until now. I'm actually embarrassed for not having discussed it sooner."

Initially, Masain seemed to regard Seongjin as a child who needed his sincere care. After the boy's near-death experience at the Diggory estate, he became frantic over not being able to control Seongjin's every move.

However, after experiencing various events recently, it felt like he was trying to find an appropriate distance, acknowledging that Seongjin wasn't just a child.

'It seems he's realized I'm not just a kid anymore. It's probably safe to say he's started to trust me to some extent.'

Then, the Demon King snickered.

[Or maybe he's given up entirely? You did give him a hard time.]

'...Shut up!'

The fact that it hurts quite a bit is irritating. It's like he's hitting my nerve.

Seongjin managed his expression and added,

"I believe it's only natural to consult you first on such important matters. You are the head of security at Pearl Palace and my swordsmanship instructor, aren't you? So, I hope you will continue to support me as you have been."

At that, Masain grimaced, making a strange expression before slowly turning his head to the side. Seeing his eyes slightly reddened, it seemed he was quite moved.

'This man is also unexpectedly sensitive...'

It's not just Arenja. Seongjin was thinking of soon informing Masain and Commander Bruno about Dasha and formally introducing her to them.

She has been visiting Pearl Palace frequently, and the ones she is most nervous about are Commander Bruno, a former Decalon Knight, and Sir Masain, a senior knight.

The commander is already aware that someone has been sneaking into Seongjin's room, and lately, Sir Masain seems to be catching on to something as well.

In that case, instead of wasting time on unnecessary probing, it would be better to be open and get along. Seongjin felt that these three would continue to be together for a long time.

"So, what should we do now, Your Highness?" Commander Bruno asked with a serious face. "Given that we cannot fully trust Arenja, wouldn't it be better for me to withdraw from there now?"

"Hmm? No, Commander." Seongjin shook his head. "Just because we can't fully trust Arenja doesn't mean they aren't useful. And the position I've offered you remains a sweet deal."

Everyone knows a sword is a weapon.

Whether one gets cut by the blade or wields it properly as a weapon entirely depends on the user.

"...So?"

"If you have no particular desire to return to the knighthood, I'd be grateful if you continued to play the role of Arenja's salary thief and stayed by my side. There's a good chance we'll need to cooperate with Arenja at some point, and above all, I really do enjoy the tea you make."

Indeed, at some point, Seongjin had come to appreciate the aroma of tea. This was a significant development compared to the days of surviving on calorie-dense preserved foods.

This was all thanks to Chief Chamberlain Louis and Commander Bruno.

Their skill in making delicious tea was so renowned that even the Holy Emperor, who rarely touched food, was often seen contemplating a cup of tea.

At that, Commander Bruno looked quite proud.

"It's truly an honor, Your Highness."

No, a former commander of the knights shouldn't be so pleased about being acknowledged for his tea-making skills.

As the warm atmosphere continued for a while, Masain's expression suddenly darkened as if he had thought of something.

"What's wrong? Is there something bothering you, Sir Masain?"

"...Indeed, there is, Your Highness."

After some hesitation, Masain cautiously began to speak.

"This goes back to my childhood, when I used to visit my uncle, His Majesty, before he ascended to the throne..."

And what he revealed was quite a heavy story.

"I'm only saying this now, but back then, His Majesty didn't have a strong standing within the palace. He was always at risk of assassination, and the previous emperor paid no attention to his son."

Poison in every meal was the norm, and it seems there were even a few instances where he was openly attacked by his own knights. The more one hears about how a young child survived in such an environment, the more astonishing it seems.

The precarious position of the Holy Emperor at the time was partly due to his older siblings, who had already reached adulthood and solidified their own power bases.

But fundamentally, the issue was the origin of the former Empress. It was because he bore the bloodline of the Cornsheim clan, which was ostracized and considered ominous.

And within the palace, disrespectful individuals would openly call the young Holy Emperor 'the unpleasant Cornsheim' or 'the unlucky Cornsheim.'

"...What does that mean?"

"Yes, His Majesty said all Cornsheims are liars. But thinking about it, isn't it true that His Majesty also seldom speaks on personal matters outside of official duties?"

Ah, Seongjin seemed to understand what Masain was concerned about.

"Could it be that His Majesty considers himself as part of the Cornsheim, in a negative light?"

"....."

"I've been worried about this for a while now."

"Hmm....."

And then, the three, including Seongjin, simultaneously fell silent with serious expressions.

The atmosphere in the drawing room became so gloomy that Edith, who happened to walk in humming a tune, flinched and looked around cautiously.

"What's wrong with everyone... Is there something bothering you, Your Highness?"

In Edith's hands, worriedly asking, was a bouquet of bright yellow flowers.

"No, it's nothing. But what's with the flowers?"

Curious about the somewhat sloppy packaging compared to the usual ones sent by Chloe, Seongjin asked, to which Edith responded with a beaming smile.

"The priests are distributing these flowers all around the palace. They're Golden Crocuses. Today, after a long time, there's an event to commemorate the first Holy Emperor."

After having her tea-making duties usurped by Commander Bruno, this carefree lady did not reflect or strive to improve but instead joyfully roamed around, enjoying her newfound leisure time.

"Was there such an event?"

"Oh? Did you really not know, Your Highness?"

Edith shrugged her shoulders while arranging the flowers in a vase.

"The outside is in a complete festive mood right now. Today is the day the new Saintess is going to reveal the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus."

* * *

Delcross's first Holy Emperor, Cardmos Klein.

He was the divine representative who founded the millennium holy nation on this land and a demigod who transcended humanity, living for over 300 years.

Fitting the title of demigod, Cardmos maintained his youth throughout his life.

Even after his soul left his body, his physical form did not wither, appearing as if he was merely sleeping.

The proof of this holy miracle was enshrined in a splendid sarcophagus and carefully placed in the basement of Saint Bastian Church.

"Today is truly a glorious day, Lady Seo Yi-seo. The ceremony to reveal the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus is being held for the first time in nearly 20 years!"

While adjusting Seo Yi-seo's attire, Sister Electra excitedly chattered.

"What does that mean? It means you are an incredible Saintess, Lady Seo Yi-seo! Even Princess Sisle has not yet been granted permission to reveal the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus!"

At those words, Seo Yi-seo, already full of pride, narrowed her eyes sharply.

"What? Are you trying to say that Princess Sisle is inferior to me?"

"...What?"

Taken aback by the unexpected response, Sister Electra stuttered in confusion.

"No, not at all. Saintess, I just meant..."

"I can never forgive such irreverence! Be more careful in the future!"

Humph! Snorting in disdain, Seo Yi-seo left the frozen Sister behind and moved on with a chilly demeanor.

She was already in a foul mood from being dragged around for special masses and event preparations since the morning.

'Because I can't go meet Princess Sisle!'

Even as she was swept up in a grand procession led by Archbishop Wesker and other high-ranking clergy, her dissatisfaction only grew.

'Because I can't go meet Princess Sisle!'

Muttering to herself, she suddenly realized she was standing alone in a wide corridor, a large and ornate sarcophagus sitting starkly before her.

Seo Yi-seo blinked.

She remembered hearing from that writer what the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus was, but now that she was alone with it, a part of her heart suddenly sank.

She had to be in the same room as the corpse inside the sarcophagus?

"Wait a minute..."

As Seo Yi-seo panicked, the door closed harshly behind her with a creak and a thud.

"The spirit of the first Holy Emperor is said to bestow blessings, but what if there are really ghosts?"

Having only heard of the sarcophagus as a treasure of the Holy Emperor's family, Seo Yi-seo only then felt a chill run through her body, realizing the full implications of being alone with the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus.

And soon after, a voice that seemed to shake her soul resonated strongly in her mind.

[Despicable. That one, truly despicable.]

".....?"

[Unchangingly audacious, perhaps. That child has always been like this. Despite my clear signs of whom I desire, my call has been ignored twice already.]

And then.

Suddenly, a man shimmering with light appeared out of thin air and lightly descended upon the sarcophagus.

".....!?"

For a moment, Seo Yi-seo thought she was beholding a god.

Everything about the translucent man shimmered in resplendent gold.

His hair was like strands of spun gold, and his eyes shone like the sun, golden and radiant. A halo of gold enveloped his entire being.

Even the robes he wore were adorned with elaborate golden patterns.

His presence was overwhelmingly majestic, an undeniable fragment of divinity.

It was as shocking as the first time she had seen the Holy Emperor.

As she stood stiffly, staring up in a daze, the man tilted his head and mused.

[And to think, the vessel sent to me is so flawed, how shall I receive it?]

"What, what?"

Not only was she being treated like an object, but she was also being deemed defective?

Fear was one thing, but anger was another!

Seo Yi-seo couldn't help but bristle.

"Excuse me? What did you just say? Flawed? Hey! Just because you're a demigod, does that make it okay? Huh?"

[Ha. How utterly foolish...]

The man chuckled as if amused by her ignorance.

[Fortunately, you have not yet become a puppet, but still, such a soul with too many defects.]

"...What do you mean by that?"

[Exactly as I said. Tell me, woman, were you always such a flounder, unable to discern right from wrong, always so impetuous?]

"What....."

[Do you even properly remember when you came to this world?]

The man, observing Seo Yi-seo rendered speechless, slightly curled the corners of his mouth.

[Well, it doesn't matter anyway, false Saintess. Even if there are some flaws, you are still a vessel capable of containing something. I shall willingly accept you as the new Saintess.]

The man's golden pupils slit vertically and narrowed, like a predator spotting its prey.

Seo Yi-seo instinctively felt a sense of danger and stepped back.

"What are you planning to do to me?"

[Isn't it obvious? Since that child won't come here to meet me, I must leave this place myself.]

A hand, glowing with a golden aura, slowly reached out towards her.

[Be at ease, woman. I shall make good use of you. For now, rush to the palace and give that despicable one, who lacks respect for ancestors, a piece of your mind. That will satisfy me.]

And in an instant, darkness engulfed her vision.

The entire city of Delcross is blanketed in yellow crocuses, commemorating the first Holy Emperor.

It's the first such celebration in nearly 20 years since it was last held; the Festival of the First Holy Emperor.

The citizens of the Imperial Capital relished the long-awaited festive atmosphere, lauding the imperial family for bringing unprecedented prosperity to Delcross.

However, at the same time, a heavy atmosphere enveloped the Princesses' Palace, the Silver Rose Palace. Unexpectedly, Princesses Amelia and Sisle were subjected to a sudden prohibition on leaving the palace.

Deprived of her scheduled fencing lesson, Amelia was profoundly disheartened. But her disappointment paled in comparison to her younger sister's.

Sisle, who had been crying since morning, had eyes swollen and red, despite her remarkable ability to heal.

"Cheer up, Sisle. There's always a reason behind Imperial Father's decisions."

"But what could that reason be? I understand being barred from the Holy Emperor's celebration, but why am I also forbidden from attending the special mass?"

"That's..."

"If there's a valid reason for all this, why hasn't Imperial Father explained anything to me?"

"..."

Amelia was at a loss for words; she didn't have any more insight than her sister.

However, she faintly recalled a passing comment made by Leonard before her regression.

"Do you really think your father can now halt Rohan's unbridled ambitions? A man so bound by restrictions in his actions and words, can he truly persuade other monarchs to stand with us?"

'Restrictions...'

Amelia remembered the complicated expression on the Holy Emperor's face as he silently gazed at her, following her declaration to marry Leonard.

Reflecting on it now, it seemed that at the time, the Holy Emperor had foreseen that the union between Leonard and her could lead to an unfortunate end in some way.

Hence, he was busy tightening her security by significantly increasing the number of knights guarding her and frequently issuing orders prohibiting her from leaving. He did not shy away from worsening relations with Rohan, even attempting to banish the prince from Delcross without any justifiable reason.

Had Amelia not shown an extreme sensitivity to being confined, the Holy Emperor might have truly kept her locked in the Silver Rose Palace until Leonard was expelled.

And that slight gap led to irreversible consequences.

Leonard's loyal servant, Romaine, using a cunning strategy unheard of in this world, managed to secretly whisk Amelia away.

"Sister, it's not too late. Let's return to Delcross together. If you knew how Imperial Father is faring now, you couldn't possibly stay here."

At her wedding banquet held in Rohan, Logan, who had come from Delcross with a tremendous dowry, spoke with a somber expression, words that still linger in her memory.

"Sisle, do you remember?"

Amelia continued, gently stroking her sister's soft silver hair.

"In the time of our ancestors, it was an annual event for every member of the Holy Emperor's family to pay homage to the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus. The entire family would gather before the sarcophagus to pray for the long-standing glory of the Holy Emperor's family and the endless prosperity of Delcross."

Sisle stopped her sobbing and listened intently to that affectionate voice.

"However, at some point, our ancestors ceased the homage ceremony, and coincidentally or not, Delcross faced a period of decline in the following years. Are you aware of the incident when demonkind hid within the capital? It was then that our ancestor passed away."

"Why? Why did our ancestor stop the ceremony?"

"Well, there's no record of their reasoning, so we can't know for sure now. But my guess is, maybe after that point, paying homage to the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus lost its significance."

"Lost its significance?"

"Yes. For instance, perhaps the blessing of the first Holy Emperor suddenly vanished?"

This was like a hunch she occasionally had.

The fact that the homage ceremony hadn't been held for 20 years suggested there might be a significant issue with it.

"Or maybe the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus have become something dangerous?"

Otherwise, why would the current Holy Emperor prohibit the homage by the family members?

Hearing this, Sisle widened her eyes and whispered softly to Amelia.

"Sister, do you realize the gravity of what you've just said? The clerics of the Orthodox Church would not take kindly to such words."

"Heh, is that so?"

"Of course! We must not deny the miracles of the first Holy Emperor. All the priests of the Orthodox Church can feel it, you know? The holy aura that emanates from the underground where the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus are enshrined."

Sisle said this and fiddled with the pink rabbit eye patch around her neck.

"And if there really was a problem, His Majesty wouldn't have just sent Lady Seo Yi-seo there."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. She is the most important person in this world and will always be under His Majesty's protection."

"...Is that so?"

Feeling an unusual presence, Amelia, whose senses had become more acute since she began practicing aura manipulation, lifted her head. She sensed a large group, likely knights, approaching the palace.

Shortly after, Mirabel, Amelia's personal maid, who also sensed the unrest, peeked outside the window and exclaimed in surprise.

"What's all this commotion?"

"What's the matter, Mirabel?"

"What could it be? Lady Amelia, the Order of Saint Aurelion knights are outside the palace."

Amelia and Sisle hurried to the terrace.

True to Mirabel's words, a large assembly of paladins had gathered, encircling the Silver Rose Palace.

Instead of their usual ceremonial armors, they were donned in full battle gear, a rare sight.

They were clad in shining silver plate armors, holding large silver shields emblazoned with red swords.

The most formidable shield of the Holy Emperor, the emblematic armament of the Order of Saint Aurelion.

"What in the world is happening?"

As Amelia and Sisle stood side by side, gazing at the scene, a familiar voice came from behind them.

"Do not be alarmed, Princess Amelia, Princess Sisle. The situation will be under control shortly."

A knight, head and shoulders taller than the rest, the Vice-Captain of the Order of Saint Aurelion, Francis, entered the reception room in full armor.

He placed a hand over his heart, bowing politely to the two.

"I apologize for not informing you in advance. This is merely a precautionary measure by His Majesty's command; please, do not be overly concerned."

Indeed, the figure of Commander Katrina, leading the knights, was visible. Her presence indicated that all this was under the Holy Emperor's directive.

Next to Dame Katrina stood an exorcist clad in somber attire, a familiar figure to Amelia from her visits to Morres. It was, if she recalled correctly, Dame Sharon of the Monster Special Task Force.

"Now is the time."

As the inquisitor, who had been staring blankly into space, spoke up, Katrina nodded and stepped forward.

"Form the third-grade demonkind defensive formation! All knights, to your positions!"

At Commander Katrina's command, the paladins efficiently arranged themselves into formation, creating a sharp, spike-shaped perimeter around the Silver Rose Palace.

Finally, with a resonant thud, Katrina, standing firm in the center of the formation and slamming her shield into the ground, took her stance facing the main palace.

She looked every bit the iron shield of the Holy Emperor, as reliable and steadfast as ever.

And then,

"Deploy the Granus Type-2 Formation!"

With her shout, beams of holy light spread out in unison, unfolding a vast sacred barrier around the Silver Rose Palace.

* * *

Recently, Archbishop Wesker realized that his white hair was noticeably increasing.

As if worrying about the gray plague for weeks wasn't enough, he now had to deal with the Holy Emperor's command to sanctify a woman he had never heard of before. And once he did elevate her to sainthood, this Seo Yi-seo turned out to be quite the handful.

She was lackadaisical in her doctrinal studies and half-hearted in special masses.

Her main activity seemed to be following Princess Sisle around all day.

Even now, during the important homage ceremony held for the first time in nearly 20 years, she was absent-mindedly lost in thought.

"Are you listening, Saintess?"

"Ah, yes, yes. I just need to go and receive the blessing, right? Yeah, yeah."

"....."

Despite repeated explanations about the ceremony, this was the kind of response he got. It was clear to anyone that this woman was far from normal.

Seo Yi-seo, for her part, seemed to finally snap to attention once she entered the corridor where the Holy Emperor's Sarcophagus were enshrined.

"Wait a moment..."

With a heavy thud, the doors firmly closed, and Wesker watched with a worried gaze.

Her flustered appearance until the very end made him wonder if she could truly receive the blessing, even if the First Holy Emperor were to bestow mercy upon her.

Despite the Holy Emperor's command, Wesker couldn't help but worry if this was all too hasty.

After all, it was unprecedented for someone outside the Holy Emperor family, without the mark of sainthood, to undergo the homage ceremony.

However, when Seo Yi-seo emerged from the doors shortly after, Wesker sighed in relief.

It was proof that she had indeed received the blessing of the First Holy Emperor. Her eyes shone with a brilliant golden light, looking directly at Wesker.

An immensely strong and sacred aura cascaded from her like a waterfall. All the clergy observing the ceremony from outside were overwhelmed and bowed their heads in unison.

And then,

[I shall go to the Imperial Palace directly. Let no one follow me.]

A voice that seemed to shake the soul resounded deeply in their minds, issuing that command.

* * *

The main palace of the Imperial Palace was empty, not a single guard in sight, having been cleared out since morning.

"I had thought you might come here, but your predictability never ceases to amaze me."

The Holy Emperor spoke to a woman exuding a commanding presence upon boldly stepping into the office.

For the indomitable First Holy Emperor, also known as Cardmos, settling scores from the past five years of humiliation took precedence over any tactical advantage he owned. Nevertheless, the Holy Emperor had already made preparations for the possibility of Cardmos going directly to Sisle.

Then, Seo Yi-seo, or rather Cardmos, rebuked him with a dignified voice.

[You are arrogant, child! I showed you mercy and consideration, yet where have you cast aside the respect due to your ancestors!]

To which the Holy Emperor coldly retorted.

"Ancestors? Did you expect my respect after branding such a mark upon my child's body?"

[You insolent!]

Cardmos's displeasure was evident as his eyebrows twitched.

"Still so full of yourself, I see. Five years of penance were evidently not enough."

[What did you say? I deigned to look upon you with favor, and you dare...]

Cardmos growled, baring his teeth. Sparks seemed to fly from his vertically slit golden irises.

Previously, right after he left, the mark of sainthood appeared on Sisle's body.

However, his audacious descendant before him preposterously sealed his soul in the church's crypt without a word. And now, this same descendant even had the gall to mock him, suggesting his penance was still insufficient.

With a thunderous roar, the main palace trembled under the wrath of the enraged Cardmos.

The doors to the terrace rattled as if they might fall off, and documents fluttered down as office furnishings crashed to the floor.

[She was a child doomed from the start!]

"....."

[Left alone, she would have eventually fallen prey to malevolent forces and perished! Out of pity, I sought to protect her from such fates!]

There was a mix of anger and a hint of injustice in his outburst.

Cardmos, having lived an unnaturally extended life, faced death as the First Holy Emperor due to the negative impact his continued existence would have on Delcross. Yet, his soul was still very much alive.

Occasionally, he would take over the bodies of his descendants or other saintesses to live anew.

At first glance, it seemed akin to the deeds of a demon usurping others' bodies, but he had his own set of rules.

He only chose bodies of descendants who were in precarious positions due to their lack of innate divine power or those destined to die soon. He also took over the bodies of women who, despite their kindness and willingness to serve others, were doomed to die as witches due to their extraordinary deeds.

The souls that encountered Cardmos's sanctity would soon fade away, but this did not concern him. Their lives were destined to end, and their souls were meant to vanish anyway.

Thus, 20 years ago, he marked a child doomed to die as a hostage in a foreign land. And five years ago, he marked another child thought to be at risk of being overtaken by malevolent forces, potentially becoming a threat to the empire.

In his way, it was a form of protection he could offer descendants facing a grim fate.

However,

"Do not bestow judgment with your limited insight. That shall never come to pass."

20 years ago,

The descendant who had narrowly escaped Cardmos's grasp was still alive, smirking as he spoke those words.

143

The reason Cardmos Klein decided to take his own life was quite simple.

It happened after he had been in power for over 300 years.

One day, as he was idly leaving the government meeting to his descendants, as he always did, he heard a commotion coming from the courtyard.

"How much longer must I live like this, following after that old man?"

"But Lord Remus, you know very well that you are the firstborn of the imperial family."

"That damned firstborn, firstborn!"

Cardmos, rarely hearing anyone raise their voice to him in the palace, listened with interest instead of annoyance.

Remus. That was the name of the clever descendant who had recently been presiding over the government meetings in his place.

He was quite old, but it seemed his vigor had not waned.

"If I fulfill my duty as the firstborn, will that monster finally die? Will he give up the throne?"

"Lord Remus! Calm yourself. Such talk could be misconstrued as treason!"

"Let them misinterpret it!"

The content of his descendant's words was more serious than he had thought.

But it was the desperate tone of his voice that struck him the most.

That day, the despair, anger, and resignation in his voice resonated deeply with Cardmos.

"Don't you understand, uncle? My great-grandfather, grandfather, and father all lived like this! They were crushed by the responsibility of being the firstborn, spending decades polishing a throne they could never inherit!"

"But Lord Remus..."

"And that monster's youngest son is only one year old! That suckling baby is now first in line to the throne! How much longer does he intend to live? Are my children, decades later, to be forced to watch their great-grandfather be born?"

His descendant was almost sobbing.

"Do you know how the officials look at me in the government meetings, uncle? What am I to them? Am I the one who will inherit the throne and rule over them, or am I just a servant who keeps the throne warm?"

It was then that Cardmos realized.

What a mess of a family tree!

It was no wonder. The children he had with his empress in his youth had all died long ago, leaving behind grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

And the baby he had with his young empress a few years ago was now learning to walk.

Although Holy Emperor Cardmos was revered as a demigod, he did not rule them directly. And the authority of the true ruler had already fallen to the ground due to the fact that he had no chance of inheriting the throne.

Even Cardmos, who lived without much thought, could see it by now. This country could not last long.

"It seems it's time for me to step aside..."

Cardmos stared at his hands. At his will, the divine power moved, and the faint gold scales on his forearms rippled and disappeared.

He had never shared his divine power with his descendants before. Because of this primal power, he had complete control over the divine.

But would a slightly longer lifespan and slightly stronger divine power be enough for Cardmos to lead the vast empire he had maintained?

"I will use the laws of the imaginary world."

When he confided his worries to his old friend, Sigurd Sigurdson, the storyteller who traveled between dimensions, suggested this.

"If you seal your body so that the primal power doesn't run wild, you can easily pass on part of your divine power to your descendants."

"But what if I lose control completely?"

"Wouldn't it be possible to slowly collect the divine power from your descendants before that happens? Perhaps their divine power will become weaker over time, but by then the empire will be on a stable course."

I see.

Cardmos still looked anxious, but the storyteller smiled reassuringly and added,

"Don't worry too much, my old friend. Even if the primal power is released because the timing is wrong, this sarcophaguss will prevent the slightest bit of its demonic energy from leaking out, as if the dimensions are being separated. That is the nature of the laws of the imaginary world."

Cardmos smiled in satisfaction after confirming that the Sarcophagus of the Holy Emperor was working properly.

Well, now it's time to take a break. Not that I've ever really worked.

And so, the first Holy Emperor was buried in the sarcophagus, still in his living form.

And Remus, who inherited part of his divine power and became the second Holy Emperor, began his bloody reign by executing his infant great-grandfather and all the courtiers who were out of favor, starting with the execution of his newborn baby, great-grandfather.

After hundreds of years, the Holy Empire of a Thousand Years had firmly established itself as the center of the continent.

Cardmos had enjoyed a truly leisurely retirement during this time.

He spent decades wandering around as a soul, and occasionally, when he got bored, he would borrow the body of a person who was about to die and live a new life.

It was unfortunate that the souls who faced his divine power usually melted away without a trace, but he didn't care.

According to the [Covenant] of the Primal God, most of the souls who died in Delcross would end up in the hands of the high-ranking demon kings anyway.

Cardmos was in the midst of rationalizing to himself that it was better for them to disappear comfortably than to suffer eternally in their hell.

The Saintess Gracia was also a saint born during one of these amusements.

She was a woman who neglected her own body and served others for some reason.

Cardmos watched her as she went through the trials and tribulations, using his divine power to keep her alive. He wondered how far she would go, and before he knew it, she had become a saint and was revered by future generations.

And then, 20 years ago.

Cardmos decided that it was time to finally reclaim the divine power that had been granted to his descendants.

It so happened that all the divine power that remained with his descendants was strangely concentrated in one child. Cardmos saw that the child was destined to die soon, so he decided to mark the child with the Saintess's mark.

However, contrary to his expectations, the child did not appear at the next Holy Emperor's crown coronation ceremony.

Cardmos was furious and appeared before the 16th Holy Emperor, who had brazenly entered the ceremony alone, and rebuked him harshly.

But this useless descendant of his did not even think of looking for the child. He was terrified and fled, never to seek him out again.

'It's all because of that child....'

Cardmos's golden irises narrowed as he stared at his outstanding descendant, who was sneering at him.

It was truly a strange thing. Where did such a guy come from?

Unlike his useless father, this guy immediately became furious when the mark appeared on his daughter's body and sealed him, who was labeled a demigod, in the basement of the church.

Although it was possible because it was a place where the rules of the imaginary world applied, Cardmos had no choice but to admire his strength.

Of course, the fact that he was so annoying was a separate issue.

[It's not too late now, child. Do you know how many fates have been twisted because of the laws of causality you have overturned? That's why you sent this fake saintess to drag me out, isn't it?]

"....."

[Now, hand over your child obediently. Only then will I personally descend into this world in her body and punish those who are wrong. I will gladly relieve you of that heavy burden.]

"...I will give you those exact words back."

As soon as the story of Sisle came out, a chilling light flashed in the Holy Emperor's silver-gray eyes as he glared at Cardmos.

"Who do you dare speak of cause and effect to? Did you think I really didn't know your true identity?"

[...What?]

"If you truly want to hear that impure name of the Primal God from me, then so be it."

[.....!]

Krrrrrrng.

Cardmos's aura, which had let out a beast-like cry from his larynx, became extremely sinister.

Fangs protruded from his mouth, and the shapes of golden scales began to ripple here and there on his skin.

[You are determined to see this through to the end, aren't you.....]

The Holy Emperor's aura also became immensely fierce.

The hem of his white robe fluttered in the wind that blew from nowhere. The furniture scattered around the office was swept up by the wind, crashing into each other and then soaring into the air.

"That seems like it would be good for both of us. I thought there might be room for dialogue, but it was purely my mistake."

Kuuung!

The entire palace building began to shake as if an earthquake had struck, due to the violent currents of air that erupted from them and collided.

Cracks appeared in one of the walls of the office, and stone dust fell down.

It was then.

"Hmm, shouldn't you two stop now? Thanks to you, the garden outside is completely ruined and it's a total mess, you know?"

".....!?"

[...How did you get here?]

The Holy Emperor and Cardmos simultaneously looked back at the entrance of the office where the voice had come from.

There, a boy stood staggering, holding onto the cracked doorframe.

It was unclear when he had arrived, but he was covered in wounds. He wiped the blood flowing from his nose and mouth with his sleeve and smiled brightly.

"It seems you were both so focused on the conversation that you didn't notice. If you don't stop soon, the palace might collapse. It's almost the birthday celebration, and you know there are a lot of guests staying in the palace, right?"

The two of them simultaneously retracted their aura, as if they had made an agreement.

[That wicked thing.....!]

Before Cardmos could say anything.

Whoosh!

Suddenly, a tremendous gust of aura swept in and blew him out of the terrace in the blink of an eye.

[.....!?]

Kaboom!

Cardmos, who had suddenly been thrown into the palace garden along with the desk, got up feeling bewildered. The Holy Emperor was no longer paying attention to him and had already rushed to the boy, pouring divine power on him from head to toe.

"Morres! Where on earth are you sticking your head in!"

"Ah... I guess you were in the middle of an important conversation. Did I interrupt you? I apologize."

"No, it was nothing. I was just wasting my time on trivial matters. Are you okay?"

"Hmm, I'm fine now. Thank you."

What is this atmosphere?

Cardmos, who had suddenly become a bystander, stared at them blankly.

"Anyway, what's going on here?"

"Oh, it's nothing. I just had something to tell you, and I stopped by while I was at it. But the palace was strangely empty. And the palace was shaking and I felt a strange aura inside, so I came to see what was going on."

"Then you should have called the guards, or just waited for the situation to end from a distance!"

"Haha, as you know Father, I have a hard time holding back my curiosity."

"Are you saying that you did the right thing now!"

Smack! With a sound, the boy screamed and fell backwards.

Cardmos, who was speechless, jumped back up to the second floor terrace and saw the boy clutching his forehead and rolling around on the floor, while the Holy Emperor looked down at him and clicked his tongue.

He seemed completely at peace, not even considering his existence.

Cardmos swallowed the unknown anger that was welling up inside him and clenched his teeth.

[...Are you saying that you guys are ignoring me right now?]

The Holy Emperor looked at him with a very annoyed expression and opened his mouth.

"Watch carefully, son."

"...Yes?"

As the boy rubbed his forehead and looked back at him, the Holy Emperor slowly stretched out one hand towards Cardmos and continued his explanation.

"The laws of the imaginary world are very unique. Sometimes, things happen that cannot be understood by the logic of power alone. Among them, the most important law is [Condition]."

"Condition?"

"Yes, as long as that condition is not met, there is an absolute domain or boundary that cannot be broken through, no matter how strong the power is."

The boy tilted his head.

"Can't you break through it with force?"

"Yes. For example, a door that will never open without a specific condition would be one of them."

"Aha!"

The boy's expression brightened as the Holy Emperor's explanation continued, but on the other hand, Cardmos's ominous feeling grew stronger and stronger.

And then.

"That's why the souls of the imaginary world are not destroyed and preserved even with such strong divine power, and the bodies of the imaginary world can only contain him."

With those words.

Click.

Suddenly, Cardmos heard a sound of something fitting into place in his head.

Although he had told the Holy Emperor that he had stopped by on a whim, there was another reason why Seongjin had reluctantly come to the palace.

At the time when Cardmos, who had acquired Seo Yi-seos body, was pushing aside all the priests and heading towards the palace with a menacing air.

Seongjin, Masain, and Bruno, who were heading to the training hall for morning practice, almost simultaneously sensed an ominous aura heading towards the palace.

It was a violent aura that did not hide its presence at all, like a storm.

"Come to think of it, an emergency action directive was issued to the entire imperial guard corps this morning."

Masain said, after staring at the palace for a moment.

"The guards are to stop guarding the palace, and instead block all paths leading to the palace and go on high alert. The knights stationed at Pearl Palace didn't pay much attention to it because there was nothing specific about it, but it seems something happened at the palace."

".....?"

Seongjin was momentarily speechless because his expression was so calm.

Hey, Sir Masain? If something happens at the palace, shouldn't the guards prioritize guarding the palace? Why aren't you worried at all, even though you received such an order?

"I don't know who it is, but they're a great warrior. Even Balthazar can't compare to them. It's the first time I've seen His Majesty the Holy Emperor with such a great aura. Who could it be?"

".....?!"

Even Bruno spoke with a peaceful face.

No, sir? You're saying he's a great warrior you've never seen since the Holy Emperor? Why is everyone so relaxed when such a guy is rushing towards the palace?

"Well, His Majesty the Holy Emperor is in the palace, isn't he?"

"There must be a reason why His Majesty lifted the guard."

Oh, my God. These people are all crazy.

'Am I the only one worried about that gentleman here?'

Seongjin's head was spinning.

W, weird? I'm sure I'm normal, but why do I feel like I'm the only one overreacting?

"I think we should reconfirm the security status of Pearl Palace just in case. Your Highness, please postpone your training for now and return to your room."

Masain strangely worried about the state of Pearl Palace and left to find Maria, the head of security for the day.

"This is a message from Arenja. The Knights of St. Terbacchia are on their way here. I will join them, so it would be better for Your Highness not to leave the palace for the time being, as Master Masain said."

Bruno also frowned and channeled, then suddenly disappeared towards the main gate.

"....."

Seongjin, who was suddenly left alone, turned around and saw Sir Haven, who was in charge of today's escort duty, smiling foolishly.

"Are you going in, Your Highness? Everyone is busy with the high alert, but I'm the only one on indoor escort duty. Isn't that great?"

...You jerk. Why are you saying that now?

Anyway, Seongjin quietly returned to his room, and as soon as the door closed, he unfolded his aura concealment and headed for the terrace.

Of course, Haven outside the door didn't notice a thing. Seongjin's concealment technique had improved by leaps and bounds recently, so it would be difficult for anyone below a certain level of knight to easily sense his aura.

Seongjin, who had thus safely escaped through the back door of Pearl Palace, immediately began to run towards the palace.

[Why are you in such a hurry? Whatever happens, your father will try to figure it out on his own.]

The demon king asked curiously.

Of course, Seongjin couldn't imagine that guy being in danger either.

'But that's not the point, is it?'

Think about it, Demon King.

Something is happening right in front of your eyes, and you're just going to leave someone there alone? No matter how safe you think it is.

In the past, our parents always told us this. They said that they knew I would overcome the adversities that life would throw at me, but that they would never leave me alone.

[...Your parents? They said that?]

Yes, you bastard of my parents' enemy.

You should be grateful that you only got three days of beating from me.

[.....]

And as Seongjin got closer to the palace, he realized that the situation at the palace was more serious than he had thought.

[Uh? A huge divine barrier over there?]

According to the demon king, a huge barrier was being deployed on the side of the Silver Labyrinth.

Kuuung!

In the palace, the buildings were already shaking from the violent aura of the two sides clashing before the battle even began. It was so intense that he was worried that the palace would suddenly collapse.

Above all, the aura.

The flow of aura that was swirling around the palace and growing stronger was strangely agitated.

'Is this guy in a bad mood right now?'

Seongjin thought unconsciously, because the flow was completely different from the well-organized aura that usually surrounded the Holy Emperor.

Furthermore.

[What is this again? Lee Seongjin. I feel a strange power coming from inside there. It feels impure for divine power, and it's too holy to be magic. It's the first time I've felt this kind of thing in this dimension, so it's confusing.]

When even the demon king said that, Seongjin's uneasiness grew even stronger.

Uprooted by the strong wind, Seongjin looked at the garden trees flying away and made up his mind.

'I have to go in and stop them.'

[What? Are you crazy? Are you going in there?]

—Stop! I'll die! I'm really going to die!

The demon king screamed in his head, but Seongjin ignored him and checked the aura in his body. He had a strong feeling that he couldn't let them collide like this.

The countless turbulence created by the violently swirling collision of forces was like invisible blades spinning around wildly.

Even for a hardened person like Seongjin, he couldn't help but sweat when he actually jumped into it.

'...Let's try to let out as much as I can.'

With that determination, he didn't even reach the stairs to the second floor before he felt a bloody taste rising from his throat.

With the rough force stirring up his whole body, a silent roar rang in his ears and he felt like his blood vessels were being torn apart.

If this kept up, he would die from a ruptured aorta or a cerebral hemorrhage!

Seongjin hurriedly concentrated his aura on his head and heart, and gritted his teeth as he took one step forward at a time.

Thud thud.

Soon, blood was flowing from his nose and making a trail on the floor.

When he finally reached the office after suffering so much, Seongjin found a completely unexpected person.

'...Seo Yi-seo?'

The person wearing a priestess garment and letting her black hair fly was definitely the suspicious saintess.

However, Seongjin could tell right away that it was not actually Seo Yi-seo herself. The aura she was giving off was completely different from before.

Her face, distorted with ferocity, briefly showed a glimpse of something like scales, and her golden eyes shone brightly with a terrible murderous aura.

[Hiiik! I didn't know there would be two of those monsters!]

The demon king cowered in fear in his head.

—I don't know who they are, but they're very powerful. Even Balthazar can't compare to them.

That was how Bruno had evaluated them. Certainly, even by the standards of Seongjin at his peak, they were definitely out of the ordinary strong.

But more than their strength, Seongjin was really concerned about something else.

'...Isn't that unlike him?'

The Holy Emperor, who was in a tense standoff with Seo Yi-seo, had an infinitely calm face on the outside.

But Seongjin could tell. That guy was really pissed off right now.

"Um, can you stop now?"

Seized by a strong feeling that he couldn't leave them alone, Seongjin squeezed out the last of his strength and stepped in between them.

"Then you should have called the guards, or just waited for the situation to end from a distance!"

While scolding him and pouring divine power over Seongjin's head, the Holy Emperor had quickly cooled down and regained his usual composure.

Only then did Seongjin, relieved by his usual calm eyes, let out a laugh without realizing it.

"Haha, as you know Father, I have a hard time holding back my curiosity."

Well, thanks to that, he ended up cracking his forehead and rolling on the floor.

Let's just say it was a noble sacrifice for the peace of Delcross.

[...Are you saying that you guys are ignoring me right now?]

As the thing that had possessed Seo Yi-seo's body approached them and growled, the Holy Emperor explained to Seongjin with a slightly annoyed look on his face.

"The laws of the imaginary world are very unique. Sometimes, things happen that cannot be understood by the logic of power alone. Among them, the most important law is [Condition]."

Condition?

"For example, a door that will never open without a specific condition would be one of them."

Aha, Seongjin quickly understood.

Come to think of it, the imaginary world was like a game. The laws that governed such a world would not be strange if they were like some kind of coded program.

"That's why the souls of the imaginary world are not destroyed and preserved even with such strong divine power, and the bodies of the imaginary world can only contain him."

As he finished speaking, the Holy Emperor snapped. Lightly flicked his finger.

[.....!?!]

For a moment, a great light of shock appeared in the saintess' eyes.

[What is this? What is this! What have you done to me?]

Kuaaaak?

The saintess seemed to be greatly surprised by something and jumped around the office for a long time.

She shook her head roughly, waved her hands in the air, and even jumped around here and there. She looked crazy.

During that time, the Holy Emperor briefly explained the situation to Seongjin.

So, the one who is wearing the appearance of that fake saintess is actually a guy named Cardmos, the first Holy Emperor of the Holy Emperor's family.

To think that the disgusting bastard had survived for 700 years as a soul, even though he was called a demigod! He had possessed the saintess through the Holy Emperor's coronation ceremony and was now running wild.

'Wow, even though he's a long-time ancestor, isn't that flick just now too merciless?'

As he was thinking this, the Holy Emperor sternly rebuked Seongjin.

"Anyway, Morres. Didn't I tell you not to cause trouble? You must never do something so dangerous again. Do you understand?"

Seongjin protested with a feeling of injustice.

"Um? But father. I didn't cause an accident today, I came to prevent an accident."

"....."

"Really."

The Holy Emperor stared at Seongjin silently for a moment. The strange silver light that always lingered in his eyes flickered.

Seongjin always wondered whenever he did that.

What on earth is he seeing with those eyes? Is that the special eye of the Oracle?

"...Alright."

After a short while, the Holy Emperor gave a short answer and sighed as if he didn't like something.

Then, he reached out and lightly patted Seongjin on the head.

"That's right. You've worked hard."

Pat pat.

"Um....."

Seongjin was caught in a subtle mood.

It was hard to describe. He felt proud, but also a little embarrassed. It was a very ticklish feeling.

In the meantime, Cardmos, the ancestor, who seemed to have finally calmed down, approached them with a fierce face.

[How did you lock me in this body? What on earth did you do?]

A faint smile appeared on the Holy Emperor's face.

"It seems that even after being trapped in that small coffin for 700 years, you are still so ignorant of the laws of the imaginary world. If you had known, you would not have entered that body so easily."

[What?]

Cardmos gritted his teeth fiercely.

[I'll smash this artificial body to pieces! Do you think I can't do it?]

"It would be wise to be more careful with that decision. If it wasn't for the saintess' body, do you think you would be able to crawl out of the church basement again?"

[.....]

"Who else but the humans of the imaginary world can contain your soul and still survive? Surely you didn't think I would offer you the body of another person, knowing full well that it would destroy your soul?"

After staring at the Holy Emperor for a long time, Cardmos asked.

[Then what's the point of taking me out of there like this? I can't fully express my divine power in this body.]

"Of course I don't plan to release you."

[Then why!]

"But liberating you is also possible for the original owner of that body."

[.....!]

"Then you will have to take good care of that tricky soul."

Cardmos, who had been standing there blankly for a moment, finally smiled with a dispirited face.

[In that case, I have no choice but to protect this woman from the puppeteer. And this woman will try to stay by your daughter's side.]

"....."

[...Have you ever seen such a cunning thing?]

The Holy Emperor did not respond to his sharp criticism. Instead, Seongjin, who was feeling unnecessarily wronged, raised his hand towards him.

"Excuse me for a moment, ancestor?"

[Don't you dare call me ancestor, you wretched thing!]

"Hmm, then Mr. Cardmos?"

[...What?]

Although his expression became even more ferocious, Seongjin did not bat an eye.

Seongjin looked around the devastated office with slightly exaggerated gestures and said.

"You almost destroyed the palace, so you should at least clean up what you yourself did, right?"

[.....]

"Come on! Please show me how to take responsibility for your actions, like a great ancestor. Okay?"

Cardmos fell silent at that.

Soon, the brilliant golden light from his eyes disappeared, and his dark brown pupils wavered with a faint light as if waking up from sleep.

Huh? Did he run away?

"...Huh?"

Seo Yi-seo, who had been blinking her eyes for a moment, unable to understand the situation, suddenly widened her eyes when she saw Seongjin and the Holy Emperor.

Then she jumped up and down and screamed.

"No, what the hell is going on! Why are the two villains¹ and villains² together!"

...Why does this woman seem less sane when she's sane?

And so, that afternoon, Seo Yi-seo had her first official schedule as the new saintess.

It was to clean the palace all day long with the servants of the palace, encouraging them.

"Why me?!"

Amelia and Sisle held each other tightly, standing as they gazed at the sky beyond the barrier, which looked particularly ominous.

Suddenly, the sky above the main palace, which had been partially darkened, was filled with a raging storm that swirled like a vortex.

Trees, uprooted from the ground, shot up into the air, accompanied by sizzling sounds and occasional flashes of small, golden lightning. It was a surreal sight.

"It must be the aftermath of the ceremony of Sarcophagus of the Holy Emperor, which hasn't been held for a long time. Don't worry too much, it will calm down soon."

Francis, standing behind them, explained in a calm tone.

Even without his words, both princesses could vaguely sense that something was amiss in the main palace.

Amelia sensed the faint disturbance in the aura.

Sisle could feel the aftermath of the clash between the great divinities.

Each in their own way, they sensed the danger and worried about the Holy Emperor, who was alone in the storm at the faraway main palace.

-In my opinion, that's probably it. Perhaps from that point on, the audience before the Sarcophagus of the Holy Emperor lost its significance

Sisle's mind was filled with the words Amelia had said to her earlier.

-Or maybe that it has become something dangerous now?

What if it really is like that?

What if the Holy Emperor's sarcophagus is actually some terrifying unknown, and that's why such danger has befallen His Majesty?

"Dear Father..."

Unwittingly, a term of endearment Sisle hadn't used since that night slipped from her lips.

-How wonderful it would be if there was something we could do to help. For now, the best we can do is to quietly ensure we're not in the way.

The loyal captain of the knights, standing firmly in front of the barrier, protecting the princesses, had indeed said something like that before.

Just as he had on that night drenched in blood, and now, as a storm unexpectedly descends.

The Holy Emperor must surely be bearing something on his own, and continues to do so.

-If he deems something useless, he cuts it off without hesitation. Perhaps, in the not-too-distant future, you too will meet your end by his hand, just like the others."

That was what someone had warned the girl in her head that day.

But surely that can't be the case, right?

Even Katrina, who claims to be the Holy Emperor's shield and is always by his side, can only stand so far away when danger really strikes and wait for the Holy Emperor to solve everything.

If she is called a shield, could there be a more useless shield in the world?

Perhaps it is simply because the Holy Emperor cherishes his knight commander so much.

After all, this sacred barrier protects not only the princesses, but also the entire Order of the Paladins of St. Aurelion.

'There's no way Father His Majesty would do that on purpose...'

Sisle was slowly coming to realize.

If the future shown in the book was so bleak, and if, according to its contents, the Holy Emperor ends up contributing significantly to her misfortune.

At least, it would not be something her father truly wished for.

How much time had passed like this?

At one point, the raging storm suddenly subsided and the sky cleared up as if it were a lie.

"...Situation over."

As the inquisitor, who had been staring vacantly into space, muttered, Katrina, who had been tensely focusing ahead, relaxed and nodded her head.

"Situation over!"

"Situation over! Situation over!"

Following their commander's cry, the commands of several squad leaders echoed.

Soon, the silver sacred barrier that had been spread out wide enough to cover the entire Silver Labyrinth began to fade.

The adjutant of the Order of St. Aurelion, who had been standing guard behind the two princesses until then, spoke, exhaling a sigh of relief and packing his weapons.

"Fortunately, it seems that nothing major has happened. Your Highnesses, please rest assured. The curfew is now lifted."

Francis said so and, after bowing politely to the two, left the room.

"It's really... really fortunate."

Amelia finally let out the breath she had been holding and said.

She hugged Sisle once and then turned around and quickly began to prepare to go out.

Judging by the fact that there is no other message, His Majesty the Emperor must be safe as well. But still, I can't be completely relieved. I must hurry to the main palace and see.

That's when Sisle, startled, spoke up.

"...Amelia-noona."

"Hmm?"

"The mark... the mark of the Saintess hasn't disappeared yet."

"What?" Amelia turned her head in confusion, and her younger sister was already looking up at her with tears in her eyes again.

"I can still feel it under my feet. Originally, my mark should have disappeared right after Sister Seo Yi-seo paid homage before the Sarcophagus of the Holy Emperor. I was supposed to be disgracefully expelled from the position of the Saintess..."

As Sisle murmured, clear tears streamed down her cheeks.

"...Sisle!"

The surprised Amelia quickly hugged her sister without knowing what to do.

But now, instead of the bitter sadness of the morning, Sisle's face was filled with awe and a glimmer of hope.

"Sister, you won't believe it! Something is really, really changing!"

That night.

An inquisitor sneaked into Saint Bastian Church.

Passing by the guards closely watching the main gate and easily evading the patrolling groups of Saint Bastian knights, their steps were incredibly light and leisurely.

The stealth ability that not even the best assassins could detect was the Decalon Knights' stealth technique.

Descending to the church's basement and approaching the Holy Emperor's sarcophagus, the exorcist's eyes flickered with the usual silver-grey glow.

[I seem to keep imposing on you, Dame Sharon.]

Then, the inquisitor chuckled as if sobbing.

"Not at all, Your Majesty. Whenever Your Majesty comes to me, all those noisy ones completely shut up. The world couldn't be more peaceful and wonderful."

It was a rare moment of peace for the inquisitor, who always suffered from uncontrollable channeling.

"Now that the ceremony is over, this door won't open for a while. It seems we can afford to take a leisurely look around."

And Dame Sharon began to slowly circle the Holy Emperor's sarcophagus as if searching for something.

At a certain moment, her eyes shone with a bright silver-gray light.

[That.]

Following the Holy Emperor's directive, Dame Sharon tore off a small object decorated on one side of the sarcophagus. It was a gem emitting a deep green light.

"...Quite a small device."

[Indeed. It seems that this being is someone who cannot be taken lightly.]

A dangerous trap that would have been activated the moment Cardmos tried to draw upon his true power during their confrontation with the Holy Emperor.

It was one of the many traps that the storyteller had been preparing for hundreds of years.

[The artifacts of the Imaginary World are always so cunning. No matter how carefully one inspects, the deeply hidden layers of activation conditions are difficult to find.]

This is why the laws of the Imaginary World are so formidable.

They can isolate the demi-god's immense power from the Delcross dimension so easily, yet, the primordial power, well-suppressed by the divine, could be unleashed without reason in an instant.

[That child truly saved Delcross from peril.]

"Is it the future that Your Majesty has sent forth?"

[Indeed. It's now an event that will not happen, having become the past.]

The Holy Emperor never sees his own future.

Just predicting a slight possibility is enough to make it certain in some way. That's how heavy the Oracle's prophecy is.

—I'm not here to have an accident today, I'm here to prevent one.

Those were the words of his son, who approached him even as he became bloodied.

As he said, the Holy Emperor was only able to properly confirm the destruction that would have happened if the child had not come.

The primal power that was released without control.

And the mad, unholy monster that ran rampant.

[Now bring it to me.]

"Yes, Your Majesty."

Dame Sharon secured the gem and continued,

"But Your Majesty, if I may be so bold to ask one thing?"

[Speak.]

"The first Holy Emperor, being a demi-god, was easily trapped in the flesh of the Imaginary World. Then, wouldn't it be just as dangerous for Your Majesty to descend into Homunculus?"

The Holy Emperor was silent for a moment before answering.

[...I shall keep that in mind.]

"Yes, Your Majesty."

The inquisitor chuckled before disappearing into the darkness.

The day after the Rite of the Holy Emperor's sarcophagus. Fortunately, Sisle's symbol had not yet disappeared and remained clear.

And then,

"Sisle, my sister!"

Despite having completed the ceremony and received the first Holy Emperor's blessing properly, Seo Yi-seo was astonishingly still very much Seo Yi-seo.

Of course, that's not to say there were no changes at all.

"Listen, Princess Sisle. Guess what, when I woke up, there was a new skill in my skill window!"

...What on earth is a skill window?

"The skill name is super cool too. It's called Descent of the Demigod, Descent of the Demigod! But I have absolutely no idea how to use it!"

That was the problem.

This skill, which seemed like an ultimate skill just by its name, was actually a passive skill that was always activated.

Thanks to that, if she tried to take a nap, she would find that several hours had passed, or that she had been wandering around here and there after stretching.

When she was about to eat a delicious meal, she would find herself sitting blankly in front of an empty plate after thinking, "This is going to be delicious!"

"But Princess Sisle, it's almost time for mass, why are you getting ready to go out? Where are you going?"

"Yes, to the main palace. I'm going to see His Majesty after a long time."

"What? You're going to meet that terrifying mastermind? What if he does something to you, Princess Sisle!"

Seo Yi-seo was horrified, to which Sisle laughed as if it was absurd.

Isn't it funny how Seo Yi-seo, the protagonist of the book, is more afraid of the Holy Emperor than Sisle, who is supposed to be the villainous?

"It's okay."

The girl smiled transparently at Seo Yi-seo.

"Even if something like that were to happen, the fact that His Majesty is thinking of me will not change."

The office, still in disarray from Cardmos's tampering, awaited her.

With a heart that fluttered slightly, Sisle entered the office, guided by Louis.

"...Sisle."

Recently, he had been away from the palace on missions and inspections, and even the few regular audiences he had had been avoided.

The Holy Emperor was a little surprised, but soon dismissed the others and greeted her.

"Am I interrupting you?"

"No, you're welcome. I was just about to take a break."

However, what immediately caught Sisle's eye upon taking a seat was the sleep mask hanging on the wall.

A white mask embroidered with a cute rabbit, hanging at a slightly skewed angle on the wall.

"That is..."

Following Sisle's gaze, the Holy Emperor nodded.

"Owen sent it. He said it was a birthday present, so I put it on display."

The Holy Emperor had realized from the beginning that it was an object from the Imaginary World..

He had not been able to figure out exactly what it was used for, so he had left it aside to investigate later.

"I know what it is. I received the same thing from Owen-orabeoni."

Sisle showed the pink mask she wore around her neck like a piece of jewelry.

According to Seo Yi-seo, it was a helpful item for sleep. True to his words, since wearing it, Sisle had seen a significant decrease in the frequency of prophetic dreams and nightmares, much to her satisfaction.

"It wards off nightmares...?"

"Yes, would you like me to show you how to use it?"

With those words, the mysterious item from the Regulated World was slowly brought before him in his daughter's hands.

The Holy Emperor blinked but did not avoid Sisle's hands.

Perhaps anything given by his child, be it poison or a trap, he would gladly accept.

As the white rabbit mask was placed over his head, the Holy Emperor's eyes widened slightly.

After sitting in stunned silence for a moment, he slowly tilted his head and uttered a word of reflection.

"...It's quiet."

Indeed.

As soon as he put it on, the world became instantly quiet.

The voices of the past that had always clung to him were nowhere to be heard. The voice that insidiously whispered the future was nowhere to be heard.

Above all, the desperate screams of souls coming from a distant place were nowhere to be heard.

"It's truly quiet..."

As the Holy Emperor slowly blinked his eyes, Sisle chuckled softly and sat down beside him.

Realizing that she missed the rustling sound of the white robe hem that reminded her of her childhood, the girl closed her eyes slowly, leaning against the Holy Emperor's arm.

On that day, the chief chamberlain took great care with the refreshments for the youngest princess, who had visited the Holy Emperor for the first time in a long time.

He decorated a table with sweets and flowers and brought out the precious tea that the foreign delegation had brought in for his birthday.

Thinking it was the perfect timing, he confidently entered the office with the tea tray but...

"...?"

Louis's eyes widened in surprise. An unexpected scene unfolded before him.

On the plush office sofa, the Holy Emperor and Sisle, father and daughter, sat side by side, asleep with their eyes closed.

Each wearing a white and pink, adorably indescribable object around their necks.

In an unusually quiet afternoon where not even a bird could be heard. In the stillness where even the warm sunlight seemed to be frozen.

Only the gentle breeze blowing from the terrace was the only thing that seemed alive, occasionally brushing through the hair of the two people.

"... ."

Louis soaked up the sight for a long time, feeling a strange sense of emotion.

In his ten years as head chamberlain, had he ever seen His Majesty with such a relaxed face, eyes closed!

Although the carefully prepared tea cooled down mercilessly, Louis left the tea tray there and quietly tiptoed out of the office, closing the door behind him.

On the day of the grand imperial ritual.

The Pearl Palace was thrown into chaos as soon as Seongjin returned. It was a shock to everyone when the prince, who was thought to be safely in his room, suddenly appeared at the main gate covered in blood.

Although his body had been healed by the sacred power of the Holy Emperor, the bloodstains that soaked through his torn clothes were unmistakable.

In the midst of the panic, an imperial knight dashed to summon physician Ninnias, while Seongjin was forcibly taken to his bedchamber by Masain without a chance to resist.

"But father has healed me completely. I'm telling you, I'm fine now."

Seongjin protested, but Masain looked as if he was about to faint.

"What in the world happened? All this blood..."

It was utterly bewildering for him.

He had intensified the palace security, worrying about the prince's safety and preparing for any possible incidents, only to find the prince returning drenched in blood from somewhere.

"How could this happen when the escort knights were supposed to be with you...!"

"Don't be too harsh on him, Sir Masain."

Bruno, the commander, consoled Masain, seeing the downtrodden Haven.

"The prince's skill in stealth is extraordinary. He has mastered it so quickly that even I am caught off guard by him sometimes."

"...Stealth?"

"Ah, you didn't know? It seemed like His Highness was learning from the assassin he's been seeing lately."

"...Assassin?!"

"Hmm? Ahem."

Seongjin was stunned.

Sir Bruno? He just poured oil on a fire he's trying to put out, didn't he? Right?

"Who in the world would dare teach such dangerous things to the reckless prince...?"

Woaaaaosh.

An ominous aura swirled around Masain.

'Oh, this is bad!'

Seongjin broke out in a cold sweat.

He was just about to formally introduce Dasha, but it felt like things were getting off to a terrible start.

Unable to stand it any longer, Seongjin tried to salvage the situation.

"Ha, but sir Masain! I don't know the details, but I stopped the crisis in Delcross! I even got praised by my father! Really!"

"Crisis?"

Sir Bruno, who also felt responsible for the situation, hurriedly chimed in.

"That's right, Sir Masain! I heard from Aarenja that His Highness accomplished something great earlier! Isn't that amazing?"

However, Masain's expression darkened even further.

"And it seems I wasn't by His Highness's side during that critical moment."

"..."

"I'm just a useless escort who isn't there when Your Highness needs me the most...!"

"What?"

"This is all my fault! I should never have taken my eyes off of Your Highness, even for a moment...!"

In the end, Seongjin had no choice but to raise both hands and feet in surrender.

"I'm sorry! I was really wrong, sir Masain!"

Someone, please stop this guy from digging a hole into the ground!

[I've told you over and over again, you can't talk to him like that.]

The Demon King sighed and muttered.

"You seem to be more sane than I thought, Lee Seongjin."

Logan, who had visited the Pearl Palace around lunchtime, said that.

Judging from the fact that he was neatly dressed in the ceremonial attire of the Order of the Knights of St. Bastian, it seemed that he had come here straight after finishing his official duties with the Order.

Seongjin, who had been lying in bed meditating (or not meditating), raised himself up.

"You didn't even go to the ceremony. How do you know about this?"

"Who wouldn't know when such a large amount of aura collided? Most of the knights must have noticed it. If it wasn't for the ceremonial event, they would have come running right away... ."

No, aren't you just sensitive to aura?

The distance between the palace and the church isn't that far.

"I went to the Silver Labyrinth first since I heard that the Order of the Knights of St. Aurelion had been called out on an emergency, but Amelia and Sisle were more worried about you."

So he said he came here instead after promising to check on him.

But when he actually arrived, the resident knights were all on the verge of death, and sir Masain was running rampant in front of them.

"I heard from brother Masain. You were badly injured?"

"Oh, don't even mention it. Sir Masain is really unlucky. Today, he told me not to leave the bed at all after seeing me."

Thanks to him, I'm in the middle of developing a new aura cultivation method called "lying down meditation."

Logan then sat down next to the bed and lightly patted him.

"You should at least take care of your body. You know that, right? After you were badly injured that time before, brother Masain... ."

Then, suddenly halting, he stopped speaking.

Ah, it seems he got confused again.

"Did something like that happen to Morres in the past?"

"...Hmm. Yes, that did happen."

And then, Logan murmured with a slightly gloomy expression.

"I wonder where Morres' soul is now. Whether he is safe..."

"Hmm..."

Unable to offer the empty reassurance that everything would be fine, Seongjin awkwardly turned away.

"So, what exactly happened that caused such a commotion?"

"Well, actually..."

Seongjin candidly revealed the events following the Emperor's ritual, where the spirit of the First Emperor, Cardmos, ended up trapped in Seo Yi-seo's body.

Logan had a knack for detecting lies, and Seongjin felt it was necessary to share some details with him to prevent further mishaps. After all, Logan had previously instantly noticed the difference between Morres's and Seongjin's presences.

How could he then assure that Logan, who harbored strong mistrust towards Seo Yi-seo, wouldn't draw his sword in suspicion upon noticing her suddenly altered demeanor?

"...What exactly do you take me for? I may be many things, but I'm not so uncouth as to publicly rebuke a saintess in an official setting."

Oh, right. Instead, you planned to sneak to her window and knock softly at night, didn't you?

"....."

Unable to deny it.

Logan stroked his chin and pondered. "The soul of the first emperor, huh..."

"I knew he was revered as a demigod, but I always thought it was just an exaggeration to sanctify the founding of the empire. But to think he's still alive after a thousand years..."

His face looked quite complicated.

Perhaps the thought of containing Delcross, the biggest obstacle to his dream of rebuilding Ortona, was not as easy as he thought.

"And all the saintess who acted as the reincarnation of Saint Grazia for hundreds of years were actually being controlled by Cardmos?"

"Yes, that's right."

"To take their bodies and even destroy their souls, what kind of devil would do such a thing? They turned the saintesses, who were deeply respected by the people, into such things. Where on earth does the root of the empire's deep evil lie?"

Logan, who had said this far, noticed Seongjin's subtle expression and quickly added.

"Oh, of course, I think the current empire is definitely a necessary evil. It protects the continent from the demon race, and the current emperor is pursuing an unprecedentedly moderate policy towards neighboring countries. As the prince of Delcross, I have no intention of shirking my duty to the empire and its people."

"..."

"But I will say this for sure, Lee Seongjin. From a long-term perspective, I believe that this empire must eventually disappear. If it doesn't disappear altogether, or at least change fundamentally, this continent has no future."

Seongjin looked at Logan's serious face and thought.

Maybe what he said was mostly true. But Seongjin didn't care about such a macroscopic perspective as the cause or the future of the continent.

What was important was that Cardmos was extremely dangerous. And that the emperor or Sisle might be in danger because of him.

That was all that mattered.

"Anyway, don't ever take your eyes off him, Logan. For now, it seems like our father has locked him up pretty well, but I don't know when he'll go crazy and try to kill Sisle and harm my father."

"...?"

"Think about it. He's still after Sisle. So who would be the biggest obstacle there? Wouldn't he be the first to try to harm our father?"

Logan stared blankly at Seongjin for a moment before smiling bitterly.

"You have someone else to worry about."

"..."

"He is a strong man who deserves to be called the representative of God, Lee Seongjin. You are probably the only person in the world who can worry about him like that."

Hmm. Judging from the attitude of Sir Masain and Commander Bruno, it was clear to see how the emperor was perceived in Delcross.

'But still.....'

Apart from that, Seongjin couldn't help but think that Logan's attitude towards the emperor was unusually dry.

Of course, with his memories of his previous life intact, it wouldn't be easy for him to accept him as a parent.

Come to think of it, that man was no different from an enemy who had destroyed Logan's country.

'No. Maybe because he treats him so dryly, he doesn't hold any particular grudge.....'

Seongjin looked at the guy who seemed to be a collection of dilemmas with a slightly pitiful gaze.

Was there anything that could help this poor guy?

'...Ah! Come to think of it, wasn't there such an organization?'

The Blue Republican Revolutionary Front.

It was one of the terrorist organizations that Morres used to sponsor.

It seemed to be somehow connected to the remnants of the Ortona Republican Party, but should I ask Dasha to investigate it once?

A mansion in a townhouse, often used by distinguished guests from foreign countries.

Leonard, who was dressed neatly for the first time in a long time, smiled bitterly at the sight of the splendid carriage procession prepared for him.

"Finally. They really charge a lot for this! This damn emperor of Delcross!"

He is a member of the royal family of the rising power Rohan.

Even though he was clearly a guest who should be treated with the utmost priority, he was only allowed to enter the palace on the eve of his birthday!

"There are many ears listening. Please be careful with your words and actions."

Behind him, a man wearing a half-mask approached him and rebuked him.

"Once you enter the palace, you will have to judge everything for yourself. I won't be able to take care of everything for you like I used to."

"...Romaine."

Leonard turned around with a sullen face.

"To be honest, I don't feel confident. Can't you come with me?"

"Unfortunately, I cannot enter the palace."

Romaine glanced back at the palace and snickered.

"The palace is currently like the absolute domain of the guardian. Agreements and constraints are meaningless there. The moment you step inside, wouldn't he immediately kill you, saying that he is right?"

"Oh, come on?"

"It's not a joke. There are no exceptions for royalty, so please don't do anything that would unnecessarily upset the servants."

"This is such a bloody place..."

"That's not all. You must always keep in mind that you are under his surveillance even when you are alone. Be careful, and be very careful."

At those words, Leonard's face immediately turned into that of a donkey being dragged to the slaughterhouse.

"Oh, I don't want to go."

"..."

"Oh, okay, okay. I was just kidding."

Leonard waved his hand and headed for the carriage.

"But I still don't understand, Romaine."

Leonard, who was about to step into the carriage, suddenly turned around and asked.

"Everything is fine, but why are you suddenly asking me to make contact with not only the princess, but also the third prince out of the blue? Even a child in Rohan knows that he is a terrible bastard."

"Don't trust all the rumors, Lord Leonard. He is a man who effectively hides his true identity, and he is the one who will one day show the sharpest fangs towards the empire."

"The prince of the empire? How do you know that?"

"Because I faced his soul directly not long ago."

It was an achievement obtained by wasting the last seed that had not yet fully bloomed.

"But if he is hiding his body like that, will he really reveal his identity if I approach him?"

"That's not what I'm expecting. I just want to create some room for maneuver. Hmm, I see....."

Romaine stared at the palace for a moment and thought deeply before opening his mouth.

"Then, let's try this first."

And, the lips under the half-mask draw a confident curve.

"Come back. The brothers of the forgotten old sect are eagerly waiting for your order only."

The birthday celebration was approaching, just one day away.

Seongjin was unable to leave Pearl Palace for the entire morning due to the late dress fitting. The final fitting was delayed significantly due to major changes in the fabric and design.

"Hmm..."

Seongjin looked at the mirror, adjusting his collar.

The neat yet vividly detailed dress seemed to suit him well.

He had thought that Madame Justine only presented unconventional designs, but it seemed the man could also make such modest clothes.

Of course, the color, which was almost black except for a faint hint of gray, was mostly the result of Amelia's active input.

"Changing the fabric was an excellent choice. You will surely stand out among the brightly colored gowns."

The head designer from Salon de Merci said as he finished adjusting Seongjin's outfit.

"By the way, where did Madame go?"

"She suddenly had an urgent matter and went down to her hometown for a while."

"When will she be back?"

"Well, we don't really..."

Originally, Seongjin was supposed to visit Salon de Merci in person to meet Madame.

He had intended to talk to him about the circumstances of Seo Yi-seo's employment, but how did that kid find out and send him away in advance?

'Still, it's convenient to have the costume team here.'

In any case, Seongjin had to attend the main banquet for three whole days, starting tomorrow. Even though it seemed like there was nothing to do, there were actually many things to prepare for in secret.

Seongjin and Amelia were still relatively better off.

A grand mass was scheduled at St. Bastian Cathedral tomorrow afternoon, followed by a complex and elaborate ceremonial procedure in front of the imperial palace for the next two days.

Since Logan and Sisle also had official positions within the Orthodox Church, they had to attend both the events and the banquets for three days.

No, isn't that too harsh of a schedule for children who are still minors?

—Of course, those two are overflowing with divine power.

Sir Masain smiled and said that in response to Seongjin's concern.

In particular, Sisle had such a vast amount of divine power that she had never been seen to get tired of anything.

'I'm envious. Then she can train all night for several days without any problems?'

[The point of envy is a bit.....]

Anyway, the entire palace was bustling with everyone busy with their own schedules.

"Brother, if you don't mind, can we talk for a moment?"

So that's why Seongjin couldn't help but feel surprised by Sisle's sudden visit that afternoon.

"Talk?"

"Yeah, just for a moment."

Sisle, with a face as expressionless as a carved doll, was holding a small book-like object in her arms, just like last time.

And following behind her was.

"Shaaaak!"

The still-growling Saintess Seo Yi-seo.

"When are you going to stop taking her around with you?"

"I can't help it, brother. Seo Yi-seo shows extreme separation anxiety if I'm not in sight for even a moment."

Is she really being treated like a pet cat?

"What is Cardmos doing?"

"It seems like the first emperor only appears during mealtimes."

Cardmos, trapped in Seo Yi-seo's body, had been behaving quietly for several days without any problems. For now, it seemed he had decided to enjoy having a new body for a change.

Thanks to that, Seo Yi-seo, who had not been able to eat properly for several days, was now in a state of extreme nervousness.

"But do you have time for this? Have you fitted your dress?"

"No. I have an official position, so I can just wear a priest's robe. As a saintess who serves God and should be an example to the priests, I should always avoid and be wary of luxury."

"...Hmm, really?"

Seongjin looked at the youngest of the imperial family with new eyes.

Maybe it was because he thought of them as the same age, but he couldn't help but compare her to Chloe.

Even though she was smart beyond her years, Chloe, who gave off the impression of a child who had grown up with plenty of love, could not erase the impression that she was mature.

Well, if she was proud of her life as a saintess, then that was it.

But how should he feel about the fact that a 12-year-old girl had to live a frugal life wearing only a simple priest's robe for the rest of her life?

"Let's have some tea first."

Thinking that the conversation might take a while, Seongjin headed to the living room with Sisle.

"I've never shown this to my brother before."

As Commander Bruno naturally served tea and disappeared, Sisle put down the small book-like object she had been holding in her arms on the table and opened her mouth.

"What is this?"

"It's a diary where I've been writing down the contents of the book."

Some time ago, Sisle had come to Seongjin and told him that this world was actually a world inside a book.

—In fact, when I was young, I read the novel that Seo Yi-seo mentioned. Since then, I've always had a vague suspicion that this world might be inside a book.

Of course, the Demon King's opinion was that it couldn't be.

He had said that a solid real world like Delcross could never be maintained by the mere imagination of a book.

As Seongjin was lost in thought, Sisle pushed the diary forward slightly and continued speaking.

"Brother Morres. You may not remember this, but I've been having prophetic dreams since I was a child."

"...Prophetic dreams?"

"Yes. Of course, it's hard to believe right away, but..."

"Oh? No, I believe you."

Seongjin looked into Sisle's clear gray eyes and replied. He knew that those eyes, which were exactly like the emperor's, came from the Kornseim family, so how could he not believe in prophetic dreams?

"Hehe. You're like that before too, but you say you believe me even when I say something strange out of the blue."

Sisle let out a small laugh without much change in her expression. However, Seongjin's sharp eyes did not miss the faint blush on the girl's cheeks.

Why do I feel like I can tell her expression even though I look at that poker face?

Under Sisle's expectant gaze, Seongjin silently picked up the book.

When he turned a page, he saw childish, round handwriting on the first page.

—The Chronicles of Delcross, Volume 2: The Fall of the Saintess.

Wait, hold on. Not only the title, but...

"...Volume 2?"

"Yes. I actually saw Volume 1 first, but I started writing after Volume 2."

So it was probably around the time the saintess's mark appeared on her body. That was when a person who was always the same started appearing in Sisle's dreams, unlike her usual prophetic dreams.

The man was wearing a mask, so his face was not visible, but he was said to be sitting at a desk, humming a tune and writing something diligently with a quill pen.

And then, every time before the dream ended, he would proudly show Sisle what he had written.

It was an exciting novel set in the real Delcross.

"That's how I read Volume 1, little by little, over two years, whenever I had a prophetic dream."

The title of the Chronicles of Delcross Volume 1 that she read was 'The Young Wolf of the North'.

It was an exciting story about Orden Siegmund, the protagonist, who grew up hunting sea monsters and eventually conquered the martial arts competitions of the continent.

"You mean the story of that simple-minded brute Orden? How can it be interesting just by hearing it?"

"If you had read even once about the battle between the Order of the Wolf and the Glacier Troll, you would never say such a thing. It was a vivid description, as if you were watching the battle with your own eyes. The way the Order captured that huge troll was by forming a double envelopment and driving it down the mountain slope, which it was weak on....."

As she spoke, Sisle waved her hands and imitated the last blow of Orden that she had read in the book.

"The protagonist cuts the troll's throat like this."

".....!"

Seongjin's eyes flashed in an instant.

"Sisle, wait!"

"Huh?"

Oh, wait, didn't that feel like part of the properly executed Banaha's

3rd Form just now?

"When did you start learning Aura?"

"What are you talking about?"

Sisle blinked her eyes.

Aura initiation? Me?

"What do you mean?"

"But that move just now!"

"Oh, that was just me imagining the move I read in the book. I've never learned swordsmanship or aura cultivation specifically?"

"....."

"This move was so impressive and memorable that I would do it from time to time when I thought about it."

Seongjin's mouth dropped open.

What the heck? Where did this talented person come from?

Even if it was just one move, how could she follow the Banaha's Aura Weaving just by reading it in a book?

Until now, he had thought that the reason this child's aura activity was more active than ordinary people's was simply because she was too healthy due to her overflowing divine power.

'But if that's actually because of the aura layer unconsciously accumulated in her core....'

And the fact that it flowed out properly woven into aura movements meant, in other words, that the aura this child had accumulated had already exceeded the 3rd layer!

"Anyway, that's not important right now, brother."

No, it seems very important!

You're just wasting such natural talent and tireless energy by doing nothing but volunteer work!

"Focus. This is a serious matter that involves you, me, and Seo Yi-seo."

Sisle, who dismissed Seongjin's internal outcry as mere attention deficit, continued speaking.

"Anyway, at the end of Volume 1, Eldest Young Master Orden subjugates all the martial arts competitions and arrives in the imperial capital. And then the female protagonist, Seo Yi-seo, who crossed over from another dimension, appears, and Volume 1 of the Chronicles comes to an end."

It was when Sisle was just 9 years old.

At that time, Eldest Young Master Siegmund was just making a name for himself as a genius swordsman of the North, and rumors were circulating that he would soon be participating in martial arts competitions in other countries. Sisle, too, was solidifying her position as a saintess, so she thought it was another form of her prophetic dream and didn't think much of it.

And not long after Volume 1 ended, the man in the prophetic dream appeared again.

The half-masked man, who smiled brightly at Sisle, showed her the title of the new book he had just started writing. It was none other than The Chronicles of Delcross Volume 2.

"The Fall of the Saintess.....!"

The girl was greatly shocked.

If the story proceeded as the subtitle suggested, then the new chronicle was nothing less than a prophecy of her own downfall.

Waking up from her sleep that day in a cold sweat, Sisle began to transcribe the contents of the book she had seen in her dream into a diary. She tried to be as detailed as possible, not wanting to miss a single story.

The story unfolded roughly as follows.

The female protagonist, who is the true reincarnation of the Saintess Grazia, appears, and Sisle, who has lost the mark of the Saintess, is greatly criticized by the Orthodox Church and the people of the imperial capital.

—It is God's punishment! The saintess has fallen and lost her divine power! She must have colluded with the devil!

The little girl struggled to clear her name, but each time she did, the story strangely went in a worse direction.

A series of vicious cycles where repeated misunderstandings made Sisle harbor malicious thoughts, and her actions in turn caused even more vicious misunderstandings.

It was an unlikely development that made one wonder how anyone could be so malicious to a single character.

—Why are you persecuting me so?

The kind protagonist Seo Yi-seo eventually cried out in tears.

—I never thought you would be like this, Saintess.

The serious protagonist Orden looked at her with eyes of deep contempt.

—Restrain yourself for the time being.

The fallen Holy Emperor commanded in a cold voice.

As she read each word, Sisle felt her breath getting caught in her throat. It was as if she was slowly sinking into a deep mire from which there was no escape once she took a step in.

She wondered if she would really do such things, but as the dream continued, she began to doubt herself and whether she would really become such a person.

For about two years, Sisley was haunted by the harrowing dream of her tragic demise. During this time, the young girl lost her laughter, becoming increasingly consumed by severe anxiety.

And in the climactic final chapter, Sisley ultimately met her end at the hands of the divine envoy.

"After reading that chapter, I couldn't bring myself to look at His Majesty directly for a while."

"....."

Seongjin, with a rigid expression, quickly flipped through the diary to the last chapter of the infamous second volume.

Indeed, the trembling hand that had pressed down hard while writing those words seemed to smear the occasional teardrop that fell from the girl's eyes.

"I've mentioned this to you before, brother. With Seo Yi-seo actually appearing before my eyes, I moved beyond trusting the content of this book to realizing that this place is merely a world within a book."

Sisley's voice sounded painfully calm as she continued.

"The bigger problem is what happens after I die, brother. Since last year, I've been reading the third volume of the Delcross Chronicles."

Seongjin looked at the neatly written text on the next page.

—Delcross Chronicles Volume 3. The Executor of the Apocalypse.

It detailed the greatest and worst crisis in Delcross, where a fallen Holy Emperor uses the saintess's body to summon high-ranking demon kings.

"Ha ha."

A soft laugh echoed.

Sisley, puzzled by the sound, looked up at Seongjin and flinched.

He was baring his teeth in a fierce smile.

"Sigurd Sigurdson, this bastard...!"

Sigurd Sigurdson.

The dimensional storyteller who walks through a thousand dreams and speaks in a thousand voices.

He once wrote a forbidden book called 'Otherworldly Apocalypse,' predicting the destruction of Delcross long ago, and recently, he has drawn in Seo Yi-seo, a human from the imaginary world.

His stated purpose has always been the same from the beginning.

That is, to become a great single rule, a single story.

What exactly that meant was beyond anyone's guess. Seongjin, too, had once dreamt of becoming a Tyrannosaurus in his childhood, so he wasn't inclined to outright dismiss someone else's future dreams, no matter how absurd they were.

"Yeah, whatever it is, it's all good."

But, what?

That man, who is extremely devoted to caring for his children, wrote a story about killing a child with his own hands?

And he shows it to a kid who's hardly dry behind the ears?

"Haha, Sigurd Sigurdson, this son of a b*tch...!"

No matter what, I will definitely grind this bastard to dust.

While Seongjin was thinking about significantly increasing the interest rate to apply to this guy, suddenly, the Demon King spoke in a creeping voice.

[Calm down, Lee Seongjin. Why are you scaring the kids all of a sudden?]

"What?"

Confused by the trembling attitude of the Demon King, Seongjin looked up, and Sisle's face, clutching her teacup tightly, seemed to have turned pale.

Moreover.

"Shaaaaa!"

Seo Yi-seo, who had retreated to a corner of the drawing room, was frantically hissing.

Why is everyone making such a fuss? What did I do?

"Your expression, that expression! Like a broker ready to harvest organs at any moment!"

"...Huh?"

Seongjin then realized his lips had twisted into a sneer without him noticing.

Come to think of it, his juniors always panicked when he smiled, asking who he was planning to "pickle" next.

He cleared his throat with a cough and slowly sipped his tea.

"Phew..."

Good. Bruno's Melbourne tea.

It was a taste that purified the soul.

After a short pause, Seongjin put down his teacup and asked Sisle,

"There's something I've been wanting to ask you. Sisle, why didn't you tell Father about this story?"

"That's..."

Sisle hesitated for a moment.

How could she explain what happened that day?

The day when the whole world seemed to have changed, as if a veil had been lifted.

The day when the person she once knew better than anyone else, and for whom she had a deep affection, suddenly felt terrifying and unfamiliar.

And the kind voice she heard in her head.

-That is his true nature. If he considers something useless, he will cut it down without mercy. In the near future, you too will meet your death at his hands, just like them.

True to his word, the Holy Emperor in the dream vision showed no hesitation in executing the real Sisle.

"I thought it was dangerous, brother. According to the Chronicle, His Majesty has already been on the path of degeneration for many years."

"So you don't trust our Father?"

"Of course I don't think His Majesty sincerely wants my downfall. But he is already being manipulated by something evil, and so I couldn't completely rule out the possibility that he might unintentionally harm me."

Seongjin tilted his head.

"Why do you believe the contents of your dream so much? The one who appeared in your dream must be the storyteller of that dimension that Seo Yi-seo mentioned, right?"

"Yes. I think it's him."

"You heard yourself what he did to Seo Yi-seo. And yet you still believe the dream you had was a real prophetic dream? You don't suspect that he made it all up?"

At that, Sisle smiled wistfully.

"It's hard to explain. Brother, I can tell the difference between a prophetic dream and a simple dream. That was definitely a vision that I saw with my own power, and so far everything has happened exactly the same as in Volume 1 of the Chronicle."

Ever since Sisle showed the signs of the Saintess, the Holy Emperor had been consistently opposed to her becoming the Saintess.

It was as if he was a villain in a novel, who would never acknowledge her as the Saintess.

"And think about it simply, brother. If my prophetic dream is true, then telling His Majesty won't solve anything. And if my prophetic dream is wrong, then there's no need to worry him about something that might not happen. His Majesty would probably be very upset that I had such a dream."

That was right. For whatever reason, Sisle didn't want to tell the Holy Emperor about the miserable future that lay ahead for the two of them.

After all, no matter how afraid she had been, she still loved him very much.

"Then why are you telling me now?"

"Because I think you're the only one who can change the future that's been predetermined."

Sisle said this as she carefully stroked her teacup.

"As I said before, everything has been happening exactly as it did in Volume 1 of the Delcross Chronicle. It's only recently that things have started to go wrong. Right at the beginning of Volume 2."

The gates that were supposed to open simultaneously in multiple locations across the empire a few months later had suddenly not opened.

A special department called the Demon Special Task Force, which didn't exist in the book, had even been created.

And the protagonist, Seo Yi-seo, had been discovered earlier than expected and had become the Saintess without even going through the 'Trial of the Saintess.'

"And I realized that all of these events have one thing in common."

Sisle's eyes deepened as she looked at Seongjin.

"It's you, Morres-orabeoni. All of these things are somehow connected to you."

"....."

The Delcross Chronicle did indeed contain some information about Prince Morres.

In Volume 1, he was hurt by the Emperor and Empress and eventually went astray. And in Volume 2, after the fever, he suddenly changed his mind and worked hard to improve his swordsmanship.

However, in the book, Prince Morres, despite his efforts, was unable to accumulate any aura for several years.

It was when he was deeply frustrated by his fruitless efforts that he met the kind and gentle Saintess Seo Yi-seo. He received her warm comfort and eventually fell deeply in love with her, becoming the tragic second male lead.

And by Volume 3, the prince was showing signs of going crazy from his unrequited love and becoming the second villain.

'That's what happened to Seo Yi-seo-ssi too. You're the second villain in the novel.'

But what was this?

The real Morres that Sisle met had become strong as soon as he woke up from the fever, and was now known as a hidden swordsmanship genius!

And from the gaps in the distorted stories, Sisle learned the truth behind the scenes that was not in the Chronicle.

That the reincarnation of Saintess Gracia was, in fact, nothing more than an illusion with no substance.

And that the ceremony of the First Emperor, which she had thought was a blessing, was actually a trap set by Cardmos to take over people's bodies.

She could no longer guess the direction of this story.

Only.

'Everything depends on Morres-orabeoni!'

It would not be unreasonable for Sisle to think so and place her hopes on him.

Meanwhile, Seongjin was having a different thought as he listened to Sisle's story.

Flipping through the diary quickly, he asked Sisle.

"But there doesn't seem to be anything about Cardmss here. What about the Chronicle you read? Was there anything about him?"

"About the first Emperor?"

"Yes."

Could there be a possibility that Sigurd Sigurdson and Cardmos were somehow related?

It was a natural question for Seongjin.

Sisle started dreaming about the Delcross Chronicle at the same time that the Saintess's mark appeared on her body. The timing was too coincidental.

"There wasn't anything except when Seo Yi-seo received the blessing. Why?"

"No, maybe Cardmos is behind all this?"

At that moment, a deep voice rang in the heads of the two people next to them.

[This is really ridiculous to listen to. I was just trying to protect this body from being swayed by the evil deeds of my descendants, but what kind of nonsense accusation is this?]

Turning their heads, they saw Seo Yi-seo, who had now returned to the front of the tea table, chewing on cookies and looking at them.

Those golden eyes that shone brightly.

"...Cardmos?"

Then Seo Yi-seo, no, Cardmoss frowned.

[How dare you! Where did you learn your manners?]

"Um, ancestor?"

[I told you not to call me ancestor! You evil thing!]

What the hell am I supposed to do?

"Anyway, you're here yourself. Now, answer me, Cardmos. Did you conspire with Sigurd Sigurdson to harm Sisle?"

At that, Cardmos flared up.

"What? Conspiring? There's nothing you wouldn't say, is there! Why on earth would I do such a thing?"

"You tried to possess Sisle under the guise of a blessing, didn't you?"

"Yes, that's exactly it! Why would I harm the child who is to become my new vessel, the one who will devote everything to me?"

"....."

"....."

Caught admitting his own intentions, Cardmos sighed upon receiving Sisle's subtle look of contempt.

"While I'm not unaware of the dimensional storyteller, it's true. I only marked her to prevent him from meddling in the dreams of my descendants with his nonsense. Why on earth are you suddenly pitting me against him?"

"You're taking over a perfectly healthy person's body, and that detail is completely omitted from the chronicles, isn't it? Usually, such individuals are the most suspect."

"What vulgar remarks!"

Cardmos clicked his tongue and picked up a piece of candy.

"What are you expecting from such a person? My descendant. Have you no thought of entrusting everything to me and resting peacefully even now?"

This madman!

Seongjin was about to burst into anger, but Sisle remained unshaken and calmly shook her head.

"The scriptures say that a temporary solution is the sweetest whisper of the devil. I am not ignorant of who can truly help me."

"....."

With an expressionless face, Sisle, who had just fiercely criticized her ancestor as being devil-like, turned to Seongjin and continued.

"Not long ago, Amelia-eonni and Logan-orabeoni said that if I had concerns, it would be good to consult with Morres-orabeoni. They said he always knows the right answer."

"Sister Amelia and Logan?"

That was unexpected.

"Yes. So, please help me, Brother."

Gray eyes filled with desperation captured Seongjin's face entirely.

"I don't want to die like that."

"....."

Though she tried to appear calm, the girl's voice trembled thinly with fear.

Sisle, who had read about her own demise for years.

The mental anguish this little girl must have endured was hard for Seongjin to fathom.

After a moment of contemplation, Seongjin nodded and began to speak.

"Hmm. How about we try this?"

* * *

That evening, Dasha, who had visited the Pearl Palace as always, opened her eyes wide at the unexpected sight.

This was because Prince Morres, who was sitting on the bed waiting for her, was in a much different mood than usual.

He was neatly dressed in the black outfit that Dasha had prepared for him a few days ago, and he even had the Nutcracker on his belt.

And the aura surrounding the prince was tense yet calm.

As a result, the air density around him became extremely high, and Dasha even felt a little short of breath.

"...Your Highness?"

"I've been waiting for you, Dasha."

The prince said as he stood up from his seat.

"Since this is the place, I think I'll need the help of a professional to infiltrate perfectly."

"Yes?"

While Dasha was confused by his unfamiliar appearance, the prince walked towards the terrace and said.

"Come on, let's go."

"Wait a minute, Your Highness! Where are you going at this time...!"

Then he jumped over the railing of the terrace with a light step and said as if he was spitting it out.

"Scarcepino Estate."

On the night there was a social gathering at the townhouse.

Riccardo was found in the garden, inexplicably covered in blood.

At the time, it was said that there were gallons of blood around him.

However, since the young lord's body was unharmed, whose blood it was remained a mystery.

'...Could it be?'

When Seongjin first heard the story from Dasha, only one person came to mind.

A human capable of not only healing wounds but also regenerating lost blood in real-time.

'Nah, couldn't be. That gentleman was at the main palace at that time...'

Regardless, from that evening onwards, Riccardo started showing severe mental disturbances and began receiving intensive treatment from physicians.

Seongjin, too, had been preoccupied with Cardmos and preparing for the birthday celebration, so dealing with him had been delayed.

But.

-I don't want to die like that.

How could he leave the one who made our little one say such things, alone!

[Sigh. Your father warned you so many times, yet why do you always create these situations?]

Approaching the townhouse unnoticed, the Demon King sighed and muttered.

'Don't talk nonsense. This is all within the realm of possibilities. Perhaps now is the perfect timing.'

[Huh?]

Think about it, Demon King.

The day before a big event, when everyone is preoccupied with one thing, how common is that?

Everyone's busy with the birthday celebration preparations or their own social gatherings. Including the Scarcefino main house, there are unscheduled banquets happening all over the imperial capital, right?

[...Huh?]

As Seongjin predicted, with security concentrated at the main locations where key figures were gathered, the route to the townhouse was less guarded than usual.

[I can't believe it! You, of all people!]

What are you saying? Like I said before, I'm quite thorough in my preparations.

I've been ready to deal with Riccardo whenever, just didn't have the time.

Of course, there were a few encounters with night visitors dressed similarly to Seongjin's group.

"Our agents."

Dasha signaled to someone in the shadows and said.

Hmm, it feels like this might directly be reported to the Holy Emperor through the intelligence department.

'No, if it's him, he probably knew we left the palace from the start...'

[Two soul terminals presumed to be Arenja have been following us since earlier.]

'Ah, indeed.'

But it's alright. I have no intention of causing trouble today.

[And this isn't trouble?]

Meanwhile, Dasha, who had been busy sending and responding to signals, quickly caught up to Seongjin with a troubled look on her face.

"Your Highness, was the investigation of the Scarcepino family's security system you ordered recently all for today's purpose?"

"Well, two birds with one stone."

The matters under investigation had to be sensitive enough, after all. It was presumed that sneaking around at night was the only way to proceed smoothly.

You can't just barge into places like the Milo Trading Company, which operates openly, or the Scarcepino family, who have a solid foundation as wealthy magnates, using public authority.

Moreover, it was uncertain if the public forces would readily take Seongjin's side.

If he ever tried complaining that Riccardo is in cahoots with a dark cult and sends people to another dimension, Seongjin might just end up being summoned to the Heresy Tribunal for investigation right away.

'The times when I led the capital's guard to capture Seo Yi-seo were better.'

Having the public authority on my side felt thrilling.

The Scarcepino townhouse.

Just before officially infiltrating, Seongjin double-checked the vials neatly tucked into his belt, which he had recently learned to use from Dasha.

This one's a truth serum, this one's a sleeping potion, this one's...

Watching Seongjin go through his inventory, Dasha looked pale.

"Your Highness, are you going to use those? What exactly are you planning to do there?"

"Don't worry, just think of it as a means for a peaceful conversation."

It would be troublesome if he truly showed signs of mental disturbance.

But if it's all an act to avoid questioning, he's likely to get thoroughly shaken down today.

"Too bad. If only I had divine power, I could freely beat him up and then heal him perfectly to beat him again."

Hearing Seongjin muttering this to himself, Dasha gasped in horror.

"That's the young master of the Scarcepino family, Your Highness. It will surely cause problems later!"

"It's fine, Dasha. It's not a crime as long as we don't get caught."

"...Good heavens!"

Overwhelmed by the stress of the situation, Dasha tore at her hair.

Regardless, Seongjin downed one of the prepared potions and pulled his mask up over his face.

"From now on, you can't call me Your Highness, got it?"

Sighing deeply, Dasha watched as Seongjin boldly stepped into the mansion.

Thanks to his recently improved aura concealment, Seongjin easily bypassed the yawning guards who noticed nothing and soon infiltrated Riccardo's room.

"Let's see this bastard..."

Despite reports of his mental disturbances, the sleeping figure seemed more peaceful than expected.

This bastard. How dare he sleep so soundly after causing such distress to a child?

Seongjin, who had grabbed the bastard by the collar in a fit of rage, easily lifted him using his aura.

"What...?"

And before Riccardo could fully regain his consciousness.

Whoosh!

Seongjin slammed his face back down onto the bed. Consequently, Riccardo, gasping for air, struggled and let out a muffled scream.

"Guh...!"

Before the sound could fully escape, Seongjin pressed his head deep into the pillow and whispered a command into his ear.

"Keep your mouth shut."

"...!"

"Because of you, our order has been caught by the intelligence service. You're prepared to take responsibility, right?"

Currently, Seongjin's voice was hoarse, thanks to a voice-altering drug he received from Dasha.

It seemed to work by temporarily swelling the vocal cords, but given the tingling nose and the tears, Seongjin was seriously worried it might be causing an acute allergic reaction.

Surely it wouldn't lead to sudden breathing difficulties?

"If you scream, you die right here. But if you manage to clean up this mess properly, I'll spare your life."

"..."

Riccardo, terrified, quietly rolled his eyes.

Why does it seem like his attitude has changed significantly from when he used to boast about being the Demon King of Dreams?

[His pulse is skyrocketing. He looks genuinely scared.]

'Hmm.'

Seongjin observed him for a while longer while holding him down, but no blue butterfly appeared nor anything of the sort.

Could it be that Sigurd Sigurdson actually abandoned his avatar and bailed?

After a while, as Riccardo stopped resisting, Seongjin gently let go of his head, and Riccardo asked in a trembling voice.

"Are you from the order?"

It was a bluff, thrown out in the hope he might know something since a mark of the dark order was sent to Orden. But could it be, this guy was actually in direct communication with the order?

"There's nothing I need to discuss with you, call that storyteller."

"What... Who are you exactly? Surely the Archbishop wouldn't have mentioned the 'Puppeteer' to just anyone?"

So, he refers to that storyteller as the 'Puppeteer'.

Considering the guy manipulates avatars like puppets, it's quite a fitting nickname.

"Could it be that he's decided to conspire directly with the trading head?"

He's likely referring to the head of the Milo Trading Company.

"Well, think whatever you want."

Then, Riccardo, who had been cautiously looking around, suddenly jumped off the bed and tried to run straight for the door.

Of course, Seongjin, having anticipated his movement, easily tripped him.

Crash!

Riccardo tumbled heavily onto the floor, making quite a noise, but Seongjin, carefully heightening his senses, detected no significant movement nearby.

It seems Dasha did a good job as planned.

"Ughhh..."

Riccardo, who had fallen face-first to the floor, clutched his bleeding nose and writhed on the ground.

While he was struggling, Seongjin slowly walked to the tea table in front of the bed and laid out the prepared vials.

Clatter, clatter.

At that sound, Riccardo, who had belatedly raised his head, trembled and asked.

"What, what are you going to do?"

Following that, an array of small daggers of various lengths and hooks presumably meant for gruesome purposes were revealed one by one.

Riccardo's face, which had been rotating only his eyeballs to witness the scene, turned ghastly pale in an instant.

"Why are you doing this to me? The order already knows, the 'Puppeteer' has left me! He erased all the plans from my mind! I, I know nothing!"

Tears the size of chicken droppings began to fall from his eyes.

"He abandoned me and disappeared. Left me all alone in this vast universe! How, how could he do this to me!"

It's unclear whether he's terrified or just sorrowful about being abandoned.

'Demon King?'

[Hmm. His claim of having no memory seems genuine. Looks like he really got wiped and dumped.]

It's unfortunate. If this guy had been Sigurd Sigurdson, that would have been ideal.

Sighing, Seongjin spoke up.

"Don't worry. You don't have to say anything."

Riccardo's eyes widened in response.

"Th-then what are all those for..."

"Sometimes, after learning theory, people get the urge to do some practical work. Sadly, it seems unnecessary with you."

"What do you mean...?"

"Well, consider it retribution for associating with that bastard."

Crack. Seongjin alternately cracked his knuckles and continued.

"Relax. Fortunately, I don't see much value in torturing you for a long time. So I'll just beat you up thoroughly."

"Eek!"

Riccardo, who was sitting on the floor trying to back away, abruptly hit the wall.

After observing his terrified face for a moment, Seongjin picked up one particularly long and thin hook from the table, held it up to the faint moonlight, and continued.

"And at the end, I plan to jab this into your side. I'll stir your insides over and over with aura charged in it."

"...Huh?"

"Then, externally, there won't be much damage, but the ruined organs will slowly pool blood in your stomach, right? You might not bleed outwardly, but by morning, you'll definitely die from excessive bleeding. And the cause of death will remain a mystery."

".....!"

"You will die slowly by morning, in tremendous pain from your intestines twisting, unable to seek help from anyone."

Seongjin met the shaking eyes of the man, trembling as if an earthquake had struck him from sheer terror, and pulled up the corners of his mouth.

"Now, it's your choice. Do you prefer your liver or your spleen? If you care, I can even touch your kidneys. They're all organs rich in blood vessels."

Riccardo, his eyes fixated on the hook reflecting the light, seemed almost out of his mind.

With a sudden relaxation of his muscles, the floor became wet with his urine.

"I'm, I'm sorry... I was just his... puppet... Sob! I never, never meant to cause trouble for the order! Hic!"

His trembling jaw could hardly utter coherent words.

"Last chance. Where is the 'Puppeteer' now?"

"Hic! Sob! He must have, must have gone to another puppet!"

"And who is this other puppet?"

"I... I don't know. I really don't know anything!"

Choking as if strangled, Riccardo's cries were muffled as Seongjin looked down at him with pity.

It's a shame.

If this guy had been him, I could have made him feel the sensation of slowly dying.

Thump!

"Ugh!"

A light kick to the jaw sent Riccardo crashing his head against the wall, tumbling forward.

"Why? I told you everything, why?"

Why indeed?

Didn't I say? Beating you up was the real goal from the start.

What followed was a brutal beating.

With each strike Seongjin delivered, the room echoed with Riccardo's cries. As the violence intensified, Dasha, who had been on guard outside, rushed in, alarmed.

"Your...!"

Nearly blurting out 'Your Highness,' she whispered, muffling her voice.

"You said you wouldn't resort to violence earlier...?"

"When did I say that?"

I said I prepared means for a smooth conversation. I never said I wouldn't hit him after we were done talking.

In that short time, Riccardo, thoroughly beaten, was sprawled out on the floor, a complete mess.

"This man is a member of the Scarcepinos family! This will surely lead to big trouble!"

"Don't worry. I've prepared everything."

Seongjin took out a small medallion from his pocket.

A crude spider engraved on a copper medallion, a symbol of the dark order, handed over from Orden.

"He wouldn't openly claim he was attacked by remnants of the dark order, would he?"

From what he said earlier, it seemed the order, the Milo Trading Company, and the Scarcepinos were all cautiously watching each other.

It would be even better if this incident made them suspect each other.

After placing the medallion carefully by Riccardo's head, Seongjin twisted his lips and muttered.

"Kill each other now."

[What a wicked man...]

150

Beat that bastard Riccardo to death.

With that, the primary purpose of coming to this mansion was accomplished.

However, now that he had started this night out, Seongjin had no intention of wasting this opportunity. That was why he was diligently rummaging through the first-floor study until dawn.

"How on earth did I end up... Even in the long-standing history of [Oberon's Hand][1], there has never been a member who went this far..."

Dasha was lamenting beside him, so Seongjin instructed her.

"Important documents might be carefully hidden inside the room. Dasha, why don't you investigate the bedroom area?"

"Yes, of course."

She let out a sigh of resignation and left the study.

Even on a pitch-black night with the faint moonlight obscured by clouds, Seongjin could easily read the documents with his Aura vision enhanced. It was a technique he had learned from Dasha.

[Perhaps the really important documents are kept at the main residence?]

'Who knows.'

The siblings Riccardo and Isabella, who mainly reside in the townhouse for active social activities.

According to Orden's investigation, they were also the ones who primarily showed their faces at the Milo Company.

Seeing that there was no mention of the eldest son, Dominico, it was highly likely that the collusion with the Milo Company was the independent doing of Sigurd Sigurdsson, not the entire Scarcepinos family business.

In that case, wouldn't there be a higher probability of the evidence being kept here rather than at the main residence?

'Besides, don't you think something is strange, Demon Lord?'

[What is?]

The reason Seongjin boldly carried out this secret operation today was because he had thoroughly investigated the overall security situation of the Scarcepinos family in advance. He calculated that he and Dasha could sneak in undetected with just the two of them.

The problem was just that. The vast difference in the level of security between the townhouse and the main residence.

The strictness of the security system operated by the Scarcepinos, the wealthiest family in Delcros, was truly beyond imagination. They even had a private assassin brigade operated solely for VIP protection.

But what about this place? Although they were said to be quite strong Aura users, weren't they just rigid bodyguards who were completely incapable of dealing with skilled assassins?

If it weren't for Sisle's revenge, Seongjin would have also held back for a while to investigate if there was some fishy situation hidden.

Was this intentionally arranged by Riccardo, who was being manipulated by that damn Storyteller, for the convenience of his movements?

Or...

'Did someone from the Scarcepinos main family have a hand in this...?'

While he was thinking that far, suddenly he felt a small presence approaching from over there.

Seongjin, who was about to hastily organize the documents he had spread out and hide, paused for a moment when he realized who the owner of that presence was.

The graceful footsteps of a noblewoman with an utterly ordinary Aura activation.

'...Isabella?'

Captured by a strange premonition, Seongjin quietly stood in place and waited for her.

Creak.

Indeed, the one who opened the door and entered the study was Isabella, wearing nothing but a nightgown.

Their eyes met head-on, but she wasn't very surprised and blankly stared at the black-clothed intruder, then asked.

"Who are you?"

Seongjin's brows furrowed beneath his mask.

Isabella, was she this kind of person?

She had trembled so much in front of Orden before, yet in front of a suspicious person whose identity was unknown, she showed such a calm demeanor?

"Who are you? What are you doing here right now?"

Was that the normal reaction of a noble lady when faced with someone who had illegally trespassed into the mansion?

Moreover, it was difficult to pinpoint, but there was a subtly different feeling from when he had met her before...

"....."

"Hmm..."

While Seongjin silently observed her, Isabella also didn't take her eyes off him as she moved her steps, trailing the hem of her gown.

"You are quite young. A young man... No, a boy."

Her voice began to drop low.

"Which group do you belong to? [Oberon's Hand] does not deploy such young members to the field. And [Kaya's Breath] has not advanced into the Empire yet..."

Not only her voice but also her way of speaking seemed to be changing little by little.

As if something was being layered over.

Feeling strange about that, Seongjin just watched what she was doing, and Isabella fearlessly approached him and pressed her body close to his.

"How peculiar. Truly peculiar. Strangely, I feel a strong interest in you."

Slender fingers intertwined over his gloves. Isabella's lips came close to his face as if she was about to kiss him at any moment.

And then...

[Now, go ahead and tell me.]

A voice with a strange vibration that tickled the heart rang in Seongjin's ear as if seducing him.

[Who sponsored someone extraordinary like you? Who is behind you?]

Oh ho? Would you look at that?

Without answering, Seongjin gently took her hand. A faint bewilderment appeared in Isabella's turquoise eyes.

[...The enchantment isn't working? Who the hell are you...!]

At that moment, Seongjin grinned and pulled Isabella's hand hard.

"Sigurd Sigurdson."

[...!]

Caught you, bastard!

"...So what they demanded from Cardinal Gistier was... Your Majesty? Are you listening?"

In the midst of reporting on the current situation in Brittany, No. 21 asked the Holy Emperor, who couldn't seem to take his eyes off the window.

"What is the matter?"

"....."

For some reason, the Holy Emperor seemed to have his mind elsewhere, unable to focus on his report at all since earlier.

Judging by the occasional strange glow in his eyes, it seemed he was seeing something invisible to ordinary people again.

After doing that for who knows how long, the Holy Emperor slowly raised his hand to his forehead and spoke with a deep sigh.

"When a child tries to face the world alone, they have no choice but to whittle themselves down like that first."

"...Pardon?"

"I can't bring myself to blame him for being too hasty."

The Holy Emperor sometimes had a habit of abruptly uttering words that No. 21 couldn't understand. But it wasn't very common for him to completely deviate from the context like now.

No. 21 opened his mouth to ask something, but the Holy Emperor continued.

"You may go now, Enrique. I will..."

And before he could even answer...

The Holy Emperor's body limply collapsed to the side.

"...!"

No. 21 was momentarily taken aback, but from past experience, he realized that the Holy Emperor had moved only his soul to go somewhere again.

He slowly got up from his seat and quietly looked down at the Holy Emperor leaning against the sofa.

"....."

The Holy Emperor's body, with his soul gone, looked as if he was dead or in a deep sleep.

Enrique, who had been blankly staring at that seemingly defenseless face, gripped the handle of the dagger in his bosom out of habit.

His breathing gradually grew rough with tension.

Now?

That's right. The annoying Chief Chamberlain and the burdensome Knight Commander of St. Aurelion were not here now.

Is it possible?

That's right. Since he left in a hurry without properly informing him, it would take quite some time for him to return.

However...

"...Even if I succeed now, you still won't die in the end..."

The muttering voice was terribly hoarse.

Emotions that had been suppressed in one place for too long sometimes had their boundaries crumble like this, irreversibly mixing together.

Not knowing whether what he was feeling was resignation or relief, Enrique slowly let go of the sword and bit his lip.

"Sigurd Sigurdson."

As he cheerfully called out the name and clasped hands, Isabella flinched in surprise and opened her eyes wide.

[...You are?]

It seemed she couldn't recognize his voice since the drug's effect still remained.

Slowly pulling down his mask, Seongjin flashed a bright smile at Isabella.

"You couldn't get very far for someone who fled so frantically? Huh?"

Orden had mentioned it, and since she frequented the Milo Company with Riccardo, Isabella was also marked as a person of interest.

But to think he had daringly created another puppet right next to him?

"Impressive? Don't tell me even the eldest young master of this house is your puppet?"

At that, Isabella, no, Sigurd Sigurdson tried to pull his caught hand away in surprise.

No way.

When Seongjin tightened his grip so that he couldn't escape, the guy finally gave up and let out a deep sigh.

[Yes. There can't be many people in the world who are immune to enchantment. It must have been you who made poor Riccardo like that.]

Recently, Riccardo had been suffering from frequent delusions and seizures.

As always, when he went to check on his condition at dawn, to his surprise, Riccardo was sprawled on the floor, beaten to a pulp!

So just in case, he had come down to the study where Riccardo's documents were gathered.

"That's right. Then you should know well what will happen to you now?"

As Seongjin began to stretch his shoulders, Sigurd unknowingly took a step back and spoke as if making excuses.

[Wait a moment, my friend! Let's have a conversation! I think there may be some misunderstanding between us?]

"Misunderstanding? What misunderstanding?"

[Calm down first! Acting violently like that won't solve anything!]

Sigurd tried his best to appease the prince. He had already tried to get rid of him by opening the Labyrinth and was properly punished by the Holy Emperor.

If he lost this puppet again, he would have no other options left.

And above all, the prince's eyes, shining alone in the darkness as if emitting light, had been unsettling since earlier.

[Our Bella is an innocent woman who knows nothing! Are you really going to harm this guiltless and pitiful person who has almost lost her self-awareness?]

What a despicable bastard!

Ignoring him, Seongjin took a step forward, and Sigurd quickly added.

[You are also partly to blame for Bella ending up like this! Didn't you greatly contribute to making her miserable and eventually turning her into a complete puppet?]

Seongjin paused his steps.

What?

"...Me?"

[That's right. You are the one who consistently eroded her self-esteem by not even treating this woman as a person! Thanks to that, I was able to easily take over Bella without much work.]

"I didn't treat Isabella as a person? Why?"

[That's because Bella has been my puppet for a long time. You probably knew that.]

Seongjin felt a deep irritation welling up inside him.

Hey, you bastard! Then it was your fault from the beginning! How dare you arbitrarily shift the blame?

[Do you understand? Bella and Riccardo are just being controlled, they are both innocent.]

The very person controlling them had the audacity to say that.

[So stop tormenting that poor young man Riccardo. He is already in deep pain of loss. Although unintended, unfortunately, the connection with him has been completely severed.]

Seongjin glared at this shameless guy with Isabella's face for a moment.

But was it just his feeling? Somehow, it felt like his personality was a bit different from when he was using Riccardo as an avatar.

"If you pity him so much, why didn't you just erase his memory completely? You clearly knew I would come to interrogate, so why did you leave memories of you?"

Then the guy nodded and explained.

[If I completely erased the memories of me, his mind would collapse as it is.]

Memories of Sigurd Sigurdson occupied such a large part that there was a risk of his mind completely breaking down.

[Although he's a hopeless older brother who spouts cringeworthy flowery writing like breathing, leaving him to become a total wreck would be too pitiful, don't you think?]

While the guy was babbling on his own, Seongjin quietly organized his thoughts.

Separate from this guy's plea, the actual controlled puppets might have some unjust aspects.

Moreover, even if he cut down this puppet now, the guy might just move to another body again.

However...

[This is all our Bella's will too. She's fundamentally a kind-hearted child. Thanks to that, I'm currently in a quite merciful state.]

Living as a puppet isn't a proper life anyway.

Rather than letting them be controlled by him and bring harm to Delcross...

Before he torments Sisle again, I'd rather...!

Seongjin made up his mind.

As a chilling murderous intent reflected in his eyes, Sigurd, who keenly noticed it, let out a deep sigh.

[Well, I thought it would be difficult to appeal to you with emotions, given your dry sensibility. In the end, I have to give up on this puppet too. You and I both have terrible luck.]

And flutter.

A blue butterfly fluttered before his eyes.

"...!"

Right at that moment, Seongjin saw something indescribable.

The instant the guy squeezed through the crack between dimensions to fling him into the Imaginary World...

In that fleeting moment of escaping from puppet to puppet, the trace of that soul drawing a long trajectory...

Seongjin had a hunch.

'...If it's now!'

It's possible.

To cut down not only the puppet but also the essence controlling it all at once!

Aura naturally gathered in his arm. Trembling finely as if anticipating something about to burst out violently.

The moment it's recognized, it becomes reality.

Not knowing what it was that gradually amplified its pulsation inside, drawn by that momentary ecstasy, Seongjin tightly gripped the hilt of the Nutcracker.

And right when he was about to draw the sword...

[Calm yourself, my son.]

Suddenly, someone lightly pressed down on Seongjin's hand.

"...!"

Looking to the side, there stood an exorcist Seongjin knew very well, not knowing when he had appeared.

"...Dame Sharon?"

However, the gaze meeting Seongjin's eyes...

